IMPERIAL LIVE STOCK & MORTGAGE
CO. v. TRACY. (L. A. 9192.)

Supreme Court of California. Sept. 26, 1929.

1. Corporations ⚡92—Recovery cannot be had on renewal note, based on stock subscription agreement, where prescribed amount of purchase price was not paid in cash (Corporate Securities Act, § 12).

Recovery cannot be had on renewal notes, based on subscription agreement for purchase of stock in plaintiff corporation, where twenty-five per cent. of purchase price was not paid in cash, as required by Corporate Securities Act, § 12 (Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 3814, § 12), since renewal note given in lieu of previous note based on illegal contract is unenforceable in hands of parties participating in acts which render original note invalid.

2. Trial ⚡252(15)—Submission of issue as to illegality of stock subscription for failure to make required cash payment held erroneous under evidence (Corporate Securities Act, § 12).

In action on notes based on subscription agreement for purchase of stock, the submission of issue as to illegality of subscription under Corporate Securities Act, § 12 (Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 3814, § 12), because of failure to pay 25 per cent. of purchase price in cash, held erroneous, in view of evidence showing without substantial conflict that required payment was in fact paid at time subscription was made.

3. Corporations ⚡92—Purchaser of stock could not resist payment of note given therefor without offering evidence that stock was entirely without value.

Purchaser of stock was not entitled to resist payment of note given therefor in full for lack of consideration without offering evidence to show that stock was entirely without value, particularly in view of clear inference from the evidence that stock had considerable value.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Kern County; Erwin W. Owen, Judge.

Action by the Imperial Live Stock & Mortgage Company against William Tracy. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed in part, and affirmed in part.

For opinion of District Court of Appeal, see 272 P. 600.

Fredericks, Hanna & Morton, of Los Angeles, and C. V. Anderson, of Bakersfield, for appellant.

Dorsey & Campbell and Emmons, Aldrich & Mack, all of Bakersfield, for respondent.

PRESTON, J. We agree with the conclusion of the learned District Court of Appeal announced in this case, and, as to the questions raised by the appeal as to causes of action 2, 3, 4, and 5, we adopt a portion of the opinion of Mr. Justice Plummer, as follows:

This action was brought to enforce payment of five promissory notes, set out in plaintiff's complaint in five separate causes of action. The defendant had judgment, and the plaintiff appeals.

The first cause of action is based upon a promissory note in the sum of $7,500, executed by the defendant on May 20, 1922. The second cause of action is on a promissory note in the sum of $1,875, executed by the defendant on May 20, 1922. The third cause of action is based upon a note executed by the defendant in a like sum of $1,875, dated May 20, 1922. The fourth cause of action is based upon a promissory note executed by the defendant in the sum of $7,500, dated May 20, 1921. And the fifth cause of action is based upon a promissory note executed by the defendant in the sum of $3,750, on May 20, 1921. These notes were all executed for and on account of original subscription agreements of the defendant to purchase shares in the capital stock of the plaintiff corporation. These subscriptions are dated as follows: One for 250 shares of the capital stock of said company dated February 5, 1920; one for 250 shares of the capital stock of said company, dated November 16, 1920; one for 500 shares of the capital stock of said company, dated January 27, 1921; one for 1,000 shares of the capital stock of said company dated March 16, 1921; and one for 1,000 shares of the capital stock of said company, dated April 7, 1921. The note based upon the subscription agreement for 1,000 shares of the capital stock of the plaintiff corporation, dated April 7, 1921, appears in the complaint in the form of a renewal note, for the same sum set forth in the first cause of action.

By way of defense to the plaintiff's action, the defendant set forth in his answer that the notes were obtained by fraudulent representations, and also that the subscription agreements upon which the original notes were given were void under the Corporate Securities Act, and that the notes sued upon are simply renewals of the original void obligations. The subscription agreements were all in similar form, and, among other items, contained the following:

"I hereby subscribe for, and agree to purchase — shares of the capital stock of the Imperial Live Stock & Mortgage Company, a corporation organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the state of California, and agree to pay therefor $10.00 per share, payable as follows: Not less than one-fourth cash accompanying this obligation, and the balance thereof as evidenced by a promissory note of even date herewith bearing interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum."

The permit issued by the commissioner of corporations permitting the plaintiff corporation to take subscriptions for shares of its capital stock, specified that not less than 25 per cent. of the par value of the stock should be paid for in cash, and that the remainder, or 75 per cent. of the amount agreed to be paid, might be evidenced by a promissory note or promissory notes bearing 6 per cent. interest.

In so far as the agreements to purchase shares of the capital stock of the appellant corporation are concerned, upon which the renewal note set forth as the second, third, fourth, and fifth causes of action in the plaintiff's complaint are based, the record shows beyond controversy that no part of the 25 per cent. of the par value of the shares of the capital stock subscribed for by the defendant was paid in cash. In each instance, so far as the agreements to purchase shares of the capital stock which lead to the giving of the renewal notes set forth in said causes of action are concerned, what are called in the transcript "myself notes" only were given; that is, the defendant, when subscribing for shares of the capital stock, instead of paying 25 per cent. in cash, drew a note payable to himself for 25 per cent. of the par value of the shares of stock subscribed for, and delivered the same to the plaintiff, and then, at the same time, and as a part of the same transaction, executed a promissory note payable at a definite time, some months after the date of the execution of the note, for 75 per cent. of the par value of the stock subscribed for. The record shows that prior to the 20th day of May, 1921, these "myself notes" had all been taken up by the defendant by the payment in cash of the 25 per cent. of the value of the shares of stock theretofore subscribed for by the defendant; that on said 20th day of May, 1921, renewal notes were given in lieu of the former notes, representing 75 per cent. of the purchase price of the shares of stock mentioned in the subscription agreements; that at said time the shares of capital stock subscribed for were issued and assigned to certain persons as trustees for the benefit of the plaintiff, to be held as security or until the 75 per cent. notes were fully paid, trust certificates representing the shares of stock called for in each subscription being delivered to the defendant, evidencing the number of shares assigned by him, and to be held in trust for the benefit of the corporation.

The court instructed the jury to find in favor of the defendant as to the second, third, fourth, and fifth causes of action alleged in plaintiff's complaint. With this summary we may proceed to consider the appellant's contentions, which are as follows:

(1) That the court erred in directing the jury to return a verdict in favor of the defendant on the second, third, fourth, and fifth causes of action.

(2) That the issue of fraud should not have been submitted as a defense to the first cause of action set forth in the plaintiff's complaint.

(3) That the defense of illegality, based on the use of "myself notes," should not have been submitted as a defense to the first cause of action.

[1] As heretofore stated, all the notes sued on by the plaintiff in the second, third, fourth, and fifth causes of action set forth are renewal notes, based upon subscription agreements for the purchase of shares of stock, under a permit from the commissioner of corporations, providing that at least 25 per cent. of the purchase price should be paid in cash, whereas in truth and in fact no cash was paid, and only "myself notes" were given for the 25 per cent. of the purchase price, which notes were subsequently taken up by the defendant.

Section 12 of the Corporate Securities Act, usually referred to as the "Blue Sky Law," reads as follows:

"Every security issued by any company, without a permit of the commissioner authorizing the same then in effect, shall be void, and every security issued by any company, with the authorization of the commissioner but not conforming in its provisions to the provisions, if any, which it is required by the permit of the commissioner to contain, shall be void." Deering's General Laws 1923, part 1, p. 1414.

The receipts issued by the appellant corporation at the time of taking subscriptions to purchase shares in its capital stock were in the following form, one of which will suffice:

"November 16, 1920. Received of William Tracy, of Buttonwillow, California, the sum of $2,500.00, cash, $625.00, note $1,875.00, payable to Imperial Live Stock & Mortgage Company as payment for 250 shares of the capital stock of the Imperial Live Stock & Mortgage Company, as set forth in this subscription contract, numbered the same as the receipt and bearing even date herewith.

"Imperial Live Stock & Mortgage Company,
"L. V. Moron, Special Agent."

No mention being made in the receipts that the 25 per cent. of the subscribed cost of the shares of stock was in fact evidenced by "myself notes," and not really paid in cash at the date of the subscription. Upon this state of facts the appellant contends, upon the authority of Moore v. Moffatt, 188 Cal. 1, 204 P. 220, that the renewal notes, though based upon void contracts, became valid obligations upon the date of renewal, the issuance of the certificates, and the assigning of them by the defendant to trustees for the benefit of the corporation, under the theory that the agreement was a continuing offer on the part of the corporation for the sale of its stock, and was accepted in a valid manner at the date of the issuance thereof, ratified by the defendant as evidenced by his having taken up and paid the "myself notes," and the then giving by him of notes evidencing the remaining 75 per cent. of the value of the respective purchases.

In the case of Moore v. Moffatt, supra, the action was brought by a trustee in bankruptcy to recover the difference between the sums paid on a subscription agreement for stock in a corporation, and the par value of the stock. In that case it appears that the amount agreed to be paid had all been paid. The defense to the action was based upon the fact that at the time the money was paid, the corporation had no valid permit to sell shares of its capital stock. The court, in discussing the issues involved in that case, used the following language:

"Conceding, for the purposes of discussion and decision, as is contended in support of the judgment, that the subscription agreement was in its inception void and incapable of acceptance by the corporation because executed, in contravention of the provisions of the Investment Company's Act (Stats. 1913, p. 715), prior to the procurement of a permit from the corporation commissioner authorizing a sale of the corporation's stock, and therefore could not have been legally made the basis of an action against the defendants upon the theory that they were stockholders in the corporation, still we have the admitted fact in the plaintiff's case that no stock of the corporation was in fact issued in response to any agreement of the parties until after an admittedly regular and valid permit had been granted by the corporation commissioner. This being so, the subscription agreement, even though it may have been void and incapable of acceptance in the first instance, should, in the light of the subsequent conduct of the parties to the transaction, be considered and construed as a continuing offer to subscribe for the stock in question, pending the procurement of a permit from the corporation commissioner, which ultimately became the embodiment and expression of a new agreement to purchase the stock entered into at a time when the only legal obstacle in the way of a valid agreement had been overcome. The agreement, so considered, and having been in fact ultimately accepted by the corporation after the required permit had been procured, * * * the validity of its making and acceptance must be measured and tested by its character as revealed by the circumstances and conduct of the parties with relation thereto at the time of its ultimate acceptance rather than by the circumstances attending its mere physical making in the first instance."

The court in that case then goes on to hold that the acts of the parties were tantamount to an adoption by them of the terms and conditions of the subscription agreement as of the date of its ultimate acceptance, and that the defendants were liable for the unpaid portion of the capital stock, and reversed the judgment of nonsuit entered by the trial court. If the circumstances of the instant case were identical with the case of Moore v. Moffatt, supra, the contentions of the appellant would have to be accepted as decisive, and the ruling of the trial court reversed. As we regard the transaction, however, a different principle is involved. In the Moffatt Case the trustee was not suing upon a tainted contract affecting its validity. In the case at bar there can be no doubt that the original 75 per cent. notes, of which the notes represented in causes of action set forth in plaintiff's complaint numbered 2, 3, 4, and 5 are renewals, were invalid.

In the case of Domenigoni v. Imperial Live Stock & Mortgage Co., 189 Cal. 467, 209 P. 36, in an action to cancel certain promissory notes given to represent 75 per cent. of the purchase price of shares of the capital stock of the corporation which is the appellant in the present action, where "myself notes" were given for 25 per cent. instead of cash, just as in the case at bar, the court held as follows:

"The entire transaction was an attempt to circumvent the law. The notes and agreements were each of them made in violation thereof and are therefore against the policy of the law, * * * and void."

No relief, however, was given for the following reason, as was there said speaking of the plaintiff:

"He was a party to them and is equally guilty with the defendant. In such a case the court will give no relief even if the point is not raised by either party."

The contract being void, the promissory notes were held void and each party was left in the condition in which the court found him. The receipt given by the defendant, the appellant here, in the Domenigoni Case was identical in language with the receipts given to the defendant in the instant case.

In the case of Union Collection Co. v. Buckman, 150 Cal. 159, 88 P. 708, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 568, 119 Am. St. Rep. 164, 11 Ann. Cas. 609, a case having to do with a renewal note given in place of a prior note based upon an illegal contract, it was held as follows (we quote from the syllabus):

"Any renewal notes given in place of the original notes based upon an illegal consideration are affected with the same illegality. Merely repeating a promise based on an illegal consideration cannot give it validity."

It is further said in the opinion in that case, quoting from a former opinion of Kreamer v. Earl, 91 Cal. 112, 27 P. 735:

"It is not for the sake of the party who is benefited by the intervention, but for the sake of the law itself, that a court refuses to allow the law and the machinery of the courts to be made use of for the enforcement of illegal contracts, and leaves the parties precisely where it finds them."

Quoting, also, from the case of Hill v. Kidd, 43 Cal. 615:

"It is equally well settled that no action in affirmance of an illegal contract can be maintained."

A long list of citations supporting the rules of law just set forth may be found in 11 Ann. Cas. on page 612, following the opinion in the Buckman Case. The authorities there set forth are so numerous as to prevent repetition here, but all hold that a renewal note, given in lieu of a previous note based upon an illegal contract, partakes of the same tainted character, and is unenforceable when in the hands of the parties participating in the fraud, or in the acts which render the original note invalid. In 19 California Jurisprudence, 1006, we find the following statement supported by authorities:

"A renewal note given in place of the original one based upon an illegal consideration, is affected with the same illegality; merely repeating a promise based on an illegal consideration cannot give it validity."

It is but trite to say that:

"Commercial paper cannot be based on any consideration which is in violation of an express statutory provision." 8 Cal. Jur. 243.

Again:

"If the instrument or contract is declared void by statute, it cannot be enforced; in some states, even by a bona fide holder." 8 Cal. Jur. 768.

The latter statement is not involved here, the original parties only being before the court.

In the case of Reno v. American Ice Machine Co., 72 Cal. App. 409, 237 P. 784, in an action based upon a void contract for the purchase of stock, an attempt is made to distinguish between actions where the original parties are involved, and actions where a representative of one of the parties appears, as was the case in Moore v. Moffatt, supra, where a trustee in bankruptcy was one of the parties, and in so doing, referred to the case of Moore v. Moffatt in the following language:

"That was not an action between the parties to avoid contract, but an action by a trustee in bankruptcy of a corporation to recover the unpaid subscription price of stock for the benefit of creditors. That situation presents an exception to the rule above announced, which rule is suspended in the interests of innocent third persons who have relied upon the contract."

Although this statement is relied upon by respondent and vigorously assailed by the appellant, we do not feel called upon to either approve or disapprove the language there used, save and except to state that in the Moffatt Case the circumstances are readily distinguishable from the circumstances characterizing the transaction in the cause now before us. The contract, which really was a contract created by law to pay the unpaid portion of capital stock issued to, and accepted by the defendants in the case of Moore v. Moffatt, only, was involved, whereas in the instant case the attempt is made to give vitality and validity to tainted and void contracts by renewals thereof.

The issues presented in this cause relate to matters of public policy. If no other persons were involved, and the principle reached no farther than the respective parties to this cause, we might consider seriously the contention of the appellant that the renewal notes, instead of being considered on the same basis, should be treated as a new subscription for the shares of stock in the plaintiff corporation, and valid and enforceable obligations. To do so, however, would be to open the door to all the illegal practices condemned by the Corporate Securities Act. If a scheme or a plan to avoid the provisions of that act, and of the requirements inserted in the permit issued to the corporation by the corporation commissioner, relating to its sale of stock, can be accomplished by the subterfuge of the issuance and taking of "myself notes" for 25 per cent. of the value of the stock and ordinary notes for 75 per cent., then and in that case the requirement for the payment of a certain portion of the subscription in cash, in order that the corporation may have assets to meet its obligations, would simply be to render nugatory, not only the requirements of the corporation commissioner, but also the act itself. Public policy, which led to the enactment of the Corporate Securities Act, forbids the approval of any such transactions, and we think the trial court properly excluded from the jury consideration of the second, third, fourth, and fifth causes of action tendered by the plaintiff's complaint, by instructing the jury to find for the defendant.

[2] Respecting the first cause of action, the court submitted to the jury two defenses: The illegality of the subscription for shares in part payment of which the note in question was given, and the claim that the subscription was induced by the false representations of plaintiff's agent. In this connection we agree also with the learned District Court of Appeal in holding that the evidence shows without substantial conflict that the 25 per cent. payment required by the permit issued by the corporation department was in fact paid in cash by the defendant on the day the subscription was made; hence the submission of this issue to the jury was unwarranted. Boone v. Oakland Transit Co., 139 Cal. 490, 73 P. 243; Idemoto v. Scheidecker, 193 Cal. 653, 226 P. 922. Error of this character is often prejudicial. Eppinger v. Kendrick, 114 Cal. 620, 46 P. 613; Bosqui v. Sutro R. R. Co., 131 Cal. 390, 63 P. 682; Wallis v. Southern Pac. Co., 184 Cal. 663, 195 P. 408, 15 A. L. R. 117; Griffith v. Oak Ridge Oil Co., 190 Cal. 389, 212 P. 913.

But we need not determine the question of prejudice, for, if it is conceded that the permit was not violated, then the judgment must be reversed for another reason. The issue of illegality of the stock certificate being out of the case, the evidence was clearly insufficient to support a verdict for the defendant, as will appear from the following observation:

[3] The court properly held, upon the issue made by the cross-complaint and answer thereto, that defendant was not entitled to a rescission of the contract, the basis of the note in question, upon the notice of rescission made December 29, 1924. Not being entitled to a rescission and not having sued for further affirmative relief by way of damages, defendant had left but the single remedy of recoupment by way of an offset in toto or pro tanto against the promissory note sued upon. While it is true that the answer pleaded that no consideration passed for execution of the note, yet defendant offered no proof to show that the stock was valueless. On the contrary, the clear inference from the evidence is that it is of considerable value. Under well-settled rules of law, defendant could not keep the stock and resist payment of the note in toto without offering evidence to show that the stock was entirely without value. Toby v. Oregon Pac. R. R., 98 Cal. 490, 499, 33 P. 550; Field v. Austin, 131 Cal. 379, 382, 63 P. 692; Paolini v. Sulprizio, 201 Cal. 683, 686, 258 P. 380.

This conclusion renders unnecessary a consideration of the contention of appellant that a fraud was not shown, or, if shown, that the evidence shows same was waived.

In so far as the judgment appealed from relates to the first cause of action, it is hereby reversed. Otherwise, as to all other matters, the judgment is affirmed; neither party to recover costs.

SCOTT et al. v. SUPERIOR COURT IN AND FOR CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO. (S. F. 13495.)★

Supreme Court of California. Sept. 28, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Oct. 28, 1929.

1. Attorney and client $\S$ 155—Fee of attorney of majority members of dissolved lodge could not be paid from lodge funds, where minority members claimed funds.

Fee of attorney of majority members of dissolved lodge, who claimed all members were entitled to participate in lodge funds, could not be paid out of common funds of lodge paid into court, where minority members, who voted against dissolution and formed new lodge, claimed that entire fund should be paid to them, and thus the services sought to be compensated were performed in behalf of an adverse interest.

2. Appeal and error $\S$ 1194(1)—Appellate court's judgment that fund be distributed among lodge members after deducting costs of suit gave lower court right to determine deductions.

Provision in judgment of appellate court that trial court should distribute funds of dissolved lodge among all members of lodge, after deducting therefrom the costs of suit and other charges and fees properly chargeable against the trust fund, did not purport to be an adjudication that one suing on behalf of majority members was entitled to demand deduction for attorney's fee, but left with lower court right to determine what deductions, if any, could properly be made.

In Bank.

Writ of Mandate to Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. J. Van Nostrand, Judge.

Application by Robert C. Scott, in behalf of himself and all other members in good standing of San Francisco Lodge, No. 198, of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, for writ of mandate to be directed to the Superior Court of the State of California in and for the City and County of San Francisco, to require respondent to fix attorney's fee. Petition denied, and writ dismissed.

George D. Collins, Jr., of San Francisco, for petitioners.

SEAWELL, J. Petition for writ of mandate to compel the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco to fix a reasonable attorney's fee for services performed by one George D. Collins, Jr., in certain litigation instituted by petitioner herein, and to order said fee paid from a fund which has been decreed to be the property of all who were members in good standing of San Francisco Lodge, No. 198, of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, at the time of the dissolution of said lodge, before said fund is distributed on a pro rata basis among the members of said dissolved lodge.

The charter of said local lodge was revoked by the grand lodge for disobedience of the rules of the grand lodge. Thereafter Robert C. Scott, petitioner herein and a member of said local lodge, purporting to sue on behalf of himself and all members of said lodge, brought two actions in the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco to procure a pro rata distribution of the assets of said lodge, consisting of four Liberty bonds and $1,500 in cash, among the members of good standing of the local lodge at the time of its dissolution. The Grand Lodge, through its appropriate officer, filed a cross-complaint, wherein the claim was asserted that upon dissolution the assets of the San Francisco local lodge were forfeited and became the property of the Grand Lodge. One Wrinkle, also a member of the local lodge, filed a complaint in intervention on behalf of himself and those minority members of the local lodge who had voted against the majority upon the issue which led the Grand Lodge to revoke the charter of the local body. Said minority members later associated with local lodge No. 947, a new lodge organized under the sanction of the Grand Lodge. Their claim was that the property constituted a trust fund for those members who had remained faithful to the parent organization, to the exclusion of other members.

Before the trial of the actions the treasurer of the dissolved lodge deposited the bonds in court, and the bank in which the funds of said lodge were deposited paid the amount thereof into court. The trial court found in favor of said minority members, that the property constituted a trust fund for the benefit of the minority only. Upon appeal, the District Court of Appeal reversed the judgments in said two actions, and directed the trial court to appoint a suitable person to sell the bonds and distribute the proceeds and the cash on hand "equally among all the former members of local 198 who were in good standing upon the rolls at the time of dissolution, after deducting therefrom the costs of suit and other charges and fees properly chargeable against the trust fund." (Italics supplied.) Scott v. Donahue (Cal. App.) 269 P. 455; Scott v. Donahue (Cal. App.) 269 P. 458.

Throughout the trial, and upon appeal, petitioner Scott and the majority members upon behalf of whom he sued were represented by Attorney George D. Collins, Jr. After the going down of the remittiturs in said two actions, petitioner Scott, relying on the above italicized provision in the judgment of the District Court of Appeal, and what he conceived to be the law of this state, made a motion in the trial court that said court determine a reasonable fee for the services of Collins, and deduct and pay to Collins the amount thereof from said funds of the dissolved lodge, before distribution to the members thereof. The court denied the motion, whereupon petitioner sought by mandamus to compel said court to fix said fee and deduct it from the fund on hand for distribution.

As sustaining the right to compel an allowance and deduction, petitioner relies upon such cases as Trustees v. Greenough, 105 U. S. 527, 26 L. Ed. 1157, wherein it is held that, where one jointly interested with others in a common fund in good faith maintains the necessary litigation to save it from waste and secure its proper application, an allowance of costs, including attorney's fees, will be made out of the fund. Conceding that this equitable principle is consonant with the statutory provisions of this state regarding the allowance of attorney's fees, the instant case does not present a situation permitting its application.

As against the minority members, on behalf of whom intervenor Wrinkle sued, petitioner Scott and the majority members of the local lodge, who joined in the employment of Collins as their attorney, cannot be said to have discovered, preserved, or created a fund. The bonds were deposited in court by their custodian, the treasurer of the dissolved lodge, before the trial of the action, and the funds of the lodge on deposit in the bank were paid into court. Although Scott purported to bring the representative action instituted by him "in behalf of himself and all members of San Francisco Lodge 198 of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen," upon the filing of the complaint in intervention the action became a contest between the majority members, who claimed that all members in good standing were entitled to participate in the fund, and the minority members, who claimed the fund to the exclusion of all other members in good standing, by virtue of the circumstance that they had voted against the local lodge taking the action which led to the dissolution.

[1] The minority members, throughout the proceedings in the trial court and upon appeal, were not represented by Attorney Collins, employed by Scott and other majority members, but by an attorney of their own selection, whom they have no doubt agreed to compensate. The equitable principle contended for by petitioner Scott is not applied to render persons who have employed and been represented by an attorney of their own choice indirectly responsible for the fee of an attorney hired by others.

Furthermore, the majority, and minority members were adverse claimants of said assets. The minority members sought to exclude the majority members absolutely from any participation in the fund, and in this were successful in the lower court. The minority members cannot be compelled to contribute, through a deduction from the fund, to the payment of counsel fees for services rendered in behalf of another group, who disputed their claim to the entire fund, and on appeal were successful in procuring an adjudication denying the right of the minority members to the whole fund. The equitable rule relied upon by petitioner Scott does not authorize a deduction from the fund where the services sought to be compensated by a deduction from the fund have been performed in behalf of an adverse interest. County of Tulare v. Dinuba (Cal. Sup.) 270 P. 201.

[2] The provision in the judgment of the District Court of Appeal, that the trial court should distribute the fund equally among all members after deducting therefrom the costs of suit and other charges and fees properly chargeable against the trust fund, did not purport to be an adjudication that petitioner was entitled to demand the deduction here claimed, but left with the lower court the right to determine what deductions, if any, could properly be made. There is nothing inconsistent with this view in Scott v. Donahue (Cal. App.) 271 P. 1100, in which case the court did not decide that the allowance here claimed was proper, but only that the minority members could not assert the right to have their costs on appeal deducted from the fund.

Having determined that there was no authority in the trial court to grant the allowance and deduction claimed, it becomes unnecessary to here decide whether a proceeding in mandamus would have been the appropriate method to compel such an allowance, had the court erroneously refused to grant it.

Petition denied, and writ dismissed.

Supreme Court of California. Sept. 27, 1929.

Schools and school districts §101—District tax levies by board of supervisors for high school purposes exceeding 75 cents on $100 assessed valuation held valid; "proviso" (Pol. Code, §§ 1612a, 1755).

District tax levies by board of supervisors for high school purposes, exceeding 75 cents on each $100 of assessed valuation, held valid under Pol. Code, § 1612a, since proviso in section 1755 limiting "total tax for high school purposes" to 75 cents on $100 assessed valuation was not intended to have general effect; usual office of "proviso" being to qualify enacting clause.

Application of James Hervey Johnson and another for a writ of review to review a resolution providing for tax levy for high school purposes made by the Board of Supervisors of the County of San Diego. Resolution affirmed.

For opinion of the District Court of Appeal, see 273 P. 1091.

Stephen Connell, Dist. Atty., of San Diego, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. Application for hearing in this court after decision by the District Court of Appeal in and for the Second District, Division 2, was granted, in order that we might make a careful examination of the provisions of the Political Code applicable to taxation for high school purposes. Upon such examination we are satisfied with the correctness of the reasoning and conclusion of the appellate tribunal, and hereby adopt the same as the decision of this court, to wit:

This is an original proceeding wherein the petitioners seek by the writ of review to annul district tax levies by the board of supervisors of San Diego county for high school purposes. It appears from the pleadings that the petitioners reside, the one in the San Diego high school district and the other in the Sweetwater union high school district, and that they each pay taxes in their respective districts. On the 4th day of June, 1928, the boards of education of these two districts submitted to and filed with the county superintendent of schools, school budgets showing the purposes for which and the amount of money needed by each of the districts, together with the total estimated receipts, and the remainder necessary to be raised by a tax levy. On June 20, the county superintendent approved the budget of the Sweetwater union high school district and submitted it to the board of supervisors. On June 26, she followed a like procedure with the budget of San Diego high school district. Both of these budgets indicated that it would be necessary to fix a rate in excess of 75 cents on each $100 of assessed valuation in order to raise the requisite funds. On September 1, 1928, the respondent board fixed the rate of San Diego high school district at 85 cents and of Sweetwater union high school district at 94 cents, and it is the resolution of the board fixing these rates which petitioners claim is beyond its jurisdiction.

Their contention in this behalf is based upon section 1755 of the Political Code, which section makes it "the duty of every high school board to make and file with the Board of Supervisors of each county in which any part of their high school district is situated, on or before the first Monday of September next succeeding the formation of said district, an estimate of the cost of purchasing a suitable lot, of procuring plans and specifications and erecting a suitable building, of supplying the same with furniture and necessary apparatus, and of fencing and ornamenting the grounds, for the accommodation of the school," unless the board shall have secured temporary quarters or a bond issue has been voted. (Italics ours.) The section further provides that, if the board has leased temporary quarters, they shall either secure a renewal of the lease before the first Monday in September, or submit the estimate mentioned above, and, in the event of their failure to submit such a budget to the board of supervisors, makes it the duty of the county superintendent of schools to supply the omission before the second Monday in September. In 1913 there was added to the section this sentence: "Provided, the total tax for high school purposes shall not exceed seventy-five cents on each one hundred dollars assessed valuation, exclusive of bond and interest rate." It is this concluding language which petitioners say prohibits a levy for the maintenance and support of high schools in excess of 75 cents. Section 1756 of the Political Code, enacted at the same time as section 1755 (i. e., 1909), provides that the board of education of each high school district shall file with the county superintendent of schools an estimate of the total amount necessary to support the high schools of the district, including the amounts necessary for "(a) Teachers' salaries; (b) current expenses; (c) books, magazines and apparatus; (d) sites, buildings and furniture; (e) other miscellaneous expenses." There is no limit designated by this section. In 1921 a new section was added to the Political Code, numbered 1612a, by which it is made the duty of all boards of education both elementary and high school, to prepare a budget showing all the purposes for which they will need money during the next ensuing school year, the amount of which shall be submitted to the county superintendent of schools for approval. When he has approved it and determined the amount of money (by subtracting from the total estimate the income to be received from other sources) which must be provided by a district school tax, he is required to file it with the board of supervisors, whose duty it then becomes "to fix such a rate for such district tax as will produce at least the amount of district tax money requested by the particular district." No limitation of rate is fixed by this section. It does, however, say that "all acts and parts of acts not in harmony with this section are hereby repealed."

Assuming, solely for the purposes of this opinion, that review will lie to test the validity of a resolution such as the one here in question, we are convinced that the levy must be sustained. The usual office of a proviso is to "except something from the enacting clause, or to qualify or to restrain its generality." 25 R. C. L. 984. The United States Supreme Court, speaking through Mr. Justice Story in the case of Minis v. U. S., 15 Pet. 423, 10 L. Ed. 791, states the rule in this manner: "It would be somewhat unusual to find engrafted upon an act making special and temporary appropriation, any provision which was to have a general and permanent application to all future appropriations. Nor ought such an intention on the part of the legislature to be presumed, unless it is expressed in the most clear and positive terms, and where the language admits of no other reasonable interpretation. The office of a proviso, generally, is either to except something from the enacting clause, or to qualify or restrain its generality, or to exclude some possible ground of misinterpretation of it, as extending to cases not intended by the legislature to be brought within its purview. A general rule, applicable to all future cases, would most naturally be expected to find its proper place in some distinct and independent enactment." The concluding sentence of this quotation is especially apt in its application to our problem. The learned jurist, in speaking for the same tribunal in U. S. v. Dickson, 15 Pet. 141, 10 L. Ed. 689, throws still further light upon the functions of a proviso by the use of these words: " * * * We are led to the general rule of law which has always prevailed, and become consecrated almost as a maxim in the interpretation of statutes, that where the enacting clause is general in its language and objects, and a proviso is afterwards introduced, that proviso is construed strictly, and takes no case out of the enacting clause which does not fall fairly within its terms. In short, a proviso carves exceptions only out of the enacting clause; and those who set up any such exception, must establish it as being within the words as well as within the reason thereof."

(Italics ours.) Our own Supreme Court, in considering the interpretation to be given to a proviso in the case of People v. Morrill, 26 Cal. 336-355, says: "This proviso is to be read in the light of the subject-matter," using the expression "subject-matter" as synonymous with the legislative field occupied by the enacting clause.

No doubt this general rule of construction is from time to time modified by other rules of construction when necessity arises. But is there such necessity in the present instance? We think not. * * * If it were intended that the proviso should have a general effect, the Legislature would undoubtedly have enacted it as a general and independent section rather than to have tied it to a section adopted for very limited purposes. Inferentially, at least, the views we have expressed find support in the case of Esberg v. Badaracco, 202 Cal. 110, 259 P. 730, wherein it was said that the provisions of 1612a, made it mandatory that the board of supervisors raise the amount of money found to be necessary by the estimate prepared under its provisions, and the board was required by the decision to fix a rate of $.97338 on each $100 valuation, instead of that previously determined by the board of supervisors to be sufficient, to wit, $.84729. It is stated in the case just cited that "the law prescribes a tax limit for school purposes," and this is undoubtedly true, but it seems impossible to escape the conclusion that section 1755 does not restrict the kind of a tax here levied.

"These conclusions render it unnecessary to determine whether the writ of review will lie."

Resolution affirmed.

EGGERS et al. v. NATIONAL RADIO CO.
et al. (S. F. 12596.)

Supreme Court of California. Sept. 30, 1929.

1. Appeal and error ⇨151(2)—Corporate stockholders aggrieved by order vacating new trial awarded corporation and re-entry of judgment were entitled to appeal.

Where granting of new trial had inured to benefit of corporate stockholders seeking to intervene in proceeding, they were aggrieved by subsequent action of court in vacating order granting new trial and re-entering judgment which had been previously set aside and were entitled to appeal.

2. Corporations ⇨202—Application by corporate stockholders for leave to intervene after granting of motion for new trial was timely (Code Civ. Proc. § 387).

Application for leave to intervene filed by corporate stockholders after granting of motion for new trial as to corporation was timely within Code Civ. Proc. § 387, in that cause at such time was at issue and ready for retrial.

3. Corporations ⇨202—Stockholders have no cause for complaint as long as corporation is willing to institute and conduct in good faith necessary legal proceedings.

A corporation represents and binds its stockholders in all matters within limits of its corporate powers when acting in good faith and without fraud on their rights, and, so long as corporation is willing to perform its duty toward stockholders by instituting and conducting in good faith necessary legal proceedings, stockholders have no cause for complaint.

4. Corporations ⇨206(1)—Stockholder on proper application showing failure of corporation to defend action may become party and defend on behalf of corporation.

Where corporation refuses to defend an action, or, having begun a defense, does not press it in good faith, a stockholder may on proper application showing the facts be allowed to become a party and defend on behalf of corporation, but he must show that he cannot induce those in control to do that which is fair and right.

5. Corporations ⇨206(2)—Demand on board of directors to defend action is not necessary for intervention by stockholders under circumstances rendering request useless.

Requirement that demand must first be made on board of directors to defend or continue defense in action pending against corporation is not a necessary prerequisite to an intervention by stockholders, where facts alleged in complaint and intervention are such as to render such a request useless.

6. Corporations ⇨206(1)—Failure of corporation to defend action after order granting new trial held to authorize intervention by stockholders under circumstances.

Failure of corporation to defend pending action after having secured an order granting a new trial, together with showing made on hearing of motion by stockholders for leave to intervene, held such as to present proper case for intervention by stockholders opposed to stand of governing body of corporate entity.

Action by Herman C. Eggers and others against the National Radio Company, in which Alma Anfinger and others sought to intervene. From the judgment and certified orders therein, Alma Anfinger and others appeal. Reversed.

James H. Boyer, of Oakland, and Milton Shepardson, R. M. F. Soto, and J. Clark Benson, all of San Francisco, for respondents.

WASTE, C. J. This action, commenced by five stockholders of the defendant National Radio Company, an Arizona corporation, on behalf of themselves and all other persons similarly situated, terminated in the court below with the entry of a judgment, as prayed in the complaint, decreeing illegal each and every certificate of stock issued by the corporate defendant, and all assessments theretofore levied thereon to be void, appointing a receiver to take possession of all the books and records of the corporation, and decreeing, further, that certain real property situate in the city and county of San Francisco is the property of the holders of such void certificates of stock, the corporation defendant merely holding the naked record title thereto in trust for such persons. On May 31, 1924, a new trial was granted on motion of the defendant corporation.

A subsequent change in the personnel of the board of directors of the corporate defendant was followed by a substitution of attorneys representing that defendant, and the substituted attorneys, purporting to act for and on behalf of the corporation, stipulated with plaintiffs' counsel that the order granting a new trial might be vacated and set aside. Acting on this stipulation, the trial court, on September 29, 1924, approximately 4 months after granting a new trial, vacated and set aside its previous order. Thereupon the appellants, representing some 292 persons claiming to hold a majority of the stock of the defendant corporation, appeared by counsel and moved the court for an order setting aside the order vacating the order for a new trial, and setting the cause at large and at issue upon the pleadings, and reinstating the cause for a new trial. They also sought an order allowing them to intervene and to assume charge of the defense of said action on behalf of the corporation. After a hearing, the trial court, on April 13, 1925, set aside the order vacating the order granting a new trial, but denied the motion to reinstate the cause for a new trial. The motion to intervene was heard and denied on the same day, and another motion for permission to intervene, made on April 14, was likewise denied on April 27. On May 7 following, a new judgment in terms of the former judgment was entered, as stipulated, in favor of the plaintiffs, and counsel for the corporation thereafter filed a further stipulation waiving its right of appeal therefrom. The appellants thereupon gave notice of appeal from the judgment, from the order denying their motion to reinstate the cause for a new trial, from the order denying their application to intervene, and from the order directing the entry of the former judgment. By stipulation, the several appeals have been consolidated and are presented upon one transcript.

[1] Appellants, among other things, now claim that the mere recital of the facts shows that there was complete harmony between said five stockholders, plaintiffs and the directors; hence the stipulation to enter judgment as prayed for in the complaint, ordering sale of the corporate assets, and in effect dissolving the corporation, with distribution of the proceeds among stockholders only after payment of a large attorneys' fee. In other words, they contend that the proffered complaint in intervention alleged collusion between plaintiffs and defendant corporation, supported by the apparent fact that the corporation made no defense, and, even after the trial court set aside the judgment and granted a new trial, the corporate attorneys stipulated, upon authority of its directors, that this action be set aside and said new judgment, in terms of the old, be entered upon the findings made in favor of the plaintiffs, and waived the corporation's right of appeal. The situation, then, is this: After the order of September 29, 1924, was set aside, and the case was again at large, the stockholders, other than the plaintiffs, were endeavoring to put themselves in position to protect their rights, which were vitally affected by the litigation. The granting of the new trial had inured to their benefit, and they had the right to believe that the trial court would not deprive them of the advantage thus gained. After they had asserted their rights, the trial court attempted to further deprive appellants of them by re-entering the judgment which had been previously set aside when the motion for a new trial was granted. They were aggrieved by this action of the court, and we think they are entitled to appeal from the judgment.

[2] Respondents argue that, assuming the appellants had a right to intervene, their application, not having been interposed before trial (Code Civ. Proc. § 387), was made too late. It necessarily follows, however, from the granting of the motion for a new trial, that, when the appellants appeared in the court below and, among other things, moved the court for permission to file a complaint in intervention, the cause was at issue and ready for a retrial, and the application was timely. In Paine v. Copper Belle Mining Co., 13 Ariz. 406, 114 P. 964, 965, where there existed a statute similar in effect to our section 387, supra, requiring applications in intervention to be made "before trial," the court declared that, "upon the judgment being vacated and a new trial ordered, applications to intervene are to be determined by the same rules as if no judgment had been theretofore rendered."

This brings us to a consideration of the reasons advanced by the appellants in support of their application for leave to intervene. Among other things, the proffered complaint in intervention avers that certain named persons, constituting a majority of the board of directors of the defendant corporation, had procured their appointment as such directors in order that they might cause a substitution of attorneys for the corporation in this action, and thus procure the restoration of the judgment theretofore entered in favor of the plaintiffs, but set aside by the order granting the corporation's motion for a new trial; that in so conducting themselves said majority members of the board of directors were acting in furtherance and consummation of a conspiracy with plaintiffs' counsel looking to "the destruction of said defendant corporation and the sale and distribution of the assets thereof among certain of the stockholders, without the consent or agreement of the stockholders of said corporation to such dissolution and destruction and distribution of the assets." It is also alleged that the plaintiffs own less than one per cent. of the outstanding capital stock of the corporation, and that "it would be useless and of no avail for these interveners * * * to apply to or make demand upon the board of directors of said defendant National Radio Company or upon its attorneys of record in the above-entitled cause to make defense to the claims of these plaintiffs," for they are "endeavoring to wind up the affairs of the corporation and dispose of all of the assets of said corporation and sell the same and upon such sale to distribute the proceeds to so many of the stockholders of said defendant and no more as can succeed in tracing their money as aforesaid. * * *"

[3-5] It is the settled rule, as contended by the respondents, that "a corporation represents and binds its stockholders in all matters within the limits of its corporate powers when acting in good faith and without fraud upon their rights. So long as the corporation is willing to perform its duty toward stockholders by instituting and conducting in good faith the necessary legal proceedings the stockholders have no cause for complaint; with the right of the corporation to sue and be sued concerning corporate rights or liabilities the stockholders cannot interfere, except when the governing directors or trustees refuse to act or are guilty of fraud in the maintenance or defense of an action." Difani v. Riverside Oil Co., 201 Cal. 210, 215, 256 P. 210, 212, 213. However, "where a corporation * * * refuses to defend an action, or, having begun a defense, it is made to appear that the corporation will not press it in good faith, a stockholder may, upon a proper application showing the facts, be allowed to become a party and defend on behalf of the corporation, but he must show that he cannot induce those in control to do that which is fair and right." Difani v. Riverside Oil Co., supra; Favorite v. Superior Court, 181 Cal. 261, 184 P. 15, 8 A. L. R. 290. The requirement that a demand must first be made upon the board of directors to defend, or continue the defense, of an action pending against a corporation, is not a necessary prerequisite to an intervention by the stockholders, where, as here, the facts alleged in the complaint in intervention are such as to render such a request useless.

[6] The peculiar nature of this action and the failure of the corporation defendant to defend against it, after having secured an order granting a new trial, together with the showing made upon the hearing of the motion for leave to intervene, are such, in our opinion, as to make this a proper case for an intervention by those stockholders opposed to the passive stand of the governing body of the corporate entity. Moreover, at least two of the three members of the board of directors charged by the appellants with having conspired with plaintiffs' counsel to secure a judgment favorable to the plaintiffs are stockholders of the corporation, and have paid their proportionate part of all assessments levied. A judgment for the plaintiffs would therefore redound as well to their benefit. In such a case, and particularly when the corporation neglects and fails to defend against the plaintiffs' claim, "there can be no doubt of the right of a stockholder to intervene." Shively v. Eureka Mining Co., supra. It would be a reproach to the law if the stockholders in such a case as this were remediless. In Morrill v. Little Falls Mfg. Co., 46 Minn. 260, 266, 48 N. W. 1124, 1126, it is stated that "the right of a stockholder to take means to preserve the corporate property, to prevent its loss to the corporation, or the impairment of its value" proceeds "upon the principle that whatever is or may be inimical or injurious to the corporation is or may be an injury to the stockholder, and he is therefore entitled to equitable relief." The appellant stockholders are unquestionably "aggrieved" by the judgment entered herein against the corporation, and, as parties to the record, they may properly appeal therefrom. Coburn v. Smart, 53 Cal. 742, 745.

The judgment and several orders appealed from are, and each is, reversed.

BAUER et al. v. SUPERIOR COURT IN AND FOR LOS ANGELES COUNTY et al.

Supreme Court of California. Sept. 24, 1929.

1. Appeal and error §907(5)—Appellate court will presume records of former proceedings support court's conclusion that issue had been tried, where they were not part of record.

Appellate court will presume that records of former proceedings supported court's conclusion that issue had been tried in former proceedings, where record of former proceedings was not made part of record on appeal.

2. Executors and administrators §504(4)—Exceptions to final account as to executors' fraudulent acquisition of properties were properly stricken, where they presented same issue presented by petition to remove executors which was dismissed.

Exceptions made to final account as to executors' fraudulent acquisition of properties were properly stricken from pleadings, where they presented the same issue that was presented by petition to remove executors which petition had been properly dismissed because issue had been already tried.

3. Judgment §725(3)—Petitioners held concluded by decision in former proceedings that property acquired by executors did not belong to estate.

Petitioners filing exceptions to account of executors and seeking removal of executors on ground that executors had fraudulently obtained from decedent prior to his death certain moneys and property, and that such property belonged to estate, were bound by decision of probate court in former proceedings that such property did not belong to estate.

4. Mandamus §4(1)—Petitioners held not entitled to writ of mandate, where court's rulings at most constituted mere error (Code Civ. Proc. § 1085).

Petitioners held not entitled to issuance of alternative writ of mandate under Code Civ. Proc. § 1085, where rulings and decisions on questions of law and fact at most constituted mere error, and petitioners had plain, speedy, and adequate remedy in ordinary course of law by appeal.

Morin, Newell & Brown, of Pasadena, for respondents.

SEAWELL, J. Petitioners herein invoke the power of the writ of mandate as the most recent of the several forms of attack made by them during several years last past against the executor and executrix (who will hereafter be referred to as executors) of the estate of Emile Bauer, deceased. Estate of Bauer, 199 Cal. 98, 248 P. 507; Bauer v. Bauer, 201 Cal. 267, 256 P. 820; Bauer v. Bauer, 201 Cal. 770, 256 P. 822; Bauer v. Bauer, 201 Cal. 771, 256 P. 822. Other proceedings taken are not included in the above list.

The representatives of said estate, Lily M. Bauer and Lloyd C. Bauer, are, respectively, the stepmother and half-brother of petitioner Hamilton A. Bauer. Petitioner Hambla C. Bauer, a minor, is the daughter of said Hamilton A. Bauer. It has been the insistent claim of petitioner Hamilton A. Bauer since the death of his father, Emile Bauer, that certain stocks, issues of the Union Oil Company of California, Central Oil Company of California, and Occidental Life Insurance Company, formerly owned by him, but transferred by him to his said wife and son Lloyd prior to his death, were procured by them by imposition, fraud, and undue influence practiced by his wife and son Lloyd at a time when the said Emile Bauer was weak and feeble from disease and age. The same claim was made by Hamilton A. Bauer as to the deed of the residence property which Emile Bauer executed to his wife, and which deed remained a matter of public record for a year and eight months prior to the death of said Emile Bauer. The final chapter of this branch of the controversy is written in Bauer v. Bauer, 201 Cal. 267, 256 P. 820, an action at law wherein it was held that the probate court was the proper forum for the litigation of the issue of ownership of property as between the executor and the estate. It is there held that the probate court has jurisdiction to determine as against an executor the amount of money or property of the estate that has come into his hands for the purpose of charging him therewith, and in determining that question to determine all issues necessarily included therein.

On June 13, 1927, Lily M. Bauer and Lloyd C. Bauer, as executors of the estate of Emile Bauer, deceased, filed in the superior court of the county of Los Angeles, sitting in probate, their final account, report, and petition for distribution, and also petitioned for extra compensation for extraordinary services rendered by said executors and their counsel in the administration of said estate. On June 29, 1927, Hamilton A. Bauer, who is a son of the decedent and a legatee under his will and a practicing attorney, filed a pleading which he denominated "Exceptions to final account," in which he objected to and contested the legality of a long list of items therein presented for allowance, and alleged that said executors had fraudulently obtained from decedent prior to his death certain moneys and property, and had failed and refused to account for the same, and prayed that they be charged with the value of said omitted property and moneys, approximately $61,000.

On October 21, 1927, Hambla C. Bauer filed a paper similarly entitled and identical in all respects with the one filed by her father in opposition to the settlement of said account. The executors in due time demurred to said exceptions to said account on general and special grounds, and moved to strike out specified portions upon the ground that the matters and things therein referred to and the contentions therein made had been fully and finally adjudicated in other proceedings in which the court had complete jurisdiction of the subject-matter.

A few days prior to the filing of said exceptions and objections to the account and petition for distribution, in which said Hamilton A. Bauer alleged that said executors had by connivance committed a fraud upon said Emile Bauer, and thereby obtained from him moneys and property of the value of approximately $60,000 which they fraudulently withheld from said estate, said Hamilton A. Bauer filed a petition asking for the removal of said executors on the ground that they had willfully and fraudulently refused to return or account for the same property described in said exceptions and objections, and which property was also the same property described in a former proceeding (Estate of Bauer, 199 Cal. 98, 248 P. 507) brought by him and other heirs to remove said executors and to compel them to account for said property. This proceeding was pending at the time said Hamilton A. Bauer filed said exceptions, which were subsequently incorporated by said Hambla C. Bauer in her petition. The executors demurred to said petition, praying for their removal and for an order compelling them to return said property and moneys as properties of the estate, setting forth several grounds of demurrer, one of which was that the issue raised as to the ownership of said property had been theretofore fully determined. They also gave notice that they would move to strike from the files said petition to remove said executors, for the reason that the sole contention of Hamilton A. Bauer in asking for the removal of said executors was based upon the assumption of ownership by the estate of said described property, and that question had been fully and exhaustively contested in said former proceeding, and was res judicata.

[1, 2] Decisions on the motion to strike out and the various demurrers were, by consent of all parties, deferred until the court should have an opportunity to examine all the papers and records used and evidence introduced in all of the several prior proceedings taken in the matter of the estate of Emile Bauer, deceased, with the view of determining whether the issue as to the ownership of the omitted property claimed by petitioners to be the property of said estate had been adjudicated in said proceedings. The court, upon an exhaustive examination and consideration of the pleadings, records, files, and evidence taken in all the proceedings, past and present, in the matter of the estate of Emile Bauer, found that as to the issue whether said properties described in the motion to remove said executors, and again described in the exceptions to said final account, belonged to said estate, had been thoroughly tried, after issue joined, in said former proceedings, and found by the court to be properties not belonging to said estate. The record of the former proceedings not being made a part of the record in the instant proceedings, it will be presumed that said records support the court's conclusion. The motion to dismiss the petition asking for the removal of said executors was accordingly granted. The exceptions made to the final account as to the executors' fraudulent acquisition of said properties, which were stricken out on motion of the executors, presented the same issue that was presented by said petition to remove said executors, and were properly stricken from the pleadings.

[3] The issue raised by petitioners as to the estate's ownership of said properties had been fully and thoroughly settled in other proceedings, was pressed by demurrer, by motion to strike out, by motion to dismiss, and pleaded in the answer. The question of the estate's ownership of the identical properties was directly and actually put in issue by Hamilton A. Bauer and the other heirs at law in said former suit or proceeding (Estate of Bauer, 199 Cal. 98, 248 P. 507), and was also presented in other forms in other proceedings, and was there judicially passed upon and determined by a probate court vested with jurisdiction to decide said issue and the judgment therein rendered was affirmed upon appeal to this court, and has become final. The facts have not since changed. Not only could the issue presented by this petition have been litigated in the former action, but it was actually litigated and determined therein. That petitioners are concluded by that proceeding cannot be questioned. Price et al. v. Sixth District Agricultural Association, 201 Cal. 502, 258 P. 387, and cases cited and reviewed therein.

The question whether the petitioners are concluded by the settlement of current accounts, to which they had objected, from again bringing before the court upon final settlement the matters which were by said current accounts settled or by necessary implication included in said settlements (Estate of Stott, 52 Cal. 403; Estate of Grant, 131 Cal. 426, 63 P. 731), is of no further importance, in view of what we have already said as to the application of the rule res judicata to the case.

[4] We have given consideration to the questions presented by petitioners for a writ of mandate, not because we were required to do so under the rules of appellate procedure, but only for the reason that the same points are raised in Estate of Bauer (L. A. No. 11405) 204 Cal. —, 281 P. 63, now before us, and which was an appeal from the final decree settling the final account and ordering distribution, and also from the order granting the motion of the executors to strike out and dismiss certain portions of the exceptions to the account.

The petitioners were not entitled to the issuance of an alternative writ of mandate upon any conceivable grounds. The trial judge at no time refused to perform any act which the law specially enjoined upon him, or a duty resulting from his office, trust, or station. Section 1085, Code Civ. Proc. Petitioners were dissatisfied with his rulings and decisions on questions of law and fact which at most, if wrong, and we think they are correct, constituted mere error. That petitioners had a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy in the ordinary course of law is demonstrated by the fact that they have brought the same questions before us upon appeal which are this day disposed of by decision upon appeal. If petitioners are entitled to invoke the extraordinary remedy of the writ of mandate in the showing made, then we see no reason why the writ should not be available in all cases where a court is charged with committing error in the most ordinary and commonplace ruling. Clearly such is not the office of the writ.

The petition is dismissed and the writ discharged.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Albert Lee Stephens, Judge.

Crail, Shutt, Penprase & Miller, of Los Angeles, Hamilton A. Bauer, of San Francisco, and Joe Crail and Claude A. Shutt, both of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Morin, Newell & Brown and J. W. Morin, all of Pasadena, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. The appeal in this case is "from the decree settling final account and ordering distribution and the order granting the motion of the executors to strike out and dismiss the exceptions to the final account filed by the contestants."

The primary object of this appeal is to relitigate the questions decided in Bauer v. Bauer, 201 Cal. 267, 256 P. 820, and Estate of Bauer, 199 Cal. 98, 248 P. 507.

The question considered in said cited cases, to wit, the ownership of certain property omitted from the inventory and final account and claimed by appellants to be property belonging to said estate, and again brought to our attention in Bauer v. Superior Court (S. F. No. 13357) 204 Cal. —, 281 P. 61, this day decided, is sought to be revived. This cannot be done.

No serious question is raised as to any matter or item of accounting except the main question which is foreclosed by Bauer v. Superior Court, supra. We have examined the account, and feel satisfied that it was justly settled. Many items were examined, passed upon, and allowed or disallowed as the justice of the situation seemed to warrant. The allowances made to the attorney and executors for extraordinary services performed, considering the many proceedings instituted and objections made during the course of administration in an effort to oust them and obstruct them in the settlement of the estate, do not appear to be unreasonable. Neither do we find any error committed in the matter of distribution.

The decree and orders are affirmed.

RODGERS v. BOARD OF PUBLIC WORKS

Supreme Court of California. Sept. 27, 1929.

Municipal corporations ⇨217(1)—Civil service commission could not require employee's service for one year to return to position after lay-off, where contrary to charter.

Civil service commission had no power to adopt rule requiring service of employee for one year before he should be entitled to be returned to position after lay-off, in view of charter providing that appointment of employee shall be deemed complete at end of probationary period not exceeding six months, and that any person appointed shall retain position as long as position is maintained unless removed for cause, and hence appointment of one to position of granite cutter was complete, where he served in such position over six months.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. J. Trabucco, Judge.

Application by James F. Rodgers for a peremptory writ of mandate to be directed to the Board of Public Works and others. Judgment granting the application, and the defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Superseding opinion of District Court of Appeal, 274 P. 1034.

John J. O'Toole, City Atty., and Thomas P. Slevin, Asst. City Atty., both of San Francisco, for appellants.

Joseph T. Curley and Marvin C. Hix, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This is an appeal by the defendants from a judgment granting an application for a peremptory writ of mandate, compelling the defendant board of public works of the city and county of San Francisco to transmit to civil service commission of said city and county a warrant in the sum of $289.75, representing lost wages, and for said commission to approve the same for payment, and compelling the civil service commission to reinstate petitioner's name on the official records of civil service as occupying the permanent position of granite cutter, and by virtue of his reinstatement the board of public works is directed to admit plaintiff to the performance of the duties of said position and to pay him the compensation therefor.

The facts found by the trial court with reference to the controversy are, in substance, as follows:

Subsequent to March 14, 1923, defendant civil service commission, while plaintiff was on the register of eligibles, and in response to a requisition, bearing date July 13, 1925, from the defendant board of public works, certified plaintiff to said board of public works for appointment to the permanent position of granite cutter, and thereafter said board of public works appointed plaintiff to a permanent position of granite cutter, from said register of eligibles, and thereafter plaintiff continued to fill and to perform the duties of said position from July 29, 1925, until May 15, 1926, during which period of time plaintiff was actually engaged in the pursuit of his position for 216.31½ days. Subsequent to the 15th day of May, 1926, plaintiff was laid off by said board of public works on account of lack of funds for the employment of persons in the position of granite cutter, but said position was never abolished, and on March 1, 1927, the defendant civil service commission, in response to a requisition filed with it by the board of public works, again certified plaintiff to said board of public works, and said board re-employed plaintiff in said permanent position of granite cutter and plaintiff continued to perform the duties of this position from March 1, 1927, to September 30, 1927, during which time plaintiff was actually engaged in the pursuit of his position for 19.37 days. Subsequent to the last-mentioned date, plaintiff ceased to perform the duties of said position on account of lack of funds for the payment of services performed in said position, and plaintiff was purported to have been returned to the list of eligibles, but such position was at no time abolished and is now and at all times mentioned in the complaint in this action was in existence.

The register of eligibles upon which plaintiff's name appeared, by virtue of a provision limiting the existence of said list for a period of four years from the date of adoption of said list by the civil service commission, automatically expired on the 14th day of March, 1927. On the 14th day of November, 1927, a new register of eligibles for the position of granite cutter was adopted by the civil service commission, as the result of an examination therefor conducted by the civil service commission for positions of granite cutter, and on said register of eligibles the name of plaintiff appears in sixth place.

Said civil service commission enacted, adopted, and promulgated section 4 of its rule 22, which was in effect at all the times mentioned in the petition and answer herein and up to the 6th day of September, 1927, which said section of said rule reads as follows: "Section 4. Hold-Overs. Whenever, because of lack of work or lack of funds, or for purposes of retrenchment, a person who has served for one year continuously under appointment in an original entrance position that is considered within the meaning of the rules of this Commission as a permanent position, is laid off or separated from such position, he shall, while so separated from such position, be termed a 'hold-over' and shall be preferred for re-appointment in the first vacancy thereafter occurring in the class from which he was so separated; provided that if there be more than one such 'hold-over' in a class, the one having the longest service under permanent appointment for the period of two years next preceding the date of receipt of requisition shall be given the preference, and when ties exist in service during such two-year period the person who was in line first for original appointment shall be preferred. When such 'hold-overs' have not been re-appointed to a permanent position within a period of two years from the date of their last lay-off, their eligibility for reappointment may be cancelled by the Commission. Persons appointed to positions considered as permanent under the rule who are laid off because of lack of work or lack of funds before having served one year continuously under such permanent appointment shall be returned to the existing line of eligibles according to the general average percentage they received in examination and shall be treated as new eligibles."

Plaintiff at no time during the period of time from March 14, 1923, up to and including March 13, 1927, served for a period of one year or more continuously under appointment in the permanent position of granite cutter, from said register of eligibles for such position, but plaintiff did serve, fill, and perform the duties of said position of granite cutter continuously for more than six months' time under appointment to such position and from such register of eligibles; the register of eligibles upon which plaintiff's name appeared expired while plaintiff was under appointment to the permanent position of granite cutter, and while plaintiff was performing the duties of and filling the position of granite cutter.

It was further found by the trial court that, from the 25th day of January, 1928, to the 6th day of March, 1928, the position of granite cutter was filled by a person other than plaintiff and by one not entitled to said position; that during said period of time 30½ working days have elapsed; that, if the defendants civil service commission and board of public works had not refused to permit plaintiff to perform the services and duties of his position as permanent granite cutter, during this period of time, plaintiff would have earned and been entitled to receive $9.50 for each working day and would have been entitled to receive the aggregate sum of $289.75.

As conclusions of law, the trial court determined that the plaintiff was entitled to the writ as prayed, and, further, that the civil service commission was and is without authority of law to pass a rule requiring plaintiff to occupy continuously his position of granite cutter of said city and county of San Francisco for a period of time of one year, or for any other period of time in excess of six months, before his appointment to such position shall be deemed complete.

The latter conclusion of the trial court with reference to the commission's lack of power to make rule 22 is the only point involved upon this appeal, for it is admitted that the procedure of the civil service commission was in accord with said rule.

Appellants vigorously contend that rule 22, section 4 thereof, is not contrary to the spirit of the charter of the city and county of San Francisco, and the contrary is contended by respondent.

Article XIII, section 3, of said Charter, provides: "The Commissioners shall make rules to carry out the purposes of this article, and for examinations, appointments, promotions and removals and in accordance with its provisions may from time to time make changes in the existing rules."

The charter also provides (article XIII, § 10): "The appointing officer shall notify the Commissioners of each position to be filled separately, and shall fill such place by appointment of one of the persons certified to him by the Commissioners therefor. Such appointment shall be on probation for a period to be fixed by the rules of the Commissioners, but such rules shall not fix such period at exceeding six months * * * At or before the expiration of the period of probation the head of the department or office in which a candidate is employed, may, by and with the consent of the Commissioners, discharge him upon assigning in writing his reason therefor to the Commissioners. If he is not then discharged, his appointment shall be deemed complete."

There is a further charter provision, as follows: "Any classification or grading may be amended or abolished by the Commission, and classes calling for similar qualifications may be consolidated but persons who have been appointed from any such class shall retain any position lawfully held thereunder so long as such position is maintained unless removed in accordance with the provisions of section 12." (Art. XIII, sec. 2.)

We are in accord with the view of the trial court that the commission had no power to adopt a rule requiring service for one year before an employee is entitled to be returned to his position after a "lay-off." As we have indicated, the charter provides that the appointment of the employee shall be deemed complete at the end of the probationary period, "not exceeding six months," and that any person appointed "shall retain any position lawfully held * * * so long as such position is maintained," unless removed for cause, etc. It has been expressly found that the permanent position of granite cutter was maintained during the time involved in this controversy, that the petitioner's appointment was to a permanent position, and that he had served in such position for over six months.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

MAIRO v. YELLOW CAB CO. OF CALIFORNIA. (S. F. 12520.) ★

Rehearing Denied Oct. 31, 1929.

1. Trial $\hookrightarrow$ 142—Verdict may be directed for defendant only when, giving plaintiff's evidence all value to which it is entitled, no evidence substantially supporting verdict for plaintiff may be found.

Court may direct verdict for defendant only when, disregarding conflicting evidence and giving plaintiff's evidence all the value to which it is legally entitled, indulging every legitimate inference which may be drawn therefrom, no evidence of sufficient substantiality to support a verdict for plaintiff, if given, may be found.

2. Automobiles $\hookrightarrow$ 245(43, 72)—Taxicab operator's negligence in driving at excessive speed and pedestrian's contributory negligence were fact questions for jury.

Whether operator of defendant's taxicab was negligent in driving down center of street at excessive speed, and whether plaintiff, in attempting to cross busy street in middle of the block without due heed for his safety, was contributorily negligent, constituted questions of fact for jury.

3. Release $\hookrightarrow$ 17(2)—Releases of personal injury claim obtained by taking advantage of plaintiff's ignorance or necessities and misrepresenting true character of releases are void.

If releases of personal injury claim were obtained by taking advantage of plaintiff's ignorance and necessities, and if their true character was misrepresented to him so that he did not know what he was really signing, releases were void.

4. Release $\hookrightarrow$ 58(6)—Whether releases of personal injury claims were obtained by fraud was jury question, where evidence thereon was conflicting.

Where evidence on issue whether releases of personal injury claim were obtained by taking advantage of plaintiff's ignorance and necessities and by misrepresenting their true character to him was conflicting, such issue should have been submitted to jury, and it was erroneous for trial court to direct verdict for defendant.

Action by Walter Mairo against the Yellow Cab Company of California. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Superseding opinion of District Court of Appeal in 275 P. 468.

Alfred J. Hennessy, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Cooley, Crowley & Gallagher, of San Francisco, for respondent.

PRESTON, J. In this action for damages for personal injuries alleged to have been suffered by plaintiff through the negligence of defendant's taxicab driver, plaintiff appeals from a judgment that he take nothing. The principal question is as to the correctness of the action of the trial court in directing the jury, at the close of the evidence, to render the verdict for defendant upon which said judgment was entered.

[1] The court may direct a verdict only when disregarding conflicting evidence and giving plaintiff's evidence all the value to which it is legally entitled, indulging every legitimate inference which may be drawn therefrom, no evidence of sufficient substantiality to support a verdict in favor of plaintiff, if given may be found. Estate of Caspar, 172 Cal. 147, 155 P. 631; Perera v. Panama-Pacific Int. Exp. Co., 179 Cal. 63, 175 P. 454; Cal. Packing Corp. v. Lopez (Cal. Sup.) 279 P. 664. In this action, viewing the evidence in a light favorable to plaintiff, we find a substantial case is made by him and his witnesses, and it is our opinion that the evidence, sharply conflicting, clearly warranted submission of the cause to the jury for their determination of the several issues of fact involved, as will appear from the following résumé:

On February 12, 1925, plaintiff, a Russian, illiterate, unable to read or even to wholly understand spoken English, while crossing Third street, at about the middle of the block, between Folsom and Harrison, in San Francisco, was hit by a taxicab belonging to defendant. He sustained rather severe injuries, to wit, fractures of three ribs and the collar bone; also puncture of the pleura and contusions and abrasions of the head, trunk, and extremities. Because of his apparent need, he was cared for and rushed to the hospital by defendant, where he was confined for some six weeks and operated upon. He continued medical treatment for some time after his discharge therefrom.

[2] There is evidence pointing to the conclusion that the operator of the taxicab was negligent in driving down the center of the street at an excessive rate of speed. There is also testimony tending to support a finding of contributory negligence on the part of plaintiff in attempting to cross a busy street in the middle of the block without due heed for his safety. Obviously these are questions of fact for a jury.

Defendant introduced in evidence three separate instruments: One dated February 14, 1925, naming a consideration of $1 and medical and hospital care, one dated March 18, 1925, naming a consideration of $25, and the third March 20, 1925, naming a consideration of $14, each of which was signed by plaintiff and purported to release defendant from all liability which it might have incurred by reason of said accident. Defendant claims that out of sympathy for plaintiff in his poverty-stricken state, and despite the fact the injury resulted from his own contributory negligence, it gave him, as a charity, the hospital and medical care and sums stated, in return for which three valid releases were duly executed by plaintiff; that the documents were read slowly and distinctly to him and he thoroughly understood their purport at the time he signed them. There is evidence supporting this claim.

Plaintiff, on the contrary, contends, and his contention likewise has support in the evidence, that he did not at any time understand that he was executing a release of any kind; that he executed the first document upon the understanding and belief that it was a permit to operate upon him; that when he left the hospital he had no money and his clothes were hanging to him by dozens of pins; that the second instrument was represented to him as being merely a receipt for $25 with which he was to buy a new suit to replace the one ruined by the accident; and the third paper he likewise believed was merely a receipt for wages given to help him out until he could find work.

[3, 4] If the said three releases were obtained by taking advantage of plaintiff's ignorance and necessities, and if their true character was misrepresented to him so that he did not know what he was really signing, they are, of course, void. But under the condicting evidence here it is impossible to tell whether such was the fact. This also was an issue which should have gone to the jury, and it was therefore erroneous for the trial court to direct said verdict for defendant. Much authority can be cited to sustain this ruling, but we deem an extended discussion unnecessary. See, Meyer v. Haas, 126 Cal. 560, 58 P. 1042; Davis v. Diamond C. & L. Co., 146 Cal. 59, 79 P. 596; Smith v. Occidental, etc., S. S. Co., 99 Cal. 462, 34 P. 84; 22 Cal. Jur. § 18, p. 769.

The judgment is reversed.

LAHANEY v. LAHANEY et al. (S. F. 12775.)

Supreme Court of California. Sept. 30, 1929.

1. Husband and wife ⇨265—Wife's interest in community property conveyed by husband was mere expectancy.

Interest of wife in community property at time of husband's conveyance to sister and wife was mere expectancy and possessed none of attributes of an estate either at law or in equity.

2. Husband and wife ⇨267(7)—Husband's deed of community property conveying undivided one-half interest each to sister and wife vested in each equal undivided one-half.

Under husband's deed of community property, which by its express terms conveyed his entire interest and estate and granted to each of grantees, his sister and wife, "an undivided one-half interest" therein, intention was to thereby vest in each grantee an equal undivided one-half.

3. Husband and wife ⇨267(7)—Husband's deed of community property to sister and wife was valid, subject to wife's right to institute equity action to revoke deed (Civ. Code, § 172, as amended by St. 1891, p. 425).

Husband's deed of community property conveying one-half interest to each of grantees, his sister and wife, was not void under Civ. Code, § 172, as amended by St. 1891, p. 425, requiring wife's consent in writing to husband's gift or conveyance without valuable consideration of community property; but it was a valid deed subject only to right of wife to institute seasonably in equity an action to revoke deed and reinstate property as community property with title vested in husband and subject to sale by him as before.

4. Husband and wife ⇨267(7)—Delivery to sister more than year after execution of husband's deed of community property naming wife and sister as grantees was valid.

Husband's delivery to sister of deed of community property naming wife and sister as grantees more than a year after it was executed was valid, and fact that wife was unaware of making or delivery of deed prior to husband's death could only affect seasonableness of her right to institute an action to set aside deed.

5. Husband and wife $\S$ 267(7)—Where husband executed deed of community property to sister and wife and delivered deed to sister, no part of such properties became part of his estate at death.

Where husband executed deed of community property to his sister and wife, conveying to each an undivided one-half interest, and delivered deed to sister, there remained in him at his death no part of such properties which could or did become part of his estate or that his heirs or personal representatives would have been entitled to recover as such.

6. Husband and wife $\S$ 267(9)—Wife receiving her equal undivided one-half of community property by husband's deed could not assail cotemporaneous gift to husband's sister of his undivided interest.

Where husband executed deed conveying undivided one-half interest in community property each to sister and wife and delivered deed to sister before his death, wife, having by such deed fully received and fully accepted her equal undivided one-half of community property, had no remaining right in law or equity either before or after husband's death to assail his cotemporaneous gift to sister of his own equal undivided interest in same property.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Frank J. Murasky, Judge.

Action for the partition of real property by Catherine E. Lahaney against Ivy L. Lahaney and others. From an interlocutory judgment, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Superseding opinion of District Court of Appeal in 277 P. 317.

Raymond D. Williamson and W. A. Breen, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

Ramsay Moran, M. O. Sloss, Sloss & Ackerman, Louis Ferrari, and Tobias J. Bricca, all of San Francisco, for respondent Bank of Italy.

William A. Kelly, of San Francisco, in pro. per.

RICHARDS, J. On January 27, 1919, Joseph F. Lahaney was, and for more than ten years prior thereto had been, the owner of four parcels of land in the city and county of San Francisco. Two of these parcels of land had been purchased by him in 1909, one in 1913, and one in 1917. They all stood in his name alone, but it is conceded that they were each and all the community property of himself and his wife, Ivy L. Lahaney. On January 27, 1919, Joseph F. Lahaney made and executed a grant deed of each and all of these four parcels of land to the two grantees named therein, viz., his wife, Ivy L. Lahaney, and his sister, Catherine E. Lahaney, granting to each "an undivided one-half interest in and to all his right, title and interest" in said parcels of land. It is conceded that the consideration for this deed was nominal and that in substance and effect it was as to each of said grantees a deed of gift. This deed, while thus executed on the last-named date, was not delivered to either of said grantees until December 27, 1921, when it was delivered to Catherine E. Lahaney, the plaintiff herein and one of said grantees. The deed was recorded on November 19, 1922. Joseph F. Lahaney died intestate on September 9, 1922, and thereafter his widow, Ivy L. Lahaney, was duly appointed and qualified as the administratrix of his estate. Thereafter and on November 18, 1922, this action was instituted by Catherine E. Lahaney to determine the respective interests of the parties thereto in said four parcels of land, and to have a partition thereof accordingly among the persons found to be entitled thereto.

[1-5] At the time of his aforesaid conveyances of said four parcels of land in equal undivided interests to the two grantees named therein, Joseph F. Lahaney was the sole owner of the entire vested estate and interest in said parcels of land. Being community property, the interest of his wife therein at the time of such conveyance was "a mere expectancy, and [possessed] none of the attributes of an estate, either at law or in equity." Stewart v. Stewart, 199 Cal. 318, 335, 249 P. 197, 201, and cases cited. The respondents herein concede that such is the law of this state as declared in our said recent decision and in the long line of cases cited in its support. His said deed, therefore, by its express terms conveyed his entire interest and estate in each and all of said properties. By its express terms, also, he granted to each of his said grantees "an undivided one-half interest" therein. Having thus conveyed to his two grantees the entire estate in said properties in equal undivided shares, it follows irresistibly that it was his intention to thereby vest in each an equal undivided one-half thereof. No other intention can possibly be contorted out of the express substance and terms of said conveyance. This deed of Joseph F. Lahaney was not as to any portion thereof void. This the respondents also concede to be the law as particularly laid down in the case of Spreckels v. Spreckels, 172 Cal. 775, 158 P. 537, 539. The language of this latter decision is instructive as having particular reference to the effect of the amendment to section 172 of the Civil Code made in the year 1891 (St. 1891, p. 425), requiring the consent in writing of the wife to the husband's gift or conveyance without a valuable consideration of the community property, and with respect to which it is stated in said decision, written by Mr. Justice Shaw and concurred in by Mr. Justice Sloss, as follows: "We are satisfied that the proviso of 1891 does not render a gift of community property by the husband without the consent of the wife void as to him, nor confer upon him, in his lifetime, or upon his personal representative after his death, any right or power to revoke the gift or recover the property. There is nothing in the language to express the idea that the title does not, as before, remain wholly in him. * * * Neither does the proviso purport to vest in the wife * * * any present interest or estate in the community property given away by the husband without her written consent." It thus follows that the aforesaid deed of Joseph F. Lahaney was not a void, but was a valid deed, subject only to the right in the wife to institute, seasonably, in equity an action to revoke said deed and reinstate the property as "community property, with the title vested in the husband and subject to sale by him, as before." Spreckels v. Spreckels, supra. The deed of Joseph F. Lahaney was thus valid, though voidable, on its execution. It was also valid as to its delivery upon December 27, 1921, in so far as each and both of its grantees are concerned, since if its delivery upon said date to Catherine E. Lahaney, one of said grantees, was not also a sufficient delivery to Ivy L. Lahaney, the other of said grantees, under the provisions of section 1059 of the Civil Code, then as to the latter there was no other delivery of said deed, and this judgment for that reason would have to be reversed. The fact that Ivy L. Lahaney was unaware of the making or delivery of said deed prior to the death of Joseph F. Lahaney could only affect the seasonableness of her right to institute an action to set aside such deed. Spreckels v. Spreckels, supra, 172 Cal. page 783, 158 P. 537. We thus arrive at the irresistible conclusion that Joseph F. Lahaney in his lifetime and by said valid deed, and by the aforesaid valid delivery thereof as to both of his grantees, had fully conveyed the whole estate in the properties described therein to the said grantees thereof in equal undivided interests, share and share alike. This being so, there remained in him at the time of his death no part of said properties which could or did become a part of his estate, or that his heirs or personal representatives would have been entitled to recover as such. Dargie v. Patterson, 176 Cal. 714, 718, 169 P. 360, 361.

[6] It thus appears that the only outstanding right or equity, if any, existing upon the death of the husband, was the same right or equity which, as his wife, she had possessed prior to his death to have set aside a conveyance by way of gift by him which injuriously affected her community right in and to the properties of the community, which right prior to his death was but an expectancy, but which as to any community property owned by him at the time of his death had ripened into a vested estate. We are thus brought back to a consideration of the effect of the husband's conveyance to his two grantees of his entire ownership and interest in the properties in question by the same identical instrument. First as to the wife. Prior to said deed she had, as we have seen, only an expectancy in each and every portion of said properties to the extent of an undivided one-half thereof. Her whole present right therein consisted, under the authorities above referred to, in the right to have a court of equity protect that inchoate expectancy against injurious invasion on her husband's part through his gift thereof to another. When, however, her husband by his said deed to her converted her said inchoate expectancy in and to an undivided one-half of said community properties into a present vested interest therein and in the whole thereof as her sole and separate estate he gave and granted to her all of her right and expectancy both in law and equity in said properties and in the whole thereof. It is true, as the respondents herein assert and as the authorities hold, that the wife's community interest in such properties runs to the whole and every portion thereof, but so, also, did the husband's deed herein. To construe such deed otherwise than as transferring to the wife her entire right and equity in the whole of said properties would be to deny the husband both the right to convey to his wife her whole right and interest, present and future, in the community property and the whole thereof, but would also be to deny to the husband his right to dispose by gift of his undivided one-half in and to the whole of the community estate. In the case of Dargie v. Patterson, supra, this court, Mr. Justice Sloss writing the opinion, went fully into this subject, holding in harmony with the prior decision of this court in the second case of Spreckels v. Spreckels, supra, that: "The only logical conclusion is that the wife's right to assail the conveyance where, as here, the action is brought after the husband's death, is limited to an undivided half of the property. During his lifetime the husband, notwithstanding the statutory limitation upon his power of disposition, is the owner of the community property. The proviso attached to section 172 does not impair his right to dispose of the property, so far as concerns his own interest, and that of those claiming under him." There would thus seem to be no escape from the effect of our holding in the case of Dargie v. Patterson, supra, wherein this court upheld the gift to a stranger of the husband's one-half of the community property and only set aside his conveyance as to the wife's, or widow's, undivided one-half interest therein. The conclusion would seem to be irresistible that when by the same identical deed the wife has fully received and has fully accepted her equal undivided one-half of the community properties, she has no remaining right in law or equity, either before or after the death of the husband, to assail his contemporaneous gift to another of his own equal undivided interest in the same property.

The judgment herein holding to the contrary should be and is reversed.

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; SEAWELL, J.; LANGDON, J.; CURTIS, J.

PRESTON, J. I concur. I have been led to concur in the conclusion in this case and, in a large measure, in the reasoning upon which it rests. It seems that the death of Lahaney, prior to action of any kind or even knowledge on the part of the wife respecting the execution of said deed, is an important factor. Had he deeded the whole property to the sister, the wife, after his death, could have avoided it only as to the one-half thereof representing her share of the community estate. Dargie v. Patterson, 176 Cal. 714, 169 P. 360. If the deed is clear in its terms and shows the husband intended to give his sister the whole of the one-half of the community property over which he had testamentary power, and to exclude his wife therefrom, the deed, delivered after his death, is tantamount to a will or bequest which made this intention clear. In other words, the husband's intention is the controlling element. If he intended to exclude the wife and the wife did not or could not act prior to the falling in of the community estate upon his death, then his intention must be given effect. The deed seems to bear no other construction than that the husband did so intend to exclude the wife from the community property over which he had the right of testamentary disposition.

LIVESEY v. STOCK. (L. A. 10033.)

Supreme Court of California. Sept. 30, 1929.

1. Assault and battery ☞15—Landowner may expel trespasser without incurring liability, if unnecessary force is not employed.

Landowner may expel trespasser from his premises without incurring liability, so long as unnecessary force is not employed.

2. Assault and battery ☞39—Rule that exemplary damages cannot be recovered by trespasser for wrongful force in expelling him from premises has no application except where trespass is shown.

The rule that a trespasser may not recover exemplary damages for unnecessary force used in expelling him from premises has no application in cases other than where plaintiff was actually a trespasser.

3. Assault and battery ☞35—Evidence held to sustain jury finding that plaintiff, suing for damages for assault with deadly weapon, was not trespasser on defendant's shore lands (St. 1911, p. 1304).

In action for damages for assault with deadly weapon, jury finding that defendant's fence posts were not within boundary line of defendant's property held supported by evidence, as against contention that plaintiff was a trespasser on lands of defendant above mean high tide; plaintiff's contention being that the fence was on lands below high tide, ceded by Legislature in trust to city of Long Beach, by St. 1911, p. 1304.

4. Assault and battery ☞35—Verdict for actual and punitive damages held authorized for assault with deadly weapon, while plaintiff was removing fence from bathing beach not within defendant's boundaries.

Verdict for actual and punitive damages for plaintiff, shot by defendant while removing latter's fence from public tide lands not within defendant's boundaries, held authorized by evidence.

5. Damages ☞91(1)—Exemplary damages may be awarded, where malice, fraud, or oppression exists.

Exemplary damages may be awarded, where malice, fraud, or oppression are present.

6. Courts ☞30—Illegality respecting impaneling of jury is never jurisdictional question, but at most error in exercise thereof.

Illegality respecting impaneling of jury in civil case is never jurisdictional question, but is at most error in exercise thereof.

7. Jury ☞115—Challenges must be to individual jurors in civil cases, challenges to panel not being recognized (Code Civ. Proc. § 601).

In view of Code Civ. Proc. § 601, challenge to panel is not allowable in civil cases; the remedy allowed being challenge to individual jurors.

8. Appeal and error ☞1045(1)—Error in restricting special venire to township held inconsequential, in view of provisions for drawing regular venire (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 204, 206, 226, 227).

Any error in directing sheriff to summon special venire for Long Beach superior court from township was inconsequential, since, under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 204, 206, the regular panel would have consisted of persons residing within township, notwithstanding sections 226, 227, relating to summoning jurors, contain no such provision.

9. Jury ☞110(7)—In absence of challenges to individual jurors, objection that jurors had served and been discharged within year was untenable (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 199, 200).

Objection that jurors had each served on regular or special venire and had been discharged as such within one year, in violation of Code Civ. Proc. §§ 199, 200, cannot be considered, where no jurors were challenged on this or other ground.

10. Assault and battery ☞39—$750 actual and $33,333.33 punitive damages for wounding by No. 8 bird shot at distance of over 50 yards held, as to punitive damages, excessive, and remittitur of excess over $10,000 required.

$750 actual and $33,333.33 punitive damages, for wounds received by being shot with No. 8 bird shot at distance of 50 yards or more, held excessive, and remittitur of all in excess of $10,000 required as condition of affirmance.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Paul B. Dougherty, Judge.

Action by George Livesey against Hugh E. Stock. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed, on condition of remittitur.

G. M. Spicer, of Long Beach, W. I. Gilbert, of Los Angeles, and Keyes & Erskine, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Walter Desmond and Harry L. Cohn, both of Long Beach, for respondent.

PRESTON, J. In this action the judgment was for plaintiff, awarding actual and punitive damages growing out of an assault with a deadly weapon. The verdict was $5,000 actual and $50,000 exemplary damages. The court below, upon motion for a new trial, determined that, unless the amount of such damages was remitted by the plaintiff to $750 as actual and $33,333.33 as punitive damages, a new trial should be ordered. Plaintiff remitted said excess sum, but the defendant has nevertheless appealed.

The first assignment of error requiring special consideration may be summed up in the words of defendant's counsel as follows: "The appellant was the owner and was in possession of real property. The respondent deliberately and willfully, for the second time within a period of two days, was destroying the fence on appellant's property. Under the law the respondent was a trespasser, and appellant had the right to use all necessary force to repel his unlawful trespass. The respondent cannot recover anything in this action, unless he shows that unnecessary force was used to prevent the trespass, and then can only recover the actual damage resulting from the unnecessary force, and under the law he cannot recover exemplary damages."

[1, 2] The soundness of the proposition of law thus asserted can scarcely be doubted, for the law is clear that a trespasser may be expelled from the premises of a landowner without incurring liability, so long as unnecessary force is not employed. Burnham v. Stone, 101 Cal. 164, 171, 35 P. 627; Walker v. Chanslor, 153 Cal. 118, 129, 94 P. 606, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 455, 126 Am. St. Rep. 61. It may also be conceded that there is little, if any, reason for awarding exemplary damages in favor of a trespasser upon the property of another, who by reason of his own wrong is in part responsible for the force used. Kiff v. Youmans, 86 N. Y. 324, 40 Am. Rep. 543. But these principles of law are applicable solely upon the assumption that the plaintiff was a trespasser upon the property of the defendant. In this case the necessary finding of the jury was to the effect that plaintiff was not a trespasser upon the property of defendant at the time and place of the assault. The case in this aspect then resolves itself into one as to the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain this finding. A brief recital of the facts must precede our further consideration of this issue:

Defendant, a man of considerable wealth owned on April 4, 1926, at the time in question, a block of land in Long Beach, Cal., situated on Ocean avenue, between Fifth and Sixth place. The southern boundary line of this property, for the purposes of this case, may be considered to have been, as contended by appellant, the line of mean high tide of the Pacific Ocean. The tide lands of the ocean below the line of mean high tide within the city limits of Long Beach were by the Legislature of California in 1911 (Stats. 1911, p. 1304) ceded to said city in trust for the purpose of developing same as a public harbor, and to promote commerce and navigation; the state reserving to itself, however, the right of the public to fish in said ocean, and the right of convenient access over said lands for said purpose. Previous to said above-mentioned date, and for a considerable period of time, there had existed a controversy between the city of Long Beach, acting principally for the purpose of preserving the beach for the public as a place of recreation, and a number of property owners of said city, of whom defendant was one, known as "bluff owners," over the location of the line between their property and the line of mean high tide of said ocean. The public, too, made considerable use of the beach; resident men, women, and children, as well as guests, frequented it; life guards were kept in attendance upon it, and vehicles used for sanitary purposes traveled up and down this area. But some time prior to April 2, 1926, defendant, acting to better his position legally in his contention with the city, projected two barriers, called by some fences, one of which was an extension or projection of his east and the other of his west property line southward toward the ocean. He had also theretofore constructed a concrete bulkhead or retaining wall some distance north of the southerly boundary line of his property; but this wall did not connect with the extremities of these barriers, and bore no relation thereto.

On April 2d, presumably at night, plaintiff removed what might be called one panel of said barriers, by releasing the staples with which the woven wire fence was attached to the most southerly post of said barriers, and laid back the portion of said wire extending from this post to the next post, a distance of some 8 or 10 feet. Defendant immediately caused said barriers to be reconstructed. On April 4, 1926, about 2 P. M., the day being Easter Sunday, plaintiff and other portions of the public were using or attempting to use said beach for recreation purposes, and plaintiff, having theretofore procured a bar of iron, was engaged, while standing at said most southerly post of the so-called Fifth place barrier, in releasing said staples holding said woven wire fence, for the purpose of repeating his said previous performance, when defendant, seeing him through the window of his home, seized a No. 12-gauge Winchester pump shotgun, 2 shells of three drams of powder each, and 1½ ounces of No. 8 shot, came out of his residence, and a short distance down the walk leading therefrom, and upon reaching a point some 200 feet from the place where plaintiff was standing, with said gun fired at him leaden pellets, several of which took effect, but worked no considerable injury. Plaintiff desisted for a moment, and conferred with some other persons near him. Later he returned to the post and began the further execution of his purpose, when defendant, who had approached within a distance of some 160 feet, fired a second shot, which also took effect. There was evidence, also, that defendant, approaching still closer, either leveled his gun or undertook to shoot plaintiff a third time, but the effort was a false one, or else the gun failed to fire. As a result of said shooting, plaintiff received small wounds and some 35 or 40 shot were extracted from his body by the physician.

The basis of defendant's contention is that on October 2, 1924, he had his property lines surveyed, and had set stakes marking the line of mean high tide and the southeast and southwest corners of said property, and that said fences or barriers terminated within this projected area. The evidence of plaintiff, however, showed that the post in question was at least 7 feet south and oceanward from the line of mean high tide. This also was the logical deduction from the testimony of experts offered by defendant, and it is not seriously controverted by him; but his theory in this behalf is that, by reason of a sudden storm in February, 1926, the level of the sand on the beach at this point had been materially reduced, consequently causing the line of ordinary high tide to strike the beach at a point considerably to the north of where it formerly had been; hence what is known as the doctrine of avulsion should be applied, under which he had the right to maintain his ownership at the old line as indicated by the said posts.

[3, 4] The authenticity of the claimed survey was not established by him. However, the court, under the most careful, liberal, and specific instructions, submitted to the jury the issue as to whether or not the post in question and the position of plaintiff at the time of the shooting were within or without the boundary line of defendant's property. The court also specifically submitted under appropriate and elaborate instructions the doctrine of avulsion claimed by defendant to be applicable. Upon both these issues the jury returned a verdict against the contention of appellant, and in favor of the contention of respondent. There being, as above pointed out, ample evidence to sustain this finding, application of the rule of trespass may not be invoked by appellant. In other words, the evidence warranted the finding that plaintiff at the time and place in question was without the boundary line of defendant's property, and upon the public domain, and was there engaged in removing what must have been considered by the jury a public nuisance, which was not an unlawful act, nor was it an invasion of any property right of defendant; hence the jury was well within its province in assessing actual damages, and, we think, also in assessing exemplary damages.

[5] Exemplary damages may be awarded where malice, fraud, or oppression are present. Section 3294, Civ. Code; Davis v. Hearst, 160 Cal. 143, 161, 116 P. 530; Scott v. Times-Mirror Co., 181 Cal. 345, 367, 184 P. 672, 12 A. L. R. 1007. It requires no argument to establish the fact that malice or oppression is present in a case where, within little more than 50 to 60 yards distant, a defendant deliberately shoots twice at another with a gun loaded with No. 8 shot. The evidence even warranted a finding of a third attempt within still closer range. This situation is not changed by the statement of defendant that he was firing at the small fence post at which plaintiff was standing.

The further claim is made that the court was without jurisdiction to proceed on the trial by reason of a void order directing the sheriff to summon a special venire of talesmen from which to select the jury. The court in this case, pursuant to a recent statute, sat in Long Beach as department 28 of the superior court of Los Angeles county. No regular jury was in attendance. The court directed the sheriff to summon a special venire from Long Beach township, instead of from the body of the county. Defendant moved to vacate the order, which motion was denied. Later he objected to going forward with the trial. But he declined to interpose a challenge to a single juror on this or any other ground.

[6-8] The presence of illegality respecting the impaneling of a jury in a civil cause is never a jurisdictional question, but it is, at most, but error in the exercise thereof. Amos v. Superior Court, 196 Cal. 677, 239 P. 317. A challenge leveled at the panel is not contemplated by the statute in civil cases. The remedy allowed is a challenge to the individual juror. Section 601, Code Civ. Proc.; Estate of Wall, 187 Cal. 50, 200 P. 929.

The general objection here made to the panel amounted to no more than a challenge thereto. Moreover, the error was at most but technical, for under sections 204 and 206 of the Code of Civil Procedure, a regular panel for the Long Beach superior court would have consisted of persons selected "from the names of men and women residing within the township within which said city is located." While sections 226 and 227 do not contain a similar provision, still directing the sheriff to remain in a given township while seeking a special venire, so long as they were not taken from bystanders, would seem to be a matter of small consequence.

[9] The point that the jurors had each served upon a regular or special venire and had been discharged as such within one year, in violation of sections 199 and 200 of the Code of Civil Procedure, if true, fails by reason of defendant's omission to interpose a challenge on this or any other ground to a single juror. People v. Mortier, 58 Cal. 262; People v. McFarlane, 138 Cal. 481, 71 P. 568, 72 P. 48, 61 L. R. A. 245; People v. Boren, 139 Cal. 210, 72 P. 899.

[10] Notwithstanding the total absence of prejudicial error in the trial of this cause, we can reach no other conclusion upon this record than that the action of the jury was largely prompted by prejudice or passion. It is true that the trial court undertook to purge the verdict of excess damages due thereto; but, in our judgment, the excess is much greater than he found it to be. Any amount in excess of $750 as actual and $10,000 as punitive damages in our judgment can be ascribed to no other cause than passion or prejudice.

Our power to thus interpose our judgment has often been recognized where, upon the record, the amount of the verdict is so large as to suggest at first blush the existence of the above conditions. Phelps v. Cogswell, 70 Cal. 201, 11 P. 628; Davis v. S. P. Co., 98 Cal. 13, 32 P. 646; Simoneau v. Pac. Elec. Co., 166 Cal. 264, 277, 136 P. 544, 49 L. R. A. (N. S.) 737; Shaffer v. Arnaelsteen, 54 Cal. App. 719, 728, 202 P. 946. A case might easily be supposed where the question of segregation might be so difficult that, instead of suggesting a reduction, the cause would be remanded for a retrial generally or upon the issue of damages alone. Bond v. United R. R., 159 Cal. 270, 113 P. 366, 48 L. R. A. (N. S.) 687, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 50; Morris v. Standard Oil Co., 188 Cal. 468, 473, 205 P. 1073. But after a study of the whole record in this case, and in view of its nature and the length of time it has been pending, we are content to accept the responsibility of the above conclusion. The defendant was prosecuted criminally, and allowed to receive a fine of $500 and a suspended sentence of 6 months. The plaintiff was to a certain extent active in provoking trouble, and no reason exists for unduly compensating him. The amount of wealth of the defendant is also highly speculative.

Accordingly, the judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded to the lower court for a new trial, solely upon the issue of the amount of damages, unless, within 30 days from the filing of the remittitur in the court below plaintiff shall remit from the judgment all except the sum of $10,750 and the costs as at present adjudged therein, neither side to recover from the other costs on this appeal. If such remission be so made, then, in that event, the judgment shall stand affirmed; otherwise, it shall stand reversed, and the cause shall be retried upon the issue of damages alone.

BOLLES et al. v. HILTON & PALEY, Inc., et al. (Civ. 6892.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 1, California. Oct. 3, 1929.

Appeal and error — Where appellant is entitled to supersedeas, court in which appeal is pending will grant special order restraining enforcement of trial court's judgment.

Where appellant has taken proper steps to create a statutory supersedeas or stay by filing notice of appeal and proper undertaking in sum twice amount of judgment and giving notice thereof to defendant, and trial court seeks to enforce its judgment against appealing party, court in which appeal is pending will grant special order or writ restraining such action.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Henry M. Willis, Judge.

Action by Lillie H. Bolles and husband against Hilton & Paley, Inc., and others. Judgment for defendants and the named plaintiff appeals. On application for writ of supersedeas to stay execution of judgment. Writ granted.

I. W. Bane, of Los Angeles, for appellant.
Samuel J. Crawford, of Ocean Park, for respondents.

CONREY, P. J. In this action to recover damages for personal injuries, a motion for nonsuit was granted, and the defendants recovered judgment for costs in the sum of $122.80. Plaintiff appealed from judgment, which appeal is now pending in this court. Plaintiff now applies for writ of supersedeas to stay enforcement of the judgment.

In addition to the facts above noted, appellant states in her petition that after filing her notice of appeal she filed an undertaking in a sum twice the amount of the judgment entered in favor of the defendants and gave notice thereof to the defendants, who did not except to the sureties. Nevertheless, on demand of defendants, an execution was issued and by the sheriff levied upon property of appellant. Based upon the foregoing facts appellant asks for the writ of supersedeas.

On this motion no questions of fact are raised, but respondents claim that the stay bond, of which a copy is attached to the petition, was not signed by two persons entitled to be sureties on such bond. The persons named thereon are Charles I. Bolles and Constance Bolles. Charles I. Bolles is the husband of the plaintiff Lillie H. Bolles and is her coplaintiff in the action. Respondent has not cited, and we have not found any decision or any provision by statute in California which denies the right of a nonappealing party to become surety on the bond of his appealing coplaintiff or codefendant. Decisions in some states have affirmed the competency of such nonappealing party to act as surety. In some other jurisdictions the contrary view prevails. 3 Cor. Jur. p. 1138. For the present purpose we shall assume that the undertaking as filed is sufficient. On this assumption it results that we have the situation where an appellant has taken the proper steps to create a statutory supersedeas or stay, and where in the face of such existing stay the court below seeks to enforce its judgment against the appealing party. In such case the court in which the appeal is pending will grant a special order or writ restraining its action. Dulin v. Pacific Wood & Coal Co., 98 Cal. 304, 33 P. 123. The execution has been issued against both plaintiffs. Of course there is no reason why execution may not issue against the nonappealing plaintiff, as to whom the judgment is final.

It is ordered that a writ of supersedeas issue herein staying execution upon the judgment against appellant Lillie H. Bolles, upon the giving by her of an undertaking in the form and in the amount required by law in an undertaking on appeal from a money judgment; said undertaking to be approved by the presiding judge of the superior court of Los Angeles county, and filed in this court within 30 days from the date of this order.

In re HANN'S GUARDIANSHIP.

WOODHEAD v. CHILDREN'S AGENCY, ASSOCIATED CHARITIES.

(Civ. 7039.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Sept. 25, 1929.

1. Appeal and error $\S$ 110, 113(2)—Order denying new trial, or refusing to vacate appealable order, is not appealable (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 963, 1714).

Under Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 963, 1714, appeal does not lie from order denying a new trial, or from order refusing to vacate an appealable order, particularly where it is only another name for a motion for new trial.

2. Guardian and ward $\S$ 13(1)—Probate court could properly decide it would not be necessary, or for minor's best interests, to appoint guardian while minor was ward of juvenile court (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 1747).

Under Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 1747, providing that court may appoint guardian for minor, when it appears necessary or convenient, probate court was not bound to appoint guardian merely because minor desired one, but it was for court to decide whether guardianship was necessary or convenient, and court could properly decide that it would not be necessary, or for best interests, of 16 year old minor to have a guardian of her person appointed, while she was a ward of juvenile court and being cared for by agencies of that department.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Frank H. Dunne, Judge.

Proceeding by Sarah Jane Woodhead to be appointed guardian of the person of Frances Hann, a minor, opposed by the Children's Agency, Associated Charities. From a judgment denying the application, petitioner appeals. Affirmed.

Daniel Barton, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Rufus H. Kimball, of San Francisco, for respondent.

KOFORD, P. J. Appellant, Sarah Jane Woodhead, signed and filed a petition in the probate court asking to be appointed guardian of the person of Frances Hann, a minor, alleging that the said minor was an orphan of the age of 16 years, in the custody of the Associated Charities of San Francisco. The Children's Agency of the Associated Charities filed an opposition to the said petition, alleging that the said minor's father deserted her in 1916, and that his whereabouts has since been unknown, that her mother died in 1923, and further alleged as follows:

"That the aforesaid Sarah Jane Woodhead is in no way related to the said minor, has only seen her a few times, does not know her well, and is not well qualified to act as her guardian, nor is she able to give the kind of home surroundings that the said minor at present needs."

"That on the 23d day of July, 1916, the said minor, Frances Hann, was committed to the care of her mother, and that on the 12th day of April, 1927 (1917), the said minor was again committed to the Children's Agency, a department of the Associated Charities of San Francisco, a corporation, both of said commitments having been duly signed and entered by the above entitled court, sitting in department 2, juvenile, thereof."

"That ever since the 12th day of April, 1917, the said minor has been under the care, custody, and control of said Children's Agency, and boarded in various foster homes in San Francisco, and that she is at present under the care and control of a competent foster mother selected by the said Children's Agency, and whose home is directly under the supervision and control thereof."

"That the character of the said minor is such as to require the careful supervision of a social agency and her upbringing in a proper foster home selected thereby."

The opposition concluded with the prayer that the petition be denied, and that, in case the court should decide that any guardian was desirable, Catherine Moriarty, a social worker and employee of the said Children's Agency, be appointed.

On the last day of the hearing of the matter, December 3, 1928, a minute order of the court was made, denying the petition for letters of guardianship and sustaining the objections thereto. On the same day there was filed a document, dated November 3, signed by the minor, nominating and requesting the court to appoint said petitioner. Petitioner thereafter filed a notice of intention to move for a new trial, giving notice that she would on December 14 move to set aside the decision of the court and for a new trial. A minute order of the court was made on December 18, reading, "Motion for a new trial denied." On December 26, petitioner filed a notice of appeal "from the order of the court made herein, denying the motion of the petitioner to set aside the decree of the court therein rendered on the 18th day of December, 1928, denying the petitioner's motion for a new trial and to open up said cause for further hearing, the court thereby ordering petitioner's motion dismissed and the said order [to] which petitioner's counsel excepted. The petitioner does hereby appeal from said order and judgment and the whole thereof."

The appeal is perfected under the alternative method. The only record brought up is the clerk's transcript, containing, of course, no testimony. Appellant describes her appeal as an appeal from an order "denying the motion of appellant for a rehearing of the case."

[1] An appeal from the order denying a new trial is not permitted. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 963 and 1714. An appeal from an order refusing to vacate an appealable order is likewise not permitted (Steinberg v. Jacobs, 21 Cal. App. 765, 132 P. 1060; 2 Cal. Jur. 166), especially so, where, as here, it is only another name for a motion for a new trial.

[2] Considering the appeal as one taken from the order and judgment denying the petition, the record fails to show any error. The evidence and proceedings of the trial of the issues framed by the petition and opposition thereto are not before us, and it must be assumed the evidence at the trial supported the decision. Under the allegations of the opposition to the petition, the court could properly decide that it would not be necessary or for the best interests of the minor to have a guardian of her person appointed by the probate court, while she was a ward of the juvenile court and being cared for by the agencies of that department. It is provided in Code Civ. Proc. § 1747, that the court may appoint a guardian for a minor "when it appears necessary or convenient." The court was not bound to appoint a guardian simply because the minor nominated one. Newton v. Janvrin, 62 N. H. 440. The court, not the minor, is required to decide whether a guardianship is necessary or convenient.

The judgment is affirmed.

SAN MARINO CITY SCHOOL DIST. OF LOS ANGELES COUNTY v. MORGENTHALER et al. (Civ. 6055.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Oct. 4, 1929.

1. Eminent domain ⇨205—Evidence sustained finding that no damages would accrue to portion of tract not sought to be condemned by reason of severance and construction of improvement.

Evidence in proceeding in eminent domain held sufficient to sustain finding that no damages would accrue to portion of tract not sought to be condemned by reason of its severance from the portion sought to be condemned and construction of improvement in manner proposed.

2. Eminent domain ⇨259—Appellate court is bound by record sustaining action of lower court in eminent domain proceeding.

Appellate court is bound by record which sustains action of lower court relative to award in proceeding in eminent domain.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Harry B. Archbald, Judge.

Proceeding in eminent domain by San Marino City School District of Los Angeles County against Clara Methes Morgenthale and others. From the judgment, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

John C. Miles, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Everett W. Mattoon, Co. Counsel, and Homer I. Mitchell, Deputy Co. Counsel, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

IRA F. THOMPSON, J. [1] This is an appeal from a judgment in a proceeding in eminent domain. The appellants owned 1.510 acres fronting on Alhambra road in the San Marino City school district. The respondent sought by the action to condemn 1.308 acres thereof for school purposes, leaving as the remainder a parcel with a frontage of 47½ feet on Alhambra road and 186.37 feet deep. The court made a finding as follows: "That no damages will accrue to the portion not sought to be condemned by reason of its severance from the portion sought to be condemned and the construction of the improvement in the manner proposed by the plaintiff." Appellants say the "trial court failed to take into consideration certain evidence bearing upon the damage which the defendants might sustain, in the severance of the property condemned from the parcel left." Three expert witnesses called for the purpose of expressing their opinion concerning the value of the property involved testified that there was no severance damage to the parcel not taken. The record then by which we are governed discloses ample testimony to support the finding of the court, which finding of ultimate fact is diametrically opposed to the one appellants believed should have been made.

[2] In like manner is the second contention of counsel, that the award is unfair, concluded. The value placed upon the property by the court is considerably in excess of that given to it by several of the witnesses. It is obvious that the appellate court is bound by the record which sustains the action of the lower court.

BEHLER v. KUNDE et al. (Civ. 6737.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1. California. Sept. 25, 1929.

1. Appeal and error §994(3)—Whether plaintiff's testimony was valueless, because of his interest, was question for trial court.

In suit to compel specific performance of contract to partition property, in which defendant claimed that consideration for agreement on part of defendant was inadequate, question whether plaintiff's testimony was practically valueless on question of value of defendant's land, because of his interest and manifest biased opinion, was for trial court.

2. Specific performance §49(2)—To entitle plaintiff to specific performance of partition contract, it was not necessary that consideration for defendant's agreement be measured by exact equality.

In order to entitle plaintiff to specific performance of contract for partition of property, it was not necessary that consideration for defendant's agreement be measured by exact equality in dollars and cents.

3. Courts §104—Reviewing court need not present detailed argument on sufficiency of evidence to support judgment, where question is one of determining which side to believe.

It is not province of reviewing court to present by way of opinion detailed argument on sufficiency of evidence to support judgment, where it appears that question is one purely of determining which side may be believed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sonoma County; Percy S. King, Judge.

Suit by Benjamin Behler, also known as Benjamin J. Behler, against Arthur Kunde, to compel the specific performance of a contract for the partition of real property. From a decree for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

W. F. Cowan and R. M. Quackenbush, both of Santa Rosa, for appellants.

Wallace L. Ware and George W. Murphy, both of Santa Rosa, for respondent.

PARKER, Justice pro tem. Plaintiff commenced an action to secure a decree compelling the specific performance of a contract of partition entered into between plaintiff and defendant Arthur Kunde. The remaining defendants are fictitious persons, and upon the opening of the trial the action was dismissed as to these.

The parties hereto, plaintiff and defendant, on July 31, 1923, purchased certain parcels of land, and held and farmed the same as tenants in common until on or about May 19, 1925. On this last date they agreed to partition the property so held by them, and in pursuance of this agreement a written document evidencing the understanding of the parties was prepared and executed. The written agreement sets forth the joint ownership of the real property therein described, and recites the fact that it is the desire of the parties to divide the same. It further provided that a division of the lands, together with the erections and buildings thereon, and also the live stock and other effects upon said premises, shall be made. By its terms plaintiff agreed to execute a good and sufficient deed to the defendant, conveying unto him certain of the real property described. The remaining part of the lands jointly owned was to become and be the sole and exclusive property of plaintiff, defendant agreeing to execute and deliver to plaintiff a good and sufficient deed, conveying all of his right, title, and interest in and to the lands agreed, as being the part that plaintiff was to have. The land was to be surveyed within 30 days, so that a certain division line mentioned in the agreement might accurately be determined, the expense of said survey to be equally borne by the parties.

The agreement further provided that the waters of a certain spring, known as and described as "Winegartner spring," shall be thereafter owned by the parties, one-half each, and it was agreed that no more taps were to be put on the pipe leading from said spring by either party, without having obtained the consent of the other party so to do. It was further agreed that the defendant should have all the water rights which the parties may have in and to the water flowing from a certain place described in the agreement as Brockman Canyon. The defendant was to pay the plaintiff $1,000 as a further consideration for the division of the lands. The agreement also provided for the manner of division of the personal property. This property has been divided, and the agreement respecting it fully executed and consummated. Likewise the agreement provided for an accounting of past operations, and this, too, has been consummated, or at least is not involved herein. Defendant, though requested so to do, has failed and refused to execute the deed to plaintiff, though plaintiff has tendered to defendant his deed as in the agreement provided; hence this action.

The decree in the court below was in favor of plaintiff, and ordered defendant to execute and deliver to plaintiff the deed demanded, and to pay to plaintiff the $1,000 as agreed. The appealing defendant urges many reasons why the judgment of the lower court must be reversed, and we will take them up in the order presented.

[1, 2] Appellant contends, first, that the consideration for the agreement on the part of defendant is not adequate, fair, or just, and bases this contention upon the disparity in value between the tract that plaintiff was to receive and the tract that was to go to the defendant. We have examined the record and the evidence adduced on this issue, and find therein a substantial conflict. Ordinarily this would end our inquiry, but, in order to meet the contention of appellant that the conflict is not a real conflict, we will discuss the testimony. The only direct testimony as to values offered by plaintiff was that of himself. Against this was the testimony of two or three witnesses. Appellant urges that the testimony of plaintiff is practically valueless, in so far as it relates to the question of the value of defendant's land, because of his interest and manifest biased opinion. This question was for the trial court. If the learned judge of the court below believed the testimony of plaintiff, and felt that he was perhaps more qualified to express his opinion than any of the other witnesses called, on this phase of the case an appellate court will not intervene and arbitrarily hold that the trial judge erred in so doing. However, the testimony offered by defendant himself was not too conclusive. For instance, one of defendant's witnesses placed the value of the land that defendant was to receive at $20,000, and the value of the land that plaintiff was to receive at $25,000, and added, "and that is raising it high." This same witness then continued to state that in his judgment the defendant has the more marketable land, and that the land of defendant would sell for more money than the land of plaintiff. In addition, it appears that the land allotted to defendant is land that adjoins and squares up his other holdings in the immediate vicinity, and that his own declarations on the subject of values, made at the time, indicate his opinion of the fairness of the division.

Nowhere in the authorities on the subject of specific performance is it held that the consideration must be measured by exact equality in dollars and cents. In 23 Cal. Jur. at page 42, the general doctrine is announced as follows: "An adequate consideration does not necessarily mean a price measuring fully to the value of the property. Thus it is not necessary that the value of real property, as found by the court to exist at the time of the contract to convey, shall exactly, or even substantially, equal the price fixed by the contract, for such value can rarely, if ever, be determined with precision. The cases cited support the text. We conclude that there is no merit in this contention.

Appellant next contends that the findings on material issues are hopelessly in conflict. There seems to be some ground for this contention, but the conflict in the findings, as pointed out by appellant, may be easily reconciled by taking the view of the respondent in support of the judgment. The findings refer to the pleadings by paragraph, and the trial court, instead of finding the existence or nonexistence of certain issues tendered by defendant's answer, made findings as to the truth or falsity of the paragraph in the answer. In his answer, defendant first specifically denied the allegations of the complaint, and then set up several separate defenses. Defendant construes his answer as being a denial, and then a first, second, and third defense. The trial court construed the answer as an entire pleading, and called the specific denials a first defense, and from there on numbered each defense consecutively. Therefore, where the findings refer to a paragraph in defendant's first defense, the appellant contends that it is a finding on his first separate defense, and where the court finds concerning a paragraph of defendant's second defense, the defendant contends that it is a finding on the same paragraph of his second defense. The findings, as a whole, make it manifest that the apparent conflict results from the method of designating the paragraphs, and is more a matter of form than substance. Further, the findings otherwise sufficiently cover the issues tendered.

[3] The remaining contentions may be grouped under the head of disputed fact. Defendant had sought to have the contract reformed, in a separate defense, and the findings of the trial court were against him. His contentions under this last group are mostly claims as to what his rights might be under the contract as reformed. Without detailing all of the contentions made, a careful reading of the reporter's transcript, a task which is not incumbent upon us, discloses that the findings of the trial court adverse to appellant's contentions were, in each instance, supported by competent evidence.

The appeal is presented under the alternative method, and neither in appellant's brief, nor in any appendix thereto, is there printed sufficient of the evidence to disclose the errors complained of. It is not the province of a reviewing court to present, by way of opinion, a detailed argument on the sufficiency of the evidence to support the judgment, where it appears that the question is one purely of determining which side shall be believed. The trial court having determined this with the witnesses before it, the controversy is settled.

Judgment affirmed.

ANDREWS v. CITY OF PIEDMONT.
(Civ. 6624.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Sept. 24, 1929.

1. Action $\Leftrightarrow$ 6—Plaintiff, seeking decree that municipal zoning ordinance is invalid, held not bound to enumerate every statute that may be involved (Code Civ. Proc. § 1060).

Where plaintiff sought decree that municipal zoning ordinance was invalid, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1060, providing that any person who desires declaration of his rights or duties in respect to property rights may bring action for declaration of rights, he was not bound in first instance to enumerate every statute that may be involved.

2. Action $\Leftrightarrow$ 6—Trial court, in proceeding under statute to obtain declaration of rights, may determine validity of zoning ordinance (Code Civ. Proc. § 1060).

On trial, as hearing of cause proceeds to determine whether municipal zoning ordinance is invalid, trial court may construe and interpret each statute or municipal ordinance which may be involved, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1060, providing for bringing of an action to obtain a declaration of rights in respect to property.

3. Municipal corporations $\Leftrightarrow$ 601—City may adopt zoning ordinance valid in nature.

City may not be prevented from adopting zoning ordinance of valid nature, and paragraph in judgment so holding will be stricken out.

Action by F. A. Andrews against the City of Piedmont. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Modified, and, as modified, affirmed.

Girard N. Richardson, of Oakland, for appellant.

Breed, Burpee & Robinson, of Oakland, for respondent.

STURTEVANT, J. The plaintiff commenced an action to obtain a judgment of declaratory relief. The defendant answered, and a trial was had before the court sitting without a jury. The court made findings in favor of the plaintiff, and from a judgment entered thereon the defendant has appealed, and has brought up a typewritten record. The plaintiff sought a decree that a municipal zoning ordinance is invalid.

[1, 2] The defendant claims the court had no authority to declare invalid a municipal ordinance. It quotes section 1060 of the Code of Civil Procedure as follows: "Any person interested under a deed, will or other written instrument, or under a contract, or who desires a declaration of his rights or duties with respect to another, or in respect to, in, over or upon property. * * *" Then it contends that the power of the court is confined to construing private writings. It cites the Kansas statute, and calls attention to the fact that the latter contains words expressly enumerating statutes and municipal ordinances. The vice in this reasoning is the failure to note that our statute is written in the disjunctive. The power is manifold. It includes the power to construe private writings as defendant contends. But it goes much further, and it also includes this broad power: "Any person * * * who desires a declaration of his rights or duties * * * in respect to, in, over, or upon property * * * may," etc. Under the latter grant the plaintiff, in the first instance, is not bound to enumerate every statute that may be involved. But, on the trial, as the hearing of the cause proceeds, the trial court at a proper time will be called upon to construe and interpret each statute or municipal ordinance which may be involved.

[3] In the next place, the defendant contends that the zoning ordinance of the city of Piedmont is valid. Since its brief was filed the point has been definitely ruled against it. Wickham v. Becker (Cal. App.) 274 P. 397. The trial court held the ordinance invalid. On the authority of the case just cited it did not err. But the court did not stop at that point. It went further, and inserted a paragraph as follows: "It is further ordered, adjudged, and decreed that defendant, city of Piedmont, has no right or power to prevent the use of the above-described real property of plaintiff for retail business purposes, and that any and all restrictions attempted to be imposed by said city of Piedmont, preventing the use of said real property for retail business purposes, are null, void, and of no effect." The effect of that paragraph is to hold that the defendant may not adopt any zoning ordinance that will be valid. Of course, that is not so.

The paragraph quoted is stricken out. As so modified, the judgment is affirmed. The respondent will recover his costs on this appeal.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Sept. 27, 1929.

1. Larceny $\S$ 62(2)—Testimony by corporation's agents that they gave no permission for defendant to take rug sufficiently proved taking was without owner's consent.

In prosecution for grand theft of an oriental rug, where agents of corporation who were in charge and possession of rug testified that no permission was given for defendant to take rug, law requiring that prosecution prove taking was without consent of owner of property was sufficiently complied with, since corporation's acts must be performed by or through its agents.

2. Larceny $\S$ 32(1)—Where transaction is identified so that defendant prosecuted again for same offense may protect himself by proper plea allegation as to ownership of stolen property is immaterial (Pen. Code, $\S$ 956, as amended by St. 1927, p. 1042, $\S$ 2).

Where identification of transaction which resulted in commission of offense is established to extent that in event of second prosecution of defendant for same offense he may readily protect himself by proper plea, allegation in first action as to ownership of property stolen is immaterial under Pen. Code, $\S$ 956, as amended by St. 1927, p. 1042, $\S$ 2.

3. Larceny $\S$ 40(9)—Variance between information and proof as to owner of rug stolen held immaterial under circumstances (Pen. Code, $\S$ 956, as amended by St. 1927, p. 1042, $\S$ 2).

Where defendant in prosecution for theft of oriental rug was not misled by allegation that rug was property of certain person, though evidence disclosed that rug was under control of corporation of similar name and rug's identity as stolen property was clearly established, variance was immaterial; it being clear that, should defendant be again prosecuted for same offense, he might protect himself by proper plea under Pen. Code, $\S$ 956, as amended by St. 1927, p. 1042, $\S$ 2, providing that erroneous allegation as to person injured is not material.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; William C. Doran, Judge.

Charles Cloud was convicted of grand theft, and he appeals. Affirmed.

John S. Cooper and Grant B. Cooper, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and John D. Richer, of Los Angeles, for the People.

HOUSER, J. From a judgment of conviction of the crime of grand theft, with two prior convictions of felony, and from an order denying his motion for a new trial, defendant has appealed to this court. The action was tried before the court sitting without a jury.

From the evidence introduced on the trial it appears that an oriental rug which had been rented by, and which was in the possession of, William Fox Film Corporation, was stolen.

The first point presented by appellant is that the evidence was insufficient to support the judgment in that the prosecution failed to prove that the rug was taken from William Fox Film Corporation without its permission. In that regard each of two witnesses, one known as a "set dresser," and the other as "assistant set dresser," who were in charge and possession of the rug, testified that no permission was given by him to defendant to take the rug.

In the case of People v. Hutchings, 8 Cal. App. 550, 555, 97 P. 325, 327, where a similar question was incidentally involved, the court said: "The father of the owner of the steer being in control of the cattle at the time of the larceny, owing to the illness of his son, it was proper that he should be permitted to testify that he had not given permission to anyone to take the steer. If it had been taken with his consent, there would have been no crime committed." See, also, State v. Adams, 115 N. C. 775, 20 S. E. 722; Hudspeth v. Commonwealth, 195 Ky. 4, 241 S. W. 71.

[1] It is confidently asserted by appellant that in a prosecution for the commission of the crime of theft it is essential that the prosecution prove that the taking was without the consent of the owner of the property. But manifestly such rule must yield to the necessities of the case. It should be remembered that William Fox Film Corporation was a corporation and for the purposes of this action is to be considered as the owner of the rug which was stolen. It is, of course, apparent that a corporation can never act personally. Necessarily each and every of its acts must be performed by or through its agents. It would seem but reasonable that where, from the evidence introduced on the trial, it is made to appear that the management, control, and possession of the property in question has been intrusted by the owner to his agent and that such agent has not given his consent to the defendant that he take the property, a sufficient compliance with the requirements of the law is established.

It is also urged by appellant that a material variance existed between the allegation contained in the information under which defendant was charged with the commission of the offense and the evidence which was offered on the trial of the action. By the information defendant was charged with stealing the rug in question, "of the property of one William Fox." As hereinbefore indicated, the evidence disclosed the fact that the rug was rented, not by William Fox, but by William Fox Film Corporation, which corporation had possession of the rug at the time it was stolen.

Section 956 of the Penal Code (as amended by St. 1927, p. 1042, § 2), which deals with a situation such as is here presented, is as follows: "When an offense involves the commission of, or an attempt to commit a private injury, and is described with sufficient certainty in other respects to identify the act, an erroneous allegation as to the person injured, or intended to be injured, or of the place where the offense was committed, or of the property involved in its commission, is not material."

[2] Although some pertinent authorities, including that of People v. Hughes, 41 Cal. 234, support the position assumed by the appellant in the matter, the undoubted weight of authority is to the effect that, where the identification of the transaction which resulted in the commission of the offense is established to the extent that in the event of a second prosecution of the defendant for the same offense he may readily protect himself by proper plea, the allegation in the first action as to ownership of the stolen property is immaterial.

In the case of People v. Leong Quong, 60 Cal. 107, the defendant was charged with the crime of stealing a horse and wagon, the alleged property of one Sang Hop. On the trial of the action the owner of the stolen property testified that Sang Hop was his business name, but that his real name was Yup Chin. In ruling upon the question of variance between the allegation in the information and the evidence produced at the trial, the Supreme Court said in part: "* * * The name of the owner of property stolen is not a material part of the offense charged. It is only required to identify the transaction, so that the defendant, by proper plea, may protect himself against another prosecution for the same offense. * * *"

In the case of People v. Nunley, 142 Cal. 105, 75 P. 676, by the information the defendant was charged with the larceny of a horse alleged to have been the property of one J. Suey Lung. The evidence showed that the horse was the property of a Chinese company of which J. Suey Lung was the manager. The Supreme Court took occasion to review the authorities touching the question involved and reached the conclusion that the variance was immaterial. To the same effect is the case of People v. Sing, 42 Cal. App. 385, 183

P. 865, where it appeared that the difference between the information and the evidence was that by the former it was alleged that the stolen property was that of a certain individual; whereas by the evidence it was shown that the property belonged to a partnership of which the named individual was a member. See, also, People v. Melson, 84 Cal. App. 10, 257 P. 555, where the authorities are carefully reviewed.

[3] From the evidence in the instant case it is apparent that defendant was in no wise misled by the allegation contained in the information of which he here complains. So far as the stolen property was concerned, its identity was clearly established by evidence introduced by the prosecution, as well as being freely admitted by defendant himself. The entire transaction was so surrounded and hedged by various facts and circumstances that under no condition would it be possible to confuse it with any other. It is clear that should defendant be hereafter prosecuted in another action for the same offense, he may protect himself by proper plea.

The judgment and the order denying the motion for a new trial are affirmed.

4. Criminal law $\S$ 543(2)—Admission of testimony given at preliminary examination held not abuse of discretion, in view of showing that witness was not within state (Pen. Code, $\S$ 686).

In prosecution for involuntary manslaughter, admission of testimony given at preliminary examination before committing magistrate held not abuse of discretion under Pen. Code, $\S$ 686, in view of showing that witness was not within state.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; William C. Doran, Judge.

Harold B. Crandall was convicted of involuntary manslaughter, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Carter & Webster and John W. Holmes, all of Pasadena, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Alberta Belford, of Los Angeles, for the People.

HOUSER, J. Defendant appeals from a judgment of conviction of the crime of involuntary manslaughter, and from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

From the evidence the jury would have been justified in concluding that the essential facts in the case were that as defendant was operating an automobile southerly on a public thoroughfare at an intersection of said thoroughfare with another public highway, by reason of the failure of defendant to exercise due care and circumspection in the premises, the automobile operated by him collided with another automobile traveling in a northerly direction and thereby caused the death of two of the occupants of the latter automobile.

[1] The first two points presented by appellant relate to the refusal of the trial court to give to the jury, at the request of defendant, an instruction to the effect that before defendant could be found guilty of the charge of manslaughter the jury must be "satisfied beyond all reasonable doubt that the death of the deceased ensued as a direct and proximate result of the reckless and gross neglect of the defendant." Although with some minor criticisms, not affecting the intent of the offered instruction, it may be said that defendant was entitled to have the substance of it given to the jury, on examination of the record herein it is noted that the principle of law contained in said proffered instruction was fully covered by other instructions given to the jury at the request of the prosecution—from which it follows that the point made by appellant is not well taken.

[2] Appellant next complains that the trial court refused to give to the jury the following instruction requested by defendant: "You are instructed that it is not unlawful under the laws of the state of California for the driver of an automobile to operate the same at a speed greater than fifteen miles per hour in traversing an intersection of highways when the driver's view is obstructed, provided he operates and drives the same at a careful and prudent speed, not greater than is reasonable and proper having due regard to the traffic, surface and width of highway, and does not drive or operate said vehicle on such highway at such a speed as to endanger the life, limb or property of any person."

In part, subdivision (b) of section 113 of the California Vehicle Act (Stats. 1923, p. 517, as variously amended), is as follows:

"Subject to the provisions of subdivision (a) of this section and except in those instances where a lower speed is specified in this act, it shall be lawful for the driver of a vehicle to drive the same at a speed not exceeding the following: * * *

"2. Fifteen miles an hour in traversing an intersection of highways when the driver's view is obstructed. * * *

Subdivision (a) of said section 113 provides that: "Any person driving a vehicle on the public highways of this state shall drive the same at a careful and prudent speed not greater than is reasonable and proper, having due regard to the traffic, surface and width of the highway, and no person shall drive any vehicle upon a public highway at such a speed as to endanger the life, limb or property of any person." St. 1923, p. 553, § 113 (a) (b), as amended by St. 1927, p. 1436, § 30.

It will be noted that in effect the declared law is that at an intersection of highways where the driver's view is obstructed it is lawful to operate an automobile at a speed not exceeding 15 miles per hour, provided that in any event he must "drive the same at a careful speed," etc. But whatever may be the correct construction of the statute, the record discloses the fact that the trial court gave to the jury an instruction in its exact language—from which it would follow that defendant was in no wise prejudiced by the refusal of the trial court to give the particular instruction requested by him. In the same connection appellant suggests that at the request of the prosecution the trial court committed error in giving to the jury the instruction to which reference has just been had. It is clear that the point advanced by appellant is without merit.

[3] Prejudicial error is also predicated upon the refusal of the trial court to give to the jury, at the request of defendant, the following instruction: "You are instructed that the driver of any vehicle upon the public highway, before starting, turning, or stopping such vehicle, shall first see that such movement can be made in safety; and if it cannot be made in safety, shall wait until it can be made in safety. Then if the operation of any other vehicle may reasonably be affected by such movement, the driver shall give a signal plainly visible to the driver of such other vehicle, of the intention to make such movement. Such signal may be given either by the use of a hand and arm, or by means of a mechanical or electrical device which meets the requirements of the Motor Vehicle Act of this state and which has been approved by the Division of Motor Vehicles of this state. If you find that the omission to so signal, by Michael Sandstrom, was the direct and proximate cause of the accident and the resulting death of Eva M. A. Gwin or Permillia J. Gwin, and not the lack of due care and circumspection on the part of the defendant Harold Crandall, then you should acquit said defendant."

With the exception of the last sentence of such requested instruction, it is couched in nearly the identical language of a portion of section 130 of the California Vehicle Act (St. 1923, p. 558, as amended by St. 1925, p. 412, § 15a). A part of the defense presented by defendant was in effect that a third automobile (which immediately preceded the automobile with which the automobile operated by defendant collided as such third automobile approached the intersection of the highway where the accident occurred) turned abruptly to the left of its driver directly in the path of the automobile operated by defendant; and that in order to avoid a collision with such third automobile defendant swerved his automobile to his left and thus caused the accident which resulted in the death of the two persons named in the information which is the basis of this action. As hereinbefore noted, the jury was generally instructed to the effect that before the defendant could be convicted of the offense charged it would be necessary for the prosecution to prove not only that the act of defendant "was one which might produce death," but as well that it did "cause the death of deceased." However, it would seem clear that defendant was not bound to rest satisfied with such a generalization of the law as applied to his construction of what were the facts of the case, but that he was entitled to a particular statement of the law dealing with his theory of the defense and consonant with the evidence or some part thereof, by which the jury would be instructed that unless the act of defendant was the proximate cause of the death of the person or persons whom defendant was accused of killing, he was entitled to an acquittal of the charge. Without consideration of the lack in the proposed instruction of directions to the jury that it must find from the evidence the existence of various and sundry conditions which, according to the language of the statute, must be present before the driver of an intending-to-turn automobile may be required to give the or any signal, it may be noted that at least the last sentence in such proposed instruction presents ground for legal criticism and serious objection. Such language is that "if you find that the omission to so signal by Michael Sandstrom was the direct and proximate cause of the accident," etc., "then you should acquit said defendant." It is manifest that the words "the omission to so signal" constituted a clear indication that the omission occurred; whereas, the testimony of the respective witnesses relating to the fact as to whether Michael Sandstrom failed to give a signal was in conflict one with the other. If given, the effect of the proposed instruction to the jury would have constituted an invasion by the trial judge of the province of the jury and would have deprived it of its function to determine the fact as to whether Michael Sandstrom gave either any signal, or a proper signal, as prescribed by the statute. A statement of law that an instruction which involves such a situation is properly refused requires the citation of no authority in its support.

[4] Finally, it is urged by appellant that, over the objection of defendant, the trial court erred in admitting in evidence the testimony of Michael Sandstrom given by him at the preliminary examination of defendant before the committing magistrate.

After it has been "satisfactorily shown to the court that he * * * cannot with due diligence be found within the state," section 686 of the Penal Code furnishes the authority for permitting "the deposition of such witness" to be read in evidence on the trial of the action. The record herein shows that as a part of the foundation for the introduction in evidence of the deposition in question, the wife of Michael Sandstrom testified that two weeks before the trial occurred he left the city of Los Angeles, to be gone perhaps as long as three months, and that following his departure the wife had received at least one letter each day from him—the last of which contained the statement, "You will hear from me in Portland." The context indicates Portland, Oregon. In addition, the testimony of a process server showed that in his attempt to serve Michael Sandstrom with a subpoena to attend the trial, on two occasions shortly before the trial he had visited the home of Michael Sandstrom, but was unable to serve the subpoena; that on the latter of such occasions he was told by Mrs. Sandstrom that "her husband (Michael Sandstrom) was away, and had been gone about a week."

In the case of People v. Lederer, 17 Cal. App. 369, 374, 119 P. 949, 952, it is said: " * * * It has been held that under the provisions of this section [686 of the Penal Code] the trial judge has discretion in determining whether or not a sufficient foundation has been laid, entitling such testimony to be read in evidence, and that, where there is any evidence to support the conclusion affecting that matter, the ruling cannot be disturbed on appeal. People v. Nelson, 85 Cal. 421, 24 P. 1006; People v. Witty, 138 Cal. 576, 72 P. 177; People v. Lewandowski, 143 Cal. 574, 77 P. 467." To the same effect is the case of People v. Thomas (Cal. App.) 279 P. 826, where additional authorities are cited. It appearing that some substantial evidence was adduced to the effect that the witness could not "with due diligence be found within the state" (section 686, Pen. Code), from a consideration of the authorities it is clear that the judge of the trial court did not abuse his discretion in permitting the deposition of the witness given at the preliminary examination of defendant to be read in evidence.

No prejudicial error appearing in the record, it is ordered that the judgment and the order denying the motion for a new trial be and they are affirmed.

PEOPLE v. MESA et al. (Cr. 1854.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Oct. 4, 1929.

Robbery $\S$ 24(1)—Evidence held to sustain conviction for robbery.

Evidence in prosecution for robbery held sufficient to sustain conviction.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Walton J. Wood, Judge.

Alfonso Mesa and another were charged with robbery, and from his conviction Mesa appeals. Affirmed.

C. B. Conlin, of Los Angeles, for appellant.
U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and John W. Maltman and Warner I. Praul, Deputys Atty. Gen., for the People.

IRA F. THOMPSON, J. The defendant Alfonso Mesa was tried by the court sitting without a jury and found guilty of the crime of robbery. He prosecutes this appeal from the judgment pronounced against him and from the order denying his motion for a new trial. The sole ground relied upon for a reversal is the insufficiency of the evidence.

The evidence is amply sufficient to justify the finding that Mrs. Mabel Mosco was held up and robbed of about $50 and an opal ring at about midnight on March 17, 1929, near Sixty-Fifth street and Broadway, in Los Angeles. She positively identified appellant and the defendant Gallegos as her assailants, testifying quite fully to the rough and brutal character of the attack upon her. Another witness testified that he heard the screams for help of the complaining witness and ran to her assistance; that he found Mrs. Mosco lying on the ground; that one man with a black hat and gray overcoat was running away, and the appellant was standing close to the automobile from which Mrs. Mosco testified they had alighted; that he started to talk to appellant, but the latter "mumbled away," whereupon the witness hit him on the side of the head and knocked him senseless. Two police officers testified that shortly afterward they found appellant lying on the ground unconscious, and also saw the victim of the robbery, who was then in a hysterical condition. This testimony was adduced by the prosecution. Appellant argues that, because the defendant Gallegos was able to produce witnesses who convinced the judge that he was elsewhere at the time of the crime, the judge should not believe the testimony of Mrs. Mosco, at least in so far as it appertains to the identification of appellant. But it is obvious that, while this contention of appellant is one which might with all propriety have been addressed to the trial judge as bearing upon the weight of the testimony, yet it is not open for our consideration. The testimony supports the finding and judgment of the court.

Judgment and order affirmed.

RUSCONI v. CALIFORNIA FRUIT EXCHANGE. (Civ. 3814.)★

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Sept. 25, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Oct. 25, 1929.

1. Compromise and settlement ⚡23(3)—Evidence in action upon marketing contract held to show compromise of claim for loss and claim to earnings to which plaintiff was entitled.

In action upon fruit marketing contract to recover money alleged to have been wrongfully withheld by produce marketing corporation, evidence held to show compromise of claim arising from shipment of grapes sold at a substantial loss and claim to share in earnings of corporation arising from commissions retained.

2. Contracts ⚡53—There being good or valid consideration for agreement, law will not weigh quantum thereof.

When a good or valid consideration for an agreement exists, law will not weigh the quantum thereof.

3. Contracts ⚡53—Inadequacy of consideration, in absence of fraud, may not be considered to upset contract.

In absence of fraud, inadequacy of consideration may not be considered as means of upsetting contract.

4. Compromise and settlement ⚡6(1)—Payment of rebate to grower under marketing contract long before due held sufficient consideration for compromise agreement settling claim for loss from shipment of grapes (Civ. Code, § 1605).

Payment by produce marketing corporation to fruit grower of his proportion of rebate fund arising from earnings of corporation more than four years before grower was entitled thereto under contract held sufficient consideration, under Civ. Code, § 1605, for compromise agreement settling claim for loss from shipment of grapes, since corporation's waiver of right to hold rebate fund as it was entitled to under contract and consenting to pay it forthwith constituted sufficient consideration for compromise agreement.

5. Agriculture ⚡6—Plaintiff pleading corporate by-law as basis of recovery on marketing contract where its existence and language as pleaded was specifically denied had burden of proof.

Where plaintiff suing produce marketing corporation upon fruit marketing contract relied upon corporate by-law and set it out at length in complaint, and existence and language of by-law in form pleaded was specifically denied by corporation, form and provisions of by-law became valid issue in case, and burden was on plaintiff to establish right to recovery based upon by-law.

6. Agriculture ⚡6—Grower under marketing contract, having failed to deliver percentage of crop required to marketing corporation, held not entitled to participate in reserve fund accumulated from earnings (Civ. Code, §§ 1436, 1439).

Under marketing contract entitling grower to share in unconsumed portion of gross receipts of marketing corporation if grower had fulfilled contract, which under Civ. Code, § 1436, was a condition precedent to grower's right to participate in fund, where grower had delivered only 35 per cent. of crop, instead of 65 per cent. thereof required to be delivered, grower was not entitled to participate in reserve fund, in view of Civ. Code, § 1439, providing that before any party to obligation can require another to perform any act under it he must fulfill all conditions precedent thereto imposed upon himself.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; J. R. Hughes, Judge.

Action by L. Rusconi against the California Fruit Exchange. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Everts, Ewing, Wild & Everts, of Fresno, and Butler, Van Dyke & Desmond, of Sacramento, for appellant.

Dozier, Kimball & Dozier and Dozier & Kimball, all of San Francisco, for respondent.

ROLFE L. THOMPSON, J. This is an appeal from a judgment in an action upon a fruit marketing contract to recover money alleged to have been wrongfully withheld by the respondent.

The respondent is a produce marketing corporation. June 1, 1917, the parties to this action executed a written contract by the terms of which the respondent agreed to promptly sell and market, as appellant's agent, all his deciduous fruit which was to be delivered during a series of years, for a consideration expressed as follows: "For which [service] the Exchange shall deduct from the growers' account sales 7% of the gross receipts in full compensation for such services. * * * Growers are entitled to any dividend in accordance with the last paragraph of Article XIX of the by-laws, * * * having carried out the provisions contained in the paragraph of Article XIX. * * * This agreement covers 65% of the shipping grapes of party of the first part."

Article XIX of the by-laws, which is referred to in the foregoing contract, is set out at length in the complaint. The answer denies that said article, as alleged in the complaint, was in force at the time of the execution of the contract, and, upon the contrary, asserts that the article was subsequently amended and sets out the amended article as it was adopted.

During the seasons of 1917 to 1923, inclusive, the appellant delivered grapes to the respondent for marketing pursuant to said agreement. It was stipulated that the proportion of the proceeds from the sales of appellant's grapes which were delivered in 1917, which funds were reserved, and to which appellant would be entitled under his contract as a refund when the obligation matured and became due in 1922, was the sum of $1,342.27; that in the event appellant had fulfilled his agreement to deliver to the respondent 65 per cent. of his shipping grapes for the year 1923, he would have been entitled to a refund of $3,045.79 when that fund matured at a later date; that not more than 35 per cent. of appellant's grape crop for the year 1923 was delivered to respondent.

The complaint contains two counts, the first of which demanded the refunding of said sum of $1,342.27, which the respondent claims was fully paid. The second cause of action demanded the refunding of said sum of $3,045.79, which the respondent denied was due the appellant for the reason that this refund obligation was conditioned upon the grower delivering to the respondent at least 65 per cent. of his crop of 1923, which he failed to do. The court adopted findings in favor of the respondent, granting a nonsuit as to the second cause of action, and rendering judgment against the appellant on both counts. From this judgment an appeal was perfected.

The appellant contends that the findings and judgment are not supported by the evidence as to the first cause of action, and that the repayment of the claim demanded in the second count was not dependent upon an alleged condition precedent to the effect that the appellant was required to deliver 65 per cent. of his annual crop to the respondent.

[1] Addressing ourselves to the first count, we find the record discloses a conflict of evidence regarding the circumstances under which the payment of $1,320.82 was made. The appellant admitted that sum was paid to him on February 28, 1918, but asserts that it was paid to him only in settlement of a claim for a special eastern shipment of Tokay grapes which were delivered in 1917, concerning which there was a dispute. The respondent admitted that a dispute occurred over this particular shipment of grapes, but claims that the payment of $1,320.82, which was made February 28, 1918, was the result of a compromise of that claim and was made solely in consideration of appellant's having waived his claim to a rebate of $1,342.27, to which he would have been entitled when it matured in 1922. The appellant admits receiving the sum of $1,320.82, but denies that he accepted it subject to the conditions related by the respondent, and upon the contrary asserts that since he would have been entitled unconditionally to this rebate at its maturity, the alleged compromise of that claim was without consideration. Mr. Nagle, the general manager of the respondent corporation, testified with respect to this settlement:

"The board of directors * * * ordered distribution of a portion of those earnings to all shippers who had shipped consistently with the Exchange during that year [of 1917]. * * * The earnings of that year were 4% upon the gross sales, of which 1% was ordered distributed to those entitled to it in January of the year following. In the winter of that year another 1% was ordered distributed, and the remaining 2%, under our by-laws was placed in a withholding fund, and was held for five years.

"Q. I take it therefore that the last payment for business transacted during the year 1917 would have been payable in 1922. A. In 1922. * * *

"Q. This contract, * * * with which we are today concerned calls for payment by Mr. Rusconi to your company, of 7% of the total volume, or gross business, is that correct? A. That is correct. * * *

"Q. Out of that 7% which is paid, 4% is returned to the grower, isn't that true? A. Yes, but the earnings of 4% would be distributed as I have described, according to the by-laws over a period of five years. * * *

The company would * * * retain approximately 3% * * * as its operating cost. * * *

"Q. Will you state what the settlement was, the $1,320.82 that was paid? A. That represented * * * the last of the fifth year's 1917 holding refunds of that year."

Regarding a special shipment of grapes, which is the subject involved in the first cause of action and which shipment was furnished by appellant in 1917 and was rejected by the consignee requiring the necessity of selling it at auction at a substantial loss, Mr. Nagle further testified:

"We did not consider we were at fault at all, neither did he consider he was at fault, but there was a misunderstanding regarding whether they were juice grapes or table grapes. * * * The only time I came into the play was to settle Mr. Rusconi's account, and that he agreed to do when I gave him my check. * * * Mr. Rusconi said his loss was in the neighborhood of $1500; I figured that the refund was about $1320. * * * We adjusted the loss by giving him this fifth year refund. * * * He agreed to it—He didn't have to wait five years. * * * That was the consideration.

"Q. That he would take the money that would be coming to him in five years later, and waive the loss? A. Yes, sir."

The appellant denied that this was the understanding upon which he accepted the respondent's check for $1,320.82. The court, however, found the facts in accordance with the foregoing evidence. This conflict must be resolved in favor of the judgment in that regard.

[2-4] Appellant contends that since he was entitled to the rebate fund, the compromise was without consideration. This contention, however, may not be sustained under the circumstances of this case. It is conceded the appellant would have been entitled to the payment of his proportion of the rebate fund in the amount which he received. But he was not entitled to that refund for about four years. Respondent's waiving its right to hold and enjoy the use of this sum of money for that period of time, and consenting to pay it forthwith, constituted a sufficient consideration for the compromise agreement which resulted in the settlement of their dispute. In 6 R. C. L. 654, § 67, it is said: "A long series of decisions has established the rule that a benefit to the promisor, or a detriment to the promisee is a sufficient consideration for a contract." Section 1605, Civ. Code; 6 Cal. Jur. 168, § 117; Stein v. Leeman, 161 Cal. 502, 511, 119 P. 663. When a good or valid consideration for an agreement exists, the law will not weigh the quantum thereof. Whelan v. Swain, 132 Cal. 389, 64 P. 560; Fairchild v. Cartwright, 39 Cal. App. 118, 121, 178 P. 333. In the absence of fraud, the inadequacy of consideration may not be considered as a means of upsetting a contract. 6

Cal. Jur. 189, § 128; Smith v. Bangham, 156 Cal. 359, 104 P. 689, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 522. The immediate settlement of an obligation, the payment of which may be legally delayed for a considerable period of time, is a benefit to the claimant which constitutes a sufficient consideration for the compromise of another claim, under such circumstances as are presented in the present action.

[5, 6] The second cause of action, to which a nonsuit was granted, is based upon a claim that appellant was entitled under the by-laws of the corporation to a share of the unconsumed portion of the gross receipts from the sales of grapes of the crop of 1923. The contract provides that the respondent was entitled to "deduct from the grower's account [of] sales 7% of the gross receipts in full compensation for such services." Section 8 of this contract further provides: "In consideration of the party of the first part holding stock in the Exchange, it is hereby agreed that it shall be paid any dividend based on the gross amount realized on all fruits received for marketing through the party of the first part [appellant] in the same manner as growers are entitled to any dividend in accordance with the last paragraph of article XIX of the by-laws, less any amounts that may be due to individual growers who are members of the party of the first part and who are also entitled to receive direct this dividend, having carried out the provisions contained in the paragraph of article XIX of the by-laws referring to growers' shipments." To ascertain the amount of dividends of rebates to which the grower may be entitled, and the conditions upon which the obligation depended, it was necessary to resort to article XIX of the by-laws of the corporation. Appellant relied upon this by-law and set it out at length in his complaint. The existence and language of this by-law, in the form in which it was pleaded, was specifically denied by the respondent. The form and provisions of this by-law, therefore, became a valid issue in the case. The burden was on the appellant to establish his right to recover judgment which depended upon the authorization of this by-law. Except for the testimony of Mr. Nagle, above quoted, neither party offered proof of this by-law or its provisions. Section 8 of the contract above quoted provides that growers shall be "entitled to receive direct this dividend, having carried out the provisions contained in the paragraph of article XIX of the by-laws." Except for the testimony of Mr. Nagle, the court was not informed as to the provisions of this important by-law. The record is otherwise silent upon this subject. There is therefore a total absence of evidence upon this subject, unless we accept the statement of Mr. Nagle, who testified as follows: "The management was then instructed to distribute those earnings [of 1923] beginning January, 1924, according to the by-laws which provided that they were to be distributed to those who had fulfilled their contracts and shipped consistently with the Exchange." It thus appears that only those growers who had fulfilled their contracts with the marketing corporation were entitled to participate in the unconsumed portion of the so-called withholding fund. This provision entitling growers "who had fulfilled their contracts," to participate in the reserve fund, was clearly a condition precedent, which was created by the terms of the contract. "A condition precedent is one which is to be performed before some right dependent thereon accrues, or some act dependent thereon is performed." Section 1436, Civ. Code. The right to share in this reserve fund was conditioned upon the fulfillment of the contract to deliver to the respondent 65 per cent. of appellant's crop for 1923. Section 1439 of the Civil Code provides that, "Before any party to an obligation can require another party to perform any act under it, he must fulfill all conditions precedent thereto imposed upon himself." The last paragraph of the contract upon which the appellant relies provided: "This agreement covers 65% of the shipping grapes of party of the first part." It was stipulated that only 35 per cent. of appellant's crop of grapes for 1923 was delivered. This was fatal to his right of recovery, and a nonsuit was therefore properly granted.

The judgment is affirmed.

McELHANY v. W. E. MOYER & CO.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Sept. 30, 1929.

1. Fraud ⇨58(1)—Evidence held to sustain finding of fraud in securing exchange of stock for other worthless stock.

Evidence in action to recover value of certain shares of stock held sufficient to sustain finding of fraud in securing transfer of stock in exchange for other worthless stock.

2. Fraud ⇨31—Action for rescission was not necessary to recover value of stock exchanged pursuant to agreement induced by false statements.

Where owner of stock was induced to sign agreements for exchange thereof for other worthless stock by deliberate and false statements, it was not necessary to bring action of rescission in order to recover value of stock fraudulently secured thereby, in that there was no meeting of the minds necessary to constitute a contract.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Carlos S. Hardy, Judge.

Action by Elma McElhany against W. E. Moyer & Co. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Frank P. Doherty and Franklin W. Peck, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Brown & Bissell and Ben S. Beery, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

BURNELL, Justice pro tem. Respondent brought this action to recover the value of certain shares of stock which she claimed had been secured from her by fraud on the part of the appellant corporation. Appellant's chief contention is that the evidence does not support the finding of fraud. We have examined the transcript with care, and, while the evidence is conflicting, there is abundant evidence to support the court's findings in this regard.

[1] It appears from the testimony of the respondent and of various other witnesses that prior to January, 1924, respondent owned two units of stock in a corporation known as Commercial Loan Company, each unit consisting of two shares of preferred and one of common stock. Her first transaction with appellant was in that month and consisted of the signing of a subscription agreement for four shares of stock of a corporation known as United Camps, at $100 per share, payable in installments of $25 a month. The certificates representing these shares were never delivered to her. On its face the subscription agreement appears to establish a contractual relation between respondent and United Camps. There is evidence, however, to the effect that Moyer & Co. was actually selling to respondent stock which was owned by itself, that her "subscription" was never turned in to United Camps, which corporation incidentally had power under its permit from the corporation commissioner to sell for cash only and not on installment payments, and that she was charged on appellant's books with the agreed purchase price of the stock and credited with her payments thereon.

In March, 1924, respondent called at appellant's office in response to a letter from Mr. Moyer, its president and general manager, suggesting switching her subscription for United Camps to one for four shares of Moyer & Co. stock at $100 per share. To this she agreed. At this time she sold to appellant her Commercial Loan Company stock for $470, receiving $300 in cash and a credit of $170 on her account for the purchase of the Moyer & Co. stock, pursuant to the arrangement for taking that stock instead of United Camps. She kept up her payments until they were completed, and then received certificates evidencing her ownership of the Moyer & Co. stock. This was the only stock received by her from appellant.

In June, 1924, respondent went to work for appellant as a stenographer, and at this time agreed to purchase five additional shares of its corporate stock at $100 per share, payable at $5 a week, which was to be deducted from her weekly salary. When she left her position, she had a credit of $70 on this last subscription. The situation thus stood at the time of the transaction next to be referred to: Respondent had sold her Commercial Loan Company stock to appellant for $470; she had purchased four shares of Moyer & Co. stock and had paid therefor $400, and had a credit of $70 on the uncompleted purchase of five more shares of Moyer & Co. stock.

In September, 1924, according to respondent's testimony, Mr. Moyer called her into his office to take dictation, and, when that was completed, he said that he understood that she was dissatisfied with her Moyer & Co. stock and was trying to dispose of it. She told him this was true. Mr. Moyer then expressed his regret, and said that he did not blame her for feeling as she did because there were several lawsuits involving the corporation. She also testified that Moyer told her "there were many things to make me feel uneasy about the stock that I held and that he wanted to treat me as he would his mother, and that he did not want me to lose a dollar, he was going to make it so that I would never lose a dollar on Moyer & Company, or lose a night's sleep or have any worry in any way." He then said to her, according to her testimony: "Now, I am going to give you back the stock that I got of you, and I will take back what you got of me and place you exactly the same as you were before you knew there was a Moyer & Company or before you had any business with us, and then no matter what happens to Moyer & Company, you will be the same as you were, and will not blame me in any way." To this and similar statements on the part of Mr. Moyer, respondent testified that her reply was: "I would be very glad to get the stock back that I had sold him." At this point we pause to call attention to the fact that prior to coming in contact with Moyer & Co. respondent had the Commercial Loan Company stock, and that that was the only stock which she had sold to appellant corporation. Mr. Moyer then produced two little slips and said to respondent: "I am going to get you to sign these little slips which go to show just what we have done, that we have made the exchange of stock." The only exchange they could possibly have been referring to was the exchange of the Commercial Loan Company stock which appellant had acquired from respondent, for the Moyer & Co. stock which respondent had acquired from appellant. The amount which respondent had received for the Commercial Loan Company stock, $470, exactly equaled the amount which she had paid for the Moyer & Co. stock actually received by her, plus the $70 paid on the additional subscription. Respondent further testified that Mr. Moyer covered with his hands all but the places for respondent's signature on the slips referred to and asked her to sign without reading them, stating that he was in a hurry. He pretended, however, to tell her the purport of the documents which she had signed; "he said it was just making a statement that we were exchanging the stock." Respondent further testified that she signed these slips believing every word Mr. Moyer had said. Respondent then, according to her testimony, "thanked him profusely for returning the Commercial Loan Company stock" to her, and proceeded about her business in connection with the office. Later on, Mrs. Moyer, who was also connected with the corporation as one of its officers, handed her the slips which she had signed. She then discovered that they were actually buy and sell orders; one of them being an order for the sale of the Moyer & Co. stock and the other for the purchase of United Camps, the two documents being so worded that the proceeds of the sale of the Moyer & Co. stock were to be applied on the purchase of the United Camps stock. Nothing was said in either document as to the Commercial Loan Company stock.

We think that this evidence is amply sufficient to justify the trial court in finding that appellant had practiced fraud upon respondent. The nature of the transaction was not only concealed from her, but she was actually misinformed with respect thereto by her employer, in whom she had every right to repose her trust and confidence. Instead of being put in the same position in which she was prior to falling into the hands of Moyer & Co., namely, having her Commercial Loan Company stock returned to her in exchange for her Moyer & Co. stock, she was placed in the position of exchanging her Moyer & Co. stock for stock which the evidence shows almost without question to have been utterly worthless, stock which Mr. Moyer himself recognized as being of no value, as is evidenced by his communication to the corporation commissioner, which is set out in the transcript and in which he charged mismanagement and incompetence on the part of the officers of United Camps and that the "income and future prospects of the company are greatly impaired if not wholly destroyed by the incumbent officers," and suggested that the corporation commissioner should act to protect others from purchasing stock in this company.

There is, of course, evidence going to contradict that of respondent. In other words, this is a clear case of conflicting evidence, and in such a case it has been so repeatedly held that the finding will not be disturbed by the appellate tribunal as to render the citation of authorities unnecessary.

[2] The remaining point urged by appellant, namely, that the action is not in the proper form and that respondent should have brought a suit for rescission of the contract and not for money had and received is entirely without merit. An action for rescission must of necessity rest upon the existence of a contract to be rescinded. Where there is no meeting of the minds, there can be no contract, and hence there is nothing which can be rescinded. Hardison v. Davis, 131 Cal. 635, 63 P. 1005. Respondent, relying upon the statements and promises of Mr. Moyer, believed that the transaction was one in which she was to receive back the stock she had sold to Moyer & Co., namely, that of the Commercial Loan Company, in return for the stock which she had purchased from the Moyer Company. She was induced to sign the agreements which she believed evidenced that transaction, without reading them, and she was so induced by deliberate and false statements on the part of Mr. Moyer. In such a case there is no necessity for attempting to rescind that which never in fact existed. Meyer v. Haas, 126 Cal. 560, 58 P. 1042; Calmon v. Sarraille, 142 Cal. 638, 76 P. 486; Hoowe v. Kreling, 93 Cal. 136, 28 P. 1042; Togni v. Taminelli, 11 Cal. App. 7, 103 P. 899; King v. Globe Grain Co., 58 Cal. App. 105 at page 110, 208 P. 166.

The judgment is affirmed.

MILLER v. SALOMON et al. (Civ. 6739.)★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Sept. 26, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Oct. 26, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Nov. 25, 1929.

1. Assignments ⇨5—Transferee's possession and claim of title to personal property will prima facie support transfer thereof, as against one claiming through transferee's act or omission.

In claim and delivery action by transferee of personal property, possession and claim of title to personal property will prima facie support transfer thereof, as against one claiming by virtue of some act or omission of the transferee.

2. Statutes ⇨241(1)—Penal statute should be strictly construed.

Strict construction should be given penal statute in determining application thereof.

3. Chattel mortgages ⇨229(3)—In claim and delivery action by remote assignee of mortgagor against mortgagee of chattels, court must presume that original transfer of mortgaged property by mortgagor was made on notice to mortgagee (Pen. Code, § 538, as amended by St. 1925, p. 295).

In claim and delivery action to recover personal property withheld by defendant asserting claim thereto under chattel mortgage, as against claim by plaintiff as remote assignee of mortgagor, court must presume, in absence of evidence, that mortgagor in making the original transfer of the mortgaged property complied with Pen. Code, § 538, as amended by St. 1925, p. 295, requiring mortgagor to notify mortgagee of intended sale of mortgaged property and making sale without such notice larceny.

4. Chattel mortgages ⇨230—One to whom mortgaged personal property is transferred with mortgagee's assent may deal with property free from restrictions of larceny statute (Pen. Code, § 538, as amended by St. 1925, p. 295).

Where mortgaged personal property is transferred to one not a party to the mortgage with notice of the mortgage and with knowledge and assent of mortgagee, transferee of mortgaged property may deal therewith without being subject to provisions of Pen. Code, § 538, as amended by St. 1925, p. 295, making sale of mortgaged property by mortgagor, without informing mortgagee of sale in writing, larceny.

5. Chattel mortgages ⇨230—Courts will not generally add burdens to transfer of mortgaged personal property.

Courts will not attempt to add burdens to transfer of personal property covered by a chattel mortgage, in absence of fraud or other sufficient reason.

6. Chattel mortgages ⇨230—Assignment by mortgagor's transferee, without notice to mortgagee, of conditional sales contract covering mortgaged property, held not illegal (Pen. Code, § 538, as amended by St. 1925, p. 295).

Assignment by mortgagor's transferee, without notice to mortgagee, of conditional sales contract covering mortgaged furniture, held not illegal, since Pen. Code, § 538, as amended by St. 1925, p. 295, requiring notice to mortgagee in case of transfer of mortgaged chattels, applies only where transfer is by original mortgagor.

7. Sales ⇨475—Assignee of conditional sales contract covering mortgaged chattels need not give notice of ownership by recordation or otherwise.

Assignee of conditional sales contract covering mortgaged chattels was under no duty to mortgagee or others to give notice of her ownership either by recordation or personal notice, or by taking possession of chattels, where vendees were not in default.

8. Chattel mortgages ⇨235—Lien on furnishings of chattel mortgage given by lessee to secure rent held released by lessor by taking possession and leasing premises anew to third party not in privity with lessee or assignees, where rent had been paid under original lease.

Where original lease of premises was accompanied by chattel mortgage covering furniture and furnishings in leased premises and securing rent, and furniture together with leasehold was assigned and furniture was sold under conditional sales contract, lessor by taking possession of premises and executing new lease to another tenant, who was not in privity with former lessee or any of her assignees, released furnishings from lien of chattel mortgage, where all the obligations under the original lease had been discharged by the lessee and assignees thereof.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; James G. Conlan, Judge.

Action by Violet M. Miller against Maurice Salomon and another. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Gerald C. Halsey and Frederic T. Leo, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

A. S. Newburgh, of San Francisco, for respondents.

PARKER, Justice pro tem. This is an action in claim and delivery, whereby plaintiff seeks to recover possession of certain personal property alleged to be wrongfully withheld from her by defendants. Plaintiff further claims damages for and on account of said withholding. Judgment was for defendants in the court below, and plaintiff has appealed.

The defendant Sarah Salomon appears to be purely a nominal party, though she has appeared jointly with her codefendant and the same answer filed on behalf of both defendants. In so far as the activities of the defendants are involved, the sole actor throughout was the defendant Maurice Salomon, and hereafter in referring to him he will be designated as defendant, without heed to the fact that there is a joinder.

Defendant was the owner of a certain apartment house in the city of San Francisco. On May 17, 1922, as such owner, he entered into a written lease agreement with one Alma Flynn, whereby he demised to her for the period of 60 months from May 20, 1922, the premises by him so owned. As is usual, the lease contained many provisions, a very important one regarding the payments of rent. After setting forth the amount of rental, the lease further provided that the lessee should give to the lessor a chattel mortgage upon all of the furniture carpets, curtains, bedding, and all other personal property and chattels belonging to said lessee and placed by her in the premises. Such chattel mortgage was to be given the lessor as security for the faithful performance of all of the covenants of the lease and for the payment of the rent as provided in the lease.

On the 11th day of July, 1922, Alma Flynn, lessee aforesaid, did execute and deliver to defendant a chattel mortgage in due and legal form covering certain furniture and furnishings, being the personal property involved in the present suit. It may be here noted that no question is raised concerning the title and ownership of the said property by the said Alma Flynn. The chattel mortgage, by its terms, was given as security for the full, prompt, and faithful performance of all the terms, provisions, covenants, and conditions of the lease, and especially as security for the prompt and full payment of the rent reserved. The said rent was $1,050 per month, payable monthly in advance. The chattel mortgage contained the following provision: "It is further agreed that the property herein mortgaged shall not be removed from the premises on which they are now located without the written consent of the mortgagee, and upon any attempted removal without such consent, the said mortgagee may immediately take possession of all said property and foreclose this mortgage."

On July 11, 1922, the same date as that of the chattel mortgage, the lessee, Alma Flynn, did transfer, set over, and assign to one Madeline Leonard all of the former's right, title, claim, and interest in and to the lease. This assignment was accepted by Madeline Leonard, who assumed all responsibilities and obligations of Alma Flynn under the lease. The assignment received the consent of the defendant lessor.

[1] The record is silent on the question of any transfer or sale of the furniture to Madeline Leonard, but it was the theory of the case in the court below and taken for granted by all parties that Alma Flynn did sell and transfer the furniture to Leonard at the time of the assignment of the lease. It is the fact that Madeline Leonard took possession of the premises and of the furniture and assumed the obligations of the lease, which included the chattel mortgage to secure the rent payments. No point was made in the court below on the lack of any showing that there was any written transfer or bill of sale between Alma Flynn and Madeline Leonard. In any event, possession and claim of title to personal property would prima facie support a transfer thereof as against one claiming by virtue of some act or omission of the transferee.

On November 23, 1922, Madeline Leonard transferred and assigned to certain parties named Bennett (husband and wife) all of her right, claim, title and interest in and to the lease. This assignment was accepted by the Bennetts and consented to by the defendant, lessor.

On April 22, 1923, Madeline Leonard, under a contract of conditional sale, sold and transferred to the Bennetts all of the furniture and furnishings of the house, receiving therefor, under the terms of the agreement, a cash sum in partial payment and the balance to be paid in monthly payments at the rate of $150 per month.

On the 17th day of May, 1923, Madeline Leonard transferred and assigned to plaintiff herein, Violet M. Miller, the contract or agreement of sale held by the said Leonard, and the said plaintiff accepted the assignment subject to the outstanding agreement with the Bennetts. At the same time, and as a part of the same transaction, Madeline Leonard on the same date executed and delivered to plaintiff a bill of sale covering the furniture. The Bennetts remained in possession of the furniture, kept in and at the leased apartments, continuing the monthly payments to the plaintiff as assignee.

On July 15, 1923, the Bennetts assigned the lease to one Hewitt, and the latter accepted the assignment, agreeing to faithfully and promptly keep and fulfill all obligations, conditions, and covenants in the lease contained. Hewitt took possession of the premises and of the furniture therein and with the consent and acquiescence of the plaintiff continued along under the conditional contract of sale up to and including the payment due October 22, 1925. The payment due November 22, 1925, was not made. Here the record falters. It appears from the evidence that on November 22d, or thereabouts, the assignee, Hewitt, paid in full all rent then due.

The defendant owner on November 19, 1925, made, executed, and delivered to one Frank Drew a new lease on the premises covered by the original Flynn lease; the term of said lease being for 60 months, commencing November 19, 1925. In this new lease no mention is made of the old lease, which still had some 2 years to run. In no way or manner were the leases connected or tied in, by reference or otherwise. This Drew lease contained the old provision as to a chattel mortgage on the furniture running to the lessor to secure full performance of the lease obligations on the part of the lessee. Drew went into possession of the leased apartments, and the chattel mortgage that he gave covered the furniture here in dispute and also additional items that had from time to time, throughout the period of the various tenancies of the Flynn lease, been added thereto. In December Drew defaulted in his rent payment and did abscond and abandon the premises. Hence the issue here. Plaintiff claims the furniture as the owner thereof after default in payments under the conditional sale, and defendant claims the furniture under both the old lease and mortgage and the new lease and mortgage.

From the facts as narrated it is clear that plaintiff has succeeded to all of the rights and she accepts all the liabilities of the original lessee, Flynn. It is likewise necessarily conceded that as between the parties here the right of plaintiff to recover follows, unless defendant has acquired some better title or right to the possession of the furniture under the lease agreements and his chattel mortgage. Concededly, defendant has no right to the possession of the property in question except as that right accrues by reason of the instruments hereinbefore mentioned.

At the outset defendant contends strenuously that the conveyance from Madeline Leonard to plaintiff was unlawful and void as being in contravention of section 538 of the Penal Code, as amended by St. 1925, p. 295. This section, as far as applicable here, provides: "Every person, who after mortgaging any of the property, permitted to be mortgaged * * * sells, transfers * * * the said mortgaged property, or any part thereof, * * * is guilty of larceny, and is punishable accordingly; unless in case of a sale, transfer * * * such mortgagor informs the person to whom such sale * * * is made of the existence of the prior mortgage, and also informs the prior mortgagee of the intended sale * * * in writing."

[2-4] There is not a word of evidence concerning any notice, given or not given, by Alma Flynn, the original mortgagor, to defendant, the original mortgagee. The statute, being a penal statute, when under consideration, as here, will receive a strict construction. The duty of giving notice, by the terms of the statute, is restricted to the original mortgagor and is a personal obligation. Under the presumptions that all persons are presumed innocent of crime and that the law had been obeyed, we must presume, in the absence of all evidence on the subject, that the original transfer from Alma Flynn was in full compliance with the statute. We then find Madeline Leonard the owner of the mortgaged property, but not the original mortgagor. Upon her the law has placed no duty in the respect noted. She was lawfully entitled to the possession of the property, controlled by the terms of the mortgage and with like limitations the absolute owner thereof. The test of her liability under the penal statute would be her criminal liability thereunder. In this connection we are satisfied that no crime could be charged against her under the express terms of the statute. It is our opinion that where mortgaged personal property is transferred to one not a party to the mortgage, with full notice of the mortgage and with the knowledge and assent of the mortgagee, the said transferee may in all respects deal with the property without regard to section 538 of the Penal Code, and the rights of the parties are governed by the provisions of the general law regarding notice, recordation, etc.

[5] Personal property, covered by chattel mortgage, is the subject of daily transfer and has become so much a part of the usual routine of sales commerce that the courts will not attempt to add burdens not already placed thereon by the Legislature, in the absence of fraud or other sufficient reason.

[6] The Legislature, no doubt, reasoned that between the immediate mortgagor and his mortgagee there was a privity of contract and perhaps a personal contact; it recognized the transient character of personal property and the ease with which it might be concealed or transported beyond reach of the creditor. It gave, therefore, to the creditor or mortgagee a preliminary protection by forbidding, under pain of severe punishment, certain acts on the part of the mortgagor. The section of the Penal Code could have gone farther and provided that any person owning property subject to a chattel mortgage, or knowing of the existence of the mort-gator who did the acts forbidden to the mortgagor, should be guilty of larceny and punished. However, this was not done. Or, in the body of the section (538, Pen. Code) the words "or person claiming the ownership of any property subject to chattel mortgage and in possession thereof" could have been added and subjected a transferee of mortgaged property to liability under the terms of the statute. This penal statute has not attempted to limit or define the contractual rights of parties to a chattel mortgage. It has, in the interests of public welfare, attempted to prevent certain species of fraudulent conduct. The letter of the law manifests the intent designed. After a mortgagee has once waived the protection accorded him by the terms of this section and permitted his boat to drift away from this haven of safety, he then must look to such other safeguards as the law affords.

Holding, as we do, that the contract between Madeline Leonard and the plaintiff was not an unlawful contract as being in violation of section 538 of the Penal Code, it becomes unnecessary to discuss the further point as to whether or not a contract made in violation of a penal statute is ipso facto void. It could be seriously questioned as to whether the transaction between Madeline Leonard and the plaintiff was such a sale or transfer as the penal laws forbid. At the time of the transaction, and long prior thereto, there was extant a conditional agreement of sale between Leonard and the Bennetts, who were not in default. The transfer to plaintiff was with full knowledge, on both sides, of this agreement. The bill of sale was merely one of a series of documents evidencing the transaction, which, in legal effect, was no more than an assignment of the rights of the vendor under the said conditional sale. The property remained on and in the premises and no effort was ever made by plaintiff to remove any portion therefrom.

[7] Respondent contends that plaintiff was guilty of some kind of a fraud by her conduct in not giving notice of her ownership to the world, either by recordation or personal notice to those who might be concerned. The circumstances called for no action on the part of plaintiff. She was not entitled to make any claim to the possession of the furniture on account of the conditional sale wherein the vendees were not in default. As long as the terms of the conditional sale agreement were being fulfilled, there was no obligation on the plaintiff to give notice, or to otherwise assert her interest. As indicated hereinbefore, we conclude that plaintiff lawfully acquired the right of ownership, subject only to the terms of the conditional sale agreement, and she likewise acquired the right of full enjoyment and possession of the property involved subject only to the terms of the chattel mortgage executed by Alma Flynn to the defendant.

given to secure the payment of a pre-existing debt or obligation; it was given to secure performance of certain obligations assumed under and by virtue of a lease. It cannot be gainsaid that if all of the terms of the lease had been fulfilled at the expiration of the term, the chattel mortgage would have become functus officio and the chattels released from the lien thereof. Likewise, there can be no question but that the lessor could, at any time during the term, with the consent of the lessee, cancel the lease and assume possession of the demised premises, in which event the chattel mortgage would have fallen.

The record is barren of anything that will support even an inference that there was any privity between the last lessee, Drew, and the former lessee, Flynn, or any of her assignees or any other person holding under the Flynn lease. Nowhere in the record before us can it be even inferred as to the source of Drew's title to the furniture. Hewitt, the last assignee of the Flynn lease, paid the rent and discharged in full every obligation assumed by the lessee in the Flynn lease. At that very moment, if the lessor, Salomon, had accepted possession of the premises and agreed to a cancellation of the lease, he would have had not the slightest claim under the chattel mortgage. As a matter of fact, supported by abundant authority, that is exactly what he did when he accepted possession from the lessee and executed a new lease to another tenant.

There is no showing that the new lessee, Drew, was an assignee of the old lease, nor is there any evidence that Drew was an assignee of the rights of the vendee under the conditional sales contract. In fact, there is not a scintilla of evidence from which the identity of Drew might be disclosed or even inferred. The last holder under the Flynn lease, which supported the chattel mortgage under which defendant claims, had made complete and timely compliance with the terms of the lease, and had, with the consent and acquiescence of the lessor, surrendered up the premises. Before this was done, and involved in the same transaction, the lessor had negotiated a new lease with one Drew and immediately upon Hewitt, the last assignee of the Flynn lease, going out, the new lessee, under a complete new lease, was in possession. The Flynn lease was then terminated, and if, as found and here conceded, all obligations thereunder had been fulfilled, the mortgage lien upon the chattels was removed and the chattels freed therefrom.

The foregoing principles of law need little citation of authority. Sufficient support therefor will be found in 35 C. J. 1088, and the cases there cited. See, also, Triest v. Goldstone, 173 Cal. 240, 159 P. 715.

As to the point that the lien of a chattel mortgage falls with the discharge of the obligation, see 17 Cal. Jur. 711; 18 Cal. Jur. 157; Todd v. Todd, 164 Cal. 258, 128 P. 413.

Respondent contends that the taking of the new lease was nothing more nor less than the continuance of the old lease. Had the parties to the new lease been the same, or had there been shown a privity of relationship between the parties to the old lease and those named in the new lease, there might be some merit in this contention; but under the record here the contention needs only to be noted and disregarded.

From what has preceded, it must follow that any claim of defendant must rest upon his contract with Drew. Nothing in the record supports any claim on the part of Drew. It is not shown that he was an assignee either of the old lease or of the conditional contract of sale of the furniture. Defendant might as well have a bill of sale of the furniture from the ever-willing John Doe.

FRIESEN et ux. v. CITY OF GLENDALE et al. (Civ. 6224.) ★

Rehearing Denied Oct. 30, 1929. Hearing Granted by Supreme Court Nov. 25, 1929.

1. Covenants ⇨1—Deeds conditioned on using premises for residence purposes only, and providing conditions should run with land, and that other lot owners might enjoin breach thereof, imposed valid restriction.

Conveyance of lots made on condition "that said premises shall be used for residence purposes only," and that "as to the owners * * * of any other lot in said tract above mentioned conditions shall operate as covenants running with the land, for the benefit of all of said lots and owners of such lots in said tract, * * * and the breach of any of the covenants or the continuance of any such breach may be enjoined," held to create valid restriction, where tract was described and lands beneficially interested were clearly indicated.

2. Covenants ⇨103(1)—Construction of street on land conveyed, pursuant to grantee's dedication, held violative of covenant restricting premises to residential purposes.

Where land was conveyed under valid restriction against use thereof for other than residence purposes, construction of public street on the land so conveyed, pursuant to an attempted dedication for that purpose by the grantee, and without the consent of the beneficiary of the restriction, was in violation of restriction.

3. Dedication ⇨12—Right of owner to dedicate restricted lot for street depends on whether other lot owners would be necessary parties in condemnation proceedings.

Right of lot owner alone to dedicate for street purposes lot deeded under restrictive covenant, as against other lot owners in tract, made beneficiaries of the restriction, may be tested by determining whether other lot owners would be necessary parties in action to condemn the lot for use as street.

4. Eminent domain ⇨152(1)—One for whose benefit restriction is imposed is entitled to compensation on application of restricted property to public use inconsistent with restriction (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1240, 1244; Const. art. 1, § 14).

When property subject to restrictive condition is taken for or applied to public use inconsistent with the restriction, owner of property for whose benefit the restriction is imposed is entitled to compensation, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1240, providing for taking real property, and Code Civ. Proc. § 1244, requiring complaint in eminent domain proceeding to contain names of all owners and claimants of property, and under Const. art. 1, § 14, providing that private property shall not be taken or damaged for public use without just compensation.

5. Covenants ⇨49—Restrictive covenants, expressly running with land and limiting premises to residential use, have qualities of easement (Civ. Code, § 801).

Covenants in deed, restricting use of property to residence purposes only and expressly made to run with the land, have essential qualities of easement, though not included within list of land burdens or servitudes on land which are denominated as easements by Civ. Code, § 801.

6. Injunction ⇨62(1)—Beneficiaries of covenant restricting lot to residential purposes could enjoin wrongful appropriation of property for street, where property had not passed into public use.

Plaintiffs, as beneficiaries of restrictive covenant expressly made to run with land, which limited use of lot for residence purposes, held entitled to injunction to prevent wrongful appropriation of property for use as street, pursuant to attempted dedication by grantee of lot, without consent of beneficiaries of restriction, where road had not yet been constructed, and land had not yet actually passed into public use as street.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Hartley Shaw, Judge.

Action by H. J. Friesen and wife against the City of Glendale and others, including W. H. Andrews and Maude E. Andrews. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendants, except defendants Andrews, appeal. Affirmed.

Arthur M. Ellis, of Los Angeles, for appellant Heuser.

W. Turney Fox, City Atty., Ray L. Morrow, and Frank M. Moody, all of Glendale, for appellant city of Glendale.

R. C. McAllaster, City Atty., and Harold P. Huls, Deputy City Atty., both of Pasadena, on the brief, and Everett W. Mattoon, Co. Counsel, and Claude H. McFadden, Deputy Co. Counsel, both of Los Angeles, amici curiæ, for appellants.

Harold L. Watt, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

CONREY, P. J. Upon an agreed statement in writing signed by all of the parties to the action the court rendered judgment in favor of plaintiffs, and granted a permanent injunction, from which judgment all of the defendants except W. H. Andrews and Maude E. Andrews, have appealed.

The questions involved, as stated by appellants, are: (1) Does the construction of a public street on land dedicated for public street purposes violate a prior deed restriction providing that said land is to be used "for residential purposes only"? (2) If such a restriction is violated by the construction of a public street on the restricted land, should a court of equity act to enjoin such a violation?

In the original argument it was assumed that the restriction itself was valid. Being doubtful about that point, we reopened the case for further argument. In Werner v. Graham, 181 Cal. 179, 183 P. 945, 949, the Supreme Court referred to decisions which hold that, when it appears that the owner of a subdivided tract has sold various lots in the tract, and in each conveyance has exacted restrictive covenants, which, it is evident, when all the deeds are considered together, were exacted in accordance with a common plan, it is enough, and that mutual equitable servitudes have been created, although in any deed taken by itself there is nothing to indicate any intent to create such reciprocal rights. The court then cited other decisions to the contrary, and stated its own conclusion as follows:

"An analysis of such a case, however, leaves, we believe, no reasonable doubt as to which line of authorities is correct. The intent of the common grantor—the original owner—is clear enough. He had a general plan of restrictions in mind. But it is not his intent that governs. It is the joint intent of himself and his grantees, and as between him and each of his grantees the instrument or instruments between them—in this case, the deed—constitute the final and exclusive memorial of such intent. It is also apparent that each deed must be construed as of the time it is given. It cannot be construed as of a later date, and, in particular, its construction and effect cannot be varied because of deeds which the grantor may subsequently give to other parties. Yet that is exactly what is done in the decisions holding that mutual servitudes exist in cases where all the deeds taken together, evidence a common plan of restrictions, although no single deed by itself evidences anything more than an intent to put particular restrictions on a particular lot."

[1] In the case at bar the deeds are not sufficient to create reciprocal restrictions, or mutual servitudes. But we see no reason why the grantor may not impose upon the lot granted by any deed to a lot purchaser a restriction therein declared to be made in favor of all other owners of lots in the tract. See cases cited in McBride v. Freeman, 191 Cal. 152, at pages 155, 156, 215 P. 678. In the deed here presented for construction, the conveyance was made upon the condition "that said premises shall be used for residence purposes only." It was then provided that as to the grantors a breach of the condition should cause the premises to revert, etc., "and as to the owners, their heirs, devisees, executors, administrators, or assigns of any owner of any other lot in said tract above mentioned conditions shall operate as covenants running with the land for the benefit of all of said lots and owners of such lots in said tract, their heirs, devisees, executors and administrators or assigns and the breach of any of the covenants or the continuance of any such breach may be enjoined, abated or remedied by appropriate proceedings by any or either of such owners, their heirs, devisees, executors, administrators or assigns." This language was in the first as well as all other of the deeds conveying the lots sold in said tract.

In the statement of facts in Werner v. Graham, supra, at page 181 (183 P. 948), it was pointed out that the deed in which the restrictions were contained was "without a word indicating that the land conveyed is part of a larger tract, the balance of which the grantor still retains, * * * or that their benefit is to inure to or pass with other lands, and without any description or designation of what is an essential element of any such servitude as is claimed, namely, the land which is to be the dominant tenement." The differences between the deed thus described and the deed before us in this action are strongly marked. Here the tract itself was described, the lands beneficially interested in the restrictive covenant were clearly indicated, and the right to enforce such beneficial interest was plainly declared. Therefore we have concluded that the questions presented by appellants, which questions we have stated at the beginning, must be considered and decided upon their merits.

[2] We are of the opinion that, where land has been conveyed to a grantee under a valid restriction against the use of that land for other than residence purposes, the construction of a public street on the land so conveyed, pursuant to an attempted dedication for that purpose by said grantee, and without the consent of the beneficiary of the restriction, is a violation of said deed restriction.

[3, 4] It must be conceded that by proceedings in eminent domain, all interested parties having been brought before a court of competent jurisdiction, this land could be condemned and taken for street purposes. It follows that, as against the right of plaintiffs under the restrictive covenant, the right of the lot owner, alone, to dedicate the lot for street purposes may be tested by determining whether or not the plaintiffs would be necessary parties in an action to condemn and take the lot for use as a street.

The private property which may be taken for public use includes "all real property belonging to any person." Code Civ. Proc. § 1240. The complaint in an eminent domain proceeding must contain "the names of all owners and claimants of the property, if known, or a statement that they are unknown, who must be styled defendants." Code Civ. Proc. § 1244. "Private property shall not be taken or damaged for public use without just compensation having first been made to, or paid into court for, the owner." Const. art. 1, § 14. "Some authorities hold that, when property subject to a restrictive condition is taken for or applied to a public use inconsistent with the restriction, the owner of property for whose benefit the restriction is imposed is entitled to compensation. Lewis on Eminent Domain (3d Ed.) § 224; 20 C. J. 654." Hanna v. Rodeo-Vallejo Ferry Co., 89 Cal. App. 462, 468, 265 P. 287, 289. We are of the opinion that these authorities correctly state the law.

[5, 6] In the case at bar the restrictive covenants, expressly made as covenants running with the land, have the essential qualities of an easement. It must be admitted that the restriction under consideration here is not identical with any of those included within the list of "land burdens, or servitudes upon land," which in section 801 of the Civil Code are denominated as easements. But that list is not prohibitory of all other easements. "The ingenuity and foresight of the Legislature would be taxed in vain to name and classify all the burdens which might be imposed upon land. By section 801 it enumerated some of them." Jersey Farm Co. v. Atlanta Realty Co., 164 Cal. 412, 415, 129 P. 593, 594.

It has been held that damages may be recovered for an interference with an easement of right of way whereby property of the plaintiff has been depreciated in value. Lawlor v. So. Pac. Co., 39 Cal. App. 97, 178 P. 165. It is only another illustration of the same principle when we say that, in an action to condemn and take for street purposes the lot involved in the present proceeding, the persons in whose favor the restriction exists would be necessary defendants. In that action the owner of the fee would not necessarily be entitled to all of the compensation allowed for the taking of the land, but such owner would be required to share with the beneficiaries of the restriction, to the extent of the damage suffered by them.

Appellants further contend that, even if the restriction would be protected by injunction as against violations by private persons, equity will not grant that remedy against a public agency, but that the owner of the restriction will be relegated to his right to recover damages in an action at law. It has been held by this court that, when private property has been taken for road purposes and the road completed, and the road as constructed has passed into actual public use, an injunction will not be granted to interfere with the continued enjoyment of that use, notwithstanding that the road was not constructed in accordance with the plan contemplated by the condemnation proceedings under which possession was acquired by the public. County of Los Angeles v. Rindge Co., 69 Cal. App. 72, at pages 81 and 82, 230 P. 468. We think, however, that this rule should not be extended, so as to prevent the granting of an injunction against the wrongful appropriation of such property for use as a street, when the road has not been constructed and the land has not yet actually passed into public use as a street.

The judgment is affirmed.

Rehearing Denied Oct. 26, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Nov. 25, 1929.

1. Witnesses ⇨268(1)—Refusing questions as to how taxi and automobile collided held not unduly restricting cross-examination, where witness stated view of contact was obscured.

Sustaining objections to questions, asked on cross-examination of witness of plaintiff, suing for injuries received as result of automobile collision, to show precise manner in which taxi of one defendant and machine of other defendant came together, resulting in one of them striking plaintiff's car, held not erroneous, as unduly restricting cross-examination, where witness stated that his view of exact point of contact of two machines was obscured by body of taxi.

2. Appeal and error ⇨1043(6)—Cross-examining witness to show that driver of taxi colliding with automobile was escaping pursuit, though improper, held not prejudicial, in absence of bad faith.

Cross-examination of witness, in action for injuries received in automobile collision, endeavoring to show that driver of taxi, colliding with automobile of another defendant, was escaping man he had nearly collided with, though improper, held not prejudicial, where counsel stated that he was not seeking to inquire into private affairs of driver, and there was nothing to show that counsel was not acting in good faith.

3. Evidence ⇨471(19)—Testimony of witness riding in automobile that it entered intersection before taxi it collided with was not opinion.

Where record disclosed that witness stated that defendant's automobile in which he was riding entered intersection before taxi of other defendant, testimony was as to fact, and not an expression of opinion.

4. Appeal and error ⇨1004(1)—Only award so grossly disproportionate as to shock sense of justice, and indicating passion or prejudice, may be set aside.

It is only when an award is so grossly disproportionate as to shock sense of justice, and indicate that the amount of the award was arrived at as result of passion or prejudice, that award may be set aside.

5. Appeal and error ⇨1004(3) — Whether award of damages is result of passion or prejudice is primarily for trial court.

Only means of discovering existence of passion or prejudice, as influencing award of damages, is by comparing amount thereof with the evidence; the question being one primarily for determination in trial court.

6. Damages ⇨132(8)—$4,000 for severance of thumb's extensor tendon and cutting radial nerve at wrist, preventing color photography work, held not excessive.

$4,000 for complete severance of extensor tendon of thumb and cutting of radial nerve at wrist, causing disability of right hand, so that injured person could not pursue occupation of color photography work, which required great delicacy in handling plates and exerting sufficient pressure to bring out colors, held not unreasonable and excessive.

7. Automobiles ⇨246(58)—Refusing instruction that, if negligence of taxi driver created emergency, causing collision, other driver need not exercise carefulness required under ordinary circumstances, held justified; evidence showing no emergency.

Refusal to give instruction that, if jury found as result of negligent acts of taxi driver, and without fault of other defendant, with whose car taxi collided, an emergency was created, other defendant was not called on to exercise presence of mind and carefulness that is required of person of ordinary prudence under ordinary circumstances, held justified on ground, among others, that evidence wholly failed to show that an emergency existed.

8. Trial ⇨260(1)—Refusing instruction covered by another instruction held not error.

Refusing to give instruction held not error, where principle of law set forth therein was given in substance by court in defining negligence.

9. Appeal and error ⇨1067—Refusing instruction that, if taxi driver's negligence created emergency, driver of car taxi struck need not exercise ordinary prudence, held not prejudicial, where negligence proximately contributed to collision.

Where jury found on ample evidence that negligence of one defendant, whose automobile collided with taxi of other defendant proximately contributed to cause of collision with taxi, which resulted in injury to plaintiff and his automobile, refusal to give instruction to effect that if, as result of negligent acts of taxi driver, an emergency was created, which did not require of lay driver exercise of ordinary prudence, held not prejudicial.

10. Trial ⇨296(3) — Instruction concerning right of way at intersections held not misleading, when read with another instruction in language of statute (California Vehicle Act, § 15).

In action for injuries received as result of automobile collision, instruction relating to subject of right of way at intersection, deviating slightly from language employed by California Vehicle Act (St. 1925, p. 412) § 15, by using words "reach an intersection," instead of "approach an intersection," held not misleading, when read together with another instruction worded in identical language of statute.

11. Trial ⇨260(8)—Refusing instruction that, if automobile driver had right of way, he could assume taxi driver would yield it, held not error, where instructions given covered matter.

Refusal to give an instruction proposed by one defendant in action to recover for injuries received as result of automobile collision, to effect that, if jury found he was entitled to right of way at intersection, he had right to assume that driver of taxi of other defendant would yield same to him, held not error, where same subject-matter was fully covered by other instructions given by court.

12. Automobiles ⇨226(1) — Neither driver of taxi nor of automobile, both approaching intersection where collision occurred, at excessive speed, could claim right of way, nor complain of instructions given or refused thereon (St. 1925, p. 412).

Where evidence was ample to support conclusion reached by jury that taxi and another automobile, with which it collided, both approached and entered intersection at an excessive rate of speed, driver of neither vehicle was in position to claim benefit of statutory right of way rule, as stated in St. 1925, p. 412, nor to complain of instructions given or refused on that subject.

13. Damages ⇨216(2) — Testimony showing thumb's extensor tendon was severed and radial nerve at wrist cut, preventing color photography work, justified instructions on elements of damages.

Evidence that extensor tendon of thumb was completely severed, and that radial nerve at wrist was cut, thereby preventing continuation of employment as color photography worker, was legally sufficient to justify giving of instructions on elements of damages.

14. Trial ⇨295(1)—Instructions must be read in entirety.

Segregated single sentence, from several instructions given on subjects of burden of proof and preponderance of evidence, complained of, must be read in connection with other portion of court's charge, rendering instructions correct.

15. Automobiles ⇨246(22)—Modifying instruction that, if actions and omissions of automobile driver, were remote and secondary, he was not liable for collision, by adding "and not sole proximate cause," held proper as clarifying "remote and secondary."

Where proposed instruction was to effect that, if jury found sole proximate cause of accident to plaintiff was due to taxi driver, and that the other defendant's actions and omissions, if any, were remote and secondary, driver of other automobile was not liable, was modified by inserting after words "remote and secondary" the clause "and not the sole proximate cause of the accident," modification was proper, as clarifying meaning of term "remote and secondary," not elsewhere defined in instruction, and to distinguish term from "sole proximate cause."

16. Trial ⇨228(3)—That instruction included "proximately contributing to plaintiff's injury," instead of "negligence proximately contributing to cause of injury," held technical objection, without force.

Use of court in one of its instructions of term "proximately contributing to plaintiff's injury," in action for injuries resulting from automobile accident, instead of term "negligence proximately contributing to cause of injury," held not erroneous; criticism being technical in character and without force.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; T. I. Fitzpatrick, Judge.

Action by Berthold Von Stetten against the Yellow-Checker Cab Company, Consolidated, and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Courtney L. Moore, of San Francisco, for appellant Yellow-Checker Cab Co.

Redman & Alexander, of San Francisco, for appellant Gunther.

Treadwell, Van Fleet & Laughlin, of San Francisco, for respondent.

KNIGHT, J. Respondent was injured and his automobile damaged as a result of a collision which happened at the intersection of Green and Franklin streets in San Francisco. Two other machines were involved in the collision, a taxi owned and operated by the appellant cab company, and a sedan owned and driven by the appellant Gunther, and respondent brought this action for damages against the cab company and Gunther, jointly, alleging that their joint negligence was the proximate cause of his injuries. The trial took place before a jury, which rendered a verdict against appellants for the sum of $5,000, and from the judgment entered on said verdict appellants took separate appeals. As grounds for reversal the appellant cab company urges that the trial court erred in ruling upon the admissibility of evidence, that it erroneously instructed the jury as to the law relating to the right of way at intersections, and that the verdict was excessive. The appellant Gunther assigns as error the giving and refusal to give several instructions, including the one to which his coappellant objects.

The accident occurred at 3:30 o'clock in the afternoon of a clear day. The taxi was traveling easterly along Green street toward Franklin, which intersects Green at right angles. Gunther was driving his automobile northerly on Franklin street toward Green, and the two machines collided within the intersection somewhere easterly of the center thereof. The taxi then careened across and beyond the intersection into Green street and struck respondent's automobile, which had come to a stop on Green street 20 feet easterly of the intersection. The latter collision was of sufficient force to overturn the taxi and hurl respondent's machine against the sidewalk on the northerly side of Green street, injuring respondent, who at the time was driving the car.

The evidence is in conflict as to the particular circumstances attending the collision between the taxi and Gunther's machine. With reference thereto the driver of the taxi, named Jurd, testified as follows: "When my car, the front end of it, got to what we would term where the button would be located in the center of the street at the intersection, I noticed a dark car [Gunther's] approaching [from the south along Franklin street] about 15 feet back of the property line, and I proceeded, * * * figuring that by so doing that this other machine which was coming down Franklin street from the south * * * would pull to the left, * * * passing me in the rear, and avoiding a collision. But * * * that did not work out the way I had figured, and [instead] the [Gunther] machine made a turn to the right, attempting to go up [east] Green street in the same direction that I was, thereby throwing his left front fender forward, which struck my right rear fender." Gunther testified that he reached the intersection first, and saw the taxi coming down Green street; that thereupon he looked to the right, to observe traffic to the east on Green street, and that when he was well within the intersection the taxi suddenly shot across his path; that he applied the brakes, but the taxi was so close that its wheel or rear fender caught his left front fender and swung his machine around, so that it faced east on Green street.

In addition to the foregoing conflict the testimony is contradictory as to the rate of speed appellants' machines were traveling immediately preceding and at the time of the collision. No point is made by either appellant, however, as to the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain the conclusion reached by the jury upon the issue of negligence, and consequently it is unnecessary to narrate in greater detail here the testimony given by the various witnesses upon the points mentioned, more than to say that it is legally sufficient to establish that both appellants approached the crossing at an excessive rate of speed, that they entered the intersection almost simultaneously, that neither had sufficient control of his machine to avoid a collision, and that consequently they were jointly responsible for the damage sustained by respondent as a result of such collision.

[1] In support of the claim that Gunther's car ran into the taxi, counsel for the cab company sought to show by the cross-examination of respondent's witness Ross the precise manner in which the taxi and Gunther's machine came together; but the court sustained objections made by Gunther's counsel to the questions asked in that behalf, and the cab company contends that thereby its right to cross-examine was unduly restricted. We find no error in the ruling, because the witness repeatedly stated that his view of the exact point of contact of the two machines was obscured by the body of the taxi, and that consequently he was unable to tell which machine struck the other, or which portions of the machines were first in contact.

[2] The driver of the taxi admitted that in driving along Green street at the time of the accident he was taking an indirect route of travel to reach his objective, but explained that he was doing so to secure private information as to the number of a house. Counsel for Gunther cross-examined the witness on that point, endeavoring to show as he stated, a different reason, and an answer to objections made by counsel for the cab company further stated in effect that he expected to prove that Jurd's real reason for taking that course was to escape from a man who was pursuing him, and with whom he had nearly collided on another street a few minutes before the present accident took place. This man was afterwards produced as a witness on behalf of Gunther, but his testimony did not fully substantiate counsel's statement.

It is now contended that such cross-examination and the statement made by counsel in connection therewith constituted prejudicial error. Counsel for Gunther clearly stated, however, in answer to a direct question asked by the court, that he was not seeking to inquire into the private affairs of the driver, and there is nothing in the record which would justify the belief that counsel was not acting in good faith when he declared the purpose of the cross-examination. We are of the opinion, therefore, that, even assuming the cross-examination to have been improper, its effect was not prejudicial.

[3] Nor is there any merit in the contention made by the cab company that the testimony given by the witness Mondani in response to questions asked by Gunther's counsel, to the effect that Gunther's machine entered the intersection first, was the expression of an opinion. In this connection the record discloses that Mondani was riding in the Gunther machine at the time of the accident, and his testimony was directed to what he actually saw. It is evident, therefore, that he was testifying to a fact and not giving his opinion.

[4-6] As to the amount of the verdict, the rule is well established that it is only when an award is so grossly disproportionate as to shock the sense of justice, and indicate that the amount of the award was arrived at as a result of passion or prejudice, that it may be set aside (Averdieck v. Barris, 63 Cal. App. 495, 218 P. 786; Martin v. Shea, 182 Cal. 130, 187 P. 23; Anstead v. Pacific Gas & Electric Co., 203 Cal. 634, 265 P. 487), and that the only means of discovering the existence of passion or prejudice as influencing the award is by comparing the amount thereof with the evidence, the question being one primarily for determination in the trial court (Zibbell v. Southern Pacific Co., 160 Cal. 237, 116 P. 513).

In the present case respondent proved special damages approximating $1,000, which included property damage, payment of the medical and hospitalization fees, and loss of time, and according to the medical testimony the personal injuries he sustained were severe and permanent. Besides having suffered minor cuts and bruises, the extensor tendon of the thumb was completely severed, and the radial nerve at the wrist was cut. The result of such injury, as the medical testimony shows, was as follows: "On pressure at various parts about the scar, where these nerves were that were included in the scar tissue, there was extreme tenderness and pain upon pressure. This combination of symptoms caused a disability of his right hand, due to the weakness of his thumb; to numbness, lack of sensation of the distribution nerve; and, third, because of the extreme pain."

Up to the time of the accident, respondent was engaged in color photography work. Most of his time was spent in laboratories developing pictures, and the nature of the permanent injuries to his hand has compelled him to abandon such work, for the reason that such employment requires great delicacy in handling plates, in properly superimposing one on the other, and exerting sufficient pressure to bring out the colors. In view of the situation described, we are not prepared to hold as a matter of law that the jury's allowance of $4,000 for the permanent injury was unreasonable and excessive.

[7-9] The court refused to give an instruction proposed by Gunther to the effect that, if the jury found that as a result of the negligent acts of the taxi driver, and without fault on the part of Gunther, an "emergency" was created, Gunther "was not called upon to exercise all that presence of mind and carefulness that is required of a person of ordinary prudence under ordinary circumstances." The refusal to give the instruction was justified upon the ground, among others, that the evidence wholly failed to show that an emergency existed.

Assuming, however, that such an inference could be drawn, the refusal to give the instruction was not error, because the principle of law set forth therein was given in substance by the court in defining negligence, wherein it was stated that negligence "is not absolute or to be measured in all cases in accordance with the same precise standard, but always relates to some circumstance of time, place and person." And in any event the refusal to give the proposed instruction cannot be said to have operated to Gunther's prejudice, because the application of the doctrine embodied therein is made dependent upon the proposition, as the instruction plainly states, and as the numerous cases hold, that the emergency or perilous position, if any there be, was not brought about in whole or in part by the fault of the party seeking to invoke such doctrine, and here the jury found upon ample evidence that Gunther's negligence proximately contributed to the cause of his collision with the taxi.

[10] In one of the instructions relating to the subject of the right of way at intersections the court deviated slightly from the language employed by the statute (California Vehicle Act; Stats. 1925, p. 412), in that it used the words "reach an intersection," instead of "approach an intersection." Section 15. Later in its charge, however, the court gave another instruction, proposed by Gunther, upon the same subject, which was worded in the identical language of the statute, and therefore, when the latter is read in connection with the court's instruction, it is evident that the deviation referred to could not have misled the jury.

[11, 12] The court also refused to give an instruction proposed by Gunther to the effect that, if the jury found that he was entitled to the right of way at the intersection, he had a right to assume that the driver of the taxi would yield the same to him. The refusal to give such instruction was not error, because the same subject-matter was fully covered by three other instructions proposed by Gunther, which the court gave. The appellant cab company complains of the contents of these three latter instructions, upon the ground that the jury "was left in the dark as to the circumstances under which Gunther was obliged to yield the right of way to the taxi." The rule of traffic declared by the statute as to the right of way at intersections (Stats. 1925, p. 412) is made subject, however, to the express provision that the vehicle claiming the right of way "is traveling at a lawful speed," and here, as shown, the evidence is ample to support the conclusion reached by the jury that the taxi and Gunther's machine approached and entered the intersection at an excessive rate of speed. Consequently the driver of neither is in a position to claim the benefit of the statutory right of way nor to complain of the instructions given or refused upon that subject. Rosander v. Market Street Ry. Co., 89 Cal. App. 721, 265 P. 541.

[13] It is claimed that there was no evidence to show that the injury to respondent's hand impaired his future earning power, nor any evidence upon which the jury might base a reasonable estimate of the loss occasioned thereby, and that consequently the court erred in giving instructions upon those elements of damages. The evidence hereinabove set forth relating to the question of the amount of the verdict was, in our opinion, legally sufficient to justify the giving of the instructions complained of. Storrs v. Los Angeles Traction Co., 134 Cal. 91, 66 P. 72.

[14] Appellant Gunther segregates a single sentence from several instructions given by the trial court upon the subjects of burden of proof and preponderance of evidence, and complains of its effect, claiming that the jury was thereby instructed in substance that Gunther was not entitled to a verdict unless there was a preponderance of the evidence in his favor. When the single sentence complained of is read in connection with the other portion of the court's charge, however, it becomes apparent at once that the jury was correctly instructed upon the subjects mentioned.

[15] An instruction was proposed by Gunther to the effect that, if the jury found that "the sole proximate cause of the accident to respondent was the negligence of the taxi driver," and that Gunther's "actions and omissions, if any, were remote and secondary," Gunther was not liable. The court modified the instruction by inserting after the words "remote and secondary" the clause "and not the sole proximate cause of the accident." The only effect of the modification was to clarify the meaning of the term "remote and secondary," which was not elsewhere defined in the instruction, and to distinguish that term from the term "sole proximate cause," as used by appellant in the forepart of the instructions, and did not alter the legal effect of the legal principle embodied therein. The modification was therefore proper.

[16] The final criticism made by the appellant Gunther is directed at the court's use, in one of its instructions, of the term "proximately contributing to plaintiff's injury," claiming that it should have used the term "negligence proximately contributing to the cause of the injury." It is self-evident that the criticism is purely technical in character, and consequently requires no discussion to point out that it is entirely without force. Blackwell v. American Film Co., 48 Cal. App. 681, 192 P. 189.

In conclusion it may be stated that the court's charge to the jury covers approximately 26 typewritten pages of the transcript, and with the exception of a few general instructions, given by the court of its own motion, consists of instructions proposed by the parties to the action. We have fully examined the entire charge, and also the instructions which the court refused to give, and in our opinion the jury was fully, fairly, and correctly advised on all legal points involved in the action.

The judgment is therefore affirmed.

PEOPLE v. HUNTSMAN. (Cr. 1853.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Sept. 27, 1929.

1. Intoxicating Liquors $\S$ 233(1)—Testimony regarding gas consumed on premises where still was found and in whose name premises stood held properly received (St. 1927, p. 497).

In prosecution for possession of a still under St. 1927, p. 497, testimony by clerk in employ of gas company regarding amount of gas consumed on premises where still was found, and that account with gas company stood under name of another in whose name defendant acquired property, held properly received, since such evidence tended to meet issue raised as to ownership and occupation of premises where still was found.

2. Intoxicating Liquors $\S$ 233(1)—Testimony regarding defendant's operations and conversation at place other than where still was found held admissible (St. 1927, p. 497).

In prosecution under St. 1927, p. 497, for possession of still, testimony of officer regarding defendant's operations at place other than where still was found and conversation wherein defendant admitted he was in bootlegging business and regarding accounts found there with names of persons and their addresses held properly received, since any evidence of possession of large quantity of moonshine or that defendant was in bootlegging business would be pertinent to inquiry regarding connection with or interest in still found.

3. Intoxicating Liquors $\S$ 239(3)—Instruction authorizing conviction for possessing still if defendant aided and abetted or advised and encouraged acts alleged held warranted by evidence (St. 1927, p. 497).

In prosecution under St. 1927, p. 497, for possession of still, evidence showing that persons other than defendant occupied premises where still was found, and warranting inference that defendant had connection with still and that persons occupying house were agents or representatives of defendant, held sufficient to warrant instruction to convict if defendant committed acts alleged or aided and abetted in their commission or, not being present, advised and encouraged their commission.

4. Intoxicating Liquors $\S$ 239(3)—Instruction that possession of still may be actual or constructive or by agent and stating effect of joint possession held warranted by evidence (St. 1927, p. 497).

In prosecution under St. 1927, p. 497, for possessing still, evidence showing persons other than defendant occupied premises where still was found, warranting inference that defendant had some interest or connection with still and that persons occupying house were agents and representatives of defendant, held sufficient to warrant instruction that possession of still may be actual or constructive and that possession by agent is possession of owner, and that possession by one of two persons unlawfully operating or possessing still constitutes possession for each and all of such persons.

5. Statutes $\S$ 35½—Statute making it felony to possess still held not unconstitutional because conflicting with referendum statute making it misdemeanor to possess property designed to illegally manufacture liquor (Wright Act; Still Act).

St. 1927, p. 497, commonly known as Still Act, making it a felony to possess still, held not unconstitutional as being in conflict with St. 1921, p. 79, commonly known as Wright Act, making it misdemeanor punishable by fine to possess property designed to manufacture liquor in violation of law.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Walton J. Wood, Judge.

Ray Huntsman was convicted of possession of a still, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Newton J. Kendall and A. Wm. Christlieb, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Lionel Browne, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

HAHN, Justice pro tem. Defendant appeals from a judgment of conviction upon an information filed by the district attorney of Los Angeles county, charging him with the crime of "possession of a still," and from an order denying his motion for a new trial of the action. In urging a reversal of the judgment, appellant presents the following grounds:

1. That the evidence is insufficient to support the verdict.

2. Errors committed by the court in connection with certain rulings made during the trial.

3. Errors committed by the court in the giving of certain instructions to the jury.

4. That Act 3795 (Stats. 1927, p. 497), known as the "Still Act," is unconstitutional.

It is undisputed that the officers who arrested the defendant found a complete still at No. 4234 Los Nietos drive, but defendant denies any knowledge of the existence of the still or that he was in any way responsible for its maintenance, although he admits that he is the owner of the property where the still was found.

The evidence bearing upon the disputed question is mainly circumstantial, and while the evidence of the state connecting the defendant with the still is not as strong as in most cases that come before us for review, we are of the opinion that there is sufficient evidence to justify the inference necessarily involved in the verdict, that the defendant either owned or had some interest in maintaining the still. To recite and review the evidence in detail would extend this opinion to an unwarranted length. We feel that it will meet the requirements of the case to simply indicate that, in our opinion, appellant's contention that the evidence fails to support the verdict is not well taken.

[1] In connection with the second point, appellant contends that the court erred in overruling his objection to the questions asked by the prosecuting attorney of the witness R. F. Ogburn, who was a clerk in the employ of the Southern California Gas Company. These questions called for and elicited evidence as to the amount of gas consumed from September, 1927, to February, 1928, upon the premises where the still was found. Also, the witness, over the objection of appellant, was permitted to testify that the account with the gas company stood in the name of J. B. O'Malley. There was evidence that the defendant had acquired the property in question in the name of O'Malley. In fact he so admitted in his own testimony. We are of the opinion that the testimony objected to was properly admitted, in that it tended to meet the issue raised as to the ownership and occupation of the premises where the still was found.

[2] It is also contended that the court erred in admitting the testimony of Officer Shoemaker, a witness for the state, as to what he found in the house at No. 1128 Point View street, and also this witness' testimony as to a conversation he had with the defendant at the same place. In this testimony Officer Shoemaker related how the officers had gone to the house at 1128 Point View street, which was some distance from the property on Los Nietos drive, where the still was found, and there found the defendant in company with a woman engaged in filtering some moonshine whisky that was running from a gallon keg into a larger barrel. When the officers knocked at the door of the house on Point View street, defendant himself admitted them, and in response to their inquiry as to whether or not they could get any liquor, defendant replied that they could and stated that he was in the bootlegging business. The officers then upon further investigation found two books containing lists of names of persons with their addresses, telephone numbers, and in a number of instances memoranda of accounts. These books, the defendant stated, contained lists of names of his customers.

All of these matters were pertinent to the issue of the connection of the defendant with the maintenance of the still in question. The defendant admitted ownership of the premises where the still was found and which the evidence clearly showed was maintained primarily as a plant for the unlawful manufacture of liquor. Any evidence of the possession of a large quantity of moonshine whisky, or that defendant was in the bootlegging business, would be pertinent to the inquiry as to his connection with or interest in the still in question.

[3, 4] Appellant's third point relates to two instructions given by the court to the jury in the giving of which appellant claims the court committed prejudicial error. The following are the instructions referred to:

1. "If you believe beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant committed the acts alleged in the information himself, or aided and abetted in its commission, or, not being present, has advised and encouraged its commission, you will find the defendant guilty as charged."

2. "You are further instructed that possession may be of two kinds: actual and constructive. Actual possession exists when a person has the actual control or dominion over a thing and constructive possession exists when a person has the right to possession or control, either individually or through an agent. An agent's possession is the possession of the owner. If two or more persons are engaged in unlawfully operating or possessing a still or apparatus for the manufacture of intoxicating liquor, then the possession, control or ownership of one of the persons so engaged constitutes possession, ownership and control for each and all of any such persons."

It is not claimed by appellant that these instructions erroneously state the law on the subjects therein referred to, but that there is no evidence in the case that warrants the giving of these instructions. There is no merit in this contention. Defendant and appellant was not apprehended in the house with the still. There is evidence in the case that other persons than the defendant occupied the premises during the period of the defendant's admitted ownership of the house. And there was sufficient evidence to warrant the inference that the defendant, although not seen in the house with the still had some interest in or connection with the still, and that the persons who were occupying the house during this period were doing so as the agents or representatives of the defendant. This evidence very clearly justified the instructions complained of.

[5] The last contention of appellant constitutes an attack upon the constitutionality of Act No. 3795, Deering's Gen. Laws Supp. 1925—1927 (Stats. 1927, p. 497), commonly known as the "Still Act." In support of this contention it is argued that inasmuch as the Wright

Act makes it a misdemeanor punishable by a fine not to exceed $500 to possess property designed to manufacture liquor in violation of law, and the fact that the Still Act makes it a felony to possess a still, there are two statutes covering the same offense with different penalties; that the Still Act cannot be treated as an amendment to the Wright Act, because in its adoption the provisions of article 4, § 24, of the Constitution were not followed, and the Wright Act having been approved at a referendum is not subject to repeal by legislative enactment; therefore the Still Act must be held invalid because of its conflict with the Wright Act. In discussing this point appellant cites in his brief the cases of People v. Wood, 88 Cal. App. 621, 264 P. 298, and People v. Guido (Cal. App.) 269 P. 670, wherein the same point was raised and discussed. However, the court in both of these cases sustained the constitutionality of the Still Act, and we are in entire accord with the conclusions of the court in these cases on that point.

In view of the fact that the subject was quite fully discussed in the opinions of the cases above cited, we do not deem it necessary to again cover the same ground.

Having concluded that there is no merit in the points raised by appellant, the judgment and order denying defendant's motion for a new trial are affirmed.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Sept. 26, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Oct. 26, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Nov. 25, 1929.

1. Contracts ⇨152—Words used in Instruments are to be construed according to their ordinary meaning.

Words used in instruments are to be construed according to the ordinary meaning attached thereto, and definitions or meanings not ordinarily attached thereto are not to be imported into instrument unless the language of the writing compels such an interpretation.

2. Contracts ⇨152—Words used in Instrument are to be given their ordinary and legal interpretation, unless language of Instrument compels different interpretation.

If words are used in instrument which have ordinary, common, and also legal interpretation, and by long use have acquired such ordinary and legal interpretation, such interpretation will be followed, unless language appears in instrument compelling different interpretation.

3. Escrows ⇨5—"Conditions and restrictions" held not to include "easement" consisting of right of way for public utilities purposes with ingress and egress.

The words "conditions and restrictions," contained in escrow instructions given to title company, relative to drawing of deeds and insuring title, held not to include easement consisting of a right of way five feet in width over rear of lots for public utilities purposes with ingress and egress thereto, of which easement purchaser had no notice and was not familiar with other than an electric light pole on corner of one of lots; "easement" being defined as a liberty, privilege, or advantage without profit which the owner of one parcel of land may have in lands of another, while "conditions and restrictions" limit or modify existence or character of something, a restriction or qualification, and refer to subsequent acts of grantee in relation to estate granted limiting his right to use thereof.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First, Second, and Third Series, Easement.]

4. Vendor and purchaser ⇨134(1)—Law implies agreement to convey good title free of incumbrance when contract contains no exception or reservation or provision as to title or incumbrances.

Where one makes a contract in writing to sell and convey land without any exception or reservation or provision as to title or incumbrances, the law implies an agreement on his part to convey a good title free of incumbrance, and, if one incumbrance thereon is specifically provided for, there is an implied agreement that the title shall be conveyed free from any others.

5. Vendor and purchaser ⇨134(1, 4), 135(1)—Building restrictions, provision for payment of taxes, and grant of easement for public utilities purposes, held to constitute "incumbrances" invalidating agreement for purchase of land (Civ. Code, § 1114).

Where agreement of purchase and sale of land contained no reference to any easements, conditions, or restrictions or incumbrances, held, that building restrictions contained in deed, provision that conveyance was subject to taxes and assessments for prior year, and easement of right of way for public utilities purposes, constituted "incumbrances" invalidating agreement in view of Civ. Code, § 1114.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; William Hazlett, Judge.

Action by Max Zlozower against Sam Lindenbaum and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Samuel A. Rosenthal and Louis Babior, both of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Henry O. Wackerbarth and Joseph A. Adair, both of Los Angeles (Henry E. Carter, of Los Angeles, of counsel), for respondent.

PLUMMER, J. Plaintiff had judgment for the sum of $1,500 in an action brought to recover that amount paid to the defendants as a part of the purchase price of certain lots in the city and county of Los Angeles. From this judgment the defendants appeal.

The court found that on or about the 24th day of October, 1924, the plaintiff and defendants entered into a certain agreement in the following words and figures, to wit:

"Los Angeles, Calif., Oct. 24, 1924.

"Received of Max Zlozower One thousand $1,000.00 dollars as deposit on purchase of two double bungalows known as 1908-12 Judson St. Purchase price of which is $13,500.00 dollars. Thirteen thousand five hundred dollars. Half of the above is to be given to the seller on or about the 1st of Nov. and the balance to be paid no later than Nov. 20th 1924.

"Sam Lindenbaum

"Dora Lindenbaum

"Max Zlozower"

That at the time of entering into said agreement the court also found that the plaintiff paid to the defendants the sum of $1,000; that thereafter, and on or about the 17th day of November, 1924, the plaintiff paid to the defendants the further sum of $500. The court further found that on or about the 27th day of October, 1924, the plaintiff signed and handed to the Title Insurance & Trust Company written instructions regarding the sale referred to in the agreement heretofore set forth. The portions of said instructions necessary to be considered are as follows:

"October 27, 1924.

"I will hand you the sum of $12,500.00 and funds sufficient to cover my portion of charges, all of which you are authorized to use in connection with your order No. 784113 when you can issue, in your usual form, your new guarantee not to exceed $13,500.00 on:

"Lot 22 and the easterly 40 ft. of lots 16, 17 and 18 of Tract 5403 in the City and County of Los Angeles, as per map recorded in Book 61 page 11 of Maps, etc. Conditions and restrictions as contained in the deed from Louis J. Wilde to Sam Lindenbaum and Dora Lindenbaum, with which I am familiar and hereby approve.

"Max Zlozower,

"2813 Boulder Street."

The escrow instructions are quite lengthy, but the portions which we have set forth are the only ones involved in this action and necessary to be considered. Thereafter, the defendants executed and tendered to the plaintiff a deed of conveyance to said property, which deed not only contained conditions and restrictions relative to the use of said property, limiting the occupation thereon by people of the White or Caucasian race, except employees, but also providing that any buildings to be used for family purposes, to be erected on said premises or any part thereof, should cost and be fairly worth not less than $2,000; that such buildings and the porches and approaches thereof should be located not less than 15 feet from the front line of the property; that any buildings to be used for business purposes should cost and be fairly worth not less than $3,000; - and that the exterior walls should be constructed of brick, tile, concrete, stucco, or other fire-resisting material; that outbuildings or garages permitted on said premises should be located not less than 60 feet from the front line of the property; and that all driveways should be placed on the right-hand side of said premises; that all conditions and restrictions herein contained should terminate on and after January 1, 1940. In addition to the conditions and restrictions just set forth relative to the uses to be made of said property and the buildings to be erected thereon, the deed tendered by the defendants to the plaintiff contained a reservation of an easement, to wit, of a right of way 5 feet in width over the rear of said lots, for public utility purposes, with ingress and egress thereto. The deed tendered also expressed that the conveyance was subject to all taxes and assessments for the year 1923.

Upon this appeal the appellants urge three grounds for reversal: (1) That an easement for electric light purposes granted to a municipality is not an incumbrance within the contemplation of the laws of the state of California; (2) that appellants have fully performed their part of the agreement by delivering or tendering to the plaintiff a good and sufficient deed of conveyance containing the provisions to which we have heretofore referred; and (3) that the intention of the parties governs, and that the contract must be so construed as to carry out such intention. No reference is made anywhere in the briefs to the fact that taxes and assessments constitute an incumbrance upon property as provided by section 1114 of the Civil Code, and that there is nothing in the writings referred to or mentioned in the briefs of counsel indicating that there was any agreement on the part of the plaintiff to pay the taxes on the premises for the year 1923. This fact in itself shows that the deed tendered was not in accordance with the writings to which we have referred, and to which our attention has been invited.

[1, 2] The contention is also made that any easements upon the premises are covered by the words "conditions and restrictions." In the consideration of this question it must be remembered that the conditions and restrictions contained in the tendered deed of conveyance, and which appears to have been contained in deeds of conveyance by which the defendants derain title, specified and provided that the conditions and restrictions terminated on January 1, 1940, while the easement granted to the city covering a strip 5 feet wide across the rear of all the lots referred to, was a continuing burden. Words used in instruments are to be construed according to the ordinary meaning attached thereto, and definitions or meanings not ordinarily attached thereto are not to be imported into the instrument unless the language of the writing compels such an interpretation. Again, if words are used in an instrument which have an ordinary, common, and also legal interpretation, and by long use have acquired such ordinary and legal interpretation, such interpretation will be followed unless language appears in the instrument compelling a different interpretation. In the instruments which we have before us there is nothing which compels an interpretation of the language used that departs from the common and the legal interpretation given thereto. With these statements as a premise, we may consider the three terms involved herein. First, as to "easement": In 19 C. J. 862, we find the term "easement" defined as "a liberty, privilege or advantage without profit, which the owner of one parcel of land may have in the lands of another; or to state it from the opposite point of view, it is a service which one estate owes to another, or a right or privilege in one man's estate for the advantage or convenience of the owner of another estate. Again, an easement or servitude has been defined as a right which one proprietor has to some profit, benefit, * * * in or over the estate of another proprietor. * * * While it is always distinct from the occupation and enjoyment of the land itself, and does not confer title to the land, an easement is property and partakes of the nature of land. It is an incorporeal right—an incorporeal hereditament, and although only an incorporeal right and appurtenant to another, the dominant, tenement, it is yet properly denominated an interest in land which constitutes the servient tenement," etc. Other definitions are given, but they are simply in elaboration of what we have here set forth. The easement referred to in the tendered deed of conveyance is unlimited as to time, and it further appears that the easement granted to the city, as we have said, covered a strip 5 feet in width, giving to the city the right of ingress and egress thereon, and as was said by this court in the case of Switzler v. Klein, 271 P. 367, left to the owner no beneficial interest in the lots, save and except as to the light and air coming over the 5-foot strip.

We come next to the terms, conditions, and restrictions. The word "restrictions" being used in connection with the word "conditions" is only a part of one expression, and does not extend or amplify the definition or meaning of the phrase "conditions and restrictions." Thus, in 12 C. J. p. 402, we find the following: "The word 'restriction,' when used in connection with the grant of interest in real property, has been construed as being the legal equivalent of 'condition,' and that either term may be used to denote a limitation upon the full and unqualified enjoyment of the right or estate granted. The words 'terms' and 'conditions' are often used synonymously when relating to legal rights." As to the definition of "conditions and restrictions," we quote the following from 12 C. J. p. 400: "That which limits or modifies the existence or character of something; a restriction or qualification; * * * restriction or limitation modifying or destroying the original act with which it is connected, or defeating, terminating or enlarging an estate granted; something which defeats or qualifies an estate; a modus or quality annexed by him that hath an estate, or interest or right to the same, whereby an estate may be either defeated, enlarged, or created upon an uncertain event; a quality annexed to land whereby an estate may be defeated; * * * a qualification or restriction annexed to a deed or devise, by virtue of which an estate is made to vest, to be enlarged or defeated upon the happening or not happening of a particular event, or the performance or non-performance of a particular act." Other definitions are given, but these sufficiently illustrate the meaning of the words "conditions and restrictions." They refer to the subsequent acts of the grantee in relation to the estate granted limiting his right to the use thereof, as in this case, and the erection of buildings costing not less than a certain sum, and at not less than a certain specified distance from the front line of the several lots mentioned. These conditions and restrictions, if violated, were to work a forfeiture of the estate and a return thereof to the grantors, but were to expire, by the terms of the instrument of conveyance, on January 1, 1940.

[3] The foregoing we think demonstrates conclusively that the words "conditions and restrictions" appearing in the instructions given to the title company, relative to the drawing of deeds and insuring title, do not include easements that may have been previously granted, and with which the record shows that the plaintiff was not familiar at the date of signing the instructions. The record shows that on the 24th day of October, 1924, there was standing on the corner of one of the lots an electric light pole, and from this the appellants urge that this constituted a visible object of the easement theretofore granted and subsisting across all of said lots, giving the right of ingress and egress to the city over the 5-foot strip. We do not need to follow appellants' argument or consider the cases holding that certain visible objects are sufficient to notify an intending purchaser of the existence of an easement. The mere statement of the claim that an electric light pole in the corner of one lot is sufficient to indicate the existence of an easement 5 feet wide for ingress and egress over the number of lots involved in this action carries its own refutation. In so far as there being nothing upon the premises to indicate the existence of an easement, and in so far as the existence of an unknown and undisclosed easement at the time of entering into the agreement of purchase and sale to which we have referred, this case is governed by the rules that this court followed in the case of Switzler v. Klein, supra, save and except that in the Switzler Case the defendant, after exhibiting a map to the intending purchaser, not disclosing an easement, filed a map reserving an easement to the city, in which the lots involved were situated.

[4, 5] On the part of the respondent it is argued that the writing dated October 24, 1924, is an agreement of purchase. On the part of the appellants it is argued that it is only a receipt. While it is argued on the part of the appellants that the writing of October 27, 1924, is a binding agreement upon the appellants, a reading of the instrument shows that this contention is untenable. The instructions given to the Title Insurance & Trust Company are in no sense an agreement of purchase. It is not an agreement entered into with the owner of the premises for the purchase of the lots in question. It is simply a direction to the Title Insurance & Trust Company as to what was to be done by them. It is wholly without consideration and subject to modification or retraction at any time. If the contention of the appellants that the writing dated October 24, 1924, set out in this opinion is not an agreement of purchase and sale, then the record shows no agreement of purchase and sale. The evidence is clear that the parties involved in this action so regarded the writing to which we are making reference and while it is deficient and lacking in many particulars, for the purposes of this case we will treat it as the agreement between the parties, or at least as evidencing the agreement between the parties. This writing is silent as to the kind, character, qualification, or limitation of title to be conveyed by the defendants to the plaintiff. It contains no reference to any easements, conditions, or restrictions. And thus, as said in the case of Smiddy v. Grafton, 163 Cal. 16, quoting from page 18, 124 P. 433, 434, Ann. Cas. 1913E, 921: "Where one makes a contract in writing to sell and convey land, without any exception, or reservation, or provision as to the title or incumbrances, the law implies an agreement on his part to convey a good title free of incumbrance. And if one incumbrance thereon is specifically provided for, there is an implied agreement that the title shall be conveyed free from any others." To support this quotation a large number of authorities are there cited. Likewise, in the case of Easton v. Montgomery, 90 Cal. 307, on page 314, 27 P. 280, 282, 25 Am. St. Rep. 123, it is said: "In every executory contract for the sale of land there is an implied condition that the title of the vendor is good, and that he will transfer to the vendee by his deed of conveyance a title unincumbered and without defect"—citing a number of authorities. That building restrictions constitute incumbrances conclusively appears from the citations found in the case of Whelan v. Rossiter, 1 Cal. App. 701, 82 P. 1082. That a reservation of a right of way, though called an easement, constitutes an incumbrance, is definitely held in the case of Rustigian v. Phelps, 190 Cal. 608, 213 P. 957. In that case it is held that partial payments made before the discovery of the easement might be recovered. The easement involved in the case at bar differs so radically from the easements involved in the cases referred to by appellants that the mere statement is all that is necessary to show their inapplicability. The easements referred to in the cases cited by appellants consisted of canals, ditches, and embankments extending across the premises. These, of course, were visible objects extending across the premises, which any one with ordinary vision could readily see, while a pole in a corner of one of several lots indicates nothing more than the existence of a pole. The record shows that there was no deed from Louis J. Wilde to the defendants, and that the defendants derived their title from one Simon; but as this may simply have been a clerical error, we attach no importance thereto. We do not deem it necessary to lengthen this opinion by a review of the testimony set forth in the briefs of the respective parties, further than to say it does not change the legal effect of the instruments to which we have referred, and also to add that it is somewhat conflicting as to the essential points involved, and that the trial court necessarily resolved the conflicting portions in favor of the plaintiff.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; ROLFE L. THOMPSON, J.

100 Cal. App. 736

MacDONALD v. REICH & LIEVRE, Inc.★
(Civ. 6837.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Sept. 25, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Oct. 25, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Nov. 21, 1929.

1. Limitation of actions ⇨190—Plaintiff, without pleading it, may introduce evidence on rebuttal in avoidance of plea of limitations (Code Civ. Proc. § 462).

Since, under Code Civ. Proc. § 462, plaintiff is not allowed a replication to defendant's plea, plaintiff without pleading it may introduce evidence on rebuttal in avoidance of plea of statute of limitations, such as evidence of concealment of fraud.

2. Money received ⇨6(4)—Common count for money had and received may be used in action to recover purchase price of stock on ground of fraud or mistake.

A common count for money had and received may be used in an action by purchasers of corporate stock to recover purchase price because of fraud or mistake.

3. Money received ⇨17(1)—Complaint in common count by purchasers of corporate stock need not plead facts concerning discovery of fraud and mistake.

In common count for money had and received by purchasers of corporate stock seeking to recover purchase price on ground of fraud or mistake, complaint need not plead facts, circumstances, and time of discovery of fraud and mistake.

4. Licenses ⇨39—Saleswomen purchasing stock of employer-corporation held not chargeable with lack of diligence in failing to discover alleged fraud sooner (Corporate Securities Act, § 12).

Saleswomen in stores of corporation seeking to recover purchase price for stock on ground of fraud and mistake, in that corporation did not have permit from corporation commissioner, rendering sale and stock void under Corporate Securities Act (Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 3814), § 12, cannot be charged with lack of diligence in failing to discover fraud sooner, where there were no facts which would have aroused their suspicion or shaken their confidence in their employer.

5. Limitation of actions ⇨16—Criterion for determining applicable statute of limitations is not form of action, but substance of it.

Criterion for determining particular statute of limitations applicable is not form of action, but substance of it and nature of the right, violation of which creates right of action, and this is particularly true in those jurisdictions where common-law forms of action have been abolished.

6. Licenses ⇨39—Issuance of certificates of stock by corporation amounts substantially to representation that certificates are regular and valid.

When corporation issues to public certificates of stock regular on their face, it amounts substantially to representation that certificates are regular and valid.

7. Limitation of actions ⇨100(6)—Action by purchasers of corporate stock for money had and received based on void sale of stock held governed by statute prescribing limitation of three years after discovery of fraud or mistake (Corporate Securities Act, § 12; Code Civ. Proc. § 338, subd. 4).

Action in common count for money had and received by purchasers of corporate stock to recover purchase price on ground that sale and stock was void under Corporate Securities Act (Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 3814) § 12, because corporation did not have permit from corporation commissioner, held governed by Code Civ. Proc. § 338, subd. 4, prescribing limitation period of three years after discovery of fraud or mistake, and action commenced within such time was not barred.

8. Appeal and error ⇨1071(6)—Error in omitting to make separate finding on particular issue is not reversible, where, if made, it would have been adverse to appellant.

Error of trial court in omitting to make separate finding on issue of statute of limitations will not be held reversible error, where evidence was such that, if finding had been made on that issue, it must necessarily have been adverse to appellant.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Louis H. Ward, Judge.

Action by Nellie MacDonald against Reich & Lievre, Inc. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Leon Samuels, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Frederic C. Benner, of San Francisco, for respondent.

KOFORD, P. J. Plaintiff recovered judgment for the sum of $600 paid by her and her assignor for the purchase from defendant corporation of six shares of its preferred stock. The stock was sold and purchased in the state of California at a time when the said corporation did not have a permit from the corporation commissioner of California to sell the same. Under the terms of section 12 of the California Corporate Securities Act (Deering's Gen. Laws, 1923, Act 3814) the sale was void, the stock was void, and, in reality, the plaintiff and her assignor never became stockholders in the corporation.

The plaintiff's complaint was in the form of the common count of indebtedness for money had and received within two years last past. The defendant did not plead the statute of limitations by demurrer. The complaint upon its face would be good against such a demurrer. In its answer, however, defendant pleaded all of the several sections of the Code of Civil Procedure prescribing periods of limitation for the commencement of actions.

According to the evidence and stipulations of fact at the trial, the stock was purchased and issued in 1922. Some of it was paid for in installments of $20 per month. The last payment was made at the end of June, 1923. This action was commenced June 22, 1927. A period of more than four years, therefore, elapsed between the purchase and payment of the stock and the commencement of the action, with the possible exception of the last $20 payment, which was approximately three years and eleven months prior to the commencement of the action. The court gave plaintiff judgment notwithstanding the pleas of the statute of limitations. Defendant appeals upon the ground that the court should have sustained this defense.

Respondent contends that the proper period of limitation for this action is prescribed by Code of Civil Procedure, § 338, subd. 4, to wit, three years after the discovery of the fraud or mistake when the action is one for relief upon the ground of fraud or mistake. The respondent and her assignor testified that they were employees working in the appellant's stores at the time of the purchase of the stock and continuously thereafter, and that in January, 1927, in a conversation between the employees in the store they heard for the first time that the stock was void and that it was possible to recover back the money paid therefor.

[1-3] Appellant claims: First, that the action is one on implied contract and not an action for relief upon the ground of fraud or mistake; and, second, that respondent may not rely upon the testimony to the effect that she and her assignor did not discover the invalidity of the stock until January, 1927, because she did not plead this in her complaint. Appellant relies upon those cases which state that one asking for relief against fraud after three years has elapsed must plead in his complaint the time and circumstances of the discovery of the fraud. 16 Cal. Jur. 624. These cases usually deal with the sufficiency of complaints which show upon their face that three years have elapsed since the date of the fraud. Here, however, the complaint being in the form of a common count, did not show on its face that three years had elapsed since the date of the fraud. On the other hand, it has been held that since the plaintiff is not allowed a replication to the defendant's plea (Code Civ. Proc. § 462), the plaintiff, without pleading it, may introduce evidence upon rebuttal in avoidance of the plea of the statute of limitations, such as evidence of concealment of fraud. Fox v. Tay, 89 Cal. 339, 24 P. 855, 26 P. 897, 23 Am. St. Rep. 494; Tarke v. Bingham, 123 Cal. 163, 55 P. 759; Lightner Mining Co. v. Lane, 161 Cal. 689, 120 P. 771, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 1093; 16 Cal. Jur. 616. It is not to be doubted, in fact appellant concedes, that the common count may be used in an action of this kind. 17 Cal. Jur. 616; Minor v.

Baldrige, 123 Cal. 187, 55 P. 783. The pleading of the facts, circumstances, and time of the discovery of the fraud and mistake belong more properly to a complaint of a kind which sets out all the facts, and it would seem to have no place in a complaint declaring upon a common count. Such a plea is not a part of the cause of action, and when it appears in a complaint it should be regarded as alleged either to anticipate a defense or to avoid the plea of the statute of limitations by demurrer when the complaint would otherwise appear on its face to be barred by the statute. We may add that it has been held that the omission of this matter from a complaint directly declaring upon fraud will not be held prejudicial error after trial and judgment where the plea of the statute is raised by answer and not by demurrer. Victor Oil Co. v. Drum, 184 Cal. 226, 193 P. 243.

[4] Appellant also claims that the public records of the state of California would have shown the plaintiff and her assignor at any time that the purchased stock was void, and that therefore they were not diligent in failing to discover the fraud sooner. They were employed as saleswomen in the stores of the defendant corporation, and no fact has been suggested from the evidence which would or should have aroused their suspicion or shaken their confidence in their employer. "Where no duty is imposed by law upon a person to make inquiry, and where under the circumstances 'a prudent man' would not be put upon inquiry, the mere fact that means of knowledge are open to a plaintiff, and he has not availed himself of them, does not debar him from relief when thereafter he shall make actual discovery. The circumstances must be such that the inquiry becomes a duty, and the failure to make it a negligent omission. Bank of Mendocino v. Baker, 82 Cal. 114, 22 P. 1037, 6 L. R. A. 833; Prouty v. Devin, 118 Cal. 258, 50 P. 380. In this case, though means of information were open to the plaintiff, it does not appear that there was any duty devolving upon him to make use of them. Nothing had occurred to excite his suspicion, or to put him upon inquiry, and for these reasons, under the facts of this case, we think the finding of the court sufficient and sufficiently supported by the evidence." Tarke v. Bingham, 123 Cal. 163, 166, 55 P. 759, 760. See, also, Victor Oil Co. v. Drum, 184 Cal. 226, 241, 193 P. 243.

The discovery of the invalidity of the stock was not merely a discovery of the provisions of law which respondent and her assignor were presumed to know, but it was likewise a discovery of the fact that the stock had been issued and sold without a permit.

[5] No doubt the form of the action is one upon an implied contract, but the criterion for determining the particular statute of limitations applicable is, not the form of the action, but the substance of it and the nature of the right, the violation of which creates the right of action. This is particularly true in those jurisdictions where common-law forms of action have been abolished. Bates v. Bates Machine Co., 230 Ill. 619, 82 N. E. 911, 12 Ann. Cas. 175; Union Tool Co. v. Farmers', etc., Nat. Bank, 192 Cal. 40, 218 P. 424, 28 A. L. R. 1417; Bell v. Bank of Calif., 153 Cal. 234, 94 P. 889; Miller & Lux v. Batz, 131 Cal. 402, 63 P. 680; Lord v. Morris, 18 Cal. 482.

[6] The substance and nature of the right which gave respondent a cause of action in this case was not contract. Appellant never in fact and reality agreed to pay back the money received for the stock. The contract implied by law is merely a fiction of law and does not, therefore, go to the substance of this cause of action. A fiction of law is introduced to promote justice, not to work a wrong contrary to the real truth and substance of the thing. Hibberd v. Smith, 67 Cal. 547, at page 561, 4 P. 473, 8 P. 46, 56 Am. Rep. 726. If all the facts of this case had been set forth in the complaint in detail instead of recourse having been had to the common count, it would readily have appeared that plaintiff's cause of action was based upon either fraud or mistake. When a corporation issues to the public certificates of stock, regular on their face, it amounts substantially to a representation that the certificates are regular and valid. Certificates of stock so issued by a corporation, but which were irregular or void for reasons not participated in by the stockholder, have been held to amount to a misrepresentation and fraud upon the part of the corporation officials for which the corporation is answerable. Green v. Caribou Oil Mining Co., 179 Cal. 787, 178 P. 950; Sykes v. Pure Food Cider Co., 157 Iowa, 601, 138 N. W. 554; Windram v. French, 151 Mass. 547, 24 N. E. 914, 8 L. R. A. 750.

In Union Tool Co. v. Farmers' Nat. Bank, supra, the action was by a depositor to recover from the bank money deposited, but which had been paid out by the bank upon a forged or raised check. The court held that the substance and gravamen of the action was based upon the payment of a forged or raised check, and therefore governed by Code of Civil Procedure, § 340, and was not governed by Code of Civil Procedure, § 348, relating to an action to recover money deposited with a bank. There is a strong analogy between that case and the instant one. The action for recovery of money by the depositor corresponds to an action by this plaintiff upon an implied contract for the return of the money paid for the void certificates of stock, while the action based upon the payment of a forged check would correspond to an action by this plaintiff based upon the fraud or mistake of the corporation in selling the stock to her without authority to do so.

[7, 8] We conclude, therefore, that the statute of limitations prescribed for this cause of action is that contained in Code of Civil Procedure, § 338, subd. 4, and that under the terms of that section the action was not barred at the time it was commenced. The court omitted to make a separate finding upon the statute of limitations, but the error in so doing will not be held reversible because the evidence at the trial was such that if a finding had been made on this issue it must necessarily have been adverse to appellant. 24 Cal. Jur. 944.

The judgment is therefore affirmed.

HOLABIRD v. SUPERIOR COURT IN AND FOR FRESNO COUNTY. (Civ. 7038.)★

Rehearing Denied Oct. 30, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Nov. 25, 1929.

1. Executors and administrators ⇨29(3)—Order granting letters of administration is adjudication of deceased's residence, which is binding for all purposes of administration of deceased's estate, unless vacated on direct attack.

Order granting letters of administration is an adjudication of the fact of residence of the deceased in the county over which the court has jurisdiction, and is binding on the whole world for all purposes of administration of the estate of deceased, unless vacated or set aside on direct attack.

2. Executors and administrators ⇨29(2)—Determination of deceased's residence in administration proceedings cannot be attacked collaterally.

While residence of deceased is jurisdictional in proceedings for administration of estate, it is a jurisdictional fact which the court must determine from evidence produced before it, and determination of deceased's residence cannot be attacked collaterally.

3. Courts ⇨475(2, 3)—Superior court of county in which petition for letters of administration has first been filed has exclusive jurisdiction to determine deceased's residence.

Superior court of county in which petition for letters of administration has first been filed has exclusive jurisdiction to determine question of residence of decedent, and courts of other counties must abide by that determination, which is reviewable only on appeal.

4. Mandamus ⇨4(4)—Mandamus did not lie to require court to hear motion to vacate order admitting will to probate, on ground that decedent was nonresident of county; remedy being by appeal.

Where proper notice was given to all interested parties of time and place of hearing on application for admission of will to probate and issuance of letters testamentary, mandamus will not lie to compel court to hear motion to set aside order admitting will to probate on ground that deceased was a resident of another county, since court had jurisdiction to determine question of deceased's residence, and sole remedy for error in its determination was by appeal.

Application by Mabel Webb Holabird for writ of mandate to be directed to the Superior Court in and for Fresno County. Petition denied.

D. Joseph Coyne, of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

B. H. Cory and W. H. Stammer, both of Fresno, for respondent.

TYLER, P. J. Mandate to compel the superior court of the county of Fresno to hear and determine a motion for an order to vacate and set aside a previous order, admitting the will of one Bessie M. Ball to probate, and appointing an executor thereof.

The petition in substance alleges that the court had no jurisdiction of the estate, for the reason that the deceased was not a resident of the county of Fresno at the time of her death, but, on the contrary, was a resident of the county of Los Angeles, and that the testimony given at the hearing, to the effect that deceased was a resident of the county of Fresno, was untrue.

It appears from the record that Bessie M. Ball died on the 20th day of May, 1929. Thereafter, on the 28th day of May of the same year, Leo A. Seibert filed her will for probate in the county of Fresno, and prayed for letters testamentary thereon. Notice was given of the hearing in all respects as required by law.

On June 7, 1929, at the time and place fixed, testimony was taken of all the material facts alleged in the petition, which was reduced to writing and filed with the clerk. At the close of the hearing the court executed a certificate of proof of the will of deceased, which was duly filed. The court thereupon made its order admitting the will to probate, and further ordered that letters testamentary be issued to Seibert in accordance with his petition. Seibert thereupon qualified as executor, and proceeded to administer upon the estate. Thereafter, on June 22, 1929, petitioner, herein, a sister of the deceased, filed with the clerk of the superior court of the county of Fresno, in said proceeding, a notice of motion for an order revoking and vacating the order admitting the will to probate, and for an order dismissing all proceedings in the matter of the said estate. The motion was based upon the ground that the superior court of the county of Fresno had no jurisdiction to admit the will to probate for the reasons hereinabove stated. Certain affidavits were filed in support of the motion; the executor of the estate filed counter affidavits and an answer thereto, in which he denied that he falsely testified as to the residence of the deceased, and alleged that the deceased was a resident of the county of Fresno at the time of her death. The affidavits filed by the executor were nine in number, and all were to the effect that the deceased was a resident of the county of Fresno at the time of her death. We do not deem a recital of the facts contained in these various affidavits to be necessary.

On the 26th day of July, 1929, at the time specified in said notice, said matter came on regularly for hearing. The executor filed his objections to the hearing of the motion on the ground that the court had no authority, power, or jurisdiction to hear or grant said motion, as the order admitting the will to probate and appointing the executor and directing the issuance of letters testamentary was conclusive upon all persons as to the matters adjudicated in said order, and particularly as to the residence of the deceased. It was further claimed that the notice to revoke was a collateral attack upon the order admitting the will to probate, which order was res judicata upon the subject of the residence of the testator. The court refused to entertain the motion, and the present proceeding followed.

[1, 2] At the outset it may be stated that nowhere in the petition does petitioner claim that she did not have actual notice of the proceedings admitting the will to probate, nor does she recite any facts going to show that she suffered any injury or that she was in any manner prevented from attending the hearing or enforcing her alleged rights. The fraud claimed is purely intrinsic. It is the settled law of this state that an order granting letters of administration is an adjudication of the fact of residence of the deceased in the county over which the court has jurisdiction, and it is binding upon the whole world, unless vacated or set aside on direct attack, for all the purposes of the administration of the estate of the deceased. In re Estate of Relph, 185 Cal. 605, 198 P. 639; In re Estate of Dole, 147 Cal. 188, 81 P. 534; In re Estate of Latour, 140 Cal. 414, 73 P. 1070, 74 P. 441. While residence is jurisdictional, it is one of those jurisdictional facts which the court must determine from evidence produced before it, and, when determined, it cannot be attacked collaterally. In re Estate of Griffith, 84 Cal. 107, 23 P. 528, 24 P. 381.

[3, 4] The superior court of a county in which the petition for letters has first been filed has exclusive jurisdiction to determine the question of residence of the decedent, and the courts of other counties must abide the determination of that court, which is reviewable only upon appeal. In re Estate of Spencer, 198 Cal. 329, 245 P. 176. Here the court had jurisdiction to hear the proceeding and weigh the evidence and consider its sufficiency to establish the residence of the deceased, and, if it erred in that respect, the proper remedy was by appeal within the time allowed by law. As above stated, no claim is here made that any extrinsic fraud was practiced in the procurement of the order, and the petition alleges that proper notice was given to all interested parties of the time and place of the hearing, as required by law.

Under these circumstances, the petitioner is not entitled to the remedy prayed for. The petition is therefore denied.

Rehearing Denied Nov. 4, 1929.

1. Trial ⇨260(8)—Refusal of instruction as to duty to illuminate railroad crossing and gates held not erroneous in view of other instructions.

Refusal of instruction as to duty of railroad to exercise reasonable care to illuminate gates and crossing held not erroneous, in view of other instructions relative to railroad crossings being warning of danger only in case reasonably careful person could see and know they were there.

2. Railroads ⇨307(4)—Railroad's failure to light crossing with artificial light or to station flagman there was not negligence per se, where not required by statute.

Failure of railroad to light crossing with artificial light or to station flagman at crossing was not negligence per se, in absence of statute placing duties on railroad.

3. Negligence ⇨93(1)—Contributory negligence of automobile driver could not be imputed to passenger.

Contributory negligence of automobile driver could not be imputed to passenger who was a guest in the car at time of accident.

Appeals from Superior Court, Orange County; Z. B. West, Judge.

Separate actions by Nellie Baldwin and others and by Mrs. James T. McGuffin against the Pacific Electric Railway Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiffs appeal; the appeals being consolidated by stipulation. Affirmed.

Superseding opinions 273 P. 155; 274 P. 72.

Rehearing denied; CURTIS, J., dissenting.

Bertrand J. Wellman, of Los Angeles, and Norval N. Edwards, of Orange, for appellants.

E. E. Morris and Frank Karr, both of Los Angeles, and S. M. Reinhaus, of Santa Ana, for respondents.

LANGDON, J. This is an appeal by the plaintiffs in two cases which were consolidated by stipulation in the trial court because each case involved the same facts. The plaintiffs, respectively, are heirs of Elwood L. Baldwin, deceased, and James T. McGuffin, deceased. Baldwin and McGuffin were killed in a collision between an automobile driven by McGuffin, in which Baldwin was riding, and an electric car owned and operated by defendant Pacific Electric Railway Company.

It is unnecessary to recite the facts in great detail, because the verdict of the jury has determined the issues of negligence upon conflicting evidence. In brief, the situation is that the automobile was being driven, at night, along the state highway which was intersected by the railway tracks of the defendant company. The railway tracks were protected by gates which were properly lowered at the time of the collision. From the gates was suspended a red lantern. Decedents crashed through the gates onto the tracks, and the automobile in which they were riding was struck by the train. There are some conflicts in the evidence, as is usual in a case of this kind, but the record contains abundant evidence to support the finding of the jury that the defendant company was free from negligence and that the accident was caused solely and proximately by the negligence of McGuffin. There is in the record testimony which indicates clearly that the driver of the automobile was or should have been familiar with the crossing, and there was no evidence to indicate the contrary. He had lived for eleven years at a nearby town, and his wife testified that they had driven over the crossing occasionally during that time, but not often. While appellants contend vigorously that the decedent McGuffin was not familiar with the crossing and their objection to some of the instructions given by the court is predicated upon this assumption, there is no evidence in the record to support this assumption, and, as we have stated, the only evidence upon the question indicates the contrary.

The larger portion of the appellants' brief is made up of lengthy quotations from the evidence favorable to appellants, but, in the face of the very decided conflict between the facts and inferences to be drawn therefrom, we shall not attempt to usurp the province of the jury in determining the facts.

It is stated in appellants' brief that the "major errors relied upon for reversal are: The refusal of the court to give plaintiffs' instruction No. 3 to the effect that the defendant was required to exercise reasonable care to illuminate the gates and crossing in question, and giving defendants' instruction No. 29 to the effect that it was not negligence not to have the crossing lighted with artificial light and instruction No. 14 to the effect that it was not negligence to have no wig-wag or human flagman at the crossing."

[1] The effect of the plaintiffs' instruction No. 3, which was refused by the court, was conveyed to the jury by plaintiffs' instruction No. 13, which was given as requested and which stated: "While a railroad crossing is warning of danger, if the conditions are such that it cannot be seen or known to a person exercising reasonable care, it is not a warning and all that is said in these instructions about a railroad crossing being a warning of danger only applies to those crossings that a reasonably careful person could see and know were there."

[2] As to the alleged error in giving instructions 29 and 14 at the request of defendants, it is conceded that, in the absence of statute, there is no duty on the part of the railway company to have a crossing lighted with artificial light, nor to have a flagman stationed there, and that no statute placing these duties upon the defendant railway company was in existence is also conceded. It was therefore not negligence per se for the company to have neglected to do either. The instruction above quoted, given at the request of plaintiffs and appellants, covers the matter fairly to them, by allowing the jury to say whether, under all the conditions—lighting, warnings, etc.—a reasonably careful person would become aware of the existence of the crossing as he approached it.

While each instruction given and refused by the trial court is set forth in the brief of appellants with an objection thereto, we find no merit in any of the points made.

[3, 4] It is beyond dispute, of course, as argued by appellants, that, although the driver of the car was guilty of contributory negligence, if the defendant railway company were guilty of negligence proximately causing the injury, the heirs of Baldwin, who was a guest in the car, would not be barred from a recovery, as such contributory negligence could not be imputed to him. However, the jury was correctly instructed upon that question to the effect that, if McGuffin's negligence was alone the proximate cause of the accident, neither of the plaintiffs could recover. We must assume the jury followed this instruction and found that the defendant company was free from negligence and that the negligence of McGuffin alone proximately caused the accident.

The judgment is affirmed.

McCOLGAN v. BANK OF CALIFORNIA NAT. ASS'N et al. (S. F. 12087.)★

208 Cal. 329

Supreme Court of California. Sept. 30, 1929.
As Modified, Oct. 8, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Nov. 4, 1929.

1. Principal and agent ⇨36—Transfer of subject-matter of agency revokes authority of agent (Civ. Code, § 2355).

Under Civ. Code, § 2355, authority of agent is revoked by transfer of subject-matter of agency.

2. Brokers ⇨77—Principal's land, subject-matter of agency, became impressed with lien in favor of agent, for advancements made to principal, where agency was terminated before fulfillment of its terms.

Where contract between principal and agent, whereby agent was to have right to subdivide land, lay out streets, and sell lots, provided that agent should retain from profits due principal any claim for money that had been advanced by agent to principal, and agent advanced to principal $3,250.62 on account of agency, and $1,916.43 as personal loan, on termination of such agency prior to fulfillments of its terms, equitable lien was impressed on property to secure obligation of principal to agent for advancement.

3. Mortgages ⇨151(1)—Party succeeding, to rights of purchaser under deed of trust took subject to equitable lien created under contract recorded at time of execution of such deed.

Where contract between principal and agent was recorded before principal executed deed of trust to secure loan, purchaser taking under such deed of trust took subject to equitable lien created in favor of agent for advancements made by the agent to principal in accordance with terms of agency.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; J. R. Welch, Judge.

Action by R. McColgan against the Bank of California National Association and others. From a judgment in favor of defendant Co-operative Land Company, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed, as modified.

Superseding opinions in 267 P. 151, and 274 P. 342.

George D. Collins, Jr., of San Francisco, for appellant.

John L. McNab and Byron Coleman, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

PRESTON, J. In this cause paragraphs 1 to 4, inclusive, of the judgment herein are hereby sustained, and paragraphs 5 to 7, inclusive, thereof are hereby stricken out, and, as so modified, the judgment is affirmed, neither party to recover costs. The effect of this holding is that under the contracts, the subject of this action, the right to terminate them exists, except that, as to advances made for the account of the owner and to him personally, there arose on the revocation of said agency an equitable lien in favor of respondent therefor, which, while not an estate in said property, is nevertheless a charge or lien thereon. We base this conclusion upon the following considerations:

The suit is one to quiet title to about 20 acres of subdivision property located in the town of Mayfield, county of Santa Clara, California. The complaint is in the ordinary form. The answer, in addition to a general denial, sets up possession of the said property in defendant under a certain written agreement dated October 28, 1904, modification thereof dated February 28, 1905, and a supplemental contract dated June 10, 1907, all of which contracts are of record in said Santa Clara county. The nature of said contracts will be referred to hereafter.

Upon these issues the cause went to trial, and the court found that plaintiff and respondent both claimed title under one Percy Beamish, who, at all times between 1904 and 1915, was the owner of the property in question; that on March 12, 1912, said Beamish made a conveyance of said property in trust to secure a loan; that on March 22, 1915, pursuant to said deed of trust, a sale of said property was had, and title passed from said Beamish to the predecessor in ownership of plaintiff here; that on September 19, 1924, plaintiff here, under a series of mesne conveyances, succeeded to all the rights of the said purchaser under said deed of trust; that after said sale, and on March 14, 1916, said Percy Beamish died. The court also found that the said three contracts above referred to were in existence as claimed by respondent, and that under said contracts respondent was in possession of said property, and pursuant to said contracts had advanced for the account of said Beamish the sum of $3,252.62 as his portion of the carrying charges upon said property, which said sum had accrued interest due thereon to October 1, 1924, in the amount of $1,914.15; that respondent also advanced as a personal loan to said Percy Beamish the sum of $1,916.43, as principal, and $1,650.29, by way of interest, to said 1st day of October, 1924. The court further found that respondent was entitled to remain in possession to carry out fully said written contracts, and to that end the plaintiff, as successor in interest of said Beamish, was under obligation to co-operate in said matter by executing the necessary conveyances to purchasers of said property.

In accord with these findings the court gave judgment declaring said sums, above referred to, to be a lien upon said property, and adjudged respondent to have the right to carry into effect and fully perform his obligations under said contracts, and to that end directed that plaintiff co-operate with him by the execution of such deeds and conveyances as might be necessary to comply with the powers conferred by said contracts, and that, in the event of his failure to do so, a trustee or commissioner be appointed. Plaintiff appealed from so much of said judgment as attempted to confer a lien or rights of any kind or character upon respondent. The rights of other parties as defendants in said action, therefore, need not be considered. A summary of said agreements is necessary to an understanding of the points of law involved.

The contract of October 28, 1904, executed by Beamish, as party of the first part, and respondent, then known as the Co-operative Land & Trust Company, a corporation, as party of the second part, recited the making of the contract in consideration of services rendered and money advanced by the party of the second part, described the property in question, and conferred complete and exclusive control thereof upon the party of the second part until all the terms and conditions thereof should be fulfilled, and all the affairs in connection therewith finally concluded. The party of the second part was to have the right to lay out streets and avenues, to subdivide said property into lots, to sell same in parts or in any manner it saw fit, and the party of the first part ratified and confirmed all acts and deeds done by said party of the second part in respect to said subdivision work, agreed to furnish good and sufficient deeds to any parts or parcels of said land, as suggested by said party of the second part, but said party of the first part was to have control of the selling price of lots, subject to certain restrictions, with power to change it at will. Party of the second part was to receive 5 per cent. commission on the selling price and half the net profits on sales of land above the average price of $300 per acre, interest on deferred payments to be considered profits. No profits, however, were to be divided until party of the first part had received some $6,000, together with taxes advanced, etc., nor until party of the second part should have been reimbursed for money expended in making improvements. It was further provided that the cost of surveying and subdividing said tract, laying out, grading, turnpiking, and graveling, and other improvements of streets, were to be paid by the party of the second part, and should become a charge against the land and added to the net selling price of $300 an acre. Taxes were to be paid by the party of the first part, and were also to be a charge on the land and added to the net selling price of $10,000. Party of the second part was to bear the expense of advertising and selling said land. The terms of sale on deferred payments were also provided for. Lastly, said contract contained the following clause: "This agreement is coupled with an interest, and is only revocable by the consent of the parties hereto; but it is understood that for breach of covenant either party may rescind as provided by law."

The modification of February 28, 1905, is unimportant, and merely consisted of an enlargement of the powers of the party of the second part in the fixing of prices and in the execution of contracts of sale of lots in said subdivision. The court found that the item of grading, etc., for which a lien was specifically given in the first contract, had been fully paid prior to this action.

The contract of June 10, 1907, however, materially changed the original contract, and, while it purported to be a part of the original contract, it especially provided that, in case of conflict therewith, it should prevail over said original contract. The first change was to give the party of the second part, respondent, full power and control of the selling price and terms of sale of said lots, with power to make, fix, or change the price at will, which power was to be absolute. Next, it provided, in effect, that after said party of the first part was paid $6,000, as provided in the original contract, all sums of money received thereafter from the sale of land should be divided share and share alike between the first and second parties after certain expenses, thereafter to be provided for, were paid. The right to a commission was abolished. Then it was covenanted that all expenses and costs of surveying and subdividing said tract, laying out, grading, turnpiking, and graveling, laying sidewalks, water pipes, and other street improvement, should be paid equally, share and share alike, by the parties.

The fifth clause thereof provided as follows: "It is further provided that the party of the second part shall retain from said one-half the net profits that may become due to the party of the first part from the sale of land sufficient sum or sums to liquidate any claim for money that has been advanced to the party of the first part by the party of the second part." The agreement then closed with this provision: "It is understood by this agreement that it is the intention that it shall be so considered and construed that all the expenses of any kind and nature attending the sale of said tract of land herein described shall be borne equally between the parties hereto, and that thereafter the net profits shall be divided share and share alike between the parties hereto, provided that the share of the net profits belonging to the party of the first part shall be first charged with the mortgage, taxes, and interest, hereinabove mentioned, and also for any money advanced by the party of the second part."

It is the contention of appellant that the above three written agreements when given their full legal import, do no more than confer a naked agency upon respondent, not coupled with any interest whatsoever in the subject-matter. This premise being admitted, the death of Beamish, it is said, terminated the agency. It will be noted, however, that Beamish died approximately one year after he had, by operation of law, lost all interest of every kind and character in the property. Consequently his death is a false quantity in the matter.

[1] However, it may be admitted that, under well-settled rules of law, the transfer of the subject-matter of an agency would itself revoke the authority of any mere agent. Boehm v. Spreckels, 183 Cal. 239, 248, 191 P. 5; Civil Code, § 2355; Mechem on Agency, § 698. Appellant, urging his position, cites the opinion of Chief Justice Marshall in Hunt v. Rousmanier, 8 Wheat. (21 U. S.) 174, 203, 5 L. Ed. 589, wherein it is said: "We hold it to be clear, that the interest which can protect a power, after the death of a person who creates it, must be an interest in the thing itself. In other words, the power must be engrafted on an estate in the thing. The words themselves would seem to import this meaning. 'A power coupled with an interest' is a power which accompanies, or is connected with, an interest. The power and the interest are united in the same person. But if we are to understand by the word 'interest,' an interest in that which is to be produced by the exercise of the power, then they are never united. The power, to produce the interest, must be exercised, and by its exercise, is extinguished. The power ceases, when the interest commences, and therefore, cannot, in accurate law language, be said to be 'coupled' with it. But the substantial basis of the opinion of the court on this point, is found in the legal reason of the principle. The interest or title in the thing being vested in the person who gives the power, remains in him, unless it be conveyed with the power, and can pass out of him only by a regular act in his own name."

This doctrine, as a general proposition, without doubt obtains to this day and in principle it has been recognized by this court many times. Reference may be had to such cases as Hicks v. Post, 154 Cal. 22, 96 P. 878; Miller v. Lerdo Land Co., 186 Cal. 1, 193 P. 778; Boehm v. Spreckels, supra; Todd v. Superior Court, 181 Cal. 406, 184 P. 684, 7 A. L. R. 938.

Under this rule it is asserted that a sale of the property, or the death of Beamish, had he remained the owner, would have terminated the authority of respondent, inasmuch as under these contracts nothing more than an agreement of agency was conferred by which Beamish, as owner of the land, gave respondent, in consideration of moneys to be expended and services to be performed by it, the exclusive right to sell the land for a compensation to be measured by the price realized from the sale thereof; that the right to compensation did not attach to the lands, but only to an interest in the proceeds arising from the sale thereof, in the event that such sale should be made during the life of the agreement. Hicks v. Post, supra. The soundness of this position is admitted as to the original contract, and as to all features of the subsequent contracts, except the ones now to be adverted to.

In the last contract we find inserted therein certain new features, to wit: That the owner without restriction agreed to pay "equally and share and share alike" such carrying charges as "surveying and subdividing said tract, and the cost of laying out, grading, turnpiking, and graveling, laying sidewalks, water pipes, and other improvements of the streets"; that after the owner received $6,000, as provided in the original contract, the money received should be divided equally after payment of the expenses for which each was liable for his one-half portion; that out of such sales should be deducted by the second party any sums "advanced to the party of the first part." The final clause repealed the statement that "all expense of any kind and nature attending the sale of said tract * * * shall be borne equally," and ended with the statement that, from the net profits falling to the owner, deduction should be made "for any money advanced by the party of the second part."

[2] From the undisputed findings of the court, we have the concrete facts that as to such carrying charges the party of the second part did advance for the account of the owner, Beamish, the sum of $3,252.62, and during said time the party of the second part advanced as personal loans to said owner the sum of $1,916.43. Does the doctrine of Hunt v. Rousmanier, supra, apply to advances and loans of this type? Does the termination of the agency leave the agent without redress against the property? The inapplicability of this doctrine to these advances is manifest, when we bear in mind the nature of the claims. These claims have an existence independent of the exercise of the power conferred. On termination of the contract, if not before, the owner could be sued upon these demands, whether the agency had or had not been exercised. The right to reimbursement does not come into being merely by the exercise of the agency conferred. It must have been the intent of the parties that, on termination of the agency prior to a fulfillment of its terms, a lien should be impressed upon the property to secure the obligation of the owner to the agent for the advancements received.

As was well said in the case of Marziou v. Pioche, 8 Cal. 522, 536: "Where an agent, for the collection of debts, or the sale of property, advances money to his principal before he collects the debt, or sells the property, it must be presumed, from the nature and character of the transactions, that the parties intend the agent shall have a lien for his advances, unless there is 'an express stipulation' to the contrary. It makes no difference whether the advances be made before or after the power is given, so they are approved by the principal. And when the principal, as in this case, expressly gives the power, for the very purpose of providing the means to return the advances made by the agent, there would seem to be no doubt as to the irrevocable character of the power. 5 Cal. Rep. 469, Posten v. Rasette."

This principle has been well stated by Mr. Pomeroy in his work on Equity Jurisprudence, volume 3 (4th Ed.) p. 2962, § 1235, as follows: "The doctrine may be stated in its most general form, that every express executory agreement in writing, whereby the contracting party sufficiently indicates an intention to make some particular property, real or personal, or fund, therein described or identified, a security for a debt or other obligation, or whereby the party promises to convey or assign or transfer the property as security, creates an equitable lien upon the property so indicated, which is enforceable against the property in the hands not only of the original contractor, but of his heirs, administrators, executors, voluntary assignees, and purchasers or encumbrancers with notice."

The doctrine is stated in 17 Ruling Case Law, p. 604, par. 13, as follows: "To dedicate property to a particular purpose, to provide that a specified creditor and that creditor alone shall be authorized to seek payment of his debt from the property or its value, is unmistakably to create an equitable lien."

In the case of Tinsley v. Durfey, 99 Ill. App. 239, 242, 243, we have a situation very similar to the case before us. Tinsley was indebted to Durfey in a certain sum, and Durfey and his associates were constituted agents of the owner for the purpose of sale of the property. Exclusive control of the sale was given to them, and it was provided that, when any portion of the property was sold, the sums should become then due and payable. Speaking of that situation, the court said: "In the event of sale, unquestionably, the contract gave complainants a lien upon the proceeds. While it allowed Tinsley the right to fix the price, it contemplated, and the law inferred, that he should fix a reasonable price, and that the sale should be made within a reasonable time. Equity treats that as done which ought to be done, and as Tinsley had refused to fix a price, and had incumbered the title with mortgages, it follows as a logical sequence that complainants' debt became due, and a lien on the land attached. The form of the agreement which shall create a lien is not very material, for equity looks at the intent and purpose, rather than at the form; and so it has been held that an agreement in writing, whereby the contracting party indicates an intention to make some particular property, or the fund arising from the sale of it, security for a debt or other obligation, creates an equitable lien upon the property so indicated. 3 Pomeroy's Equity, §§ 1235, 1236; Near v. Donnelly, 80 Mich. 130, 44 N. W. 1118."

The above quotation from Mr. Pomeroy has been twice expressly approved in California appellate jurisdictions—Title Ins., etc., Co. v.

California Dev. Co., 171 Cal. 173, at pages 200-202, 152 P. 542; Nau v. Santa Ana Sugar Co., 79 Cal. App. 685, 250 P. 705. See, also, Walker v. Brown, 165 U. S. 654, 664, 17 S. Ct. 453, 41 L. Ed. 865; U. S. v. Butterworth, etc., Corp., 267 U. S. 389, 393, 45 S. Ct. 338, 69 L. Ed. 672. In Jones v. Carpenter, 90 Fla. 407, 106 So. 127, 43 A. L. R. 1409, the history and nature of equitable liens are fully considered.

[3] It should be noted in this connection that the rights of respondent herein accrued prior to the rights of either plaintiff or his predecessors, and that plaintiff stands in the shoes of a purchaser or incumbrancer with full notice. It seems that the predecessors of appellant allowed respondent to remain in possession of said property and to exercise the agency conferred for approximately nine years after the transfer of title from Beamish. Appellant, by the institution of this action in 1924, for the first time essayed to terminate it. This he had the right to do, but in so doing the equitable lien above described attached and became enforceable; hence the conclusion above announced.

We concur: RICHARDS, J.; CURTIS, J.; LANGDON, J.; SEAWELL, J.

WASTE, C. J. I concur, but only in so far as the majority opinion rests upon the theory that the transaction between Beamish and the respondent resulted in an equitable lien in favor of the respondent.

Supreme Court of California. Sept. 30, 1929.

1. Municipal corporations $\S$ 449(4)—Where charter authorized city to prescribe by ordinance method of procedure in levying special assessments, ordinance, when adopted, had effect of charter provision.

Where charter amendment (St. 1909, p. 1200) authorized city of Pasadena to prescribe by ordinance method of procedure in levying and collecting special assessments for public improvements, ordinance, when adopted, had same force and effect as if terms thereof had been incorporated in charter itself and had same force and effect within city of an act of Legislature.

2. Municipal corporations $\S$ 406(1)—City derives power to collect special assessment from power of taxation.

City derives its power to levy and collect special assessment from its power of taxation.

3. Municipal corporations $\S$ 412—Only limitations on exercise of power of special assessment are that improvement be public and that it confer special benefit on property assessed.

Generally speaking, only limitations on exercise of power of special assessment are that improvement must be public in its nature and it must confer a special benefit on property assessed.

4. Municipal corporations $\S$ 419—Construction of underground conduits for electric wires by city owning electric lighting plant held "public improvement" for assessment purposes.

Construction of underground conduits for electric light, power, and other wires previously maintained on streets by an overhead pole and wire system, by city owning electric lighting plant for purpose of furnishing electric current to city and its inhabitants, held to be a "public improvement" for which special assessment could be levied and collected.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First, Second, and Third Series, Public Improvement.]

5. Municipal corporations $\S$ 439—Question of benefits from public improvement for which special assessment may lawfully be levied may be raised only in manner provided by law.

Where improvement by city is one for which special assessment may lawfully be levied, question of benefits may be raised only in manner provided by law.

6. Municipal corporations $\S$ 488, 489(8)—Where ordinance for improvement afforded full opportunity to property owner to be heard, and no objection was raised within time allowed, local body's determination on question of benefits was conclusive.

Where ordinances authorizing and providing for public improvement consisting of underground conduits for electric light, power, and other wires afforded full opportunity to property owner to be heard on question of benefits, and no objection in that behalf was raised within time allowed therefor, local legislative body's determination on question of benefits was final and conclusive.

7. Pleading $\S$ 121(4), 127(1)—Denial that defendants' property was benefited by improvement, on information or belief was insufficient since denying matter of record, and constituted admission.

In action to recover special assessment, where complaint alleged that defendants' property was benefited by completion of public improvement, denial of each and every allegation of paragraph for want of information or belief on part of defendants to enable them to answer was insufficient to meet issue tendered, since it was mere denial of conclusive determination of board of directors appearing as matter of public record, and constituted an admission of allegation.

8. Municipal corporations $\S$ 439—City board's determination that defendants' property was benefited by construction of underground conduits for electric wires previously maintained on poles was not abuse of discretion (Civ. Code, $\S$ 3479).

Determination of board of directors of city that property of defendants was benefited by construction of underground conduits for electric light, power, and other wires previously maintained on streets by overhead pole and wire system held not an abuse of discretion, since presence of poles and wires in front of defendants' property were an obstruction in street and could only be justified when maintained pursuant to public authorization, and otherwise they were a nuisance under Civ. Code, § 3479.

9. Municipal corporations ⇨440—That construction of underground conduit for wires was replacement of facilities theretofore constructed at public expense was no ground for denying special assessment.

That construction of underground conduit for electric wires was replacement of facilities theretofore acquired or constructed at public expense was no ground for denying city power to do reconstruction work by special assessment, since power to reconstruct public improvements is not exhausted when once exercised, in absence of statutory inhibition.

SHENK, J. [1] This action was brought to foreclose a street assessment. Judgment went for the defendants, and the plaintiff appeals on the judgment roll alone.

The city of Pasadena acquired by purchase an electric lighting plant and distributing system for the purpose of furnishing to said city and its inhabitants electric current for light, heat, and power. The purchase price was the proceeds of a general municipal bond issue voted for that purpose. No question is raised as to the power of the city generally to acquire, maintain, and operate said plant and system, including the construction of underground conduits and appliances to replace the overhead pole and wire systems. By charter amendment adopted in 1909 (Stats. 1909, p. 1200), the city was authorized to prescribe by ordinance the method of procedure in levying and collecting special assessments for public improvements, including the construction of underground conduits and appliances for the use and accommodation of electric light and power wires and other uses. On December 20, 1910, the city passed an ordinance providing such procedure, following generally the plan outlined in the various statutes relating to the construction of public improvements by special assessment. This ordinance when so adopted had the same force and effect as if the terms thereof had been incorporated in the charter itself (Mardis v. McCarthy, 162 Cal. 94, 101, 121 P. 389; Harrison v. Horton, 5 Cal. App. 415, 90 P. 716), and had the same force and effect within the city of an act of the Legislature (San Luis Obispo v. Fitzgerald, 126 Cal. 279, 58 P. 699; Chapman v. Fullerton [Cal. App.] 265 P. 1035).

On May 31, 1922, the board of directors of said city adopted an ordinance of intention to order the improvement of Colorado and other streets by the construction therein of underground conduits wherein to place the electric light, power, and other wires then maintained on said streets by an overhead pole and wire system. Notice and an opportunity to protest both as to the necessity of the improvement and on the question of benefits to the property proposed to be assessed were duly given. Thereafter the contract was awarded for a price of $46,720. The procedural regularity of the proceedings is not attacked in any way.

The defendants are the owners of property having a frontage of 85 feet on the north side of Colorado street between Euclid and Garfield avenues, and a depth of 231.24 feet. In front of this property the city's overhead pole and wire system was maintained. The defendants' property was, however, served by a pole and wire system maintained on a side street running at right angles to, and connecting with, Colorado street. The underground conduit was constructed on Colorado street in front of the defendants' property for the purpose of replacing the overhead system on both streets and serving the defendants' property from the wires in the underground conduit. The improvement was completed and the property of the defendants was assessed therefor in the sum of $435.26. During the course of the proceedings, the defendants made no objection to the proposed improvement or to the charge for benefits or the amount thereof or to the regularity of the proceedings. In this action to enforce the assessment they contended in the trial court, and now contend, that the city was and is without power to construct said improvement through the medium of a special assessment proceeding.

The trial court found and held that, if the proceedings are not constitutionally invalid as beyond the power of the city to initiate and carry to completion, the real property of the defendants became subject to the lien in the sum prayed for in the complaint.

The bases for the claim that the proceedings are invalid are: (1) That the city acquired said electrical plant and distributing system through the proceeds of general municipal bonds for the payment of which the defendants' property is liable by general taxation; (2) that the city is maintaining and operating said plant and system in a proprietary capacity; (3) that the city charges for the services rendered by and through said system in accordance with the rates regularly established by the municipality; (4) that the underground conduits were constructed for the purpose of replacing the overhead pole and wire system; (5) that the property of the defendants was adequately served by the pole and wire system on the adjoining side street; and (6) that the city in its proprietary capacity pays into the general funds of the city an annual rental for the use of the conduits in question in order to maintain said electrical distributing system. It is therefore argued that the improvement is not shown to be public in its nature, and, further, that a benefit to the defendants' property is not disclosed, and that the proceedings are invalid for the particular reasons above stated.

[2, 3] From an early day in this state it has been established that a city derives its power to levy and collect a special assessment from its power of taxation. Emery v. San Francisco Gas Co., 28 Cal. 346. Later cases are unvarying on this point. See, also, Houck v. Little River District, 239 U. S. 254, 36 S. Ct. 58, 60 L. Ed. 266. The right to install improvements by special assessment is, like the power of general taxation, a continuing power, and is, unless restricted by law, not exhausted by being once exercised. McVerry v. Boyd, 89 Cal. 304, 26 P. 885; McQuillan, Municipal Corporations (2d Ed.) § 1975. Generally speaking, the only limitations upon the exercise of the power of special assessment are that the improvement must be public in its nature, and must confer a special benefit upon the property assessed. Federal Construction Co. v. Ensign, 59 Cal. App. 200, 216, 210 P. 536.

On the record before us, two major questions are presented: First, was the improvement as constructed a public improvement? And, secondly, was the defendants' property specially benefited thereby? If both these questions be answered in the affirmative, it would necessarily follow that the proceedings in question were valid and the assessment is enforceable, unless the other reasons advanced by the defendants deprived the city of the power to proceed.

[4] We think both major questions must be answered in the affirmative. It is now generally accepted that, when a municipality, lawfully so empowered, undertakes to furnish to its inhabitants who will pay therefor the utilities and facilities of urban life, it is thereby performing a municipal and public function. See Pasadena v. Chamberlain (Cal. Sup.) 269 P. 630; In re Orosi Public Utility Dist., 196 Cal. 43, 235 P. 1004. The fact that the function is not governmental is immaterial. It may be proprietary and still be public. The distinction between the governmental and proprietary functions was never made for the purpose of adding to or detracting from either as a public function, but for the purpose of determining the liability of the municipality in tort. City of Pasadena v. Railroad Commission, 183 Cal. 526, 530, 192 P. 25, 10 A. L. R. 1425.

Numerous instances might be cited where similar improvements have been declared to be public and the construction thereof justified under special assessment proceedings. In Larsen v. City and County of San Francisco, 182 Cal. 1, 186 P. 757, the Twin Peaks tunnel, over two miles long, was constructed for the use of the San Francisco Municipal Railway. Brydon v. City of Hermosa Beach (Cal. App.) 270 P. 255, approved the construction by special assessment of ornamental lighting posts to be used in part as electric railway trolley poles. Mills v. City of Elsinore (Cal. App.) 270 P. 224, approved the construction by special assessment of a municipal water supply and distributing system. Santa Clara Valley L. Co. v. Meehan, 62 Cal. App. 531, 217 P. 787, and Kane v. Wedell, 54 Cal. App. 516, 202 P. 340, approved the acquisition of an existing water distributing system by special assessment. In Park v. Pacific Fire Extinguisher Co., 37 Cal. App. 112, 173 P. 615, it was held that the installation of an electric street-lighting system by special assessment was authorized by the Improvement Act of 1911 (St. 1911, p. 730), and that the tearing up of the streets and the placing of conduits therein for the accommodation of electric wires was "street work" as contemplated by that act.

Outside of this state many similar improvements have been declared to be public improvements susceptible of being acquired or constructed by special assessment. The construction of a tunnel to be used by privately owned public utilities was approved in Milheim v. Moffat Tunnel Improvement District, 262 U. S. 710, 43 S. Ct. 694, 67 L. Ed. 1194. The construction of a tunnel at the expense of the taxpayers and to be used by a privately owned street railway was declared to be a public benefit in Browne v. Turner, 176 Mass. 9, 56 N. E. 969. Fisher v. City of Astoria, 126 Or. 268, 269 P. 853, 857, 60 A. L. R. 260, involved the reconstruction of a street-lighting system and the replacing of cedar posts with ornamental posts and overhead wires with underground conduits. The Supreme Court of Oregon held the improvement to be for a public purpose, notwithstanding the private ownership of the electrical plant, and that the city could exercise its power of special assessment in the construction thereof, provided the property assessed was especially benefited. Water and gas mains were authorized to be installed by special assessment in Gleason v. Waukesha County, 103 Wis. 225, 79 N. W. 249. In Ankeny v. City of Spokane, 92 Wash. 549, 159 P. 806, L. R. A. 1917A, 1093, many similar public improvements are referred to with citation of authority. See, also, Smith v. City of Seattle, 25 Wash. 300, 65 P. 612. Other illustrations and citations might be given, but sufficient have been mentioned to show that the improvement under attack is unquestionably a public improvement. See, also, Willmon v. Powell (Cal. App.) 266 P. 1029; Green v. Frazier, 253 U. S. 233, 40 S. Ct. 499, 64 L. Ed. 878; Jones v. City of Portland, 245 U. S. 217, 38 S. Ct. 112, 62 L. Ed. 252, L. R. A. 1918C, 765, Ann. Cas. 1918E, 660; City of Tombstone v. Macia, 30 Ariz. 218, 245 P. 677; Ewart v. Western Springs, 180 Ill. 318, 54 N. E. 478.

We perceive no essential difference between the construction or installation of water mains to conduct water to a city for fire prevention and other purposes and their installation for domestic and other uses, and, as here, the installation of underground conduits to hold wires for fire and police signal devices and to furnish electric current to consumers of that commodity. The contention of the defendants, therefore, that the enterprise of the city of Pasadena in the construction of said underground conduits was a private, and not a public, enterprise, cannot be maintained.

[5, 6] To the objection that the improvement was and is of no benefit to the defendants' property at least two answers have been successfully interposed. In the first place, if the improvement is, as here, one for which a special assessment may lawfully be levied, the question of benefits may be raised only in the manner provided by law. If, as here, the ordinances authorizing and providing for the improvement afford full opportunity to the property owner to be heard on the question of benefits, and no objection in that behalf is raised within the time allowed therefor, the determination of the local legislative body on the question of benefits is final and conclusive. Noyes v. Chambers & DeGolyer, 202 Cal. 542, 261 P. 1006; Blake v. City of Eureka, 201 Cal. 643, 258 P. 945; Duncan v. Ramish, 142 Cal. 686, 76 P. 661; Brydon v. City of Hermosa Beach, supra. It is well recognized, however, that the question of benefits may become a judicial one when the determination of the city authorities is attacked on the ground of fraud (see Rutledge v. City of Eureka, 195 Cal. 404, 234 P. 82), or the proceedings on their face show an abuse of discretion amounting in law to a fraud on the property owner (Spring Street Co. v. City of Los Angeles, 170 Cal. 24, 148 P. 217, L. R. A. 1918E, 197). None of the grounds of attack which would remove this cause from the operation of the general rule may here rightfully be interposed.

[7] Secondly, assuming that a judicial question is attempted to be raised on the question of benefits, the judgment roll is in this condition: The complaint alleged in detail the several steps in the proceeding leading up to the levy of the assessment, including the passage of the ordinance establishing the district to be especially benefited by the improvement, including the defendants' property. Paragraph XI of the complaint contained the allegation, among others, that by reason of the completion of the work the property of the defendants was benefited. The only denial of this allegation was a reference to the paragraph by number and a denial of each and every allegation thereof for want of information or belief on the part of the defendants to enable them to answer. This form of denial was insufficient to meet the issue tendered. It was a mere denial of the conclusive determination of the board of directors appearing as a matter of public record, and constituted an admission of the allegation. Mulcahy v. Cuckley, 100 Cal. 484, 35 P. 144; 21 Cal. Jur. p. 150. This form of the pleading may have constituted the reason why the court did not make any finding whatever on the question of benefits.

[8] There is nothing on the face of the proceedings, in so far as they appear on the judgment roll, which would indicate or suggest fraud, actual or constructive, or an abuse of discretion in the determination of the board of directors of the city that the property of the defendants was benefited by the improvement. The contrary is apparent. The poles and wires in front of the defendants' property were an obstruction in the street preventing the free use of the thoroughfare by the defendants and the public generally. Their presence in the street constituted an element of danger, and could only be justified when maintained pursuant to public authorization. Otherwise they were a nuisance. Civil Code, § 3479. As said in Fisher v. City of Astoria, supra, the elimination of overhead wires "yields to the street a more spacious appearance," and, while the improved appearance of the street as affected by the improvement may not in and of itself be sufficient benefit to justify a special assessment, we are not prepared to say that it might not have an important bearing on the question of property values beneficial to the property from in front of which the poles and wires are removed.

[9] The fact that the construction of the underground conduit was a replacement of facilities theretofore acquired or constructed by public expense can afford no good reason for denying the city the power to do the reconstruction work by special assessment. The power so to reconstruct public improvements is not exhausted when once exercised

In the absence of statutory inhibition to that end. Wells v. Wood, 114 Cal. 255, 46 P. 96. None here exists.

The defendants stress the point that their property was already adequately served by a pole and wire system from the side street, and that the construction of the conduit in front of their property was unnecessary. But one of the purposes of the improvement was to eliminate the pole and wire system on the side street. This objection does not negative power of the city to conduct the proceeding, but rather goes to the question of benefits which, as has been shown, the defendants have waived.

The other points urged by the defendants are collateral to the two major questions, and we find in none of them a sufficient reason to invalidate the assessment on any constitutional ground.

Numerous amici curiæ on behalf of the county of Los Angeles and municipalities in said county have presented briefs. Some of them call attention to the fact that by charter provision and by many statutes the municipalities in this state have been authorized to acquire or construct public improvements such as the one hereunder attack; that in many instances the public authorities have availed themselves of this power, and it is urged that, if the assessment in this case be invalidated, many assessment proceedings heretofore completed and pending will be uprooted and an important public function destroyed. The fact that such power is conferred on municipalities and other governmental agencies by numerous statutes and charters cannot be gainsaid, but the considerations urged by amici curiæ could not serve to uphold an invalid assessment or confirm an unauthorized power if the same were in fact unauthorized by the constitution or laws of the state. Such considerations do, however, accentuate the importance of this case in the field into which it has been injected.

There is nothing in the judgment roll which would destroy the power of the city to conduct the proceedings or which would disturb the conclusiveness of the determination of the board of directors of the city on the question of benefits.

The judgment is therefore reversed.

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; LANGDON, J.; PRESTON, J.

CURTIS, J. We dissent. The special assessment upon which the complaint herein is predicated was levied against defendants' property for the purpose of paying the expense of constructing an underground conduit, and placing therein certain overhead wires in front of defendants' property. These wires were a part of the distributing system and electrical light plant, a public utility owned and operated by the city of Pasadena. This system and plant had been purchased by said city and paid for from the proceeds of a general bond issue. The property of defendants was a portion of the property which was taxed for the purpose of paying said bonds. The placing of said wires in a conduit underground was simply a replacement of a part of the distributing system of said utility which had been paid for by the proceeds of said bond issue. To compel the defendants to pay for said replacement in addition to what they are compelled to pay in taxes to meet the principal and interest on said bonds would impose upon them a greater charge than that exacted from the general body of consumers in said city, and would amount to double taxation. The assessment therefore is void as violative of the constitutional provisions which assure to all the equal protection of the law. It is further violative of the Constitution, which protects the defendants against the taking of their property without just compensation.

ALWARD v. JOHNSON, State Treasurer.*
(Sac. 4261.)

Supreme Court of California. Oct. 7, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Nov. 4, 1929.

1. Taxation $\S$ 6—Tax on gross receipts of automotive stage line carrying passengers, freight, and United States mail held property tax, and not tax on carrier's contract with government (Const. art. 13, $\S$ 15).

Tax on gross receipts of automotive stage line under Const. art. 13, $\S$ 15, held tax on property of automotive stage line carrying passengers, freight, and United States mail, and not objectionable as direct levy on carrier's contract with government.

2. Constitutional law $\S$ 283—Taxation $\S$ 37—Tax on gross receipts of automotive stage line is not violative of due process clause (Const. art. 13, $\S$ 15; U. S. Const. Amend. 14).

Tax on gross receipts of automotive stage line, imposed under Const. art. 13, $\S$ 15, is property tax, and does not violate due process clause of Const. U. S. Amend. 14, as arbitrary, excessive, or confiscatory.

3. States $\S$ 4—Private corporations are not necessarily exempt from state control because of contracts with federal government.

Contracts between private corporations and United States do not necessarily render the corporations government agencies so as to entitle them to freedom from state control.

4. Taxation ☞6—One operating automotive stage line for carriage of passengers and United States mail held not immune from state tax on gross receipts as agency of federal government (Const. art. 13, § 15).

One operating automotive stage line carrying passengers, freight, and United States mail held not exempt from state tax on gross receipts from carriage of persons and property under Const. art. 13, § 15, as instrumentality or agency of federal government.

5. Taxation ☞6—One operating automotive stage line over regular route held not immune from gross receipts tax as outside scope of common carrier, notwithstanding carriage of United States mails (Const. art. 13, § 15).

One operating automotive stage line between fixed termini and over regular route for carriage of passengers and freight under contract for carrying United States mails held not immune from tax on gross receipts from carriage of persons and property under Const. art. 13, § 15, as outside scope of common carrier, notwithstanding fact that his property was largely employed in service of United States.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Frank L. Guernsey, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

WASTE, C. J. Plaintiff was engaged in the business of operating an automotive stage line over the public highways between Redding and Big Bar, Cal., carrying passengers, freight, the United States mail and parcels post. He was therefore subject to a tax on gross receipts from the carriage of persons and property, in lieu of all other taxes and licenses. Const., art. 13, § 15. He filed with the state board of equalization a statement showing gross receipts from the operation of his transportation line for the year 1926 amounting to $60,986.47. On the basis of that statement, and pursuant to the Constitution, supra, the board levied a tax of $2,978.78 for the year 1927. Appellant paid the first installment under protest, and brought this action to recover $1,057.16, the portion of the tax assessed against the revenue derived from the carriage of the United States mails and parcels post. A demurrer interposed to his third amended complaint was sustained without leave to amend, and judgment was entered accordingly, from which the plaintiff has appealed.

[1, 2] Appellant attempts to raise questions concerning the method of taxation adopted by the people of the state in 1910, by which the system of state and local taxation was separated, which were long ago settled against his contentions. He first asserts that the actual market value of the various units of property used in the operation of his stage line is not more than $15,000, and that, prior to the adoption of section 15, supra, the ad valorem tax on his property never exceeded $350 per annum. He therefore claims that, as applied to his property, the prescribed method of taxation results in an arbitrary, excessive, and confiscatory tax, violative of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Federal Constitution. He further contends that, inasmuch as the tax is not based upon the true valuation of his property, it ceases to be a tax on property and becomes a direct levy upon appellant's contract to carry mails for the United States government, and is therefore a tax on a federal agency. The question as to whether or not the taxes levied for state purposes by section 14 of article 13, upon the gross receipts of the utilities there enumerated, are taxes upon property, has several times been considered by this court, and in each instance it has been declared to be essentially a property tax. Pullman v. Richardson, 185 Cal. 484, 487, 197 P. 346, affirmed in 261 U. S. 330, 339, 43 S. Ct. 366, 368, 67 L. Ed. 682, and cases there cited. The tax required by section 15 of article 13 of the Constitution on the gross receipts of appellant's business is the identical kind of a tax required by section 14, and is, like the other, essentially a property tax. It is neither arbitrary, excessive, or confiscatory to the extent of rendering it violative of the due process clause of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Federal Constitution.

[3, 4] The second main contention of appellant is that he carries the United States mails and parcels post under a contract with the Post Office Department of the United States government, and for that purpose is an agency of the government, and, as such, immune from state taxation. He cites cases in which the courts have denied the state the right to collect taxes upon transactions in which the federal government is directly engaged (e. g., Panhandle Oil Co. v. Mississippi, 277 U. S. 218, 48 S. Ct. 451, 72 L. Ed. 857, 56 A. L. R. 583). But there is a very material difference between such transactions and one in which a private citizen, whose only relation to the government is that of contract, is under obligation to furnish service in accordance with that contract. "Mere contracts between private corporations and the United States do not necessarily render the former essential government agencies and confer freedom from state control." Metcalf & Eddy v. Mitchell, 269 U. S. 514, 46 S. Ct. 172, 174, 175, 70 L. Ed. 384. In that case, involving a tax on the income of consulting engineers in state service, the court, speaking through Mr. Justice Stone, said: " * * * Not every person who uses his property or derives a profit, in his dealings with the government, may clothe himself with immunity from taxation on the theory that either he or his property is an instrumentality of government within the meaning of the rule. [Citing cases.]

"It seems to us extravagant to say that an independent private corporation for gain, created by a State, is exempt from state taxation, either in its corporate person, or its property, because it is employed by the United States, even if the work for which it is employed is important and takes much of its time."

In Railroad Co. v. Peniston, 18 Wall. (85 U. S.) 5, 33, 21 L. Ed. 787, it was claimed that the state of Nebraska had illegally imposed a tax upon the property of the railroad company, the contention being that the property was exempt from state taxation by virtue of the incorporation of the company by the United States as a means for the performance of certain public duties of the government, enjoined and authorized by the Constitution. In considering the contention, the court said: "It may, therefore, be considered as settled that no constitutional implications prohibit a State tax upon the property of an agent of the government merely because it is the property of such an agent. A contrary doctrine would greatly embarrass the States in the collection of their necessary revenue without any corresponding advantage to the United States. A very large proportion of the property within the States is employed in execution of the powers of the government. It belongs to governmental agents, and it is not only used, but it is necessary for their agencies. United States mails, troops, and munitions of war are carried upon almost every railroad. Telegraph lines are employed in the national service. * * * They are the property of natural persons, or of corporations, who are instruments or agents of the general government, and they are the hands by which the objects of the government are attained. Were they exempt from liability to contribute to the revenue of the States it is manifest the State governments would be paralyzed."

[5] In his closing brief, appellant for the first time raises the point that section 15 of article 13, supra, applies only to common carriers. He contends that the general definition of a common carrier, i. e., "one who undertakes, for hire or reward, to transport the goods of such as choose to employ him from place to place" (10 Cor. Jur. 39), is not applicable to one engaged in carrying the United States mails. In his third amended complaint filed in this action, appellant alleged that he was "engaged in the business of operating on automotive stage line known as the Redding-Weaverville Stage Line, between Redding, California, and Big Bar, California, * * *" and that the property used in the operation of the line was "devoted chiefly to the carrying of United States mails and parcels post." An examination of his report filed with the board of equalization shows that of the $60,986.47 reported as earned during the year 1926, $18,609.74 was revenue derived from the carriage of passengers and freight. There is nothing in appellant's complaint, or in the briefs filed in his behalf, which would indicate that he did not undertake, for hire or reward, to transport from place to place passengers and the goods of such as chose to employ him. His stage line was operated over the public highways, between fixed termini, and over a regular route. It is true his property was largely employed in the service of the United States; but that does not alter the fact that it was also devoted to public service, and, as was said in Metcalf and Eddy v. Mitchell, supra, it would seem extravagant to say "that an independent private corporation for gain created by a State, is exempt from state taxation * * * in * * * its property, because it is employed by the United States, even if the work for which it is employed is important and takes much of its time." While appellant's complaint is directed only to the portion of the tax based on the receipts from the carriage of the mails, the tax, as before pointed out, is a tax on the operative property "used in the business of transportation of persons or property," without distinction as to the nature of the property transported.

The judgment is affirmed.

RAY v. SUPERIOR COURT IN AND FOR
SAN DIEGO COUNTY. (L. A. 11341.)

Supreme Court of California. Oct. 7, 1929.

1. Criminal law $\S$ 576(5)—Defendant's consent that trial of criminal charge be set beyond statutory limit held equivalent to "postponement" upon defendant's application, and therefore sufficient excuse for delay (Pen. Code, $\S$ 1382, subd. 2).

Where defendant consents that trial of criminal charge be set for a date beyond 60-day limit prescribed by Pen. Code, $\S$ 1382, subd. 2, such consent is equivalent to "postponement" upon his application within meaning of that section and is sufficient excuse for delay.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First Series, Postponement.]

2. Criminal law $\S$ 1144(7)—Defendant's consent that trial on criminal charge be set beyond statutory limit is presumed, where cause is so set without objection (Pen. Code, $\S$ 1382, subd. 2).

Where defendant fails to object at time trial on criminal charge is set beyond 60-day limit prescribed by Pen. Code, $\S$ 1382, subd. 2, requiring dismissal of prosecution if defendant is not brought to trial within 60 days after indictment or information unless trial has been postponed upon his application, consent to postponement of trial is presumed.

3. Criminal law $\S$ 576(5)—Defendant not having objected to resetting of trial on criminal charge beyond statutory period, and in fact consenting thereto, held not entitled to dismissal (Pen. Code, $\S$ 1382, subd. 2).

Where trial on criminal charge, within 60-day period allowed for trial after indictment or information, was reset for trial at time beyond such period, and defendant not only failed to object thereto but actually accepted as satisfactory time so fixed, he was not entitled to dismissal of prosecution under Pen. Code, $\S$ 1382, subd. 2, requiring dismissal of prosecution if defendant whose trial had not been postponed upon his application is not brought to trial within 60 days after indictment or information.

4. Criminal law $\S$ 576(1)—Statute requiring criminal cases to be set for trial within 30 days after plea held merely directory (Pen. Code, $\S$ 1050, as added by St. 1927, p. 1036).

Pen. Code, $\S$ 1050, as amended by St. 1927, p. 1036, requiring criminal cases to be set for trial within 30 days after entry of plea, held to be merely directory and not to require dismissal in event of noncompliance with its provisions.

Application by Estella M. Ray for a writ of mandate to compel the Superior Court in and for San Diego County to dismiss a criminal proceeding. Writ denied.

Superseding opinion in 273 P. 1084.

M. W. Conkling, Arthur Dorn, and Edgar B. Hervey, all of San Diego, for petitioner.

Stephen Connell, Dist. Atty., and E. N. Clark, Deputy Dist. Atty., both of San Diego, for respondent.

WASTE, C. J. By this proceeding in mandamus the petitioner seeks to compel the dismissal of a certain criminal prosecution initiated by the filing of an indictment against her on November 10, 1927. On November 16, 1927, the petitioner entered a plea of not guilty, and the cause was set for trial on December 12, 1927. The record of the court below is silent as to what occurred on the day fixed for trial. It is agreed, however, that neither side had applied for a continuance; but it is a fact that on December 12, and for several days thereafter, the petitioner was actually being tried on another and separate criminal charge then pending against her. Apparently nothing was done in the cause which it is now sought to have dismissed until December 27, 1927, at which time, and without objection from the petitioner, the cause was reset for trial on January 16, 1928. The petitioner not only did not object to resetting the matter for trial on January 16, 1928, but counsel representing her stated to the court that there was "no objection to that date" and that it was "satisfactory." When the cause was called, however, the petitioner moved for a dismissal of the prosecution on the grounds that she had not been brought to trial, as required by subdivision 2 of section 1382 of the Penal Code, within 60 days after the finding of the indictment against her, nor within 30 days after the entry of her plea, as provided in section 1050 of the same code, as added by St. 1927, p. 1036.

[1-4] The consent of a defendant that his trial on a criminal charge be set for a date beyond the 60-day limit prescribed by subdivision 2 of section 1382, supra, is equivalent to a postponement upon his application within the meaning of that section, and is sufficient excuse for the delay. People v. Benc, 130 Cal. 159, 162, 62 P. 404; People v. Chadwick, 143 Cal. 116, 120, 76 P. 884. Consent is presumed when the defendant fails to object at the time the cause is set for trial beyond such period. People v. Rongo, 169 Cal. 71, 73, 145 P. 1017; In re Scott, 81 Cal. App. 577, 578, 254 P. 596; Ex parte Apakean, 63 Cal. App. 481, 482, 218 P. 768. The cause which it is now sought to have dismissed was, on December 27, 1927, well within the 60-day period, reset for trial at a time beyond such period, and petitioner not only failed to object thereto, but, as already indicated, actually accepted as "satisfactory" the date so fixed. Under these circumstances, the provisions of subdivision 2 of section 1382, supra, can be of little assistance to the petitioner. Nor do we think that petitioner may justly derive any comfort from section 1050, supra, wherein the Legislature has provided that criminal causes shall be set for trial within 30 days after entry of plea. This section has been held to be directory merely. People v. Perea (Cal. App.) 273 P. 836. Nowhere in the section is a dismissal provided for in the event of noncompliance with its provisions. Moreover, petitioner's trial on the other and separate criminal charge above referred to did not terminate until after the expiration of the 30-day period provided for in section 1050, supra.

The alternative writ is discharged, and the application for a peremptory writ is denied.

Application for certiorari by W. T. Yoder against the Board of Supervisors of the County of Riverside and others to review an order of respondent board purporting to create a waterworks district. Respondents filed a demurrer. Demurrer overruled, writ granted, and order annulled.

Orrick, Palmer & Dahlquist, of San Francisco, for petitioner.

Albert Ford, Dist. Atty., of Riverside, for respondents.

LANGDON, J. This is a proceeding to review an order of the board of supervisors of Riverside county, made under St. 1913, p. 785, as amended (Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, and Supp. 1925-1927, Act 9123), purporting to create Riverside county waterworks district No. 1. Respondents filed a demurrer to the petition, which raises but one issue of law, i. e., as to the sufficiency of the description of the proposed district.

Petitioner is the owner of lands situated in Riverside county and within the territory purported to be contained within the boundaries of said Riverside county waterworks district No. 1 by virtue of said order for formation of said district. He contends that the entire proceedings for the formation of the district are void, in that no definite district is defined any place in the proceedings. The defect pointed out by petitioner runs through the entire proceedings, from the petition which initiated the proceedings to the final order declaring the district formed. The description of the land in the petition for formation of the district, the description in the notice fixing time and place of hearing petition, and the description in the resolution calling election on the proposition of forming the district and incurring a bonded indebtedness, and also the description in the order of the board of supervisors declaring the district formed and organized, admittedly do not describe the land intended to be included in the district. The description used in all these documents refers successively to various points in sections 7, 18, and 19, township 5 south, range 3 west. According to the map of the district which was appended to the petition for formation of the district and which was referred to in the notice of hearing thereon, sections 7, 18, and 19 of township 5 south, range 3 west, are situate not on the easterly but on the westerly boundary of the district as outlined on the map. Apparently, the petitioners intended to refer to sections 7, 18, and 19 in township 5 south, range 2 west.

An attempt to trace on the map the boundaries of the district as set forth in the order shows that the description given is wholly unintelligible, and that is the description which was adopted by the board of supervisors in its notice and order. Also, the county surveyor filed a certificate that the petition sets forth a full, true, and correct description of the boundaries of the proposed district as shown on the map attached to and made a part of the petition and that said boundaries as described in said petition are fully and accurately delineated on said map.

[1] The act under which the proceedings for the formation of the district were taken provides that the petition shall contain the name and boundaries of the proposed county waterworks district to be benefited by the improvement. It would seem that the district must be definitely and accurately described in the formation proceedings if the order of formation is to be held valid.

In McQuillan on Municipal Corporations (2d Ed.) § 279, it is said: "It is thus obvious that every municipal corporation must have its boundaries fixed definitely and certainly in order that they may be identified and that all may know the exact scope or section of territory or geographical division embraced within the corporation limits and over which the local corporation has jurisdiction. Unless the boundaries are described with certainty so that it is possible to determine the precise area intended to be included within the municipal limits, the incorporation will be void. * * * Under statutes which require the tribunal authorized to make the order of incorporation to set out the metes and bounds in the order, an improper description will render the order of incorporation void." See, also, Dillon on Municipal Corporations (5th Ed.) § 352; I. O. Johnson Corp. v. City of Los Angeles, 198 Cal. 308, 245 P. 164; Ferry v. O'Brien, 188 Cal. 629, 206 P. 449; Bay Rock Co. v. Bell, 133 Cal. 150, 65 P. 299; 43 Cor. Jur. p. 106. There are also numerous authorities from other jurisdictions, closely in point, which are cited in the able brief filed with us by petitioner; but it is unnecessary to extend this opinion by a discussion of them.

[2] Respondents urge that since the map filed with the petition to the Supervisors shows clearly that the description of the district is erroneous and impossible and as every one who voted at the election understood what the actual location of the boundaries was and no one is aggrieved by the error, this court should hold the proceedings valid and the error inconsequential. But such a course might result in many persons being seriously aggrieved who might later purchase bonds and perhaps have them held invalid because the proceedings upon which they were issued violated constitutional guaranties. Unfortunately, the error continued through all the proceedings and the legal, and economically sound procedure now is to correct it before further rights and equities become involved.

The demurrer to the petition filed herein is overruled; the writ prayed for is granted, and the order of the board of supervisors of Riverside county, made on August 5, 1929, purporting to create Riverside county waterworks district No. 1, is annulled.

PARESES v. CALIFORNIA STATE BOARD OF PRISON DIRECTORS et al.

Supreme Court of California. Oct. 5, 1929.

1. Prisons ☞15—One convicted of second degree murder with deadly weapon, having failed to serve minimum term under law relating thereto, could not compel determination of sentence (Pen. Code, § 1168, as amended by St. 1927, p. 1491; § 190, as amended by St. 1927, p. 1952).

Failure of one convicted for second degree murder with a deadly weapon to serve minimum term prescribed by Pen. Code, § 1168, as amended by St. 1927, p. 1491, for offense with a deadly weapon, defeated his right to compel the state board of prison directors to determine length of time in excess of minimum he was required to serve, regardless of provisions of Pen. Code, § 190, as amended by St. 1927, p. 1952, reducing punishment for second degree murder, in that the minimum term prescribed for offense of being armed with deadly weapon was applicable.

2. Statutes ☞231—Codes must be read together and construed, if possible, to give effect to all provisions.

Codes and the several sections thereof must be read together and so construed as to give effect, where possible, to all provisions thereof.

3. Mandamus ☞154(4)—Allegation, in petition against prison directors, that prisoner was entitled to credits for good behavior, held insufficient (St. 1917, p. 665).

Allegation that one confined in state prison was entitled to certain credits for good behavior was insufficient, in absence of showing that board of prison directors had by affirmative act in accordance with St. 1917, p. 665, accorded credits, and that they had not been forfeited by said board.

In Bank.

Original proceeding in mandamus by Demetreous Pareses against the California State Board of Prison Directors and others. Alternative writ discharged, and application for peremptory writ denied.

Demetreous Pareses, in pro. per.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Emory F. Mitchell, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondents.

WASTE, C. J. Petitioner, claiming to have been incarcerated in the state's prison for the minimum term prescribed by law for the crime of second degree murder, for the commission of which offense he was duly tried and convicted, seeks by this proceeding in mandamus to compel the respondent board of prison directors to determine, as contemplated by section 1168 of the Penal Code, what length of time, if any, in excess of such minimum term he shall be so confined.

At the time of petitioner's conviction and sentence, section 190 of the Penal Code fixed the punishment for second degree murder at "not less than ten years." In 1927 (Stats. 1927, p. 1952) this section was amended to read, in part, that "every person guilty of murder * * * in the second degree is punishable by imprisonment in the state prison from five years to life; provided, however, this section is to apply to all persons now serving sentence in a state prison for murder of the second degree and the sentence of such persons may be modified or reduced to conform to this section. * * *" Claiming to have been confined for a period of approximately five years and eight months, and citing this recently enacted amendment to section 190, supra, as authority for his contention, the petitioner urges that it is now the duty of the respondent board to definitely fix and determine the length of time he is to be confined. The principal argument advanced by the Attorney General in opposition to this claim is that the quoted portion of the 1927 amendment to section 190 is violative of article 7, § 1, of the Constitution, as "an attempted usurpation by the legislature of the constitutional prerogative of the governor to grant reprieves, pardons and commutations of sentence after conviction."

[1-3] The conclusion we have reached makes it unnecessary that we determine the constitutional question thus raised, for, even if the validity of the amendment to section 190 were to be assumed, a point which we do not now decide, the petitioner would not be entitled to the relief here sought. To explain: If the Legislature at its 1927 session could constitutionally amend section 190 so as to reduce the minimum term of imprisonment to be served by certain persons already legally confined in the state's prison, it could equally as well amend section 1168, supra, as it in fact did (Stats. 1927, p. 1491), so as to provide that the minimum term to be served by "a person not previously convicted of a felony, but armed with a deadly weapon either at the time of his commission of the offense or a concealed deadly weapon at the time of his arrest" shall be seven years, "notwithstanding any other provision of this code or any provision of law specifying a lesser sentence." In our opinion, this amendment to section 1168, and particularly that portion thereof last above quoted, served to qualify and restrict the application of the provisions of the amended section 190, for it is settled that the Codes and the several sections thereof must be read together and so construed as to give effect, when possible, to all the provisions thereof. Petitioner freely admits that he employed a deadly weapon in the commission of the offense of which he stands convicted. If the 1927 amendment to section 190 is constitutional in so far as it purports to reduce the minimum term to be served by persons incarcerated at the time of its enactment, so must be the amendment to section 1168, which qualifies and restricts its provisions, and petitioner not having served the minimum term prescribed by the latter section is not now in a position to compel the respondent board to act in the manner prayed. Petitioner attempts to avoid this conclusion by contending that even if the seven-year period prescribed by section 1168 be taken as the minimum term applicable to his offense, he has fully satisfied the same, "inasmuch as he has been confined for five years and eight months in actual time, this term [having] earned for him in credits, well over two years, which brings his total time of servitude to approximately eight years. * * * This contention is without merit, for it is based upon the erroneous theory that a prisoner in one of the state's penal institutions is entitled, as of right, to certain fixed credits earned by good behavior while under restraint. Since the enactment of the Indeterminate Sentence Law (Stats. 1917, p.

665), the "recognition to be given to such conduct becomes a matter of consideration and affirmative action by the board [of prison directors] in each particular case." In re Thompson, 54 Cal. App. 177, 178, 201 P. 473. The allegation that petitioner is entitled to certain credits for good behavior is insufficient. It must be made to appear that the board of prison directors by affirmative act has accorded petitioner those credits and that they have not been declared forfeited by said board. PEOPLE v. DUNCAN. (Cr. 1096.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Oct. 7, 1929.

Criminal law §1130(4)—Where defendant appealed, but filed no brief and made no appearance at hearing, case was affirmed (St. 1923, p. 553, § 112; Pen. Code, § 1253).

Where defendant, convicted under St. 1923, p. 553, § 112, for driving vehicle on public highway while under influence of intoxicating liquor, appealed, but filed no brief, and made no appearance at time case was called for hearing, case was affirmed pursuant to provisions of Pen. Code, § 1253.

Appeal from Superior Court, El Dorado County; George H. Thompson, Judge.

Charles Duncan was convicted of driving vehicle on a public highway while intoxicated, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Hale Day, of Placerville, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Chas. Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

PER CURIAM. The defendant was convicted in the superior court of El Dorado county of a misdemeanor, to wit, the crime of driving a vehicle on a public highway while under the influence of intoxicating liquor, to wit, violation of section 112 of the California Vehicle Act (St. 1923, p. 553).

The transcript on appeal was filed in this court September 10, 1929. No brief has been filed in behalf of appellant. The cause was regularly placed on the calendar for oral argument on October 7, 1929. No appearance was made for appellant at the time the case was called for hearing. Pursuant to the provisions of section 1253 of the Penal Code, the judgment and the order are affirmed.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Oct. 3, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Nov. 2, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Dec. 2, 1929.

1. Licenses ⇨39—Sale of stock without corporation commissioner's authority held void (Corporate Securities Act, §§ 3, 12).

Where corporation sold and transferred stock without authority of corporation commissioner as required by Corporate Securities Act (St. 1917, p. 673; Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 3814), §§ 3, 12, sale and transfer were therefor illegal and void.

2. Licenses ⇨39—Sale of stock held illegal, where corporation did not first exhibit and deliver copy of permit to sell to purchaser (Corporate Securities Act).

Where there was failure by corporation which sold and transferred stock to comply with specific requirement of authorization to effect that true copy of permit must be exhibited and delivered to each prospective purchaser of securities before accepting subscription thereof under Corporate Securities Act (St. 1917, p. 673; Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 3814), sale and transfer of stock was illegal.

3. Sales ⇨49—When part of consideration for purchase is illegal, contract is ordinarily void for impossibility to determine part inducing agreement, except where there is innocent party (Civ. Code, § 1608).

When part of consideration for purchase of property is illegal, entire contract is ordinarily void as provided by Civ. Code, § 1608, for reason that it is impossible to determine which part of consideration was controlling factor which induced agreement to purchase, though there is an equitable exception when applied to an innocent party to contract.

4. Licenses ⇨39—Securities seller failing to procure permit is estopped from setting up defense to action for rescission or damages that consideration is illegal (Corporate Securities Act).

Seller of securities, who is guilty of failure to procure necessary statutory permit to sell and transfer stock as provided by Corporate Securities Act (St. 1917, p. 673; Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 3814), is estopped from setting up as defense to an action for rescission or for damages that part of consideration for purchase of property is illegal.

5. Limitation of actions ⇨100(6)—Action for failure to exchange common stock purchased for preferred stock, commenced few months after discovering corporation misrepresented right to sell, held not barred (Code Civ. Proc. § 338, subd. 4; Corporate Securities Act).

Where it was alleged and found to be true that corporation through its president falsely represented that it had legal right to sell and issue stock in question as treasury stock as required by Corporate Securities Act (St. 1917, p. 673; Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 3814), action for damages for breach of contract to exchange common stock for preferred stock, commenced few months after discovery, held not barred by provisions of Code Civ. Proc. § 338, subd. 4, providing that action for relief for fraud or mistake must be begun within three years after discovery of facts constituting fraud or mistake.

6. Licenses ⇨39—Transfer of stock corporation issued directly without authority was not transfer of president's stock indorsed to company and canceled (Corporate Securities Act).

Where stock owned by president of corporation was indorsed and transferred to company and canceled and other stock was issued directly from corporation to buyers of securities without authority from corporation commission as required by Corporate Securities Act (St. 1917, p. 673; Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 3814), transfer of stock was not from president to purchasers, but was from corporation to purchasers.

7. Licenses ⇨39—Agreement providing that corporation purchasing business would exchange preferred stock for common stock of owners held void for lack of authority to exchange (Corporate Securities Act).

Where original agreement of parties to purchase business specifically provided that corporation would exchange and transfer to owners of business preferred stock of corporation for one-half of value of 90 shares of common stock original owners of business possessed, that part of contract was void for lack of authority to make such exchange and transfer of stock as required by Corporate Securities Act (St. 1917, p. 673; Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 3814).

8. Licenses ⇨39—Owner of stock transferred as part consideration for business sold without fraud or concealment could sue for value of stock duly tendered corporation because transfer of stock was unauthorized (Corporate Securities Act).

Where sale of business was consummated without fraud or concealment on part of owner and transfer of stock of corporation which purchased business as part consideration therefor was illegal and void for lack of authorization as required by Corporate Securities Act (St. 1917, p. 673; Deering's Gen. Laws of 1923, Act 3814), holders could maintain action for breach of contract to exchange common stock for preferred stock and recover value of stock which was duly tendered to corporation.

9. Corporations ⇨121(7) — Amount recoverable for failure to deliver corporation stock is market value which must be alleged and proved.

The amount which is recoverable for failure to deliver corporation stock is measured by market value which must be alleged and proved.

10. Evidence ⇨84—There is no presumption that face value of corporation stock is real value.

There is no presumption that face value of stock of corporation is its real value.

11. Corporations ⇨82—Allegations that plaintiffs were damaged to agreed price because stock purchased was worthless and transfer invalid, in absence of special demurrer, held sufficient to infer claim stock was worth agreed price (Corporate Securities Act).

Where it was alleged in action for breach of contract of corporation to exchange common stock for preferred stock that there was failure of consideration by virtue of invalidity of transfer of common stock because it was not authorized as required by Corporate Securities Act (St. 1917, p. 673; Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 3814), and that plaintiffs were damaged in sum of agreed price, and further that proceeds of stock to be transferred to plaintiffs were not placed to credit of corporation in treasury, in absence of special demurrer, allegations held sufficient to infer that plaintiffs claimed stock was actually worth agreed price at time of contract.

12. Licenses ⇨39—Invalid sales and statement of corporation's assets indicating stock was worth sale price, in absence of contrary evidence, prima facie showed actual value, sustaining finding purchasers were damaged in that amount (Corporate Securities Act).

Where sales of stock and statement of assets of corporation indicated that stock was actually worth $100 per share as paid and there was no evidence in record to contrary in action for breach of contract to exchange common stock for preferred stock, there was sufficient prima facie showing of actual value to sustain findings of court that plaintiffs were damaged to full amount paid for stock because sales were not authorized as required by Corporate Securities Act (St. 1917, p. 673; Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 3814).

Appeal from Superior Court, Merced County; E. N. Rector, Judge.

Action by C. H. Castle, Jr., and another against the Acme Ice Cream Company. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Superseding opinion in 279 P. 1011.

Joseph C. Meyerstein, of San Francisco, and H. K. Landram, of Merced, for appellant.

Edward Bickmore, of Merced, for respondents.

ROLFE L. THOMPSON, J. This is a rehearing of an appeal from a judgment in an action for damages for the breach of a contract and for partial failure of the consideration therefor.

The plaintiffs were the owners of an ice cream business in Merced, called the Castle Ice Cream Company, valued at $45,000, which was sold and delivered to the defendant corporation subject to an indebtedness of $26,679.65, which obligation was assumed by the purchaser. The sale was consummated pursuant to the terms of a written contract which was executed by the respective parties August 22, 1922. The title to the ice cream plant passed to the purchasers. In addition to assuming the indebtedness above mentioned, the balance of the purchase price agreed upon was the sum of $1,000 in cash, which was paid and the transfer of "common stock of the Acme Ice Cream Company in the amount of $9,000 par value," which was issued by the corporation and delivered to the plaintiff. In the contract for the purchase of the Castle Ice Cream Company it was agreed that plaintiffs might exchange one-half of the common stock which was transferred to them for preferred stock of the corporation of a similar value. C. O. Swanberg, the president of the corporation, was the owner and holder of 4,500 shares of common stock which had been duly issued to him in payment of a debt due to him from the corporation. In fulfillment of the contract which is involved in this action, Swanberg transferred to the corporation his stock. His certificate for 4,500 shares was indorsed and canceled and the corporation, on August 25, 1922, issued to the plaintiffs two certificates of common stock of 45 shares each of the total par value of $9,000. This stock was issued and transferred to the plaintiffs without the authorization of the corporation commissioner of California. In a contract executed by the respective parties four days subsequent to the original purchase, it was agreed that within two years therefrom the plaintiffs might exchange one-half of their common stock for preferred stock of the same value. On May 25, 1924, pursuant to the last-mentioned agreement, plaintiffs tendered to the defendant 45 shares of common stock and demanded preferred stock in exchange therefor. The defendant failed and refused to consummate this exchange. Thereafter for the first time, the plaintiffs discovered that the defendant corporation had never procured from the California corporation commissioner an authorization to sell or transfer this common stock, and that the stock transaction was therefore void. The plaintiffs then tendered to the defendant corporation the entire $9,000 issue of common stock on the ground that the issue of stock was void, and demanded in lieu thereof the sum of $9,000 in cash, which was refused. This action for damages was then commenced. Judgment for $9,000 was rendered in favor of the plaintiffs. The court found that all of the allegations of the complaint were true and upon the contrary that all of the allegations of the answer in conflict therewith were untrue, but did not specifically find the market value of the stock.

The appellant contends that the plaintiffs' sole remedy consists of an action of rescission which must fail for the reason that there was no offer to restore the entire consideration; that a suit for damages will not lie in an action which is based on a contract, the consideration for which is wholly or partially illegal; that the judgment is not supported by the evidence for the reason that there is a total lack of proof of the value of the stock in question; and that the action is barred by the provisions of the statute of limitations.

[1, 2] It is conceded this is not an action for rescission. A return of the entire consideration was not tendered. Rescission is a proper remedy for cancellation of an unlawful contract when the invalidity does not appear on the face of the instrument. Section 3406, Civ. Code. It is, however, not the only remedy for loss sustained under facts similar to those which exist in the present case. Clearly, the stock transaction was illegal and void for two reasons: First, because the defendant corporation sold and transferred the stock without authority of the corporation commissioner; and, second, assuming that the corporation possessed an authorization to sell the stock in question, there was a failure to comply with the specific requirement of the authorization to the effect that a true copy of the permit was required to be exhibited and delivered to each prospective purchaser of securities before the subscription therefor was accepted.

The California Corporate Securities Act (St. 1917, p. 673, Act 3814, Deering's Gen. Laws of 1923, § 3) provides in part: "No company shall sell * * * or offer for sale, negotiate for the sale of, or take subscriptions for any security of its own issue until it shall have first applied for and secured from the commissioner a permit authorizing it so to do." And section 4 of said act further provides in part: "The commissioner may impose such conditions as he may deem necessary to the issue of such securities. * * *" Section 12 of the act renders void any securities issued in violation of the provisions of this statute.

[3-5] When a part of the consideration for the purchase of property is illegal the entire contract is ordinarily void (section 1608, Civ. Code; Tatterson v. Kehrlein, 88 Cal. App. 3d, 263 P. 285, 291, 13 C. J. 513, § 471), for the reason that it is impossible to determine which part of the consideration was the controlling factor which induced the agreement to purchase the stock. There is, however, an equitable exception to this rule. The rule does not apply to an innocent party to the contract. The seller of securities who is guilty of failure to procure the necessary statutory permit to sell and transfer the stock is estopped from setting up this defense to an action for rescission or for damages. In the Tatterson Case, supra, it is said: "The penalties prescribed by the Corporate Securities Act being all laid on the seller and none on the buyer, and the statute being for the benefit and protection of buyers, the parties are not in pari delicto, and the buyer may have judgment for the money paid out by him under the illegal contract." In the present case it was alleged and found by the court to be true that the plaintiffs were ignorant of the fact that the defendant corporation had failed to procure a permit to sell or transfer the stock in question, and that they did not learn of this fact until April, 1926, which was but a few months prior to the instituting of this action. It was further alleged and found to be true that the defendant corporation, through its president, Swanberg, falsely represented to the plaintiffs that it had a legal right to sell and issue the stock in question as treasury stock. This action was therefore not barred by the provisions of subdivision 4 of section 338 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Lightner Mining Co. v. Lane, 161 Cal. 689, 698, 120 P. 771, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 1093; McWilliams v. Excelsior Coal Co. (C. C. A.) 298 F. 889.

[6, 7] It is argued that since the 90 shares of common stock of the defendant corporation of the par value of $9,000 were owned individually by Swanberg, the president of the company, and that the sale and transfer of his private stock required no authorization from the corporation commissioner, this transfer of stock was not in violation of statute or void. The contract, however, was with the corporation for 90 shares of its common stock and not with its president as an individual. The record shows: "There was issued to C. O. Swanberg a certificate for 4,500 shares of common stock in accordance with the terms of the permit of the commissioner of corporations then in force; that certificate was duly endorsed by C. O. Swanberg, turned in, cancelled, and out of it in addition to other stock, there was issued on the 25th day of August, 1922, to C. H. Castle, Jr., and Mabel Pearl Castle, certificate C-15 for 45 shares and certificate C-16 for 45 shares." This may have been a circuitous way of avoiding the statute. In any event, it was not a transfer of stock from Swanberg to the plaintiffs. His stock was indorsed, transferred to the company, and canceled. Other stock was issued directly from the corporation to the plaintiffs without authority from the corporation commissioner. Furthermore, the original agreement to purchase the Castle Ice Cream business specifically provided that the corporation would exchange and transfer to plaintiffs preferred stock of the corporation for one-half of the value of 90 shares of the common stock held by plaintiffs. This part of the contract, was also void for lack of authority to make such exchange and transfer of stock.

The only authorization which was obtained from the corporation commissioner prior to the sale and transfer to plaintiffs of the stock in question was dated June 14, 1922, and permitted the sale only of 2,000 shares of preferred stock. The sale of no common stock was authorized. Moreover, this authorization provided: "That a true copy of this permit be exhibited and delivered to each prospective subscriber for or purchaser of said securities before his subscription shall be taken therefor or any sale made thereof to him." Respecting this provision the plaintiff C. H. Castle, Jr., testified: "Q. * * * Did anyone ever exhibit any copy or any permit of the Acme Ice Cream Company to sell stock? A. No, sir." The failure on the part of the defendant corporation to comply with this condition of the authorization to sell stock also rendered the sale void. Otten v. Riesener Chocolate Co., 82 Cal. App. 83, 254 P. 942.

[8] The sale of plaintiffs' ice cream business having been consummated without fraud or concealment on their part, and the transfer of defendant's stock as part consideration therefor being illegal and void for lack of statutory authorization, the plaintiffs are entitled to maintain this action to recover the value of the stock, which was duly tendered to the defendant corporation. Tatterson v. Kehrlein, supra.

[9-11] The appellant, however, contends that neither the pleadings nor the proof will support a finding of damages for the reason that the plaintiffs failed to allege or prove the actual market value of the stock. It is true that the amount which is recoverable for failure to deliver corporation stock is measured by the market value which must be alleged and proved. Peek v. Steinberg, 163 Cal. 127, 134, 124 P. 834; 4 Thompson on Corp. (2d Ed.) 699, § 4172. There is no presumption that the face value of stock is its real value. 14 C. J. 718, § 1099. We are of the opinion that the allegations of the complaint sufficiently assert the value of the stock, since the question was not raised by a special demurrer. Likewise we are of the opinion that the evidence constitutes a sufficient prima facie showing of the actual value of the stock in the absence of testimony to the contrary. The complaint alleged with respect to the value of the 45 shares of stock in question that "there has been a failure of consideration for plaintiffs entering into said agreement [by virtue of the invalidity of the transfer of stock] in the sum of $4500.00. * * * and by reason of said failure of consideration therein, plaintiffs have been damaged in the sum of $4500.00." It was further alleged that Swanberg, the president of the defendant corporation, represented to plaintiffs that the proceeds from the sale of the 90 shares of stock which were to be transferred to plaintiffs would be placed to the credit of the corporation in its treasury and that this was not done, and therefore "none of said consideration of $9,000 actually accrued to the benefit of the corporation. * * *" It was further alleged that: "Said shares of the common stock of said corporation of the par value of $9,000 have depreciated in value, and became and now are worthless, to the damage of plaintiffs in the sum of $9,000." These allegations, in the absence of a special demurrer, are sufficient to infer that plaintiffs claimed the 90 shares of stock were actually worth $9,000 at the time of the execution of the contract.

[12] In proof of the actual value of the stock in question our attention is called to the record which does show that the statement was made and filed with the corporation commissioner by the defendant corporation in its application to transfer to Swanberg, the president thereof, 4,500 shares of its common stock, that the value of this stock was $100 per share, for it was transferred to him in payment of an indebtedness of $450,000. This statement was in the nature of an admission on the part of the corporation that the stock was actually worth $100 per share. This authorization also recites that the corporation "proposes to sell and issue 2000 shares of its preferred stock at par for cash." The defendant Mabel Castle testified: "I talked with Mr. Swanberg and Mr. Ayers * * * and neither of these gentlemen * * * told me that the 90 shares of stock, to the extent of $9,000 in value, was to be transferred to Mr. Castle and myself from the private stock of Swanberg. * * * And this stock was given as the equivalent of $9,000 in cash." The sales of stock and the statement of the assets of the corporation indicate that the stock was actually worth $100 per share. There is no evidence in the record to the contrary. This is a sufficient prima facie showing of the actual value of the stock to sustain the findings of the court.

The judgment is affirmed.

EL DORADO OIL WORKS v. OAKLAND
ELEVATOR & MILLS CO. (Civ. 6432.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Oct. 8, 1929.

1. Warehousemen $\Rightarrow$ 25(5)—What constitutes "prompt and efficient service" within storage contract held determinable from circumstances of case unless but one reasonable inference can be drawn from undisputed facts.

Where written contract for storage of copra in defendant's elevators provided that defendant would make "prompt and efficient deliveries" when called for, question of what constitutes "prompt and efficient service" is one determinable from all circumstances of particular case unless but one reasonable inference can be drawn from undisputed facts.

2. Appeal and error $\Rightarrow$ 101(1)—Trial court's finding on fact issue on which evidence is conflicting should not be disturbed.

Where evidence on issue of fact involved is conflicting, trial court's finding thereon should not be disturbed on appeal.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; J. D. Murphey, Judge.

Action by the El Dorado Oil Works, a corporation, against Oakland Elevator & Mills Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

W. F. Williamson, Roscoe E. Jordan, and W. R. Wallace, Jr., all of San Francisco, for appellant.

Clark, Nichols & Eltse, of Berkeley, for respondent.

NOURSE, J. Plaintiff sued to recover storage charges paid to defendant under protest. Defendant had judgment, from which plaintiff has appealed upon typewritten transcripts.

Plaintiff stored with defendant a large quantity of copra under a written contract in which defendant agreed to weigh and store the copra in its elevators and to make "prompt and efficient deliveries" when called for. The plan of storing copra in elevators such as those used by defendant was an experiment and known to be such by both parties. When demand was made for deliveries the defendant found that the copra had caked in the bins in such a way that it was impossible to remove it from the bins as rapidly as plaintiff demanded. Upon evidence which was uncontroverted the trial court found that "all said copra was so delivered within such time as it was possible to make delivery thereof in the rendition of prompt and efficient service."

[1, 2] It is conceded that the storage charges which are the basis of this action were estimated in full accord with the terms of the contract. The controversy is this: The plaintiff contends that the defendant should have made more prompt deliveries of the copra and thus shortened the period of storage; that this the defendant was required to do by its agreement to render "prompt and efficient service." The question of what is prompt and efficient service, like the question of due diligence, is one which must be determined from all the circumstances of each particular case, except in cases where but one reasonable inference can be drawn from the undisputed facts. 6 C. J. 1163. Where, as here, the evidence on this issue is conflicting, the finding of the trial court should not be disturbed.

The judgment is affirmed.

GOLDMAN v. DANGERFIELD et al.
(Civ. 3833.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Sept. 30, 1929.

1. Guaranty $\S$ 38(2)—Guaranty of payment for merchandise up to stated amount held continuing, in view of circumstances evidencing that single purchase was not contemplated (Civ. Code, $\S$ 2814).

Under Civ. Code, $\S$ 2814, defining as continuing guaranty one which relates to future liability of principal, under successive transactions, which either continue his liability or from time to time renew it after it has been satisfied, guaranty of merchandise purchased from M. by S. up to amount of \$1,500 held continuing guaranty, in view of circumstances evidencing that guaranty was not intended to cover single purchase.

2. Guaranty $\S$ 38(1)—Question of continuing guaranty must be gathered from instrument or from course of dealing or from both.

Whether a contract of guaranty is a continuing undertaking is question of intention to be gathered from instrument itself, or from course of dealing between parties, or from both.

3. Guaranty $\S$ 38(1)—Contract will be construed as continuing guaranty if future course of dealing for definite time or succession of credits was apparently contemplated by parties.

Where it appears that future course of dealing for definite time or succession of credits to be given was contemplated by parties, contract of guaranty will be construed as continuing.

4. Guaranty $\S$ 38(1)—"Continuing guaranty" is prospective and generally intended to provide limited security in respect to future transactions.

"Continuing guaranty" contemplates succession of liability, and is prospective in operation and generally intended to provide limited security in respect to future transactions.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First, Second, and Third Series, Continuing Guaranty.]

5. Guaranty $\S$ 38(1)—Unless guaranty is limited by fair implication from words, it is generally regarded as continuing until revoked.

Unless words of guaranty fairly imply that guarantor's liability is to be limited, it is generally regarded as continuing until guaranty is revoked.

6. Guaranty $\S$ 59—Continuing guaranty is not discharged unless payments of principal discharge full debt to which guaranty attaches.

Payments by principal do not discharge guarantor under continuing guaranty, unless they discharge the full debt to which the guaranty attaches.

7. Guaranty $\S$ 91—Evidence held not to sustain finding that guaranty was not continuing.

In action on guaranty of mercantile account, evidence held not to sustain findings of trial court that guaranty was not continuing.

Appeal from Superior Court, Tehama County; H. D. Gregory, Judge.

Action by A. S. Goldman against William Dangerfield and another. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Judgment reversed.

M. J. Cheatham, of Red Bluff, for appellant. McCoy & Wetter, of Red Bluff, for respondents.

PLUMMER, J. The plaintiff, as the assignee of Meyer Cloak & Suit Company, instituted this action to recover judgment against the defendants upon a written guaranty signed by them, in the words and figures following, to wit:

"We hereby guarantee payment for all merchandise purchased from Meyer Cloak & Suit Company, and Granada Knit Mills by Mrs. N. L. Stucky of Red Bluff, California, up to the amount of Fifteen Hundred Dollars ($1500.00).

"Wm. Dangerfield

"E. J. Baker

"Witness: C. E. Patterson

"Dated: March 3, 1925."

The defendants had judgment, and the plaintiff appeals.

The crucial question involved in this case is whether the guaranty just set forth constituted a continuing guaranty. If so, the judgment of the trial court should be reversed, the court having held that the instrument just set forth did not constitute such a guaranty. The record is silent as to transactions between Mrs. Stucky and the Meyer Cloak & Suit Company and the Granada Knit Mills prior to March 3, 1925. However, the record does show that on March 3, 1925, Mrs. Anna L. Stucky was, and prior thereto had been, engaged in the business of selling ladies' furnishing goods, and had a store in the city of Red Bluff where such business was conducted by her. The record further shows that the guarantors knew of the business conducted by Mrs. Stucky, and had been aware of her conducting such business for at least some time prior to the execution of the guaranty. The record shows that after the execution of the guaranty Mrs. Stucky opened an account with the Meyer Cloak & Suit Company, and continued to buy merchandise from said company up to and including December 15, 1926, purchasing in all merchandise of the value of something over $5,000, and paid thereon, from time to time, sums aggregating $3,944.63. There is nothing in the record to show that at the time of the execution of the guaranty it was contemplated that Mrs. Stucky was buying a complete stock of goods, or that the guaranty was intended to cover a single transaction. The account admitted in evidence, to which we have referred, shows that the merchandise was bought from time to time as wanted by Mrs. Stucky in dealing in the furnishing goods referred to. On the 15th day of September, 1926, the defendants, Dangerfield and Baker, signed and delivered to the assignor of the plaintiff a notification that they thereby canceled, terminated, and withdrew from the guaranty dated March 3, 1925. As bearing upon the question of whether the guaranty was a continuing one, the court admitted the following testimony (we quote from the testimony of the defendant Baker):

"Q. By Mr. McCoy: Mr. Baker, you were shown this morning by counsel for the plaintiff the paper that is sued upon and called a guaranty, and it has been introduced here and marked 'Plaintiff's Exhibit 1.' * * *

Now, handing you the paper, that you may see what it is again, I will ask you if you understood at the time you were signing that paper, and all the time since, that your obligation under that paper was a continuing or not a continuing guaranty? A. No, sir.

"Q. Well, what did you understand? A. I understood that when she got the first bill of goods that whenever she paid any money in for those bills that it was to be credited on that first bill. Now, that was the way I believe that guaranty was, just like an open account, and as fast as she paid her credit was to be paid on the first bill bought.

"Q. Well, did you understand that that was to be continued from time to time and indefinitely? A. Not for a long time." In this connection we quote from the transcript three letters, one from the Meyer Cloak & Suit Company to E. J. Baker, a reply thereto by Dangerfield, and a letter by Baker stating that he was familiar with the Dangerfield letter:

"San Francisco, Jan. 26, 1926

"E. J. Baker, Red Bluff, Calif.—Dear Sir: In the matter of Nancy Lee Stucky, we have a guarantee executed by you to cover the amount of $1,500.00. This guarantee was made on March 3rd, 1925, and at the present time the account of Nancy Lee Stucky is considerably beyond the guarantee, namely $1,500.00, and her account has never been reduced enough to bring the balance down to $1,500.00.

"On the other hand, we feel that not only the amount beyond the $1,500.00, but the $1,500.00 as well should have been paid long ago. If you had figured interest on same, it would amount to a considerable sum. Please let us know as to the settlement of the account.

"We have made a proposition to Mrs. Stucky, in which we would be only too willing to send merchandise on consignment instead of selling her outright, and in this way, she would benefit on the sale of each and every garment, and would at the end of the accounting period, which is about ten days, settle the entire transaction, namely, return the merchandise not sold, and send us her check for the garments sold, but before this proposition can be considered, the account must be closed in some satisfactory way.

"We would like to hear from you by return mail, as to just what you think of the matter and how to adjust same satisfactorily.

"Yours truly

"Meyer Cloak and Suit Co.

"H. J. Schmidt."

"Red Bluff, Cal. Jany 28, 1926.

"Meyer Cloak & Suit Co., 130 Sutter St., S. F.—Dear Sirs: I am in receipt of your letter of the 26th instant. I fail to see why you should be uneasy in regard to Mrs. Stucky's acc.

"In the short time during which she has been in business she has paid you well over $3,000.00. I understand that she has offered you notes for the small balance over the $1,500.00 and these notes will be duly sent. The only thing is to reduce the $1,500.00 so that you may supply her with more goods, and this she should be in a position to do early next month, when her collections come in.

"You must be quite aware that it is hard to get money out of customers at the moment, but Mrs. Stucky's book debts are all good and she only requires time to come along all right. She has undoubtedly the best class business in this town.

"It would appear to me to be your own interest to help her along as a good future customer.

"I am,

"Yours truly, Wm. Dangerfield."

"Red Bluff, Calif., Jan. 29th, 1926.

"Meyer Cloak Co., San Francisco, Cal.—
Gentlemen: Your letter 26th Mr. Dangerfield advises me he has answered yours to him which is the same as to me. He has kept in touch with Mrs. Stucky's affairs and has written you about all that can be said just at present I cannot add anything as he says he has explained conditions fully.

"Yours truly, E. J. Baker."

[1] The transactions which we have heretofore referred to show conclusively that the guaranty was not intended to cover a single purchase. By its own terms it refers to and covers "all merchandise purchased," and thus section 2814 of the Civil Code directly applies. That section reads: "A guaranty relating to a future liability of a principal, under successive transactions, which either continue his liability or from time to time renew it after it has been satisfied, is called a continuing guaranty." Here, the guaranty covers successive transactions of the principal, Mrs. Stucky. Her liability was renewed from time to time as she purchased merchandise on the open account. There was no time limit in the guaranty. The only limitation therein contained was and is as to the extent of the obligation. The obligation of the principal, Mrs. Stucky, was continued and renewed from time to time as she purchased merchandise, as shown by the account set forth in the transcript.

To sustain the judgment of the trial court the respondents first cite the case of Nason & Co. v. Kennedy, 40 Cal. App. 159, 180 P. 349. The circumstances of that case are almost the antithesis of the case at bar. In the Nason Case, L. C. Kennedy, the son of Mrs. Kennedy, who signed the guaranty, was desirous of obtaining a stock of goods, and had ordered a stock of goods from Nason & Co. in excess of the sum of $750. This order Nason & Co. declined to fill in that sum, but reduced the same to $750, and informed Kennedy that if his mother would sign a guaranty in the sum of $750, the order would be filled to that value. The mother thereupon signed the guaranty involved in that action. The evidence introduced upon the trial of the case justified the conclusion of the trial court that the guaranty was only intended to cover the initial order of L. C. Kennedy for goods to the value of $750.

In the case of Lean v. Geagan, 20 Cal. App. 260, 128 P. 792, it is said: "A guaranty limiting the amount for which the guarantor will be bound, but without limitation as to time, and without circumstances to evince a contrary intention, will, in general, be construed to be a continuing guaranty and operative till revoked. The guarantor will be held liable to the extent of his guaranty, though the principal debtor may have during the existence of the guaranty contracted debts equal to or greater than the sum named therein. The limitation [mentioned] in the guaranty refers to the amount of the guarantor's liability and not to the amount of the dealing between the purchaser and the one who gives the credit."

A case identical in principle, though differing somewhat as to the facts, is that of Sinnige v. Oswald, 170 Cal. 55, 148 P. 203, 204, where the guarantor had guaranteed the payment of rent up to the amount of $1,000. The total rent involved in the lease was a very much larger sum. We find the following language in the opinion: "The defendant Furniture Company contends that its contract of guaranty did not extend beyond the sum of $1000 agreed to be paid by the principal as rent under the lease; and that, since the evidence shows payment by the lessee of more than $1000 of such rental, it follows that the guaranty is fully satisfied. This contention cannot, we think, be sustained. * * * The purpose of the guaranty was to provide the lessor with security for these successive payments of rent. The total rent aggregated over $40,000, and the words 'up to the amount of $1000' were designed to fix a limit to the guarantor's total liability."

In 28 C. J. 961, where the amount of the guaranty is limited but time is not, the law applicable is thus stated: "Where the guaranty contains a limitation as to the amount for which the guarantor will be bound, but contains no limitation as to time, and there is nothing in the circumstances surrounding the execution of the contract to evince a contrary intention, it will, in general, be construed to be a continuing guaranty and operative without limitation, except as to the amount of liability, until revoked. The limit mentioned in such a guaranty has reference to the amount of dealing between the principal and the guarantee and the guarantor will be held liable to the extent of his guaranty, notwithstanding the principal debtor may have, during the existence of the contract, contracted debts to an amount equal to, or greater than, the sum named in the guaranty, and paid them. But where it is apparent, either from the language of the guaranty itself or from such language in connection with the circumstances, that the intention was to limit the guaranty to the amount specified for the first transaction, or series of transactions, it is not a continuing one and will not extend to other transactions after such limit has once been reached." In the case at bar it is evident that there is nothing in the surrounding circumstances to show that the intention was to limit the guaranty to any particular transaction. It was simply a guaranty covering "all merchandise purchased," without any limitation as to time, and had no reference whatever to any initial stock of goods or any particular order for goods. The letters which we have set forth show that there was no intent to limit the guaranty to any particular order. The best that can be made of it is that the defendant Baker thought the guaranty was not to continue "for a long time," which justifies only the conclusion that he knew the guaranty covered successive transactions.

In 13 California Jurisprudence, p. 95, in treating on the subject of guaranty, the text is as follows: "Whether or not a guaranty is continuing must be determined from the language of the instrument, or in case of an ambiguity, by resort to parol evidence of the situation surrounding all the parties, and the guaranty interpreted in the light of such circumstances. The tendency of the decisions in this country, however, has been against construing guaranties as continuing, unless the intention of the parties is clearly manifested so that if there is any doubt as to what was intended, the presumption is against holding the guaranty to be continuing." Here, the circumstances surrounding the parties at the time of the execution of the guaranty show that Mrs. Stucky was engaged in the business of buying and selling ladies' furnishing goods, and that in the pursuit of her business it was necessary to purchase such goods from time to time as the trade warranted. There is nothing in the guaranty itself which appears to be ambiguous or uncertain. It was for all goods to be purchased, and limited only as to amount, the parties executing the guaranty having knowledge of the kind of business the person was conducting, for whom they were becoming guarantors. Further quoting from 13 California Jurisprudence, p. 96: "A guarantor may limit the amount for which he will be liable, or the time for which his guaranty will run, or may limit his liability to a single transaction between the principal debtor and the creditor, as distinguished from a continuing guaranty. However, a limitation as to the amount for which the guarantor will be liable does not militate against the construction that the guaranty is a continuing one. Such a limitation is not construed as a condition as to the extent of credit to be given, the breach of which would release the guarantor so the guarantor will still be liable even though the creditor has, at various times, contracted and paid debts equal to, or greater than the amount of the guaranty."

[2-6] In the note to Scovill Mfg. Co. v. Cassidy, reported in Ann. Cas. 1918E, 602, beginning on page 609, is collated a large number of cases dealing with the subject of guaranties. The principal case there cited is to the effect that where a written guaranty shows that the parties look to a future course of dealing or a succession of credits, the guaranty is considered as continuing; that a limitation as to the amount of the guaranty is only a limitation of the obligation of the guarantor, and does not change its continuing character. On page 611 of the volume referred to, a number of cases are cited supporting this statement of the law where, by the terms of the guaranty, it is evident that the object is to give a standing credit to the principal, to be used from time to time either indefinitely or for a certain period, it is generally deemed a continuing character. "Whether a contract of guaranty is a continuing undertaking is a question of intention which must be gathered from the instrument itself, or from the course of dealing between the parties, or from both. If it appears that a future course of dealing for a definite time, or a succession of credits to be given, was contemplated by the parties, the contract will be construed as a continuing guaranty." This exactly applies in the case at bar. The course of dealing and everything connected therewith shows that there was in contemplation a succession of credits. The guaranty gave to the principal creditor a credit to the extent of $1,500. Again, as there said: "A continuing guaranty contemplates a succession of liabilities for which, as they accrue, the guarantor becomes liable. It is prospective in its operation and is generally intended to provide security in respect to future transactions, within certain limits." This, again, is exactly the situation presented by the case at bar. On the same page, citing a number of authorities, we find the following: "Unless the words in which a guaranty is expressed fairly imply that the liability of the guarantor is to be limited, it is generally regarded as continuing until the guaranty is revoked." And further: "While the courts differ as to what words constitute a continuing guaranty, they seem to agree that if the contract is found to be a continuing guaranty the payments by the principal do not discharge the guarantor, unless they discharge the full debt to which the guaranty attaches." A number of illustrations of guaranties, held to be continuing, are found in the note referred to. Thus, a guaranty of payment for all goods which a person may buy from another is held to be continuing. This is almost identical with the language of the guaranty under consideration.

[7] In the case of Kierulff & Ravenscroft v. Koping, 271 P. 353, this court had occasion to consider the same questions presented on the present appeal. The opinion in the Koping Case takes up and sets forth, somewhat at length, the authorities bearing upon guaranties, and there cited the same cases which are referred to herein. Upon this appeal both parties rely somewhat upon the Koping Case. An examination of that case reveals the same state of facts that exist in the present case. The guaranty was not given to cover simply an initial purchase, but was given to cover successive purchases as they might be made from time to time. In the present case the guaranty was not given to cover an initial purchase. The facts which we have hereinbefore set forth show that it was intended to cover a succession of orders. In the Koping Case the guaranty read as follows: "I hereby guarantee Mr. Koping's account to the amount of $500.00. Signed, Teresa E. Koping." True, in addition to the guaranty there was a recitation of the property owned by the guarantor, and, also, in the recitation, a statement that it was given for the purpose of establishing Mr. Koping's credit. In the present case the guaranty does not contain a statement of the property owned by the guarantors, but in the language used, and under the circumstances existing when it was given, the character of the business being conducted by Mrs. Stucky lead irresistibly to the conclusion that it was intended to give credit to Mrs. Stucky to the extent of at least $1,500. Not being given to cover an initial purchase, there is nothing upon which to base a finding that the guaranty was not a continuing one. The whole record shows a continuing business, a succession of orders, a continuing liability, and therefore necessitates the conclusion that the guaranty was a continuing one, just as provided for in section 2814 of the Civil Code. We do not deem it necessary to quote at length from the opinion in the Koping Case, and will confine ourselves to the simple statement that the principles therein enunciated, showing the guaranty there involved to be a continuing one, are applicable here.

From what we have set forth, it is evident that the findings of the trial court in this case are unsupported by the evidence, and that the judgment must be reversed. It is so ordered.

PEOPLE v. BRYANT et al. (Cr. 1624.)★

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Oct. 2, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Oct. 29, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Oct. 31, 1929.

1. Indictment and Information $\S$ 159(2)—Allowance of amendment to indictment for obtaining money by false pretenses to show amounts specified related to each lot mentioned held not erroneous (Pen. Code, $\S$ 1008, as amended by St. 1927, p. 1040, and $\S$ 952, as amended by St. 1927, p. 1043).

Under Pen. Code, $\S$ 1008, as amended by St. 1927, p. 1040, allowance of amendments to indictment for obtaining money by false pretenses to show that amounts named therein related to each of twelve different lots mentioned held not erroneous, particularly in view of Pen. Code, $\S$ 952, as amended by St. 1927, p. 1043, relating to sufficiency of indictment.

2. Criminal law $\S$ 419, 420(1)—Testimony by witness employed by defendants as agent therefor, that she transmitted certain representations to purchasers, held not hearsay.

In prosecution for obtaining money by false pretenses in sale of trust deed, admission of testimony as to representations made by one employed by defendants as an agent for that purpose and paid a commission held not erroneous as against objections that statements were hearsay.

3. Criminal law $\S$ 442—Escrow directions signed for prospective purchaser by another were properly admitted in prosecution for obtaining money by false pretenses.

In prosecution for obtaining money by false pretenses in sale of trust deed, admission of certain escrow instructions signed on behalf of prospective purchaser by another was not erroneous, in view of fact that they were also signed by defendant.

4. Criminal law $\S$ 1035(3)—Complaint could not be made on appeal as to remarks by court without having called attention of judge there to during trial.

Where counsel never at any time during trial called attention of judge to remarks claimed to constitute misconduct or gave him any opportunity to correct harm, if any was done, complaint thereof could not be made on appeal.

5. Criminal law $\S$ 427(1)—Conspiracy may be proved to establish that act of one conspirator in furtherance of conspiracy was act of both.

Conspiracy may be proved to exist between two defendants for the purpose of establishing the fact that the act of one in furtherance of the conspiracy is in legal contemplation of the act of both, and for which both may be convicted.

6. Criminal law $\S$ 982, 1147—Action of trial court as to application for probation rests in its sound discretion, and will not be disturbed unless capricious or arbitrary (Pen. Code, $\S$ 1203).

Where trial court gives consideration to merits of application for probation under Pen. Code, $\S$ 1203, the discretion so exercised is not governed by fixed principles of law, but the action rests in sound discretion of court, and will not be disturbed unless it appears to be capricious or arbitrary.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; K. S. Mahon, Judge.

J. F. Bryant and E. I. Bryant were convicted for obtaining money by false pretenses, and they appeal; the appeal being dismissed as to defendant last named by reason of his death. Affirmed.

See, also, 278 P. 1025.

Charles W. Ostrom, John Henderson Pelletier, and Elliott H. Barrett, all of Los Angeles, for appellants.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and John L. Flynn, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

IRA F. THOMPSON, J. The defendants, J. F. Bryant and E. I. Bryant, were convicted on six counts of an indictment charging them and Marion R. Bryant with obtaining money by false pretenses, and acquitted on one count. The jury found the defendant Marion R. Bryant not guilty. Since this appeal from the judgments pronounced upon the verdicts and the order denying the motion for a new trial was perfected, the appellant E. I. Bryant has died, and the appeal by him has been dismissed, leaving as the only appellant J. F. Bryant.

[1] Before reciting the facts in general, we shall consider the statement of appellant that defendants should have been discharged because they were never arraigned or given an opportunity to plead. The situation which counsel contends justifies this assertion is as follows: The original indictment was returned by the grand jury September 26, 1927. On November 22, 1927, the district attorney was permitted to file amendments to the indictment. Reading of the same was waived by counsel, and the trial of the cause was continued until December 14, 1927. Two other continuances carried it over until January 16, 1928. As soon as the jury was sworn to try the cause, or, to phrase it differently, as soon as the defendants were placed in jeopardy counsel for the defense made a motion to discharge the defendants and dismiss the jury on the ground that they had never been arraigned or pleaded to the amended indictment. The amendments which had been permitted were great in number, but all of them may be illustrated by one example: The indictment, after charging the defendants with the offense of obtaining money by false pretenses, with the words or letters omitted by the amendments being indicated by a line of obliteration and the inserted words by italics, alleged that the defendants "with intent to defraud Mrs. Eliza Keogh" represented to her "that one J. E. Hopkins had purchased from them, the said J. F. Bryant, E. I. Bryant and Marion R. Bryant, twelve lots in Blocks 1 and 2, in Tract 1763 in the City of Ontario, State of California; that the said J. E. Hopkins had purchased the said lots for $4,500.00 each; that the said J. E. Hopkins had paid $2,500.00 down upon each of said lots and had given them, the said J. F. Bryant, E. I. Bryant and Marion R. Bryant, ~~a~~ trust deeds for $2,000.00 each as the balance of the purchase price of each of said lots; that ~~this a certain~~ trust deed covered by one of said lots was worth the sum of $2,000.00, but that they would discount ~~the one of~~ said trust deeds to her, the said Mrs. Eliza Keogh for the sum of $1,200.00; that there was a great demand for housing in this locality, and that a bungalow court was being built upon said lots. * * *

The question raised by counsel necessarily involves the right of the court to permit the amendments illustrated by the foregoing instance, without resubmission thereof to the grand jury. Section 1008 of the Penal Code, as amended in 1927 (St. 1927, p. 1040) reads as follows: "An indictment or information may be amended by the district attorney without leave of court, at any time before the defendant pleads. The court may order its amendment for any defect or insufficiency, at any stage of the proceedings; and the trial shall continue as if it had been originally filed as amended, unless the substantial rights of the defendant would be prejudiced thereby, in which event a reasonable continuance, not longer than the ends of justice require, may be granted. If the defect or insufficiency be one that cannot be remedied by amendment, the proceeding shall be dismissed, but the defendant shall not be discharged if the court shall direct the filing of a new information or the submission of the case to the same or a new grand jury. An indictment cannot be amended so as to change the offense charged, nor an information so as to charge an offense not shown by the evidence taken at the preliminary examination." It is obvious that the section just quoted contemplates the kind of amendments permitted in the instant cause. The cases of People v. Rippe, 32 Cal. App. 514, 163 P. 506; People v. Miller, 34 Cal. App. 641, 168 P. 574; People v. Thal, 61 Cal. App. 48, 214 P. 296; People v. Hinshaw, 194 Cal. 1, 227 P. 156; and People v. Dempster (Cal. App.) 274 P. 592—conclusively establish the discretionary right of the trial judge to permit amendments of such nature so far, at least, as concerns informations. In Ex parte Chambers, 32 Cal. App. 476, 163 P. 223, 224, the trial judge permitted the district attorney to amend an indictment charging perjury to show "what the true facts are," and the appellate court said: "The district attorney did file an amended indictment almost identically the same as the original, but adding, as we have seen, the averment that it was material to know whether the note set out in the indictment was written on January 15th or January 22d, and the further averment that it was written February 5th. But the offense was not changed. The amendment constituted, at most, an additional specification of the perjured testimony, and could not have prejudiced the substantial rights of the accused. In fact, the amendments simply made the indictment more certain in the respect indicated." So here a different offense was in no way attempted to be charged. The amendment stated at most a more flagrant misrepresentation than first alleged. Again, in People v. Donaldson, 36 Cal. App. 63, 171 P. 442, it was held proper to permit the district attorney to amend an information by setting up new and specific pretenses, ancillary to the main inducing cause. We are bound to conclude that the amendments were not improperly allowed, and that appellant could not possibly have been prejudiced thereby, particularly in view of the subsequent continuances which enabled him to thoroughly assemble any additional testimony which may possibly have been made necessary by the amendments.

Counsel relies upon such authorities as People v. Monaghan, 102 Cal. 229, 36 P. 511, to sustain the contention that the failure to re-arraign the appellant after the amendments were filed is fatal error. In the cited case no plea was interposed after the demurrer was overruled, and it was held that the cause was never at issue. This is entirely different from the problem confronting us. It is more like the situation presented to us in People v. Dempster, supra, where the soundness of the contention was denied. There the defendants had pleaded not guilty to an offense the nature of which was set forth in the indictment. Furthermore, section 952 of the Penal Code, as amended by St. 1927, p. 1043, providing that the indictment shall be " * * * sufficient if it contains in substance, a statement that the accused has committed some public offense therein specified. Such statement may be made * * * in any words sufficient to give the accused notice of the offense of [with] which he is charged, * * *" had not been enacted. Undoubtedly, had the amendments been of such a nature as to warrant counsel in seeking to interpose a motion to set aside or a demurrer, the court would have entertained their motion to withdraw the pleas for that purpose. Instead, however, they waived the reading of the amendments and stood upon the pleas already entered. Furthermore, it is not suggested in what manner the appellant was prejudiced. The trial was had in all respects as though the pleas of not guilty to an amended indictment had been interposed. In the case of People v. McCalla, 63 Cal. App. 783, 220 P. 436, no plea at all was interposed on behalf of the defendant corporation, and yet, that case being subsequent to the adoption of section 4½ of article 6 of the Constitution, the court held that the irregularity of procedure did not prejudice the substantial rights of the defendant so as to require a reversal.

Without detailing a considerable mass of testimony, it is well to state at this juncture that the evidence discloses a very crude plan for the speedy and unlawful accumulation of money. The defendants owned quite a number of lots in a comparatively new subdivision in Ontario. Conveyances were made to some person who was agreeable to act as a mere dummy, of one or more lots. The vendee in each instance then signed a note and trust deed, in most cases leaving the name of the beneficiary blank. The defendants, particularly E. I. Bryant, now deceased, advertised the trust deed or deeds for sale, agreeing with the prospective purchaser of the note to make a substantial reduction. Although the prosecution's testimony discloses that the lots were of little value, ranging between $250 and $300, the statement was freely made by E. I. Bryant that the lots had sold for $4,500 apiece; that the purchaser had paid $2,500 in cash and given the note and trust deed for the balance. In one instance it was said that the lot was worth $5,500, and that a deal was pending in escrow for the erection of a large building on it. Similar statements were made to a Mrs. Lou Johnson, whose office was on the same floor of the building as that of the defendants, for the purpose of securing her to aid them in the disposal of the notes and trust deeds.

[2] This last statement brings us to the point where we may discuss the next contention of appellant. He asserts that the court committed error when it permitted Mrs. Johnson to testify that she had transmitted to the prospective purchaser the representations made by the defendant E. I. Bryant for the purpose of inducing the sale. The objection that these statements were hearsay is not well founded—the witness, employed as an agent for the purpose, and paid a commission, acted only as the vehicle for conveying the information imparted to her by the defendant.

[3] The next objection of appellant requiring notice is to the effect that certain escrow instructions should not have been admitted because, at the request of Mrs. Keogh, Mrs. Johnson signed them for and on behalf of the former. Appellant apparently ignores the very potent fact that they were also signed by him. This assertion of error on the part of counsel is on somewhat the same footing, and apparently involves the same lack of merit as is obvious in their contention that a check for $1,500 was improperly admitted on account of a lack of foundation when subsequently in the trial it was stipulated that the defendant E. I. Bryant had received the amount which it was sought to prove he had received by the check.

The appellant assigns ten different instances of misconduct on the part of the district attorney. We have carefully examined each of them, and find that the court on many occasions advised the jury to disregard the remarks of counsel; that at no time did the deputy who was in charge of the trial make any remarks which could have affected the verdict of the jury without an admonition from the trial judge. In those instances where he failed to advise them, either counsel for the defense failed to ask that the remarks be stricken and the jury admonished, or the remarks were entirely harmless and in keeping with the line of duty of the prosecutor. We find no error in any of the assignments.

[4] Also the appellant asserts that the judge was guilty of misconduct seven different times during the course of the trial. It is a complete answer to say, assuming that the court made remarks which were not proper, that counsel never at any time called the attention of the judge to the situation or gave him any opportunity to correct the harm if any was done. Furthermore, there is not only no indication that the judge would have refused to avoid all error with its possible effect upon the jury, but there is abundant support in the record for the belief that he would most earnestly have endeavored to prevent any remark of his from influencing the jury in the slightest degree. In fact, he told them several times that they were to pay no attention to the discussions between counsel and himself. Nor is there anything to indicate that any irreparable harm was done. Under such circumstances, and by virtue of a well-known rule of law, appellant may not be heard to complain.

[5] The next point urged by appellant as a ground for reversal is that the trial court erred in the giving and refusal of certain instructions relating to conspiracy. Counsel labor under the misapprehension that a conspiracy may not be proved to exist between two defendants for the purpose of establishing the fact that the act of one in furtherance of the conspiracy is in legal contemplation, the act of both and for which both may be convicted. They have the erroneous notion that, when a conspiracy to commit a criminal act is shown to exist, the conspirators may only be convicted of the criminal conspiracy and not of the crime actually committed. Such is not the law. The books abound with cases where conspiracies have been proved and where the jury under appropriate instructions must have found, of necessity, the existence of a conspiracy in order to have returned a verdict of guilty as to one or more of the defendants. It is sufficient for our purposes to make reference to People v. Matthew, 68 Cal. App. 95, 228 P. 417; People v. Ferdinand, 194 Cal. 555, 229 P. 341, and People v. Seitz (Cal. App.) 279 P. 1070.

Counsel also urge the refusal of the court to give an instruction which would have had the effect of telling the jury that the testimony of Mrs. Johnson was improperly admitted and that the representation which she repeated or conveyed to two purchasers of trust deeds could not be "considered as against the defendants." What we have already said upon this question in discussing its admissibility disposes of the contention.

[6] Counsel also assert that the action of the court in denying probation to appellant was error, and rely upon People v. Jones, 87 Cal. App. 482, 262 P. 361, to support them. In the cited case, the District Court of Appeal declared that, where the trial judge attempts to deal with the question of whether a particular case or a particular defendant comes within the scope of the probation law (Pen. Code, § 1203), he is then undertaking to deal with a fixed principle of law which may be reviewed on appeal. But it also there stated that where, as in the instant cause, the court gives consideration to the merits of the application, the discretion thus exercised is not governed by fixed principles of law, but the action rests in the sound discretion of the court, and will not be disturbed unless it appears to be capricious or arbitrary.

There are a number of other assignments of error, some wholly without merit and many others unsupported by either argument or citation of authority. We have called the attention of the profession to the rule that we are not burdened with the responsibility of undertaking their labors in this regard so frequently of late that we now deem it appropriate to say that, unless counsel refrain from mere assignments of error without anything of a substantial character to indicate the sincerity of their belief in the error assigned, more drastic measures will of necessity be adopted to put an end to the practice.

KLING v. GUSTASON. (Civ. 5530.)★

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Sept. 30, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Oct. 30, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Nov. 25, 1929.

1. Interest $\S$ 19(1)—Allowing interest before judgment on attorney's fees found due upon quantum meruit held error.

Where finding of indebtedness owed attorney for attorney's fees was solely upon cause of action pleading quantum meruit, allowance of interest on amount of indebtedness as found prior to verdict or judgment held error.

2. Appeal and error $\S$ 1151(2)—Error in including interest before judgment on attorney's fees found due upon quantum meruit may be corrected by modification.

Error in including interest on amount of attorney's fees where finding of indebtedness was solely upon cause of action pleading quantum meruit held not one in itself necessitating reversal, but one which might be corrected by modification of judgment to that extent.

3. Trial $\S$ 395(2)—Finding regarding counterclaim that allegations in complaint, answer, and counterclaim or cross-complaint, and their answers, "inconsistent with foregoing findings are untrue," held insufficient as indefinite.

Finding, on counterclaim in action for attorney's fees, to effect that all allegations contained in complaint, answer, and counterclaim or cross-complaint, and answer to counterclaim or cross-complaint, "inconsistent with foregoing findings of fact are untrue," held insufficient as being indefinite and uncertain, since allegation of counterclaim as to respondent's alleged negligence and damage to one counterclaiming are not necessarily inconsistent with fact of rendition of legal services and indebtedness of defendant therefor.

4. Pleading $\S$ 8(17)—Counterclaim in action for attorney's fees, alleging plaintiff's negligent services caused defendant loss, held sufficient without specifying act or omission.

Counterclaim in action for attorney's fees, alleging that plaintiff wrongly counseled and advised with defendant and was careless and negligent in handling of defendant's affairs so that by reason thereof defendant was subjected to series of civil and criminal actions to his loss and damage, held sufficient pleading of negligence which may be alleged in general terms without specifying particular act or omission which rendered conduct negligent.

5. Appeal and error $\S$ 548(1)—Appellate court cannot consider sufficiency of evidence and rulings thereon, where no engrossed bill of exceptions was filed and five months elapsed between filing appeal notice and order settling bill of exceptions (Code Civ. Proc. $\S\S$ 650, 950).

District Court of Appeals cannot consider questions as to sufficiency or lack of evidence in action for attorney's fees relating to issues tendered by defendant's pleadings as well as those having to do with rulings on evidence, where record did not include proper bill of exceptions as required by Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 950, and no bill of exceptions was engrossed and presented to judge for certification within ten days, as required by section 650.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; P. E. Keeler, Judge.

Action by David G. Kling against Dr. David G. Gustason. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed in part as modified, and for purposes of retrial reversed and cause remanded.

Van Lee Hood, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

William Ellis Lady, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

BURNELL, Justice pro tem. This appeal is from a judgment for the plaintiff for attorney's fees. The complaint set up three causes of action—the first alleging the performance by plaintiff of legal services of the reasonable value of $2,145.42, of which sum $319.75 had been paid; the second an open, mutual, and current account; and the third an account stated. The answer consisted of specific denials as to each cause of action, and as a separate defense, "and by way of counterclaim" it set up alleged negligence on the part of respondent while acting as appellant's attorney, claiming that, by reason thereof, the latter had been damaged in the amount of $2,000.

The court found that the services had been rendered and were reasonably worth $1,030, and that $304.30 of that sum had been paid, leaving a balance due of $725.67. With this finding appellant has no quarrel except that he points out an obvious error in the figures; the complaint having admitted a credit of $319.75, which would make the balance due $710.25. Respondent concedes this point. A reversal is sought by appellant for reasons which we shall discuss seriatim.

[1, 2] The first contention advanced has to do with the allowance of interest on the sum found due, amounting to $163. The finding of indebtedness was solely upon the cause of action pleading a quantum meruit. There was therefore no support for the finding that "said sum of $725.67 became due and payable on the 17th day of February, 1923, and that plaintiff is entitled to have and recover interest on said sum from said date." "In an action to recover the reasonable value of services performed by a plaintiff, the amount, character, and value of which can only be established by evidence in court, * * * the plaintiff is not entitled to interest prior to verdict or judgment." Swinnerton v. Argonaut Land, etc., Co., 112 Cal. 375, 44 P. 719, 720; Cox v. McLaughlin, 76 Cal. 60, 18 P. 100, 9 Am. St. Rep. 164; Erickson v. Stockton & Tuolumne County R. Co., 148 Cal. 206, 82 P. 961; Edwards v. Arp, 173 Cal. 472, 160 P. 551. While we are in accord with appellant's contention that interest should not have been allowed, the error in including it is not one in itself necessitating a reversal, but is one which may be corrected by a modification of the judgment to that extent. Fox v. Hale & Norcross Silver Min. Co., 122 Cal. 219, 54 P. 731; Supreme Lodge v. Los Angeles Lodge, 177 Cal. 132, 169 P. 1040, and Edwards v. Arp, supra.

We glean from the ill-prepared record before us that the court below attempted to cure this error as well as that in the computation of the credit due to appellant, since we find in "Plaintiff's Bill of Exceptions" (but not elsewhere in the transcript) reference to an order denying a motion for new trial "upon plaintiff's failing to consent to a reduction of judgment as follows: $163.00 interest as of date of entry of judgment, $15.45 error in computation of credits," and providing that, "unless such consent is filed in five days after notice of this order, motion for new trial is granted." But, as to whether or not such consent was filed or as to the date of the order, the record before us is silent.

[3] Appellant's second point is that the court failed to find on the issues presented by the counterclaim (which appellant also refers to as a cross-complaint) and the answer thereto. The only finding as to the counterclaim is as follows: "The court further finds that all the allegations contained in the complaint of the plaintiff, the answer and counterclaim, or cross-complaint of the defendant, and the answer of the plaintiff to counterclaim, or cross-complaint of defendant, inconsistent with the foregoing findings of fact are untrue." This is not sufficient as a finding. The allegations of the counterclaim as to respondent's alleged negligence and the damage to appellant caused thereby are not necessarily inconsistent with the fact of rendition of legal services by respondent and the indebtedness of appellant therefor. Findings of fact should be definite and certain. De Cou v. Howell, 190 Cal. 741, 214 P. 444; Chambers v. Gibson, 178 Cal. 416, 173 P. 752. A finding similar to that above quoted was thus criticized in Goodnow v. Griswold, 68 Cal. 599, 9 P. 837: "The court below found: 'The court finds that the several allegations of said complaint not in conflict with the foregoing findings are true.' We are not informed which of the other findings were, in the opinion of the court below, in conflict with the findings referred to as the 'foregoing findings.' In Harlan v. Ely, 55 Cal. 340, a finding, 'all and singular the allegations of the amended answer are untrue, except so far as the same accord with the foregoing facts,' was held insufficient. This court there said: 'The court below should have assumed the labor of comparing the allegations of the answer with the facts by it found. As it is, we are not informed which of the allegations of the answer were, in the opinion of the court below, true; which untrue. We cannot assume the function of determining for the first time the truth or falsity of any of them, either by reference to the testimony or to the facts actually found.' The finding here is subject to a like objection, and on the authority of Harlan v. Ely the judgment and order should be reversed." Mr. Justice Thornton, in a concurring opinion in the same case said: "The court finds that several matters are not true, and then proceeds to find that the several allegations of said complaint not in conflict with the foregoing findings are true. This is not in accordance with the statute (Code Civ. Proc. § 632) which requires the court below to find facts. Such duty is not imposed on this court. The court below must find facts and place them in its decision, so that this court may see, when an appeal is taken, what facts the lower court has found, and whether the correct judgment has been pronounced on them. This court is not called on to determine what allegations of a complaint are not in conflict with certain matters found not to be true." See, also, Perkins v. West Coast Lumber Co., 5 Cal. Unrep. 674, 40 P. 982.

Appellant earnestly asserts that "sufficient evidence was produced by the defendant to establish a prima facie claim for damages on account of the defendant's counterclaim or cross-complaint, which said damages were not found by the court," and that, if there had been a finding on the issues presented by the counterclaim, the amount of respondent's recovery would inevitably have been diminished, if not entirely eliminated. He also complains of numerous rulings of the trial court on questions of the admission or exclusion of evidence.

Respondent with equal fervor contends that the counterclaim fails to state facts sufficient to constitute a counterclaim or cause of action, that there was no evidence which would have justified or supported a finding in appellant's favor, and hence that this is a proper case for the application of the rule that failure to find upon an issue raised by answer or cross-complaint is not reversible error where, if the finding had been made, it would necessarily have been adverse to the appellant. Reveal v. Stell, 56 Cal. App. 463, 205 P. 875; Cross v. Thiele, 51 Cal. App. 780, 197 P. 974; Llano Inv. Co. v. Minton, 190 Cal. 752, 214 P. 855.

[4] We think the counterclaim, while somewhat carelessly drafted, contained sufficient facts to raise an issue as to respondent's alleged negligence and appellant's claim of loss therefrom. Stripped of its unessentials, it alleges that "as such attorney the plaintiff counseled and advised with defendant and represented defendant in certain collection cases"; that "the advice and counsel given by plaintiff was wrongful * * * and that the plaintiff was careless and negligent in the handling of defendant's affairs"; and that by reason of this defendant was subjected to a series of criminal and civil actions, to his loss and damage in the sum of $2,000. This was a sufficient pleading of negligence, which may be alleged in general terms without specifying the particular act or omission which rendered the conduct negligent. Stein v. United Railroads, 159 Cal. 368, 113 P. 663; Mathes v. Aggeler & Musser Seed Co., 179 Cal. 697, 178 P. 713.

[5] The questions as to the sufficiency, or lack, of evidence relating to the issues tendered by appellant's pleadings, as well as those having to do with the trial court's rulings on evidence, we are precluded from considering on this appeal, by reason of the condition of the record before us. The appeal is taken under the original method, which requires the preparation and inclusion in the record of a bill of exceptions when it is sought to review the evidence and the rulings thereon. Section 950, Code Civ. Proc. The requirements as to the contents of such a bill, the time within which it must be served on the adverse party, the time and method of proposing amendments thereto and of presentation thereof to the court for settlement are set forth in section 650 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which further provides that, after settlement of the bill of exceptions by the trial judge, "the bill must thereupon be engrossed and presented to the judge to be certified, by the party presenting it, within ten days." There are few, if any, of the requirements of this section which appear to have been complied with in this case.

The transcript on appeal, in addition to the judgment roll which shows that the judgment appealed from was entered May 10, 1926, and that the notice of appeal was filed May 17, 1926 (there is no indication of service thereof on the respondent), contains two documents styled, respectively, "Bill of Exceptions" and "Plaintiff's Amendments to Defendant's Bill of Exceptions." These are followed in the transcript by an order reading as follows: "It is hereby ordered that the foregoing Bill of Exceptions and Amendments thereto be, and the same is hereby settled and approved and I hereby certify that the same constitutes the Bill of Exceptions on appeal herein of the defendants therein named. Dated: October 28th, 1926. P. E. Keeler, Judge of the Superior Court." The "Bill of Exceptions" is signed by counsel for appellant, but is accompanied by no proof, by affidavit of service, admission of receipt of copy, or otherwise, that it or a copy thereof was ever served on the adverse party as required by the Code section last referred to. The document styled "Plaintiff's Amendments," etc., is equally devoid of any indication of service on defendant. The transcript following the court's order above set forth contains the following: "Endorsed: Filed Oct. 28, 1926. L. E. Lampton, County Clerk; by J. D. John, deputy." There is nothing specific to indicate what this refers to, but we may be justified in assuming, from the order immediately preceding it and from the clerk's certificate, that it refers to both of the documents we are discussing.

Apart from the unexplained lapse of more than five months' time between the filing of the notice of appeal and the order settling the "Bill of Exceptions and Amendments Thereto," no engrossed bill of exceptions has ever been filed. The situation here is almost identical with that in Fritsch v. Stampfli, 117 Cal. 441, 49 P. 559, where the appellant relied upon alleged insufficiency of the evidence to support the findings. We quote from the opinion in that case: "There appears in the transcript on appeal a paper entitled 'Bill of Exceptions,' purporting to set forth evidence received at the trial, concluding with the statement that "The foregoing was substantially all the evidence touching the said tract of land." Following this is another document, headed 'Defendants' amendments to plaintiff's bill of exceptions.' The amendments cover several pages of printed matter, and are proposed to be inserted at sundry places, designated by reference to numbers of lines and pages in the original draft of the plaintiff's bill, as we surmise, but there is nothing in the transcript here to indicate the points of insertion. Next is a stipulation of counsel that the amendments suggested were correct, and 'that the plaintiff's bill of exceptions herein, with the defendants' amendments thereto attached, be settled,' etc. Then appears an order, signed by the judge, settling and allowing the 'within bill of exceptions.' There was no engrossment, no incorporation of the proposed bill and amendments in one paper, and the statement at the close of plaintiff's proposed bill, that the matter preceding it 'was substantially all the evidence,' was permitted to stand. For the reason that the so-called bill of exceptions is unintelligible, and is not presented in a manner to be considered in this court, the judgment must be affirmed. Marlow v. Marsh, 9 Cal. 259; Skillman v. Riley, 10 Cal. 300; Baldwin v. Ferre, 23 Cal. 461; Kimball v. Semple, 31 Cal. 657."

In Vierra v. Fontes, 135 Cal. 126, 66 P. 241, 242, the question of the necessity for an engrossment of the proposed bill of exceptions and of the allowed amendments thereto was again before the Supreme Court. The transcript in that case contained a "certificate" signed by the trial judge attached to the draft of a bill of exceptions presented by the appellant, wherein it was certified that "the foregoing bill of exceptions, with the amendments thereto offered by the defendant, which are allowed, is true and correct, and is hereby allowed and settled."

It also contained what appeared to be defendant's proposed amendments. This was held not to comply with the requirement that, after having been settled, "the bill must thereupon be engrossed and presented to the judge to be certified, by the party presenting it, within ten days." Section 650, Code Civ. Proc. Said the court: "The bill of exceptions, as completed by the amendments, was not engrossed, and, of course, there was no engrossed bill certified by the judge; which has been held necessary by numerous decisions of this court. Fritsch v. Stampfli, 117 Cal. 441, 49 P. 559, and cases there cited. For these reasons there is no bill of exceptions before us." Referring to the judge's certificate in that case, the court pointed out that "what the amendments allowed were does not appear in anything that precedes the certificate." So here there is nothing in the certificate or elsewhere in the transcript to indicate which, if any, of the defendant's amendments were allowed and should have been incorporated in an engrossed bill of exceptions, certified by the trial judge to be correct.

Because of the trial court's failure to find upon the issues tendered by the counterclaim and the answer thereto, the cause must be remanded. There is no necessity, however, for a retrial of the issues as to the rendition of legal services by plaintiff as set forth in the complaint and as to the reasonable value thereof. As to these matters the judgment is modified by deducting from the amount thereof the sum of $163, interest erroneously allowed, and the further sum of $15.45, the difference between the credit admittedly due to appellant and the figures erroneously incorporated in the findings, thus reducing the amount awarded respondent to $710.25. As so modified, that portion of the judgment is affirmed, subject, however, to whatever, if any, diminution of the amount thereof the court, on a retrial of the issues raised by the counterclaim and the answer thereto, may find and determine the defendant to be entitled to. For the purpose of a retrial as to such issues, the judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded.

DUGAN v. FORSTER et al. (Civ. 6901.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Oct. 8, 1929.

1. Appeal and error $\S$ 653(1)—In absence of contrary statute, appellate court has power to cause correction of record before it any time during pendency of appeal.

In absence of statute to contrary, appellate court has power to direct and cause correction of record before it at any time during pendency of appeal, irrespective of Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 473, relating, among other things, to amendment of pleadings.

2. Appeal and error $\S$ 653(1)—Record will, when necessary, be corrected by appellate court, unless adverse party's right is injuriously affected thereby.

Technical objections are not favored, and record may, and will when necessary, be corrected by appellate court, unless right of adverse party is injuriously affected thereby.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; John J. Van Nostrand, Judge.

Action by James O. Dugan against William J. W. Forster and another. From the judgment, plaintiff appeals. On motion to amend record on appeal. Granted.

Charles L. James and C. K. Bonestell, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

Walter E. Dorn and L. W. Lovey, both of San Francisco, for respondents.

TYLER, P. J. Application to amend the record on file herein. It appears from the affidavit in support of the motion that in the preparation of the bill of exceptions to be used on appeal certain evidence was inadvertently omitted, which evidence is necessary to present to this court the alleged error of the trial court in making its findings that plaintiff was entitled to recover the amount of judgment rendered in his favor. It is not denied that the evidence sought to be included in the bill of exceptions was received by the trial court, but it is insisted that petitioner had ample time and opportunity to have included the same in the record, and, not having done so, he is concluded by the provisions of section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

[1] An appellate court, in the absence of statutory mandate or authoritative expression to the contrary (and in this state there is none), has, in the exercise of its jurisdiction power to direct and cause the correction of a record before it at any time during the pendency of the appeal, and this without reference to the provisions of section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

[2] It has repeatedly been held that technical objections are not favored, and that a record may and will, when necessary, be corrected, unless a right of the adverse party is injuriously effected thereby. Appellate courts look with favor upon an amendment, the effect of which is to enable them to review the decision of the lower court, in view of all the facts which that court had before it when it made its decision. COOK et al. v. CAPPELLINO et al.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Oct. 1, 1929.

1. Mechanics' liens ☞189—Mechanic's lien could not be maintained against property of one owner embracing improvements on properties of others.

Where claimants furnished materials and services in construction of buildings on different lots at instance of prospective purchaser of lots, such claimants could not maintain lien against property of one of owners for total amount embracing improvements on properties of others.

2. Mechanics' liens ☞183—Mechanic's lien for total amount of materials and services in construction of buildings on different lots could not be charged against all without proportionate segregation.

Where claimants furnished materials and services in construction of buildings on different lots at instance of prospective purchaser, claimants could not charge one lien for total amount against all lots owned by different persons without a proportionate segregation.

3. Mechanics' liens ☞291(5)—In action against owners of different lots, no mechanics' liens could be declared against particular landowners where no specific liens were pleaded.

Where claimants furnished materials and services in construction of buildings on different lots at instance of prospective purchaser thereof, and in suit against such prospective purchaser and the lot owners to establish liens no specific lien was pleaded or sought to be established against any particular landowner, no judgment could be rendered for declaration of liens which were not pleaded.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Gesner Williams, Judge pro tem.

Action to foreclose mechanics' liens by B. L. Cook, doing business as the Cook Lumber Company, and R. M. Gregg, doing business as the R. M. Gregg Lumber Company, and others, against Joe Cappellino and others. From the judgment, plaintiffs named appeal. Affirmed.

Garner White, of Inglewood, for appellants.
Andreani & Haines, John L. Bisher, Jr., and Dana R. Weller, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

CRAIG, J. Various parties plaintiff in this proceeding, claiming to have furnished services and materials at the instance of the Economy Home Builders, a corporation, for the construction of buildings upon real property alleged to have been owned by several persons who had contemplated selling the realty to the corporation, filed mechanics' liens thereon, and thereafter instituted this action against the owners and the corporation, to establish a lien upon all of the property. In their complaint it was alleged that Forkner had performed services and furnished materials under employment of the Economy Home Builders as agent of the owners, of the value of $3,479.05, of which $1,854.75 had been paid, leaving a balance due in the sum of $1,624.30; that Gregg furnished materials to the corporation as agent of the owners, of the value of $708.02; and that Cook had furnished materials of the value of $2,088.56. Twelve parcels, consisting of some twenty lots, described in detail, were alleged to have been required for the convenient use and occupation of the structures for which the plaintiff Forkner furnished services and materials; three lots, separately described, were alleged to have been required for the use and occupation of buildings for which Gregg furnished materials, and like allegations applying to thirteen lots, embraced in ten separate descriptions, were pleaded on behalf of the plaintiff Cook. The three plaintiffs prayed judgment for said sums, respectively, of $1,624.30, $708.02, and $2,088.56, with costs, "that the sums be adjudged a lien upon the real property and buildings thereon," and that if there should be a deficiency, "that plaintiff have judgment for such deficiency against the defendant Economy Home Builders, a corporation."

At the trial the respective claimants proceeded to offer evidence in proof of the fact that the plaintiff Cook delivered materials upon ten different jobs, for which ten distinct liens were filed, and that the other plaintiffs had likewise furnished materials for the various lots described, upon each of which they had filed a separate lien. It appearing that the amount claimed under each lien had not been separately pleaded, but that they had all been combined by each of the plaintiffs, it was objected by the defendants that there was a variance between the pleadings and the proof. The trial court nevertheless heard all of the evidence, but found that said corporation acted in its own behalf and not as agent for the owners, that no action had been instituted within the time required to establish the liens, and rendered judgment in favor of Cook and Gregg, against the corporation only, denying relief as against the owners. The two last-named plaintiffs appealed, contending that it all constituted but one transaction.

[1-3] We think the appellants' theory is untenable, and that the assertion of one inclusive demand as to each plaintiff against the corporation for judgment, and that "the sums be adjudged a lien upon the real property," furnishes a complete answer to their argument. It is admitted that there may have been but one transaction between the plaintiffs and the corporation, but about thirty-five other defendants were named in the complaint as owning or having an interest in the properties upon which apparently more than twenty liens had been filed. It cannot for a moment be successfully contended that a lien for $708.02 in favor of Gregg, or a lien for $2,088.56 in favor of Cook, could under the circumstances be maintained against the property of one of the owners, embracing as it must improvements upon the properties of all, nor could one lien for either total amount be charged against all, as prayed, without a proportionate segregation. It is apparent that no specific lien was pleaded or sought to be established as against any particular landowner, and that no judgment could have been rendered for the declaration of liens which were not pleaded.

The judgment is affirmed.

SMITH v. UNITED STATES NAT. LIFE & CASUALTY CO. (Civ. 5556.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Oct. 1, 1929.

Insurance Ⓒ467—Where insured worked five weeks between date of accident and date of death, beneficiary could not recover for death under accident policy.

Where insured was disabled for 17 days by dog's bite but later returned to work and worked for period of 5 weeks before death resulted from hydrophobia induced by the dog's bite, beneficiary could not recover for his death under accident policy providing for payment of sum specified for death resulting from injuries immediately, wholly, and continuously from date of accident disabling insured from performing every duty pertaining to his occupation.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; J. A. Smith, Judge.

Action by Betty Smith against the United States National Life & Casualty Company upon a policy of accident insurance. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed.

Kemp, Partridge & Kemp, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Willis O. Tyler, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

HAHN, Justice pro tem. The action which gives rise to this appeal is one wherein the plaintiff and respondent brought suit against the defendant and appellant upon an accident policy, issued by defendant corporation to one Robert Smith, deceased husband of the plaintiff. The policy in question provided for monthly payments to the insured in the event of partial or total disability caused by an accident, and the payment of $600 to the wife of the insured in the event of death resulting from an accident. The action was filed by the plaintiff as surviving widow of the insured, named as beneficiary in the policy, and is based upon the claim that the insured met his death as the result of a dog bite. Judgment was rendered for the plaintiff for the sum of $600, from which judgment defendant has appealed.

It appears from the evidence that Robert Smith, the deceased, was bitten by his own dog on October 6, 1924. Surgical treatment was administered, but Smith, who was a cement worker, was incapacitated for work because of a badly lacerated thumb. On the day following the injury, the deceased forwarded a written report to the insurance company, as required by his policy. In this report, the deceased gave it as his opinion, based upon the advice of his doctor, that the period of his disability would be about 12 days. Dr. E. B. Lewis, his physician, in his report to the insurance company estimated the period of Smith's disability as 12 days. On or about October 12th, one J. C. Lane, an agent for the defendant insurance company, called to see Smith with a view to discussing the matter of payment for his injury. There were present at this conversation, besides deceased and Lane, Mrs. Smith and her daughter. Smith stated that he felt quite sure that he would soon be able to go back to work and would be satisfied to accept compensation for 12 days at the rate of $2 per day for his disability. Thereupon Lane gave Smith a check for $24, and required that Smith sign a receipt, which in its wording acknowledged satisfaction in full for any claim arising out of the injury. The widow and daughter testified that the receipt was not read to or by Smith at the time it was signed. Lane testified, however, that he explained the conditions of the receipt to Smith.

On October 21, Smith returned to his regular employment and continued at his work daily until the 26th day of November, when he became ill and was taken to a hospital, where his case was diagnosed as hydrophobia. On November 29th he passed away. According to the testimony of his attending physician, death was the result of hydrophobia induced by the dog bite.

A few days after Smith's death, plaintiff and respondent called at the office of the insurance company for the purpose of filing a claim for the $600 which she claimed as beneficiary under the policy. Lane, the agent for the company, told her he could do nothing for her, for the reason that her husband had signed a receipt releasing the company from any other or future claim arising out of the dog bite. No written claim or proof of loss was filed. Fifty-four days after the death of the insured, this action was filed.

The appellant urges four grounds for reversal of the judgment: First, that the evidence clearly shows that the death of the insured was not covered by the policy. Second, that the action was instituted prematurely. Third, that the insured prior to his death released the defendant from liability for the injury. Fourth, that the court failed to make a finding on a material issue, to wit, whether or not deceased was continuously disabled from the time of the injury.

Inasmuch as we have concluded that the judgment must be reversed for the reasons urged by appellant in his first ground, we will confine our discussion to the points therein raised, which in effect cover the fourth assignment of error.

The evidence without conflict shows that the insured returned to his work two weeks after he suffered the injury and continuously followed his employment for a period of about five weeks thereafter. Plaintiff was entitled to recover, if at all, under the paragraph in the policy designated under the letter "C," and which, so far as is important for our consideration, reads as follows:

"If the injuries described in paragraph A shall, independently of all other causes, immediately, wholly and continuously from the date of accident disable and prevent the insured from performing every duty pertaining to his business or occupation and shall, during the period of such disability and within ninety days from date of accident, result in any one of the following specific total losses * * * the company will pay, in lieu of all other indemnity except that arising under paragraph N, * * * Life * * * Six Hundred and no/100 Dollars (the principal sum of this policy). * * *

The language in the section just quoted clearly states that the payment for loss of life of the insured would be made only in the event that death resulted from the injury during a total disability, such disability following "immediately, wholly and continuously from the date of the accident." The evidence here shows without dispute that for five weeks between the date of the accident and his death the insured daily followed his regular occupation as a cement worker. Hence, the total disability required by the policy for the period between the injury and death was not continuous.

Respondent contends that because the effects of the hydrophobia were not made manifest until November 26, from which date the insured was totally disabled until his death, the conditions of the policy were substantially met. We cannot agree with this view. If Smith, urged on by a spirit of industry, had returned to his work for a few hours or even a day or two, but found the pain suffered or his incapacity to be such as to prevent his continuing at his employment, it might well be urged that the abortive attempt to resume his work did not preclude him from claiming a "continued total disability." Smith's total period of inability to work between the accident and his death was about seventeen days, while the period he did work and so far as the record shows, without any inconvenience or pain, was a period of five weeks. No reasonable interpretation of the language referred to can bring Smith's death within the terms of the policy.

In the case of Laventhal v. Fidelity & Casualty Co. of New York, 9 Cal. App. 275, 98 P. 1075, the plaintiff, who was the insured, was injured in the stomach by coming in contact with a suitcase, as he was about to alight from a train. He continued with his regular business for a period of twenty-two days, when he was required to take to his bed by reason of his suffering, and for twenty-seven weeks thereafter was totally disabled. The policy under which he sought to recover compensation provided that the insured would be entitled to compensation where the injury "immediately and wholly disabled and prevented him from performing every duty pertaining to his occupation." This court held that in view of the fact that for twenty-two days after the injury the plaintiff was able to continue his employment, he was not entitled under his policy to recover for the disability he suffered.

In the case of Vess v. United Benev. Soc. of America, 120 Ga. 411, 47 S. E. 942, the court in considering a policy having similar language to that contained in the policy of Laventhal v. Fidelity & Casualty Co. of New York, supra, held that where the insured had been injured and continued at his employment for twenty-four days after the injury, although during that period he suffered from the injury and could not use his hands to any extent, he was not entitled to recover under the policy.

In the case of Masonic Protective Association v. Farrar, 73 Ind. App. 19, 126 N. E. 435, as also Preferred Masonic Mutual Accident Association v. Jones, 60 Ill. App. 106, and Letherer v. U. S. Health and Accident Ins. Company, 145 Mich. 310, 108 N. W. 491, similar provisions under substantially the same conditions have been interpreted to deny to the insured the right of recovery.

The cases cited by respondent are not in conflict with this interpretation of the terms of the policy, nor with the cases wherein a similar interpretation has been given to language of like import.

In view of our conclusion that upon the merits of the case, respondent is not entitled to recover under the policy, and the further fact that the inherent weakness in the evidence resting upon respondent's admission that the insured was not continuously disabled from the time of the injury, will preclude another trial of the case, we deem it unnecessary to discuss the other points raised by appellant.

The judgment is reversed.

LIGHT & POWER CORPORATION.
(Civ. 3838.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Oct. 8, 1929.

1. Appeal and error ⇨1011(1)—Conflict in evidence must be resolved in favor of judgment.

In action on contract for sale and delivery of electric energy, conflict in evidence must on appeal be resolved in favor of judgment.

2. Electricity ⇨11—Under contract to buy entire output of 25,000 kilowatt hydroelectric plant, buyer must accept maximum production of plant commonly known to trade as 25,000 kilowatt plant; "capacity"; "power"; "about."

Where contract for sale and delivery of electric energy called for entire output of "hydroelectric generating plant of about 25,000 kilowatt capacity," buyer held required to accept and pay for entire actual output of plant commonly known in trade as 25,000 kilowatt plant as long as output was within maximum figure of such plant, which is 31,250 kilowatts, and slight excess over such maximum may be included within definition of word "about" as used in contract, since ordinary meaning of "capacity," which is maximum ability, is too narrow a definition for purpose of construing such contract, and "power" means rate at which work of transforming or producing energy is performed.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First, Second, and Third Series, About; Capacity.]

3. Evidence ⇨518—Construction of contract for sale of electric energy presented proper subject for expert testimony.

While it is ordinarily province of court to construe language of contract, there were so many scientific factors involved in determining kilowatt capacity of electric generating plant in construing contract for sale and delivery of electric energy that it became proper subject for expert testimony.

4. Electricity ⇨11—Whether term "capacity" was used in technical sense in contract for sale of electrical energy held for jury.

In action on contract for sale and delivery of electric energy, question whether term "capacity" was used in contract in its ordinary sense, or in technical trade sense, held for jury.

5. Attorney and client ⇨86—Unintentional, impulsive statement of counsel against interest, made in turmoil of trial, will not bind client.

An impulsive statement of counsel against interest, made in turmoil of trial and apparently not intended, will not bind client.

6. Electricity ⇨11—Buyer contracting for entire output of 25,000 kilowatt hydroelectric plant was not harmed if larger plant was used, provided quantity furnished was less than maximum contracted for.

In action on contract for sale and delivery of electric energy calling for entire output of 25,000 kilowatt hydroelectric generating plant, buyer held not harmed if electricity was generated in 39,000 kilowatt plant instead of 25,000 kilowatt plant, so long as quantity furnished was less than maximum amount contracted for.

7. Electricity ⇨11—In action on contract for sale of entire output of 25,000 kilowatt hydroelectric plant, instruction that defendant must accept entire output of plaintiff's plant, if of capacity of about 25,000 kilowatts, held proper.

In action on contract for sale and delivery of electric energy calling for entire output of hydroelectric generating plant of about 25,000 kilowatt capacity, instruction that jury must determine whether power house constructed by plaintiff was of capacity of about 25,000 kilowatts and, if so, that defendant was bound to accept entire output, held proper.

8. Electricity ⇨11—Instruction that word "about" in contract to buy output of hydroelectric plant of "about 25,000 kilowatt capacity" permitted only slight departure from such amount held properly refused.

In action on contract for sale and delivery of electric energy calling for entire output of hydroelectric generating plant of about 25,000 kilowatt capacity, instruction that word "about" must not be understood to permit of more than small or slight departure from amount named in contract of 25,000 kilowatts held properly refused as leaving out of consideration maximum possible production of 25,000 kilowatt plant.

9. Trial ⇨232(5)—In action on contract for sale of electric energy, instruction correctly defining word "capacity" held properly refused, where misleading unless application was explained.

In action on contract for sale and delivery of electric energy calling for entire output of hydroelectric generating plant of about 25,000 kilowatt capacity, instruction giving correct definition of word "capacity" held properly refused, where it would be misleading, in view of state of record, unless application were explained.

Appeal from Superior Court, Madera County; Stanley Murray, Judge.

Action by the Merced Irrigation District against the San Joaquin Light & Power Corporation. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Murray Bourne and F. H. Pearson, both of Fresno (Thelen & Marrin, of San Francisco, of counsel), for appellant.

Downey, Brand, Seymour & Dunn, of Sacramento, and George W. Mordecai, of Madera, for respondent.

ROLFE L. THOMPSON, J. This is an appeal from a judgment upon a contract for the sale and delivery of electric energy.

The respondent is an irrigation district organized and operating under the California Irrigation Act. The appellant is a public utility corporation organized for the purpose of supplying consumers with electric power and light. In February, 1924, the respective parties executed a written contract by the terms of which the appellant agreed to purchase from respondent the entire output of a 25,000 kilowatt hydroelectric generating plant for a term of 20 years at $4\frac{1}{2}$ mills per kilowatt. The contract provided in part: "Irrigation District expects and intends hereafter to construct, operate and maintain a storage reservoir * * * and a hydro-electric generating plant of about 25,000 kilowatts capacity at or near Exchequer on the Merced River. * * * The parties hereto agree as follows: 1. Irrigation District undertakes and agrees [to] * * * sell to Power Company the entire electric output thereof, * * * and Power Company upon its part agrees * * * to receive, accept and pay for such electric output. 2. (a) All electric energy to be delivered and received pursuant to this agreement shall be three phase, sixty cycle, alternating current. * * * Power Company agrees that it will receive said electric energy to the total output possible from the water passing through said plant, whether from storage or natural flow, * * * but reserves the right to vary the power factor within the ampere and excitation capacity of the electric generators; but at no time shall Power Company require the operation of the plant at a power factor which will act to reduce the electric energy that could be generated by the available water. * * *

[1] In due time the plant was constructed by building a concrete dam across the Merced river which formed a reservoir impounding the water, from which it flowed in two units through gates, penstocks, and turbine-wheels to the generators. This water power had a variable head with a maximum depth of 300 feet, but the average head was 240 feet. The plant was constructed with two complete units. The manufacturer's rating of each of these units as indicated by the label plates attached to each of the generators was "15,625 K. V. A. (kilovolt amperes) at 8-10 power factor." Expert witnesses testified this meant each of these generators operated at 80 per cent. power factor would produce 12,500 kilowatts of electric energy per hour, with a capacity of 15,625 kilowatts when operated at unity which is full power factor. This gives the combined units a possible capacity of 31,250 kilowatts. Testimony was adduced indicating that these generators were designated by the manufacturer and known to the trade to be 12,500 kilowatt machines, and were intended to be operated at 80 per cent. power factor, allowing the remaining possible 20 per cent. of its maximum capacity as a safety margin to prevent overloading and consequent danger of burning out the coils and damaging the machinery. It is a mere matter of mathematical calculation to determine that the combined output of two electric units designated as 12,500 kilowatt generators operated at only 80 per cent. of their power factor would produce 31,250 kilowatts when operated at full capacity. Mr. Barre testified that "the kilowatt capacity of a plant is the load which that plant can deliver as a maximum under all the conditions of operation existing at the site." The statements to the effect that these two units combined were designated by the manufacturer and known by the trade to constitute a 25,000 kilowatt plant operated at 8-10 power factor, with a possible capacity of 31,250 kilowatts, was contradicted by appellant's expert witnesses. This conflict, however, must be resolved in favor of the judgment.

The evidence based upon the daily log records of the plant indicates that the average output which was actually generated by the plant during a period of 329 days from July 1, 1927, to July 1, 1928, was 23,844 kilowatts, except that for a brief period of about six days, when the head of the water supply was at a maximum height of 300 feet and conditions were most favorable, the plant developed 32,400 kilowatts. At no other time did the plant exceed its maximum capacity of 31,250 kilowatts.

It was stipulated that pursuant to the foregoing contract the respondent generated in 1927 and transferred to the appellant's power lines a total quantity of electric energy aggregating 126,588,850 kilowatt hours; that between April 1st and August 31, 1927, respondent produced 86,655,470 kilowatt hours, which last-mentioned figures contained an output of 13,630,180 kilowatts in excess of 25,000 kilowatt hours, and which entire output was fully paid for according to the terms of the contract except said amount of 13,630,180 kilowatts, which at $4\frac{1}{2}$ mills per kilowatt was valued at \$61,396.23. This sum was not paid. For this amount the jury rendered a verdict in favor of respondent, and a judgment was entered accordingly.

The vital questions to be determined in the present case are: What is the maximum capacity of a hydroelectric generating plant commonly termed a 25,000 kilowatt plant? Was the reference to a plant of this character a limitation of agreement to purchase only 25,000 kilowatts, or was it merely descriptive of the general character of a plant, the entire output of which was bargained for?

The appellant contends that it contracted to purchase only a maximum of 25,000 kilowatt hours of electric energy, instead of the entire output of the plant, and that it has fully paid respondent to the extent of its obligation. Its position is concisely stated as follows: "The Power Company's obligation is limited to its agreement to take and pay for the output of said plant, and said plant is referred to as a plant to be constructed by the Irrigation District and to be a plant of about 25,000 kilowatts capacity." It must be conceded that the parties contracted with relation to the output of a hydroelectric plant of "about 25,000 kilowatts capacity," but that the appellant clearly agreed to purchase "the total output from the water passing through said (25,000 kilowatt) plant," and that at no time would the appellant "require the operation of the plant at a power factor which will act to reduce the electric energy that could be generated by the available water."

The chief controversy centers around the application of the words "about" and "capacity" as they are employed in the contract.

[2] The energy which may be produced by a hydroelectric plant depends upon the capacity of the plant and the power factor which is derived from the water supply. The term "power" means the rate at which the work of transforming or producing the energy is performed. The amount of work which is performed in a given period of time is therefore the unit of power. In mechanics the rule adopted by James Watt is still accepted as the basis upon which to measure power. He estimated that the "horsepower unit" was equivalent to 33,000 foot pounds of work per minute. This is still the rule in steam or hydraulic engineering. The term "watt" as it is used in electrical engineering is the rate at which the work is performed in an alternating circuit with a current of one ampere and an electromotive force of one volt. Seven hundred and forty-six watts are equivalent to one horsepower. The power factor of such a plant as the one which is involved in this case depends upon the capacity of the generating apparatus and the head and velocity of the water supply which furnishes it power. Assuming that a hydroelectric plant of 25,000 kilowatts supplied with a water power at a head of 240 feet, operated at 80 per cent. power factor, would produce 31,250 kilowatts when operated at unity, or 100 per cent. power factor, the maximum output clearly would be 31,250 kilowatts, in spite of the fact that it was commonly termed and known to the trade as a 25,000 kilowatt plant. The appellant, which is a public utility corporation engaged in supplying its customers with electric power and light, and which knew of respondent's plans for the construction of the reservoir with a maximum head of 300 feet, must be presumed to have known and contracted with relation to a variable and not a static head, and that the output of such a plant would necessarily fluctuate, in a measure which would be dependent upon the season, the quantity of water in the storage reservoir, and surrounding conditions. It must also have been deemed to have contracted for the entire output of the plant of "25,000 kilowatts capacity," with knowledge that the trade commonly referred to such a plant at 80 per cent. only of its possible output, and that it might be capable of producing 31,250 kilowatts. The appellant therefore should be required to accept and pay for the entire actual output of the plant within the maximum figure of 31,250 kilowatts. It is not disputed that the entire output for which the judgment in this case was rendered was within this amount except that for a period of a few days 32,400 kilowatts were produced. This slight excess of 1,150 kilowatts over the maximum estimated output of the plant for a few days only comes within the rule of de minimis non curat lex and may be included within the definition of the word "about" as it was used in the contract. 35 Cyc. 206; 23 R. C. L. 1352, § 176. This slight excess is not sufficient variance to defeat the respondent's claim.

The foregoing conclusion is based upon the technical meaning of the phrase which is used in the contract, to wit, "a plant of about 25,000 kilowatt capacity," as it was construed by respondents' expert witnesses. The word "capacity" does ordinarily mean the maximum ability to retain contents or perform work. But we think this is too narrow a definition for the purpose of construing the contract in the present case. It is not unreasonable to assume that the electrical trade may designate a generating plant by reference to the approximate load which it is ordinarily designed to produce with a 20 per cent. margin of safety and a thorough understanding that under favorable conditions its maximum capacity may be increased to that extent. In the same sense a vessel is described as one of 5,000 tons burden, or a truck as one of 10 tons capacity. A contract to purchase the entire cargo of the first or load of the latter would not necessarily limit the obligation to the mere figures employed in the description of the conveyance.

[3-5] While it is ordinarily the province of the court to construe the language of a contract, there are so many scientific factors involved in determining the kilowatt capacity of an electric generating plant that it becomes a proper subject for expert testimony. United States Heater Co. v. Jenss, 128 Wis. 162, 107 N. W. 293. It became a question for the determination of the jury as to whether the term "capacity" was used in its ordinary sense or in a technical trade sense. Nor do we think that a fair construction of the record binds the respondent to a stipulation that it was employed only in its ordinary sense. It is true that in a lengthy controversy between respective counsel and the court, Mr. Downey, one of respondent's attorneys, addressing himself to the court, did say: "I might call your Honor's attention to the fact that the directors of the Merced Irrigation District were not electrical engineers and when they used the term 'capacity' in a contract, they are using it as ordinary men understand it, not as some handbook of the American Institute of Electrical Engineers may follow. That is the question for the jury." The entire colloquy and the chief issue in the case were with respect to the import and intended meaning of the term "an electric plant of about 25,000 kilowatt capacity." Following the foregoing remark of counsel, in response to Mr. Pearson's effort to construe this into a binding stipulation against respondent, Mr. Downey denied his intention to so stipulate, saying: "Well, I hadn't been aware of the fact I had conceded anything. * * *" An impulsive statement of counsel against interest which is made in the turmoil of trial, and appears not to have been intended, will not bind the client.

[6] The appellant contends that, even though the plant which was installed by the respondent was originally one of 25,000 kilowatts operated at 80 per cent. power factor, changes were subsequently made by the respondent, including the substitution of mica for cotton insulation to permit the increase of temperature without burning out the coils, a two-inch increase of diameter of the water wheel shafts to enable them to carry a heavier load, and a cooling system to lower the temperature of the water in the reservoir, each of which was designed to increase the maximum capacity of the plant. The appellant introduced expert testimony to show that these changes did actually increase the capacity of the plant to a maximum output of from 36,000 to 39,000 kilowatts. This testimony was disputed by the respondent, in proof of which contradiction it was pointed out that the highest output of the plant under most favorable conditions was but 32,400 kilowatts for a period of only a few days. It seems immaterial, however, whether changes were made which actually resulted in the possibility of increasing the capacity to an amount of energy in excess of the maximum output of a 25,000 kilowatt plant, so long as that result was not accomplished, and the appellant is not asked to accept or pay for electric energy beyond the maximum product of a 25,000 kilowatt plant. The appellant did not contract for the output of a specific machine. The quality or character of the electric energy is not questioned. The quantity is the only element in dispute. The appellant merely bargained for a quantity of electric energy equivalent to the maximum output of a plant of about 25,000 kilowatts. The appellant is not harmed, nor may it complain if a quantity of electricity less than the maximum amount contracted for was actually generated in a 39,000 kilowatt plant instead of a 25,000 kilowatt plant.

[7] The appellant charges error in the giving and refusing of certain instructions. Instruction No. 7, which is challenged, was given as follows: "You are instructed, therefore, that it is your duty to determine whether or not the power house constructed by the Merced Irrigation District is of a capacity of about 25,000 kilowatts, and if you so find, then you must further find that under the provisions of the contract in evidence, defendant is and was bound to accept the entire electrical output therefrom." This was a correct declaration of the law. It was a question of fact as to whether a plant which was capable of producing 31,250 kilowatts per hour operated at unity power factor was in truth such a 25,000 kilowatt plant as was referred to in the contract. Upon this point the evidence was conflicting. Expert witnesses disagreed as to this issue. It therefore became a question of fact for the jury to determine. There is no dispute over the fact that, if it was a 25,000 kilowatt plant according to the contract, the appellant would be required to accept and pay for the entire output. Incidentally, it was also the province of the jury to determine whether the changes which were made in the machinery had the effect of increasing the kilowatt capacity of the plant, although the state of the record would seem to make it immaterial whether the modifications did in fact change the capacity of the plant, as heretofore suggested.

[8] Error is charged in the refusal to give appellant instruction No. 3, which included the following statement: "* * * The word (about), however, must not be understood by you to permit of more than a small or slight departure from the amount named in the contract of 25,000 kilowatts. * * *" This instruction is erroneous, since, in view of the record, it leaves out of consideration the maximum possible production of a 25,000 kilowatt plant operated at unity factor so as to actually generate 31,250 kilowatts per hour. The instruction limits the variation to only a slight departure from the figure of 25,000, rather than the maximum output of a "25,000 kilowatt plant." It was therefore not error to refuse to give this instruction.

[9] Appellant's instruction No. 2 was also refused. It is a correct definition of the word "capacity," but would be misleading in view of the state of the record, unless its application were explained. It reads as follows: "In determining the question as to what is the kilowatt capacity of the power house of the Merced Irrigation District, you are instructed that the word 'capacity' shall be taken by you to mean, as it is applied to the facts in this case, the number of kilowatts which the power house is capable of generating or producing. In other words, the word 'capacity' means the measure of the maximum ability of the power house to produce kilowatts."

While this is a true statement or definition of the word "capacity," standing alone, it was not necessarily the maximum capacity of the particular Merced power plant as it stood, which determined appellant's obligation under the contract. That power plant was not yet constructed when the contract was executed. Upon the contrary, it was the maximum capacity of a plant equivalent to one which is ordinarily termed a "25,000 kilowatt plant," which is involved in the present case. There was therefore no error in refusing to give this instruction.

The judgment is affirmed.

101 Cal. App. 122

McPHETRIDGE v. SMITH et al.
(Civ. 3486-3788.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Oct. 7, 1929.

1. Pleading §127(1)—Denial on information and belief of fact that there was only $2,000 lien on property exchanged admitted existence of lien of only $2,000 on record.

In action against real estate brokers and sureties to recover money obtained by fraudulent representation regarding amount of lien on property exchanged, denial on information and belief of allegation that there was only $2,000 lien on property exchanged admitted existence of lien of only $2,000, where trust deed was public record, and showed on its face that it secured only the payment of $2,000.

2. Pleading §121(4)—Existence of fact ascertainable from inspection of public record with in defendant's reach cannot be put in issue by denial on information and belief.

Existence of alleged fact which may readily be ascertained from an inspection of the public record within reach of defendant may not be put in issue by denial based solely on information and belief.

3. Principal and agent §48—Agent must act honestly toward principal and inform him of every fact material to principal's advantage.

Agent has duty to act honestly toward his principal and inform him of every fact material to advantage of principal.

4. Principal and agent §48—Gratuitous agent, on entering into performance of agency, must exercise utmost good faith in dealing with principal.

Gratuitous agent, on entering into performance of agency, is, in common with all other agents, bound to exercise the utmost good faith in dealing with his principal.

5. Conspiracy §1—Where two or more persons are sued for civil wrong, it is the civil wrong and not a conspiracy which constitutes cause of action.

Where two or more persons are sued for a civil wrong, it is the civil wrong resulting in damages, and not the conspiracy, which constitutes the cause of action.

6. Conspiracy §14—Conspiracy renders each participant in wrongful act responsible as joint tort-feasor for all damages ensuing from wrong, regardless of degree of his activity.

Conspiracy renders each participant in wrongful act responsible as joint tort-feasor for all damages resulting from wrong, irrespective of whether or not he was a direct actor, and regardless of degree of his activity.

7. Conspiracy §14—Plaintiff is entitled to joint recovery of damages against defendants co-operating in inflicting wrong.

Plaintiff is entitled to joint recovery of damages against such defendants as he can show have united or co-operated in inflicting the wrong on him.

8. Principal and agent §48—Agent is liable to principal for injury resulting from failure to make known to principal every material fact concerning transaction within his knowledge.

Agent must make known to principal every material fact concerning his transactions and subject-matter of agency that comes to his knowledge or is in his memory in course of agency, and, if he fails to do so, he is liable in damages to principal for any injury incurred or loss suffered in consequence of failure so to do.

9. Pleading §9—Complaint against brokers and sureties for fraud sufficiently charged conspiracy by facts without the word "conspiracy."

In action against real estate brokers and sureties for fraudulently obtaining money from plaintiff by misrepresentation regarding amount of lien on property exchanged, complaint alleging acts constituting conspiracy held to sufficiently allege conspiracy, though word "conspiracy" was not used.

10. Brokers §34—Brokers' concealment of true amount of lien on property exchanged, and representation it was $1,000 in excess of true amount, constituted fraud.

Concealment by brokers of true amount of lien on property exchanged for plaintiff's property, and representation that it was $1,000 in excess of true amount, constituted fraud.

11. Brokers §34—Plaintiff's real estate broker was liable to plaintiff for misrepresentation regarding amount of lien on property exchanged whether he profited thereby or not.

Plaintiff's real estate broker was liable for concealment regarding amount of lien on property exchanged, and for representation that lien was $3,000 instead of $2,000, where co-worker received $900, and purchaser of trust deed received $100 of the $1,000 excess, whether broker profited by concealment and misrepresentation or not.

12. Appeal and error ⇨1170(4)—Joinder of actions against plaintiff's broker and another broker and their sureties for fraudulent representation regarding amount of lien on property exchanged held not prejudicial (Const. art. 6, § 4½).

Joinder of actions against plaintiff's broker and another broker and their sureties to recover amount obtained by fraudulent representation regarding amount of lien on property exchanged for plaintiff's property held not to result in miscarriage of justice under Const. art. 6, § 4½, in view of fact that Code Civ. Proc. § 379a, as added by St. 1927, p. 477, which became part of the Code after trial of action, authorizes such procedure.

13. Conspiracy ⇨19—Conspiracies may be established without direct proof.

Fraudulent designs and conspiracies may be established without any direct proof.

14. Conspiracy ⇨19—Evidence held to show that plaintiff's broker and another broker acted with common purpose of representing to plaintiff that lien on property exchanged was $3,000 instead of $2,000.

Evidence held to show that plaintiff's broker and another broker acted with common purpose in concealing amount of lien on property exchanged for plaintiff's property and in representing that lien was for $3,000 instead of $2,000.

15. Appeal and error ⇨1010(1)—Where evidence supported findings on material facts, objection that evidence did not support some of immaterial findings would not warrant reversal.

Where evidence supported findings on material facts and issues, objection that some of immaterial findings were not supported by testimony, if correct, would not warrant reversal of judgment.

16. Brokers ⇨4—Default judgment against real estate broker could not be considered as proof against his bondsmen.

Judgment against real estate broker could not be considered as proof against his bondsmen, since sureties are not bound by judgments against their principal, unless undertaking so provides, and in other cases the surety is not prevented from making any defense that might have been interposed by his principal.

Appeal from Superior Court, Yolo County; W. A. Anderson, Judge.

Action for damages for fraud by C. L. McPhetridge against E. P. Smith, the Hartford Accident & Indemnity Company, the Globe Indemnity Company, and another. From the judgment, the Hartford Accident & Indemnity Company and E. P. Smith appeal, and the Globe Indemnity Company takes a separate appeal. Affirmed.

Hartley F. Peart and Gus L. Baraty, both of San Francisco, and Ralph H. Lewis and George E. McCutchen, both of Sacramento, for appellants.

Grant & Bailey, of Woodland, for respondent.

PLUMMER, J. While this cause is presented to us upon two separate appeals, one by the Hartford Accident Indemnity Company and E. P. Smith, upon a reporter's transcript prepared under the provisions of section 953a of the Code of Civil Procedure, and one by the Globe Indemnity Company, upon a bill of exceptions or transcript on appeal prepared according to the old method, we will, nevertheless, for convenience, consider the cause as presented upon one record, referring to nothing except what appears in the transcript on appeal as well as in the reporter's typewritten copy of the evidence introduced upon the trial.

The action was begun by the plaintiff to recover from the defendants the sum of $1,000 alleged to have been obtained from him by reason of the unlawful and wrongful acts of the defendants E. P. Smith and Glenn Newton, and from the Hartford Accident & Indemnity Company, a corporation, as the surety of E. P. Smith, and against the Globe Indemnity Company, as the surety of the defendant Glenn Newton. The defendants E. P. Smith and Glenn Newton were, at all the times mentioned in this action, real estate brokers or real estate dealers, the defendant Glenn Newton having his place of business in the city of Oakland, and the defendant E. P. Smith having his place of business in the city of Sacramento. The complaint alleges that on and prior to the 11th day of May, 1925, the plaintiff was the owner in fee of certain real estate in the city of Oakland, subject to an incumbrance in the sum of $6,000; that at the same time one Thomas E. Garner was the owner of certain real property situate in the county of Yolo, subject to a trust deed in favor of Mary A. Bostwick, to secure a promissory note for the sum of $2,000; that during the months of April and May, of the year 1925, the said Garner and the plaintiff were desirous of exchanging their respective properties, and that the defendants E. P. Smith and Glenn Newton, and each of them, for a compensation, negotiated and acted for the plaintiff in the exchange of said property; that the negotiations were carried on by said E. P. Smith and Glenn Newton, and that the plaintiff had no personal interviews with the said Thomas E. Garner. While not alleged in the complaint, the record shows that Thomas E. Garner was represented by a real estate broker living in

"XI. That in order to negotiate said exchange, it was stated and represented to plaintiff by the said E. P. Smith and Glenn Newton, and by each of them, during the said months of April, and May, 1925, and before the final passing of deeds between plaintiff and the said Thos. E. Garner, that the said Thos. E. Garner was willing to exchange properties with plaintiff if this plaintiff would assume the payment of a $3,000.00 note secured by deed of trust on the Yolo County property of the said Thos. E. Garner, which said deed of trust the said defendants, E. P. Smith and Glenn Newton, and each of them, then and there stated and represented to plaintiff was a first lien on the lands of the said Thos. E. Garner so located in Yolo County. That the said defendants E. P. Smith and Glenn Newton, at said time stated and represented to plaintiff that the exchange price of the lands of Thos. E. Garner in Yolo County was the said lands so owned by Thos. E. Garner in Yolo County, and the assumption of a note secured by deed of trust, then and there constituting a lien on said lands, and which said note so secured by deed of trust was then and there stated and represented to plaintiff to be in the sum of $3,000.00. That the said E. P. Smith and Glenn Newton and each of them, attended to the drawing of the conveyances and to ascertaining the title to the lands of the said Thos. E. Garner in Yolo County, and also attended to the securing of a policy of title insurance on the lands of the said Thos. E. Garner in Yolo County.

"XII. That said statements and representations so made by the said defendants E. P. Smith and Glenn Newton and by each of them, as aforesaid, were made for the purpose of defrauding and cheating this plaintiff, and of inducing him to make and enter into said exchange, as aforesaid, and to induce him to deliver to the said defendants E. P. Smith and Glenn Newton the difference between the represented incumbrance on the Yolo County property and the actual incumbrance on said property, to-wit, the sum of $1,000.00, and that said representations so made as aforesaid were and are false, fraudulent and untrue, and were known by said defendants and each of said defendants at said time, and at all times to be false, fraudulent and untrue.

"XIII. That in truth and in fact there was a note secured by a deed of trust constituting a first lien on the lands of Thos. E. Garner in Yolo County in no greater sum than $2,000.00, and that said note and deed of trust were held by Mary A Bostwick of Sacramento, and that no more than $2,000.00 was due upon said note so secured by deed of trust at any time.

"That there was not and never was a note secured by a deed of trust, or other writing, constituting a lien on the said lands of Thos. E. Garner, in Yolo County, in the sum of $3,000.00, or any other sum greater than $2,000.00. That the exchange price of the lands of Thos. E. Garner in Yolo County, as aforesaid, in truth and in fact was the Yolo County lands and the assumption of the said note secured by a deed of trust to Mary A. Bostwick in the sum of $2,000.00, and no more.

"XIV. That the said defendants Glenn Newton and E. P. Smith at all times concealed from this plaintiff the true trading price of the said lands of Thos. E. Garner in Yolo County, and that the said defendants at all times kept and concealed from this plaintiff the certificate of search prepared by the Yolo County Title Abstract Company, a corporation, and also concealed from this plaintiff the policy of title insurance placed on the said Yolo county property of Thos. E. Garner, and that the said defendants, and each of them, at all times concealed from said plaintiff the fact that the note secured by a trust deed to Mary A. Bostwick was no greater than the sum of $2,000.00.

"XV. That this plaintiff did not know or ascertain the falsity of said representations, and the fact of concealment as aforesaid by the said defendants, until the last of May, 1925.

"XVI. That the plaintiff believed and relied on the said representations of said defendants as aforesaid, and upon each and all of said representations, and believed and trusted the said defendants, and each of them, and that so believing and trusting the said defendants, and each of them, and the said representations made by them, and each of them, plaintiff and the said Thos. E. Garner made the said exchange as aforesaid, and that plaintiff by deed of conveyance executed and delivered on the 11th day of May, 1925, conveyed to the said Thos. E. Garner, his real estate heretofore mentioned and situated in the County of Alameda, State of California, and that the said Thos. E. Garner in a deed of conveyance joined in by his wife, deeded to this plaintiff the said Yolo County lands above mentioned and described by deed of conveyance delivered the 11th day of May, 1925.

"XVII. That on the consummation of said exchange the said defendants, Glenn Newton and E. P. Smith, and each of them, were paid a brokers commission for making said exchange.

"XVIII. That at the time the said deeds were made and executed between the said plaintiff and the said Thos. E. Garner, the said defendants E. P. Smith and Glenn Newton, and each of them, stated and represented that it was necessary for this plaintiff to execute a new note and deed of trust in the sum of $3,000.00 to the beneficiary, and that the said defendants drew up and presented to this plaintiff for his execution a note and deed of trust in the sum of $3,000.00 in favor of the said Mary A. Bostwick, which said note and deed of trust the said defendants and each of them, stated and represented to plaintiff was to take the place of the note and deed of trust in the sum of $3,000.00 theretofore constituting a first lien upon the said property of Thos. E. Garner; whereas, in truth and in fact the said note and deed of trust should have been executed for the sum of $2,000.00 only.

"That this plaintiff believing and relying upon said statement executed said note and deed of trust for $3,000.00 and delivered the same to said E. P. Smith and Glenn Newton, and each of them, for their delivery to the said Mary A. Bostwick. That said new deed of trust was executed and delivered on the 11th day of May, 1925.

"XIX. That the said defendants and each of them, thereupon had the said Mary A. Bostwick assign said note and deed of trust to one L. T. Allee, who thereupon gave to the said Mary A. Bostwick the sum due her on her former note and deed of trust, to-wit, the sum of $2,000.00, and that the said L. T. Allee paid to the said Mary A. Bostwick the whole amount due on said $2,000.00 note secured by a deed of trust, and took an assignment of the said new note for $3,000.00, secured by said new deed of trust.

"XX. That the said L. T. Allee thereafter on the 19th day of June, 1925, paid to the said defendant, E. P. Smith, the sum of $1,000.00, being the difference between the amount due the said Mary A. Bostwick on her note for $2,000.00, secured by the deed of trust that constituted a first lien upon the lands of Thos. E. Garner at the time the negotiations and exchange were made, and the sum called for in the new note and deed of trust so executed by plaintiff as aforesaid.

"XXI. That the said sum of $1,000.00 so paid by the said L. T. Allee, to the said E. P. Smith was not a commission for making the said exchange, and that said sum was not a part of the exchange price paid by plaintiff to the said Thos. E. Garner, and that the said note and deed of trust in the sum of $3,000.00 which was executed by plaintiff to the said Mary A. Bostwick, and which was by her assigned to the said L. T. Allee, is now a first lien upon the properties of this plaintiff so taken in exchange by him from the said Thos. E. Garner, as aforesaid.

"XXII. That plaintiff is informed and believes and therefore alleges that the said sum of $1,000.00 so received by the said E. P. Smith as aforesaid, was divided by the said defendants, E. P. Smith and Glenn Newton in proportions unknown to this plaintiff.

"XXIII. That by reason of the said false and fraudulent representations and concealment of the said defendants, Glenn Newton and E. P. Smith, as aforesaid, this plaintiff has been cheated and defrauded out of the said sum of $1,000.00, together with interest thereon from the 11th day of May, 1925, to the date of judgment, all to plaintiff's damage in the sum of $1,000.00, as aforesaid."

[1-3] The complaint also sets forth allegations relative to the execution of bonds by the respective indemnity companies to insure the faithful performance by the defendants Smith and Newton of their duties as real estate brokers, and compliance with the act of the Legislature of the state of California providing for the licensing and bonding of real estate dealers, each of the defendant companies executing a bond in the sum of $2,000. The answers of both of the appellant companies deny all of the material allegations of the complaint, but the fact of there being only a $2,000 lien on the Garner property is denied only upon information and belief, and, as the trust deed securing the payment of the lien thereon was a public record, and showed upon its face that it secured only the payment of $2,000, the answers of the appellants admit the existence of the lien of only $2,000 and what the public record exhibited, and raises an issue only as to the representations of a lien against the Garner property in the sum of $3,000 and the concealment by the defendants Smith and Newton of the fact that the trust deed was for no greater sum than $2,000.

As stated in 21 California Jurisprudence, p. 150, § 101: "It is settled that the existence of an alleged fact which may readily be ascertained from an inspection of a public record, within the reach of a defendant may not be put in issue by a denial based solely on information and belief."

The defendant Newton made default, and his liability is not considered herein further than it is necessary to review the testimony to ascertain if there is sufficient in the record to support the judgment against the Globe Indemnity Company. In this particular it may be stated at the outset that a reading of the record shows very clearly that much more testimony might have been introduced relative to the actions of the defendant Glenn Newton, in relation to the issues involved, had not the respondent labored under the mistaken idea that the default of Newton could be considered in this case as evidence against his surety, Globe Indemnity Company. The law in relation to this question will be considered later on. As to the sufficiency of the testimony to sustain the judgment against E. P. Smith and his surety, the Hartford Accident & Indemnity Company, an affirmative answer appears to be amply supported. The real question is as to whether there is sufficient in the record to support the judgment against Newton and his surety, not considering Newton's default.

In order to support the judgments in this case as against the appellants, it must appear from the record that the defendants E. P. Smith and Glenn Newton acted jointly or co-operated in inducing the plaintiff to execute a trust deed in the sum of $3,000, whereas, in truth and in fact, it should have been executed only for the sum of $2,000. The appellants here advance the argument that, as McPhetridge was willing to execute a trust deed in the sum of $3,000 in the exchange of the properties, he obtained just what he bargained for, and, therefore, was uninjured. This, of course, overlooks entirely the law relative to the duty of an agent to act honestly toward his principal and inform him of every fact material to the advantage of the principal. Nor does it matter whether Newton or Smith benefited by the proceeds of the fraud. While not made a defendant in this action, in order to understand the situation it is necessary to set forth and consider the acts of Howard Kerr, the agent for Thos. E. Garner, the owner of the real estate in Yolo county. This, for the purpose of showing that Kerr, Newton, and Smith co-operated in securing an extra $1,000, to the intent and purpose that all three of the agents might in some manner obtain compensation. The liability of Kerr to Garner to answer for the fact that the plaintiff was paying his principal $1,000 more than his principal had knowledge of is not in issue here, and is not passed upon, but the testimony in relation thereto is set forth simply to show how the three agents co-operated. While not in the order as it appears in the transcript, we will begin with the testimony of T. E. Garner, and the acts which characterize what we will call the moral status of the transaction from the very beginning. Mr. Garner testified as follows:

"I formerly lived in Yolo County where I owned 820 acres of land; I traded my property with plaintiff; the exchange was made through Howard Kerr, a real estate agent of Sacramento, acting for me; Newton handled the transfer for McPhetridge; at this time my property in Yolo had a $2,000.00 mortgage (the trust deed was called a mortgage by most of the witnesses); I went to Oakland with Mr. Kerr, examined the property, looked at the records in the recorder's office and came to Sacramento to close the deal with Mr. Kerr; I signed a written agreement that provided I was to exchange my ranch in Yolo County subject to a $2,000.00 mortgage, for the McPhetridge property in Oakland subject to a $6,000.00 mortgage; I placed the property in the hands of Mr. Kerr to sell, and after several months' time he came over to my place in Capay Valley and asked me how I would exchange; he said he had a party who wanted to trade for some land; I told him I didn't know; we made an appointment to go down and look over the Oakland property; when I got down there they represented the property in Oakland as having an $8,000.00 mortgage on it, which they wanted to exchange for my place; by 'they' I mean Mr. Kerr and Mr. Newton; he was the man that handled the McPhetridge side of the case; I went to look the property up and found that there was only $6,000.00 against the property, and this $2,000.00 was to be put on it for some other purpose; they represented to me the $2,000.00 was to go on there as they would have to have $2,000.00 more; by 'they' I mean Mr. Newton and Mr. Kerr; when I found that they were asking $8,000.00 on the place, I took the train and went home, and Mr. Kerr came over and wanted to know what kind of a trade I would make; I told him what I would do, and that was all; I would just exchange the properties as they stood; of course I was to pay him a commission; there was a mortgage of $2,000.00 against my property; the exchange agreement that I signed provided to exchange my ranch in Capay Valley subject to a $2,000.00 mortgage, for the Oakland property subject to a $6,000.00 mortgage; Mr. Newton said that the Oakland property would have to be increased to $8,000.00; that Mr. McPhetridge wanted this money to pay bills, or something; that is the way he represented the trade; I had nothing to do with that proposition."

This witness testified that, after the exchange had been made, in conversation with the plaintiff he told the plaintiff that the lien on the Yolo county property was for $2,000 only, whereupon the plaintiff replied that he had given a $3,000 trust deed, as he was told that that was the amount of the trust deed to be placed on the property. It may be here stated that the record does not show that the holder of the $2,000 note, for which Garner had executed a trust deed as security on the Yolo property, had made any demand for payment, nor does the record disclose that Mrs. Bostwick, to whom the original $2,000 note was given, and to secure which the trust deed was executed by Garner, had any knowledge of why a new trust deed was executed in place of the $2,000 one. The whole transaction appears to have been carried through and the negotiations had for the sale of the $3,000 trust deed in order to secure the $1,000 which the complaint alleges was wrongfully obtained. The reasons for boosting the lien on the Yolo county property in the sum of $1,000 was an entirely silent transaction so far as the beneficiary under the original trust deed was concerned, and likewise as to both the plaintiff and Garner, the owners of the properties being exchanged.

The plaintiff testified at considerable length, and we take from the testimony the following excerpts: "I now live in Yolo County; I formerly lived in Oakland; I own some property in Oakland; I accompanied Mr. Newton and Mr. Smith to see the Garner property that was subsequently deeded to me; I had business dealings with Smith and Newton

In April and May, 1925; these men, Smith and Newton, came to me one afternoon in Oakland and they said they had a trade for me; they wanted me to get in a machine and come up and look at the property; we were to meet Mr. Kerr of Sacramento at Madison; it was known as the Garner property; I signed an escrow agreement delivered to the Central Title Company of Oakland, California, agreeing to convey my property subject to a $6,000.00 mortgage, for the Garner property, to include about 840 acres, subject to a $3,000.00 incumbrance; I agreed to pay Newton $1,400.00 if he made an even exchange of the properties. Mr. Newton said the property in Yolo County had a $3,000.00 incumbrance; I did not examine the title to the Yolo property prior to the exchange of deeds; about five or six days after the deal was closed Mr. Garner told me the Yolo property was mortgaged for only $2,000.00; I paid Newton $700.00 commissions; after Mr. Smith and Mr. Newton and myself visited the Garner property, Mr. Newton and I returned to Oakland and there I signed the agreement to pay $1,000.00; after I told Newton I would pay him $1,000.00 if he made an even exchange, he said he would see what he could do, and within a few days he came out to see me and said there was a $3,000.00 mortgage against the Yolo place, and that was the best he could do; I said I would trade; each was to assume the other's mortgage; Mr. Newton said he would cut down his commissions to $700.00; I never saw an abstract to the Yolo property; I got a title insurance; I was in the Abstract Company's office at the time the deal was closed; Mr. Smith and Mr. Newton were there also; it was in the office of the Central Abstract Company in Oakland where I signed the papers; after the deal was closed the papers concerning the title to the Garner property were returned to me, if I remember rightly; the deal was finally consummated at Oakland at the office of the Central Abstract Company; I did not inquire as to how the title stood; I signed a note and trust deed for $3,000.00 and the exchange was made; it was in accordance with the agreement or instructions to the Title Company; I did not look at the title report that had been prepared by the Yolo County Title Abstract Company concerning the title to the property I was to acquire. In regard to the title, I had this conversation with Mr. Newton: I told Newton I had never done but very little business, and said I should get a lawyer to attend to this, and he said, 'I have known you for a long time and you have treated me fair and I will see that you get a square deal in this case;' I knew they were making a search; they said the title was going through but I did not see the papers; they said that they were getting the abstract and to deliver a deed to the property; I never came up to Woodland to examine the records as to how the title stood; I left it all to Mr. Newton; Mr. Newton said there were 840 acres, and finally got down to 820; Mr. Newton told me that the papers were being prepared in Woodland; the abstract was being made here in Woodland; I didn't get the papers until after the deal was closed; I left that up to Mr. Newton, as he told me he was a friend of mine and he would attend to all these matters and save me hiring an attorney, and so I left it up to him and he did the work; Mr. Newton told me that the preliminary report did not show the correct number of acres; he said that instead of 140 acres it was either 118½ or 120—I mean 820 instead of 840, as he told me first; I only mentioned incumbrance on the property at the time he told me; that was before the transaction started—that there was a $3,000.00 mortgage, and that was all that was said; I didn't know anything about the $2,000.00 incumbrance until after it was all over; Mr. Newton and I came up from Oakland and met Mr. Smith in Sacramento, and we went out to look at the property; they said he and Newton were working together.

"Q. And Mr. Newton was working for you, and Mr. Smith was representing the seller of the country property, is that correct? A. I presume so, yes, sir.

"Q. And that is the same situation that existed in this deal, wasn't it? A. No; I couldn't answer that question because I don't know, because they both seemed to officiate in this matter and Mr. Smith was there Johnnie on the spot when this deal was put through. Mr. Newton told me that he split the commission three ways; I said to him: 'You didn't make much out of this deal, did you?' He answered: 'No, I split the commission with Mr. Kerr and Mr. Smith.'

The defendant E. P. Smith was called as a witness, and from his testimony we set forth the following: "I had a conversation with Mr. Newton about the exchange of the McPhetridge and Garner properties; on the day Mr. McPhetridge, Mr. Newton and myself came to view the Yolo property I phoned to Mr. Howard Kerr of Sacramento asking him to meet us at Madison. Mr. Kerr was paid a commission on the deal; I don't know how much; I didn't make any arrangement about the title to the Yolo property nor record the deeds; I was entrusted with some papers to deliver to the Yolo Title and Abstract Company but I don't know what the documents were."

Witness was shown a check for $900, and stated that he received that sum from the trust deed heretofore referred to as the $3,000 trust deed, and that the $3,000 trust deed was sold to a man by the name of Allee for $3,000; that he kept $900 as his own profit, and gave Mr. Allee $100 for buying the paper; that Mr. Kerr told him there was a $2,000 trust deed on the Garner property, but he did not remember whether Kerr told him that, prior to, or during, the negotiations or afterwards; that he possibly knew about the incumbrance before the deal was closed; that he was not negotiating for the sale of the property, but that he was trying to bring the parties together; that he was not working for Howard Kerr, that he was working for himself; that he did not know anything about the exchange price; "I possibly heard some figures mentioned," but that the exchange prices were usually matched to fit specific cases; that he had a conversation with Mr. Newton about the exchange of the two properties; that he and Newton and McPhetridge went out to look at the Yolo property; that he (the witness) expected to participate in the deal; that he brought some papers which were intrusted to him by the Central Title Company of Oakland and turned them over to the Yolo County Title Abstract Company, and they recorded them; that he brought up the trust deed, the one which Mr. McPhetridge signed; that he did not read the trust deed, and could not say that it was for $3,000; that Mr. Kerr told him that there was a $2,000 trust deed on the property.

The witness further testified he was trying to bring the parties together; that Mr. Newton rang him up on the phone and said: "There is an offer in escrow to trade McPhetridge's property on Flint Street subject to a lease and subject to a trust deed for the Yolo County property, subject to $3,000.00, and McPhetridge agrees to sign a trust deed for $3,000.00."

"Q. You had talked it over prior to that time? A. Certainly; I brought the parties together with the expectation of getting some remuneration.

"Q. You expected to get your remuneration by increasing that trust deed, didn't you? A. No, sir.

"Q. Where did you expect to get your remuneration? A. Commission.

"Q. From whom? A. Mr. Kerr and Mr. Newton; I asked them both."

The witness further testified, after stating that he expected to participate in the deal:

"Q. Well, whom were you representing? A. I was a broker; nobody employed me; I employed myself; that is my business.

"Q. In just plain language, you butted into the deal, is that the idea? A. Do you butt into a deal when a man brings you a case?

"Q. I am asking you? A. I have got a broker's license.

"Q. (In relation to the $2,000.00) Then you knew it before the deal was closed, didn't you? A. I didn't say I didn't.

"Q. You did know it? A. Possibly I did; I didn't say I did, but possibly I did.

"Q. Did you ever tell Mr. Newton that there was a $2,000.00 mortgage or deed of trust on the Garner property? A. Not to my knowledge. Q. Did you ever tell him that there was a $3,000.00 trust deed or mortgage on the property? A. I didn't.

"Q. Never told him that? A. No.

"Q. You are negotiating a sale of this property? A. I wasn't negotiating anything.

"Q. You were trying to put the deal through? A. I was bringing two parties together.

"Q. You were bringing two parties together? A. Yes.

"Q. And trying to raise $900.00, yet you never told him the purchase price? A. That's right, I never quoted the purchase price to anyone."

The witness Smith further stated that he sent a telegram to Glenn Newton about this deal. The telegram was then handed to the witness, and it reads as follows: "Sacramento, Cal., May 18, 1925. Glenn Newton, 3450 Woodruff Ave., Oakland, Cal. Kerr sent title for McPhetridge to see some days ago. Must have return of same before Huston will give up $900.00. Rush on this. Have another deal ready for you. Call me on phone at once or get action on that policy so we can close. Signed, E. P. Smith." This telegram, of course, was sent after the exchange of properties had been had, but it shows when the title policy was sent to Mr. McPhetridge, and, so far as the transcript on appeal shows, was admitted without objection, and left the court at liberty to draw the conclusion that the $900 referred to in the telegram was the $900 which Smith was to get as his part of the commissions for bringing the parties together, and that Glenn Newton knew all the circumstances, and would hasten the return of the paper called for, so that Mr. Smith might get what he called his remuneration for participating in the deal, and also justifies the conclusion of the trial court that Mr. Newton knew of the difference between the actual lien upon the Garner property in the sum of $2,000 and the sum at which he represented such lien against the Garner property, which, as we have heretofore shown, Newton stated to the plaintiff to be $3,000, which brings home to the defendant Newton actual knowledge of the incumbrance which was upon the property, different from what he stated to the plaintiff. The duty of the agent is to inform his principal of the actual facts concerning the transaction. From what we have said it is evident that Newton did nothing of the kind, although the short excerpts from the testimony establish his knowledge, and further shows that he laid the foundation by lulling the plaintiff into security, telling him that it was not necessary to employ a lawyer, that he (Newton) was the plaintiff's friend, and would see that he got a square deal.

The defendant Smith was placed upon the witness stand in his own behalf, and proceeded to tell the story as to Mr. Kerr informing him how his profit might be secured by negotiating a sale of the $3,000 trust deed and paying Mrs. Bostwick the amount of her $2,000 note. This testimony does not specially involve Mr. Newton, but is illuminating in the fact that the $2,000 trust deed appears to have been satisfied or canceled and the $3,000 trust deed transferred to Mr. Allee for the sum of $3,000, Mrs. Bostwick paid the amount actually due her, and the remainder distributed as we have here said, all without the knowledge of Mrs. Bostwick. The cross-examination of Mr. Smith, when placed upon the witness stand in his own behalf, shows that Mr. Newton had the preliminary report of the Garner property in his possession.

The record which we have set forth discloses that Kerr and Newton failed in their attempt to get $2,000 in the first instance by boosting the mortgage on the McPhetridge property situated in Oakland, but that by boosting the trust deed on the Garner property in Yolo county, in addition to there being paid to Newton the sum of $700 and $400 to Mr. Kerr, Mr. Smith was enabled to clean up a profit of $900 and give Mr. Allee a bonus of $100 for buying the trust deed.

[4] The fact that Mr. E. P. Smith may have been a volunteer or a gratuitous agent in the inception of the transactions to which we have referred, or even during the course of the progress of the negotiations, is wholly immaterial. This is abundantly shown by the rule cited in 1 California Jurisprudence, p. 790, par. 79, to-wit: "While a gratuitous agent cannot be compelled to enter upon performance of an agency, nor be mulcted in damages for his failure to do so, when he does enter upon such performance he is, in common with all other agents, bound to exercise the utmost good faith in dealing with his principal. * * * An agent for hire is bound to exercise a greater degree of care and diligence than an agent acting gratuitously, but the latter has no greater license to indulge in misrepresentations, concealments or other breaches of good faith than the former. * * * Even a gratuitous agent is therefore liable to his principal for damages resulting from a gross neglect of duty which he owes to his superior." And, as further said in the same volume, p. 805, § 91: "In entering upon the relation of principal and agent, the principal bargains for the exercise of the skill, ability and industry of his agent, and the agent agrees that he has reasonable skill and will do the work with reasonable care." A number of authorities are cited to support the language of the text.

[5-8] Again, as said in the case of Revert v. Hesse, 184 Cal. 295, 193 P. 943, 946: "It is a general and well-settled principle of law that, where two or more persons are sued for a civil wrong, it is the civil wrong resulting in damage, and not the conspiracy, which constitutes the cause of action. Herron v. Hughes, 25 Cal. 555; Davitt v. Bakers' Union, 124 Cal. 99, 56 P. 775; Dowdell v. Carpy, 129

Cal. 168, 61 P. 948; Menner v. Slater, 148 Cal. 284, 83 P. 35. In such an action, the major significance of the conspiracy lies in the fact that it renders each participant in the wrongful act responsible as a joint tort-feasor for all damages ensuing from the wrong, irrespective of whether or not he was a direct actor, and regardless of the degree of his activity. Cohen v. Fisher, 135 App. Div. 238, 120 N. Y. Supp. 546; White v. White, 132 Wis. 121, 111 N. W. 1116; Miller v. John, 208 Ill. 173, 70 N. E. 27. A plaintiff is entitled to a joint recovery of damages against such defendants as he can show have united or co-operated in inflicting a wrong upon him. Herron v. Hughes, supra; More v. Finger, 128 Cal. 313, 60 P. 933; Nevin v. Gary, 12 Cal. App. 1, 106 P. 422." And further, as said in 2 C. J., p. 714, § 369: "Loyalty to his principal's interest requires that an agent shall make known to his principal every material fact concerning his transactions and the subject matter of his agency that comes to his knowledge or is in his memory in the course of his agency, and if he fails to do so, he is liable in damages to his principal for any injury incurred or loss suffered in consequence of such failure."

[9-11] The court found that the defendants E. P. Smith and Glenn Newton at all times mentioned conspired and operated, worked and schemed together to cheat and defraud plaintiff, and that the said defendants and each of them acted in union, concert, and collusion in the making of false representations, and each of them acted as in said complaint alleged for the express purpose of cheating the plaintiff out of the sum of $1,000 as aforesaid. The appellants urge that the complaint does not in specific terms allege a conspiracy, and that the trial court so stated during the course of the trial. While this is true, the complaint does, nevertheless, set forth all the facts necessary to constitute a charge of conspiracy. That this was not considered by the trial court until it came to making its findings does not militate against the correctness of the findings. In 12 C. J. p. 630, § 216, in dealing with the subject of pleadings having to do with conspiracies, we find the following: "In an action of the nature under consideration the rule is to allow great latitude in setting out in the complaint the particular acts from which the conspiracy is to be inferred; even going so far as to allow the individual acts of the conspirators to be averred. The act complained of, however, must be definitely and issuably stated, so that, if the facts themselves should be admitted, the court can draw legal conclusions. And so the opposite party will be apprised of what he is called on to answer." The complaint under consideration responds fully to all these requirements. The facts and acts of the parties are fully set forth. That the word "conspiracy" was not used in no wise lessens the legal import of the acts, nor if the word "conspiracy" had been used would it have added anything to the legal significance of what was done and performed or the concealments indulged in by the defendants Smith and Newton.

In 5 California Jurisprudence, p. 530, § 30, this language is found, supported by abundant authorities: "In an action for damages resulting from acts of conspirators, the major significance of the conspiracy lies in the fact that it renders each participant in the wrongful act responsible as a joint tort-feasor for all damages ensuing from the wrong, irrespective of whether or not he was a direct actor and regardless of the degree of his activity. And so, a plaintiff is entitled to a joint recovery of damages against such defendants as he can show have united or co-operated in inflicting a wrong upon him." There can be no question from the facts which we have set forth that the defendants Smith and Newton co-operated in inflicting the injury alleged upon the plaintiff in this action. And likewise, in the same volume on page 533, § 34, a reading of the text, supported by authorities, shows that, if the facts are set forth constituting a conspiracy, it is unnecessary to use the term "conspiracy."

That a concealment of the true amount of the lien upon the Garner property, and the representation that it was $1,000 in excess of the true amount, constituted a fraud, requires no argument. The record in the case from which we have quoted shows that the plaintiff relied upon the statement made by Newton that he (Newton) would see that the plaintiff would get a square deal, which, of course, carries with it the implication that he (the plaintiff) would not be defrauded out of $1,000 by any of the representations made to him by the defendant Newton, irrespective of the acts of the defendant Smith. We do not need to go further into the law relative to the duty of agents to disclose to their principals every fact within their knowledge affecting the financial interests of their principals, nor is it material whether any particular agent profited by his misrepresentations or concealments. 26 C. J. 1180; Von Schrader v. Milton (Cal. App.) 273 P. 1074. In this case the trial court would have been warranted in concluding that the defendant Newton profited by the concealments, as his co-worker, by reason of the misrepresentations and concealments, was enabled to enrich himself to the extent of $900, and thus Newton was saved from splitting his fee with Smith; or it may be that this is what Newton considered splitting his fee with Smith, as he stated to the plaintiff he had done.

[12] Finally, it is argued that the court erred in overruling the appellants' demurrers on the ground of misjoinder of actions, and that there should be a reversal for such alleged error. The respondent replies that section 379a of the Code of Civil Procedure as added by St. 1927, p. 477, answers this objection. That section reads: "All persons may be joined as defendants against whom the right to any relief is alleged to exist, whether jointly, severally or in the alternative; and judgment may be given against such one or more of the defendants as may be found to be liable, according to their respective liabilities." The appellants rejoin to the answer of the respondent that this section did not become a part of the Code of Civil Procedure until after the trial of this action. This contention is true, but section 4½ of article 6 of the Constitution provides that no new trial shall be granted for any error as to any matter of pleading, or for any error as to any matter of procedure, unless, after an examination of the entire cause, including the evidence, the court shall be of the opinion that the error complained of has resulted in a miscarriage of justice. The procedure followed by the court is precisely the procedure now outlined in the section of the Code just referred to, and, if the procedure which was followed by the court constitutes a miscarriage of justice, then and in that case section 379a of the Code of Civil Procedure is unconstitutional, as providing a procedure which contemplates a miscarriage of justice. No such argument is presented by appellants. It is evident that section 379a, supra, is just simply a legislative expression of what is covered by section 4½ of article 6 of the Constitution, and that, if it is now a proper procedure, and affords parties ample opportunity to be heard, then and in that case it did not in this trial result in a miscarriage of justice. An examination of the record, however, shows that the appellants had every opportunity to present their cause; that there was no testimony introduced upon the trial of the action, or at least none has been called to our attention that would not have been admissible had the defendants all been sued separately.

[13, 14] While the testimony in this case discloses that the defendants Smith and Newton did not indulge in any extended conversation relative to their acts, it does show that they both understood and acted with a common purpose. The fact that persons engaged in unlawful and fraudulent enterprises talk but little, but act with a common understanding, has led to the rule that fraudulent designs and conspiracies may be established without what is called any direct proof.

[15, 16] We think what we have stated discloses sufficient to justify the trial court in drawing every material conclusion reached by it. Objection is made that some of the immaterial findings of the court are not supported by the testimony, but, as the material facts and issues are all sufficiently supported, such objections, if correct, would not warrant a reversal of the judgment. That the default judgment against the defendant in a case simflar to this cannot be considered as proof against his bondsmen needs but little consideration. The law appears to be well settled in this state that sureties are not bound by judgments against their principal unless the undertaking so provides, as where one undertakes to pay a certain sum in the event of the principal failing so to do. In other cases the surety is not prevented from making any defense that might have been interposed by his principal. See Stearns on Suretyship (3d Ed.) p. 298; 23 Cal. Jur. p. 1062; Easton v. Boston Investment Co., 51 Cal. App. 246, 196 P. 796. Other cases might be cited, but the rule announced in the citations given prevails in California.

The judgment against all of the defendants, as entered by the trial court, is affirmed.

1. Trespass $\S$ 44—Plaintiff suing for trespass had burden of proving trespass on lands owned by plaintiff.

In action to recover damage in trespass by cutting and removing timber from lands of plaintiff, burden of proof on issue whether defendants committed trespass on lands owned by plaintiff was on plaintiff.

2. Appeal and error $\S$ 1011(1)—Judgment based on conflicting evidence and sustained by competent evidence will not be disturbed on appeal.

Appellate court will not disturb judgment based on conflicting evidence when there is competent evidence to sustain it.

3. Boundaries $\S$ 3(4)—Definite calls by course and distance to creek, which was well-defined permanent monument, prevails over indefinite locations and calls in determining boundaries.

In determining boundaries between defendant's and plaintiff's land, in action for trespass, definite calls by courses and distances to creek, which was well-defined permanent monument, must prevail over indefinite locations and calls.

4. Boundaries $\S$ 37(1)—Conflicting testimony as to boundary line between plaintiff's and defendant's land held sufficient to show defendants did not trespass on lands owned by plaintiffs.

In action for damages in trespass by cutting and removing timber from lands claimed by plaintiffs, conflicting testimony as to boundary line between plaintiffs' and defendants' land was sufficient to sustain finding that defendants did not trespass on lands owned by plaintiffs.

5. Appeal and error $\S$ 994(3)—Competency and reliability of witnesses and convincing effect of evidence held for court having all witnesses before it in determining boundary lines.

Where trial court had all witnesses before it and heard all testimony in determining boundary line between properties of respective parties, it was for court to decide which of witnesses were most competent and reliable and what of evidence was most convincing.

Appeal from Superior Court, Humboldt County; Denver Sevier, Judge.

Actions by Franklin Ellery, Jr., and others against the Pacific Lumber Company and another, consolidated for trial. Judgments for defendants, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

John F. Barnett, of San Francisco, and W. F. Clyborne and John F. Quinn, both of Eureka, for appellants.

Nelson & Ricks, of Eureka, for respondents.

NOURSE, J. The three cases noted in the title were all instituted against the defendants to recover damages in trespass for cutting and removing timber from lands claimed by each plaintiff. The cases were consolidated for trial, were tried before the court sitting without a jury, and in each case judgment went for the defendants. The plaintiffs have joined in an appeal on typewritten transcripts.

[1, 2] The controversy arises over the conflict and uncertainty of surveys made by the contending parties showing the line of division between the lands owned by the respective plaintiffs and the defendants. This conflict, in turn, arises from the loss or obliteration of some of the government survey corners established in 1872 and particularly the common corner of sections 4, 5, 8, and 9. The case presented to the trial court was a simple question of fact—whether the defendants committed a trespass upon lands owned by the plaintiffs. On that issue the burden of proof was on the plaintiffs, and the trial court found that that burden had not been sustained. On this appeal the single point raised by the appellants is that the evidence is insufficient to support the findings. There is no rule of law involved in the appeal except the rule that an appellate court will not disturb a judgment based on conflicting evidence when there is competent evidence to sustain the judgment rendered.

[3, 4] It will serve no purpose to give a full résumé of the evidence produced on the issue tried; it is sufficient to refer to the evidence relating to the location of the common corner 4, 5, 8, 9 as indicating the wide conflict between the parties. The government field notes locating this common corner read in part: "10.00. A brook 17 links wide runs N.W.—39.06. Larrabee Creek 77 links wide, runs W." The surveyor employed by the respondents, basing his calculations partly on the method of proportionate distances, located this corner at a point which measured but 3 feet less in distance from Larrabee creek than that called for in the government field notes. The surveyor employed by the appellants placed the corner more than 700 feet short of that called for. The respondents relied upon a well-defined and well-known brook at the point mentioned in the field notes, while the appellants relied upon a dry depression in the land which it was admitted did not contain running water. In an effort to establish this depression as the "brook" mentioned in the field notes, the appellants asserted that the brook might have been filled by timber and debris, but the respondents had a pit dug in this depression of the ground—a pit 6 feet in depth. Witnesses experienced in the life of the woods testified that there was no indication that a brook at any time had been located at the point fixed by appellants. It is conceded that the brook referred to in respondents' survey is not as wide as that mentioned in the government field notes, but respondents rightly contend that the error in the width of the brook may be disregarded, and that the definite call by courses and distances to Larrabee creek, which is a well-defined permanent monument, must prevail over the indefinite locations and calls relied on by appellants.

[5] The foregoing is a fair sample of the differences between the parties covering the location of each corner and the running of each line of the survey. It is conceivable that both surveyors may have done some guessing in the course of their work and that their calculations may have been wrong in some respects, but these surveys, and the testimony taken in regard to them, enjoy no different character or relation to the trial of the case than other evidence which must be heard and weighed by the trial court. All we have on this appeal is the confident assertion of the appellants that the surveyor employed by them was entitled to greater credence than the surveyor employed by respondents, and that the preponderance of the evidence therefore supported their contentions. But the issue was the boundary line between the properties of the respective parties, and in determining that line the trial court had all the witnesses before it and heard all the testimony. It was for that court to decide which of the witnesses were the most competent and reliable, and what of the evidence was the most convincing.

We find no error in the record.

Judgment affirmed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Edward T. Bishop, Judge.

Action by Austin McFadden against Lick Pier Company, a copartnership consisting of Charles J. Lick and another, to obtain a declaratory judgment, wherein defendants filed a cross-complaint. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Edw. F. Wehrle and George L. Reimbold, both of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Henry G. Bodkin, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

PLUMMER, J. This action was instituted by the plaintiff to obtain a declaratory judgment determining the respective rights of the parties hereto under the terms and conditions of a lease entered into between said parties on the 1st day of February, 1924. On and prior to the date referred to the defendants were the owners of certain pier rights at Venice and Santa Monica in the state of California. Negotiations were carried on between the respective parties, resulting in the execution of the lease just referred to, whereby it was provided, among other things, that the defendants should erect a pier of a certain size and dimension, and that the plaintiff would thereafter erect upon said pier a dance hall according to plans and specifications set forth in a certain blueprint referred to in the lease. The lease was to continue until the 1st day of September, 1939. The complaint sets forth the completion of the pier by the defendants and the erection of a dance hall thereon by the plaintiff at an expense of $120,000. The court makes no finding as to the cost of the dance hall, but the answer of the defendants admits the construction of the dance hall and the value thereof up to any sum less than $120,000. The defendants filed a cross-complaint asking for a declaratory judgment according to their interpretation of the lease. The plaintiff had judgment, and the defendants appeal.

The provisions of the lease in controversy in this action are paragraphs indicated as A, C, E and K. Paragraph I is not involved, but is necessary to be set forth in order to obtain a full understanding of the agreement. The paragraphs referred to read as follows:

"(A) That the lessee will, at his own cost and expense, erect upon said space the dance hall hereinbefore referred to, and have the same completed and ready for operation, and begin the operation thereof not later than sixty (60) days after foundation for dance hall is completed, said dance hall to be erected, maintained, and operated by said lessee at his own cost and expense, and to be kept at all times neat, clean, and attractive, and that the same shall, whenever the same is necessary for its proper appearance, be repainted and kept in good condition and repair at all times, and to be operated at least ten (10) months of each year.

"(C) It is further covenanted and agreed that the lessee covenants and agrees to maintain and operate said dance hall continuously for the term of this agreement, and to furnish an orchestra or other music equal to that used or furnished by any other dance hall in the cities of Santa Monica or Venice, California, and to pay all expenses connected therewith; it being expressly understood that notwithstanding any provisions in this lease contained as to the participation of the owner in or to any of the receipts, income or revenue of said business, that the same shall in no sense or wise be construed a partnership, and that the only interest of the owner in said business is the specified percentage or amount to be paid, and that solely as rental for the use and occupation of said premises."

"(E) It is further agreed that the lessee shall at all times carry good and sufficient liability insurance for the payment of all damages accruing to any person, partnership or corporation on account of, growing out of, or connected with the building, erection, conduct or operation of said dance hall and to pay, and keep fully paid, the premiums upon all such insurance. And it is further agreed that in the event that the lessee shall fail to do or make any of the repairs by said lessee to be made, or to furnish or pay for any insurance or other thing to be paid for or furnished by the lessee hereunder, that then and in that event the owner shall have the right to furnish and pay for the same (but nothing herein shall be construed as imposing any obligation upon the owner so to do), and that any amount so paid out shall be repaid to the owner as so much additional rent at the next rent paying period hereunder, and for said and every purpose the payment of said percentages, or any part thereof, shall constitute the payment of rent."

"(I) It is further covenanted and agreed that in consideration of this lease, and the rights and privileges herein granted, the lessee agrees to erect and maintain at his own cost and expense, and without any cost or expense to the owner, the aforesaid dance hall, and to pay the owner as rental for the space herein leased, let and demised, the following amounts, to-wit: For and during the period of time until the lessee has been fully reimbursed out of the profits of the conduct of said dance hall, and every business therein conducted, the owner shall receive fifteen (15%) per cent of the gross receipts derived from the operations of every kind, including sales, rents, privileges and all income derived in or about said dance hall; and for the purpose of the foregoing, 'profits' are hereby defined and declared to be the gross income less the actual cost of operation; provided, however, that no person shall draw or receive more than seventy-five ($75.00) dollars per week out of the receipts until the said building is paid for as aforesaid; and it is further agreed that after said lessee shall have been fully reimbursed on account of the erection and installation of said building, that thereafter the owner shall receive as rental for the remainder of said term, twenty-five (25%) per cent of the gross receipts from every source, less cost of the orchestra and except that derived from the sale of merchandise, drinks and any article sold on said premises, and as to such articles, merchandise, drinks, etc., the owner shall at all times receive fifteen (15%) per cent of the gross sales price.

"Said percentages aforesaid shall be paid daily at the close of business, or at such other time as may be mutually agreed upon by the parties hereto; and it is further agreed that the owner shall have the right at all times to hire and keep employed a cashier to take in and account for the receipts of said business, and that the lessee shall pay the salary of such cashier, not to exceed $25.00 per week."

"(K) It is agreed that in the event (but not otherwise) the lessee shall keep and perform each, every and all of the covenants herein contained to be performed by said lessee, and shall pay at the time and in the manner herein provided all of said rentals, that then and in that event, and at the expiration of said term, the lessee may remove all improvements made or placed upon said premises by said lessee, but that the said removal shall be done in a good and workmanlike manner without injury to the premises, and that no part of said or any improvements placed thereon by the lessee shall be removed until all rentals have been fully paid, and the owner is hereby given and granted a first and prior lien upon everything brought, placed or permitted on said pier by the lessee for any rent due or to become due hereunder, and that any property which the lessee is entitled to remove hereunder shall be removed on or before the first day of December, 1939, and that any property, buildings, fixtures or other property left by the lessee upon said premises after said date, shall be and forever remain the property of said owner."

The principal contention of the appellants is that they have a lien upon all furniture, musical instruments, stock of goods, and such like property that may be brought into the dance hall during the continuance of the lease, and that, upon the failure of the plaintiff to continuously operate the dance hall for a period of ten months during each and every year, then and in that case the defendants have a right to operate the same and charge the expenses of such operation as a personal liability against the plaintiff.

The court found that under the terms of the lease the defendants were not entitled to any lien whatsoever upon the furniture, equipment, pianos, lighting apparatus, music stands, or stock of goods, or any part of such property placed in said dance hall by plaintiff, for any rent due or to become due under the terms of the lease; that the lien of the defendants was limited to the permanent improvements placed on said pier by the plaintiff. The court further found that the plaintiff had the right to remove any of the aforesaid personal property as distinguished from the improvements placed thereon by the plaintiff, and that the defendants had no right to interfere with the removal of such personal property. The court further found that, if the plaintiff failed to furnish the necessary employees and assistants, pay the taxes, etc., and operate the dance hall for a period of ten months of each year, the defendants in that event were not authorized or empowered under said lease to furnish the same, or any part thereof, or charge the same, or any part thereof, against the plaintiff as so much additional rent. The court further found that no personal liability could be charged against the plaintiff in the event that the income of operating the property was not sufficient to pay the expenses thereof. The court further found that there was no provision in the lease authorizing the defendants to operate the ballroom or dance hall in the event that the plaintiff failed so to do. The court further found that the plaintiff had no right to remove any permanent improvements placed on said pier prior to December 1, 1939, and then only in the event that the plaintiff, or his successors in interest, had faithfully carried out all the terms and conditions of the lease. While the court did not so find, it may be here stated that paragraph K of the lease provided the conditions under which the improvements placed upon the pier by the plaintiff might be removed on or before the 1st day of December, 1939, and that, if not so removed, the buildings, fixtures, etc., remaining upon the premises should be and forever remain the property of the owners.

As the remedies which the defendants might have as against the plaintiff by way of an action for damages if the plaintiff failed to operate the lease, as provided for, are not involved in this action, and were not passed upon by the court, though mentioned by counsel, we do not deem it necessary to give any attention to such questions. Nor does it seem necessary to follow counsel in the consideration of the various cases having to do with the interpretation of contracts, as the provisions of the Civil Code, beginning with section 1635 and ending with section 1661, cover all that is involved in this action, save and except as to one word, and that is the word "improvements." In 31 C. J. 307, we find the following: "The term 'improvements' is a broad signification; improvements, or, as they are commonly called 'betterments,' may be designated as the improvements on realty which are more extensive than ordinary repairs, and enhance, in a substantial degree, the value of the property. The term 'improvement' is sometimes used with reference to personal property but ordinarily it is employed in the plural form and with reference to real property only." And in the notes on page 308 of said volume appears the following pertinent statement: "Where the word 'improvements' is used, without any language defining or extending its ordinary meaning, the courts, with substantial uniformity, have held that it relates to improvements to the realty and not to articles in the nature of chattels such as trade fixtures"—citing a number of cases.

The case of Pasadena University Co. v. Los Angeles County, 190 Cal. 786, 214 P. 868, 869, setting forth a rule of construction, is applicable here. It is said in that case: "It is the rule of construction that, where general words follow the enumeration of particular classes of persons or things, the general words will be construed as applicable only to persons or things of the same general nature or class as those enumerated. 36 Cyc. 1119; 25 R. C. L. 996, 997; 2 Lewis' Sutherland's Stat. Const. 803, 804." In reading the lease in question we find no language which changes any of the general rules of construction or give to any of the words used therein a different meaning from that ordinarily attached. With this in view, we will first consider the main contention of the appellants relative to the lien upon personal property.

[1] Paragraph K, after setting forth, as herein shown, certain particulars, contains the following: "It is agreed that in the event, but not otherwise, the lessee shall keep and perform each, every and all of the covenants herein contained to be performed by said lessee, and shall pay, at the time and in the manner herein provided, all of said rentals, that then and in that event, and at the expiration of said term, the lessee may remove all improvements made or placed upon said premises by said lessee, but that the said removal shall be done in a good and workmanlike manner, without injury to the premises, and that no part of said improvements placed thereon by the lessee shall be removed until all rentals have been fully paid, and the owner is hereby given and guaranteed a first and prior lien upon everything brought, placed or permitted on said pier by said lessee for any rent due, or to become due hereunder, and that any property which the lessee is entitled to remove hereunder shall be removed on or before the 1st day of December, 1939," etc. It is this provision of the lease upon which the appellants base their claim to a lien upon personal property. The language of this paragraph is so plain that a simple reading thereof leads to the conclusion that the appellants' contention is untenable. In the very inception of the part of said paragraph relied upon by appellants, the subject of improvements and the removal of improvements is made the basis of all that is therein contained. It is covenanted and agreed that, if the lessee shall have performed all and singular the requirements and conditions of the lease, then he should have the right to remove all the improvements, in a good and workmanlike manner. The following language does not refer to any personal property that might be used by the plaintiff in the dance hall or ballroom, or in the operation thereof, but only refers to everything brought, placed, or permitted on said pier. The word "everything" is a general word following the particular statement of improvements placed upon the premises by the lessee, which the lessee was entitled to remove. It may be said that the character of the personal property referred to in the lease shows that it was of a changing character. Much of it was to be bought and sold, with proceeds thereof accounted for daily. Nor is there any prohibition in the lease relative to the removal of personal property. The subject under consideration, and the portion of paragraph K upon which the appellants rely, has to do with the removal of improvements. In this particular it should be borne in mind that what we have said in relation to the cost of the dance hall or ballroom has a significant bearing. In the event that the terms and conditions of the lease were not complied with, the plaintiff was obligated to leave upon the premises a building costing, as we have said, any sum of money less than the alleged sum of $120,000; that is, the improvement to be placed upon the premises by the plaintiff within the contemplation of the parties at the date of the execution of the lease, and which was thereafter placed upon said premises by the plaintiff, which the parties certainly had in mind when using that term and giving the right to the defendants to hold as security for the performance by the plaintiff of the obligations assumed by him.

[2] A reading of paragraph E shows conclusively that the finding of the trial court in relation thereto is correct. Under certain conditions, as provided in said paragraph, the owners may perform particular acts, and the expenses shall be charged as so much additional rent. There is nothing in any paragraph of the lease authorizing the appellants to perform any acts in the event of a failure of the plaintiff so to do and charge the expenses thereof as a personal liability against the plaintiff.

It is not intended, by any language used herein, to express any opinion as to what remedies, if any, the appellants might have by way of damages against the plaintiff for failure on his part to comply with the conditions of the lease.

The judgment is affirmed.

ing on lot showed that it was a map of a larger tract, without showing that lands involved were a part thereof, and was not map referred to in defendants' deed, objections of defendants to introduction were properly sustained.

J. W. O'Neill, of Oakland, for respondent Julia J. Bryan.

STURTEVANT, J. Claiming that one of defendants' buildings encroached on their lot, the plaintiffs sued to abate an alleged nuisance. From a judgment in favor of the defendants, the plaintiffs have appealed.

The defendants' deed contains a description by metes and bounds, and it also contains the following description: " * * * All of lots 6 and 7 as said lots are shown and delineated on that certain map entitled 'Map of Subdivision of Plat 12, Watson Tract, City of Oakland,' filed April 29, 1879." The plaintiffs assert that the burden was on the defendants to prove the location of the boundary line for which they contend. They do not show wherein the defendants did not do so.

The plaintiffs also assert that the location of the boundary line between plaintiffs' and defendants' line is to be determined by first locating the point of intersection of Bay street and Brooklyn street, as such point existed in 1879. The plaintiffs do not show that this was not done, and the defendants claim it was. From our examination, we find no defect in the showing made.

The plaintiffs say there is no evidence "that the present street lines are the same as when the map was filed." The defendants assert that there is and they quote it. The quotation supports the defendants.

[1] The trial court made a finding in favor of the defendants on adverse possession, and it also made a finding in their favor as the holders of the record title. The plaintiffs contend that the two findings are contradictory. Of course, that is not so. They contend that a finding on adverse possession can rest only on evidence showing both occupation and a hostile intent. The defendants do not dispute the point. However, they show that from 1905 until this action was commenced, in 1926, the defendants occupied the disputed ground, and did so with a hostile intent as to the whole world, including the plaintiffs. In this behalf they show that, to the exclusion of others, they used the strip as a driveway for their vehicles and stock; that they used it for pastureage; that they used it in part for orchard purposes, and in part to build on, and that many years ago they dug a well on it; and that they built a tank house on the strip in dispute. They also showed that since 1925 defendants and their predecessors have erected and maintained a garage standing on that strip and other lands owned by them.

[2] The plaintiffs assert the judgment is against law. They claim there was evidence that the strip of land in controversy is a part of their lot. It may be conceded there was, but it must be conceded, also, that there was evidence to the effect that it was a part of defendants' land. The finding against the plaintiffs, resting on such conflicting evidence, cannot be disturbed by a court of review.

[3] The plaintiffs offered in evidence a map, "Watson Tract 100 Acres." It was a map of a survey made in 1867. The map was filed in the same year. No one of the defendants made it, or caused it to be made. It was a map of a larger tract, of which it is claimed the lands in suit were a part. If those lands were a part, the connection was not shown. It is clear that it is not the map referred to in the defendants' deed. The court sustained the objections of the defendants. It did not err.

We find no error in the record. The judgment is affirmed.

Where evidence in action for damages for personal injuries sustained while riding in automobile was conflicting, question whether relationship existing between driver of automobile and codefendant was that of master and servant or of an independent contractor held for jury.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; E. P. Shortall, Judge.

Action by Sallie R. Lowmiller against Monroe, Lyon & Miller, Incorporated, and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

J. Hampton Hoge, of San Francisco, for appellant Monroe, Lyon & Miller, Inc.

Dinkelspiel & Dinkelspiel and Ford, Johnson & Bourquin, all of San Francisco, for respondent.

NOURSE, J. The plaintiff sued for damages for personal injuries. The cause was tried before a jury and resulted in a verdict in favor of plaintiff for $2,500. From the judgment following the verdict the defendants have appealed upon typewritten transcripts.

The injuries, which are the basis of the action, were caused while the plaintiff was riding in an automobile operated by the defendant Augustine. The negligence of the driver and the amount of the verdict are not questioned on this appeal, the single issue being whether the defendant Augustine at the time of the accident was an employee of his codefendant or whether he was acting as an independent contractor. The defendant Monroe, Lyon & Miller, Inc., which will hereafter be referred to as the corporation, held a contract with the owner for the sale of the lots of the Los Altos Country Club properties located near the town of Los Altos in Santa Clara county. In its office in San Francisco the corporation maintained a large corps of salesmen who had been granted licenses as real estate salesmen by the state real estate commission upon the approval of this corporation. Among these were Mr. Clark, Mr. Black, and Mr. Friedman. A few days prior to August 2, 1925, the plaintiff was handed a card or ticket by a lady standing some place on lower Market street. This card carried the printed signature of the corporation and purported to be an invitation on the part of the corporation to the holder to ride in "our private automobiles" to the site of the property at Los Altos and to enjoy a noonday luncheon at the temporary clubhouse without obligation on the part of the holder. This card directed the holder to telephone the office of the corporation and to ask for Mr. Black. Following the directions upon the card, the plaintiff communicated with Mr. Black and arranged to have an automobile call for her at her home in San Francisco on Sunday, August 2, 1925. Mr. Black personally engaged defendant Augustine, a licensed jitney bus driver, to call for the plaintiff and her friends. At the appointed time Augustine took the plaintiff, her daughter, son-in-law, and two neighbors down the peninsula to the Los Altos Country Club, and there, after having been served with luncheon, they were introduced to Friedman, who presented them with a card showing him to be an employee of the defendant corporation. Friedman then directed Augustine to drive the party over the premises in order to enable him to show them the lots that were for sale. After spending some hours upon the property, Augustine started back towards San Francisco with his party, and before reaching the city of Palo Alto, and while traveling at an excessive rate of speed, he drove his car off the highway and into an orchard, causing the injuries complained of.

It is the theory of the respondent on this appeal that Augustine was merely an employee of the defendant corporation employed for that particular service by one of its agents, and that the corporation is therefore liable for his negligence under the doctrine of respondeat superior. The theory of the appellants is that, admitting the contract between the corporation and the owner of the property, the corporation had orally agreed with Mr. Clark that he might work independently upon the sale of these properties, and that Black and Friedman were employees of Clark at that particular time and for that particular purpose. It is then contended that when Clark and Black arranged for this trip and for the employment of Augustine to drive the car, they were independent contractors and that in turn Augustine as driver of the car occupied the same relation.

The question which is presented on this appeal is simply a question of fact. It would serve no purpose to outline in detail the testimony of the various witnesses tending to prove the theory of the appellants or to extend in this opinion the testimony on the part of the respondent tending to prove her theory. To whatever length we should go, we would come to the same end, that upon this question of fact there was a sharp conflict in the testimony and that that conflict was one which the jury was called upon to determine. We have outlined enough of the evidence to demonstrate that if the jury believed what we have outlined, it was justified in its conclusion that on this occasion Augustine, as well as the three salesmen mentioned, were all employees of the appellant corporation and all subject to its direction and control. Other circumstances pointing to particular elements of the relation of master and servant were brought out by the respondent and are referred to in the briefs, and, on the other hand, circumstances showing elements of the relation of independent contractors were produced by the appellants and are likewise referred to in the briefs. But these merely emphasize the conflict in the evidence before the jury and illustrate the propriety of the rule that, where different conclusions might reasonably be drawn from such circumstances, the question whether the relation was that of master and servant or of an independent contractor is one which must be left to the jury. *Perkins v. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; E. P. Shortall, Judge.

J. Hampton Hoge, of San Francisco, for appellant Monroe, Lyon & Miller, Inc.

Dinkelspiel & Dinkelspiel and Ford, Johnson & Bourquin, all of San Francisco, for respondents.

NOURSE, J. Plaintiffs sued for damages on account of personal injuries to Ruth Colclough. The cause was tried before a jury and resulted in a verdict for plaintiffs in the sum of $5,000. From the judgment following the verdict the defendants have appealed upon typewritten transcripts.

The issues involved are identical with those considered in Lowmiller v. Monroe, Lyon & Miller, Inc. (Civil No. 7053) 90 Cal. App. —, 281 P. 433. The plaintiff Ruth Colclough was a passenger in the same automobile and suffered her injuries from the same accident. In the Lowmiller Case there was one additional item of evidence which is not present in this case, and that is the evidence relating to the delivery to Mrs. Lowmiller of a card or ticket bearing the name of the corporation and entitling her to the automobile ride to Los Altos. It is not clear whether the plaintiff Ruth Colclough saw that card or knew at the time she joined Mrs. Lowmiller on the trip to Los Altos that the card purported to be an invitation from Monroe, Lyon & Miller, or that it bore the name of that corporation signifying the parties arranging for the automobile trip. However, that fact was merely one additional item in the chain of proof supporting the theory of Mrs. Lowmiller in her case, and the absence of that fact in this case does no more than make this case somewhat weaker in proof than the other. All the other facts are present here, and they are sufficient to bring this case within the rule of the Lowmiller Case, and for the reasons stated therein the same judgment should follow in this case.

Judgment affirmed.

In re JOHNSON'S ESTATE. (Civ. 6648.)★

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Oct. 7, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Nov. 6, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Dec. 5, 1929.

1. Judges ⇨49(1)—Trial judge held not disqualified to hear and determine issues in guardianship proceeding on ground of bias.

In guardianship proceeding, trial judge held not disqualified to hear and determine issues on ground that he exhibited bias during trial, where affidavit of alleged bias was late and bias, if any, was impartial as between parties litigant, although possibly single-minded as to interests of minor.

2. Bastards ⇨8—In guardianship proceeding it lay within trial court's exclusive province to believe testimony as to paternity as against mother's denials.

In guardianship proceeding, it lay within exclusive province of trial court to believe affirmative testimony as to paternity of child as against mother's denials.

3. Bastards ⇨8—In proceeding for guardianship of child born before parents' marriage, ruling legitimating child, though not improper, was unnecessary (Civ. Code, § 215).

In guardianship proceeding brought during pendency of a divorce suit between parents, determination of parentage of child, which was born before parents' marriage, and ruling legitimating child, while not improper, were unnecessary under Civ. Code, § 215, making child legitimate under such circumstances.

4. Guardian and ward ⇨13(8)—Failure to dismiss petitions for guardianship, alleging mother who had custody of child was not proper person for such custody, held not error, since rights of parties or of minor could not have been prejudiced.

In guardianship proceeding in which mother and father and mother's sister-in-law each filed petition for guardianship, failure to dismiss petitions, alleging that mother who had custody of child was not fit and proper person to have such custody, and praying for appointment of petitioning party or such other person as might be proper, held not error, since rights of parties or of minor, whose welfare was of main concern, could not have been prejudiced.

5. Guardian and ward ⇨13(4)—Evidence held to justify appointment of disinterested person as guardian, in view of conduct of mother who had custody of child.

In guardianship proceeding, evidence showing that mother who had custody of child entertained drinking parties far into night, and that her home was frequented by persons who drank intoxicating liquors and became boisterous, held to justify appointment of disinterested person as guardian.

6. Guardian and ward ⇨13(1)—Welfare of child, as well as parents' rights, is presented for determination in guardianship proceeding.

It is not alone rights of parents, but also welfare of child, that is presented for determination in guardianship proceeding, and for that reason wider discretion is afforded courts in dealing with matters pertaining to children than in many other cases.

7. Parent and child ⇨2(2)—Though preference is given parental custody of minors, parents have no property rights in children.

Preference is given to parental custody of minors of tender years, but assumption that parents have property rights in children has long since been repudiated.

8. Guardian and ward ⇨13(8)—All intendments from conflicting evidence must be resolved in favor of judgment.

In reviewing judgment appointing guardian, court must resolve all intendments from conflicting evidence in favor of judgment.

9. Bastards §8—Pleadings In guardianship proceeding held to raise issue of legitimization of child (Civ. Code, § 215).

In guardianship proceeding involving child born before parents' marriage, issue of legitimization held sufficiently pleaded to be presented to court, though under Civ. Code, § 215, child became legitimate by subsequent marriage of parents.

10. Courts §475(15)—Court held not without jurisdiction of proceeding for guardianship of child, brought during pendency of parents' divorce action, on ground that court in divorce proceeding acquired jurisdiction of child.

In proceeding for guardianship of child brought during pendency of parents' divorce action, court held not without jurisdiction on ground that jurisdiction of minor was acquired by court in which divorce proceeding was pending, since, if one department exercises authority in matter which might more properly be heard in another, its action constitutes at most an irregularity and does not affect jurisdiction.

11. Guardian and ward §13(8)—Appointment of guardian of estate, as well as of person, of child held not prejudicial.

In proceeding for guardianship of minor, appointment of guardian of person of child and making such guardian also guardian of estate held not prejudicial error, regardless of whether any substantial estate existed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Walter J. Desmond, Judge.

In the matter of the estate and guardianship of Frankie Johnson, also known as Frankie Darro, a minor, in which Frank Johnson and Beatrice Walton petitioned to be appointed guardian, opposed by Ada Johnson. From judgment granting letters of guardianship to L. D. Uhlman, a disinterested person, contestant appeals. Affirmed.

Roger Marchetti, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Ben F. Gray, of Los Angeles, for respondent Frank Johnson.

CRAIG, J. The appellant, Ada Johnson, is the mother of Frankie Johnson, known in theatrical circles as Frankie Darro, a minor under the age of 14 years. It is admitted that she and the respondent Frank Johnson intermarried at Los Angeles on January 15, 1923, and that said minor was born in the city of Chicago on December 22, 1917. On or about June 30, 1928, appellant filed a suit for divorce, alleging as grounds therefor extreme cruelty, since which time she and her husband have been living separate and apart, and said suit was pending at the time of the trial in this proceeding. On September 13, 1928, the respondent Beatrice Walton petitioned the superior court that she be appointed guardian of the person and estate of Frankie Johnson. It was alleged therein that for a period of more than one year prior to the birth of said minor, Frank Johnson and its mother were cohabiting, and that respondent Johnson is its putative father; that by an order issued in the divorce proceeding, Frank Johnson was restrained from visiting his wife and child; and that the latter was in the exclusive custody and under the control and care of its mother. It was further alleged that said minor was employed by the moving picture industries at a salary of $300 per week, from which earnings Ada Johnson had paid $1,000, and had agreed to pay $75 per month toward the purchase of a residence. It was averred that owing to habitual intemperance, depravity, and association with improper persons, practices of immoral acts, and the use of degrading language in the immediate presence of her child, the said Ada Johnson is an unfit and improper person to have its care, custody, and control; that its welfare was imperiled; and that unless the environment and personal care of said minor should be improved, a valuable contract of employment would be canceled, and its estate entirely dissipated. On October 23, 1928, respondent Frank Johnson filed a petition for his own appointment as guardian of the person and estate of said minor, alleging similar facts. In each of these petitions details of deplorable occurrences at the home are set forth which it is unnecessary to relate. Appellant interposed objections to the appointment of either of said petitioners, specifically denying the allegations of neglect and unfitness, and prayed that she be appointed guardian. Pending the hearing, custody of the minor was awarded to Mrs. Walton, and payment of the minor's salary was temporarily restrained. After hearing the evidence, it was adjudged and decreed that Frankie Johnson, "the above-named minor, is the legitimate child of Frank Johnson and Ada Johnson." L. D. Uhlman, a disinterested person, was appointed guardian, and letters were ordered issued accordingly, upon the furnishing of a bond. Ada Johnson appealed from all orders and decrees, and particularly from the one last mentioned, fixing the paternity of the child.

[1] It is first contended that the trial judge was disqualified to hear and determine the issues presented for the reason, it is said, that he exhibited a bias during the trial. It is asserted that, "when the cause came on for hearing, and before any evidence in the cause had been duly introduced, or a witness in the case had been duly introduced and heard," the judge decided and announced his ruling. It is said in the briefs that he called counsel into his chambers, and in the absence of the reporter stated that he had observed the child, was interested in its welfare, and was determined that everything should be done for its benefit; that he was convinced that it had not been living in proper environment; that he even smelled liquor upon Mrs. Johnson when she was on the stand; that Frank Johnson was the father of the child; that it would be legitimated; and that counsel might be able to agree upon the amount each party should receive of its income, and that a person unknown to either party be appointed guardian. It is said that the contestant and appellant thereupon "duly, properly, timely and regularly" disqualified the judge by filing an affidavit of disqualification on or about November 2, 1928, and that no alternative remained than to call another judge because no counter affidavit was filed. The respondent strenuously resists both the legal and the evidentiary grounds of this assertion.

It appears from the record that the affidavit assailing the attitude of the trial court in concluding from what it had observed that neither party should be intrusted with the guardianship, and that amity in behalf of the minor might be propitious, was neither verified nor filed until after evidence had been heard. Witnesses had testified on October 25th, a week previously, to facts strongly tending to support the principal allegations of both petitioners to which the appellant took exception. Mrs. Johnson had admittedly occupied the witness stand in her own behalf as contestant and petitioner, and the remark of the court that she then bore odors of liquor is conceded. She was compelled to admit several charges which she had denied by her answer and as a witness. Following a thorough direct examination of respondent Johnson, the latter was technically cross-examined until a recess was declared, with but slight, if any, effect other than to strengthen his cause. In fact, counsel for the contestant complained that this witness was "evasive," to which the court responded, as the record reveals, that he appeared "more voluble and anxious than evasive." Upon the theory that contestant was wasting the earnings of the minor in lavish and excessive entertainment of friends, a merchant was called to the stand. He testified that prior to the time when the respondent left home bills at his market for food ran from $20 to $30 per month, whereas thereafter they ran from $40 to $65, and that at the time the restraining order was issued Mrs. Johnson owed his market $80 or $90. Not only was the affidavit of alleged bias late, under the circumstances, but if there was bias at all it was impartial as between the parties litigant, although possibly single-minded as to the interests of the minor. We think subsequent developments, which we shall carefully review, wholly justified the denial of the motion.

[2, 3] It was alleged by the appellant, testified by her, and is here insisted, that while still an unmarried woman and prior to her illicit companionship and domicile with the respondent, she committed acts of adultery with one Adolph Gelle, as a result of which the minor in controversy was born to her; that Frank Johnson was not its father; that she had not so considered him nor held him out to others. It is argued that the evidence proved the boy to be an illegitimate child, that appellant was a fit and proper person to have its custody and care, and hence that the superior court had no authority to deprive her of such statutory right. As to its parentage, the respondent testified that he had intercourse with appellant for more than ten months prior to the birth of the child, that they were employed by vaudeville circuits, and traveled and cohabited together constantly as husband and wife during all of that time; that with the exception of nine or ten weeks in Chicago while absent they paid a woman to care for the boy; and that it had ever since been in the constant custody of himself and Ada Johnson. He swore that it had at all times been held out by both parties as their child, that his wife had always told him that he was the father of the child, and he had so believed. It is admitted that the minor was born on December 22, 1917, that the parties thereafter came to California, lived together, and were married in this state on January 15, 1923. Appellant was asked during cross-examination if she and Johnson had lived together as husband and wife for a number of years before the birth of the child, to which she nodded assent, but pressed for an audible reply, she said, "No." A contract with one theatrical enterprise by whom the boy was employed, which she admitted was read to her, was signed by Ada Johnson and approved by the respondent, reciting that the latter was its father. Another contract, dated April 7, 1923, was signed by them both, and recited that they were "the parents of a minor male child of the age of four years." A Miss Dione, an intimate friend of appellant who testified in her behalf, stated that Johnson passed as the father of the child. Respondent also testified that when appellant became angry she stated to him that she was going to swear that he was not the boy's father. It lay within the exclusive province of the trial court to believe the affirmative testimony as against appellant's denials, as it appears to have done. It was admitted that the parties had at the time of the trial been married for a period of about six years, and the parentage of the child having thus been determined, it follows that the ruling legitimating the minor was not improper, although it was wholly unnecessary. Cal. Civ. Code, § 215.

[4] As already observed, Beatrice Walton, appellant's sister-in-law, the respondent Frank Johnson, and appellant Ada Johnson, each filed a petition for guardianship. When the matter came to trial, counsel for appellant and for Mrs. Walton requested a dismissal of the latter's petition. A motion was also interposed for the dismissal of Frank Johnson's petition. After the trial court had read the petition, affidavits, and objections, it appeared that each of the first two petitions alleged that the mother was not a fit or proper person to have the custody of the child, and prayed for appointment of the petitioning party or such other person as might be proper. Issues were thus presented which required judicial cognizance, and rulings upon these motions were reserved. This is assigned as error, but no substantial ground for the objection is advanced, nor can we conceive of any way in which the rights of the parties, or of the minor whose welfare was of main concern, could have been prejudiced. The pleadings of all of the parties raised the question of fitness as to the opposing petitioners, and to dismiss, or in effect strike out, those which joined issue upon the question most vital to the welfare of the minor doubtless would have worked serious injustice transcending any imaginary or selfish interests of the litigating parties. There is no merit in this contention.

[5-8] Upon the merits of the contests of the respective parties, it appeared that the father and mother were not congenial, that they separated, and the mother had instituted divorce proceedings wherein the father was restrained from visiting her or the child. Johnson was out of town much of the time. There is evidence tending to show that the boy was allowed by the mother to run in the streets without sufficient or proper food or clothing; that she entertained drinking parties far into the night; and that her home was frequented by persons who drank intoxicating liquors and became boisterous. Upon one occasion appellant was pushed or knocked against a stove and her eye was badly cut. Respondent testified that he was called to the house, where he found a man lying on his face with a bottle of whisky in his hand, and that appellant was lying on her back, bruised and bleeding; that she was so drunk that she could hardly talk; that "Frankie was there at the time and heard the whole thing"; that spirits of ammonia and black coffee were administered to revive appellant. He testified that he was present when "they were all drunk." From the testimony of other witnesses, including the neighbors, it appeared that automobiles were parked in front of her residence until early in the morning, that neighbors complained of loud noises at night, that her home was raided by the police, and that one of her guests, an uncle, was arrested. She admitted that the police department ordered that she leave Beverly Hills, whereupon she moved to Van Nuys. At the latter residence witnesses testified that there was a great deal of noise nearly every night; that they were awakened, one of them stated, by the drinking and hollering, "give me some more, I ain't half drunk yet, and such things as that"; that more people arrived at 11 and 12 o'clock at night and "stayed towards morning," finally leaving in taxicabs. When asked if other neighbors heard it, he replied, "They sure did, and if they were wanted on anything like that subject to let them know"; that he rang the bell and "did one or two things," but that they only "took it up on the other side of the house." There is proof that one of appellant's frequent visitors brought immoral pictures to the house, and that she personally brought home portions of obscene films which she stated she had seen made at the studio, which she joked about and showed to others. Respondent testified that she drank constantly, night and day, before he was compelled to leave home; that "it was agreed that something must be done; she had spent all of the child's money, had lost the car, and the home and everything else since I had been gone a few months." There were bottles of liquor around the house, according to all of the witnesses, including appellant, and it is apparent that these conditions flourished in the immediate presence of the minor. Appellant's brother Walton swore that he saw the pictures above mentioned; that they were all drinking wine and gin when he was present; that he "saw her feeling good, but never on the floor"; that she was drinking when Frankie, the boy, was running the streets. He further testified that his wife's petition for guardianship was filed because they "wanted to take some steps to stop her running around," "Frankie was being neglected," and that "something ought to be done." Asked if he believed his sister was a fit and proper person to have the custody of the boy, he replied, "Well, she is not at the present time."

We need not further pursue the question as to whether or not the trial court was warranted in concluding that the best interests of the minor would be subserved by the appointment of a disinterested person as guardian of its person and estate. Its education, nurture, and morality were of first importance, and its income, amounting to more than a thousand dollars per month, demanded conservation. The court was justified in believing, as it apparently did, that the surroundings were demoralizing and that the boy was being neglected. It may well have foreseen that the safeguards of harmonious, peaceful, cultural, and refining environment were imperative to the child's future. It is not alone the rights of the parents but the welfare of the child that is presented for determination, and for that reason a wider discretion is afforded the courts in dealing with matters pertaining to children than in many other cases. In re Gutierrez, 46 Cal. App. 94, 188 P. 1004. Much is said in the briefs of appellant regarding her constitutional rights, and the power of the court in such cases. The courts have ever recognized the preference of parental custody of minors of tender years, but the assumption that parents have property rights in children has long since been repudiated. In Anthony v. Tarpley, 45 Cal. App. 72, 187 P. 779, it was argued that unless granted the relief prayed, the parent might suffer great and irreparable injury. It was held that: "The good of the child is regarded as the controlling force in directing its custody, and the courts will always look to this, rather than to the whims and caprice of the parties. Crater v. Crater, 135 Cal. 633, 634, 67 P. 1049; Mack v. Mack, 91 Or. 514, 516, 179 P. 557. The child is not property, but a citizen of the state of California, and as such is peculiarly under its guardianship and subject to its supervisory control." It is not in contemplation of the law that parents shall forever be deprived of the custody of a child. The court may adjudicate the status of the minor, however, and upon sufficient showing it becomes its duty to make proper provision for the guardianship, care, custody, and control of the child. As said by our Supreme Court: "The past failure of a parent to provide for his child may well coexist with a present ability to fully discharge all the duties of guardianship." In re Michels, 170 Cal. 339, 149 P. 587, 589. The most that can be said for appellant's position as to this phase of the case is that the evidence was conflicting, and resolving all intendments in favor of the judgment, as we must, we cannot say as a matter of law that it was error to deny all three petitions for guardianship, and to appoint another person meeting the court's approval.

[9] It is contended that the issue of legitimation was not before the court. In this regard it is sufficient to observe that Frank Johnson alleged that he was the father of said child. Mrs. Walton alleged in her petition that at the time of Frankie's birth his mother "was an unmarried woman, and that for more than a period of one year prior to the birth of said minor the said Ada Johnson was cohabiting with Frank Johnson." Appellant in her answer "alleges that she is the mother of said Frankie Johnson and that the said Frank Johnson, petitioner herein, is not the father of said minor," and upon the theory that the minor was illegitimate, she insisted that she was exclusively entitled to its custody. It became necessary upon this issue so joined that the status of the child be determined, and the court found from the evidence that the minor was not illegitimate for the reason that Frankie Johnson was the son of the respondent and the appellant, and that the parties had intermarried. The question was sufficiently pleaded for the purposes of this proceeding. In this connection appellant attempts to capitalize the fact that in the divorce proceeding both parties alleged that there was no issue of their marriage. Technically true as that may have been, because the child was born before the marriage of its parents, it does not result that the child was illegitimate in fact, and the court, as we have noted, found otherwise. Regardless of birth out of wedlock, section 215 of the Civil Code was enacted for the benefit of the child, that it may not be burdened with the sins of its parents. Estate of Wardell, 57 Cal. 484.

[10] Another point advanced is the contention that jurisdiction of the minor was acquired by the court in which the divorce proceeding was pending. An order restraining the father from molesting his wife and child was obtained, but the divorce case had not been set for trial or even assigned to any particular department. It does not appear that any exception was voiced as to the power of the court to hear and determine this matter when it was called. Appellant's counsel requested that the court familiarize itself with the pleadings, and proceed with the trial as though properly set therein. In any event, the different departments hold but one and the same court (Nickel v. State, 179 Cal. 126, 175 P. 641; Brown v. Campbell, 110 Cal. 644, 43 P. 12), and if one department exercises authority in a matter which might more properly be heard in another, its action constitutes at most an irregularity, and does not affect the jurisdiction. Graziani v. Denney, 174 Cal. 176, 162 P. 397; Carter v. Lothian, 133 Cal. 451, 65 P. 962.

[11] It is argued that this minor had no "estate" within the statutory definition, and that even though a guardian of the person might be appointed, such action is not justified as to the estate of the ward. We are cited to no authority holding that it is error to appoint a guardian of the person of a ward also guardian of the estate, although no substantial estate may exist. No possible prejudice can result from such action. The guardian under such circumstances can have no jurisdiction over such property as belongs to the parents. On the other hand, as guardian of the person, certain funds and personal property must come into the hands of the guardian, at least such as are necessary for the proper support and education of the minor. This, of course, the parents may be required to supply. We conclude as to this point that appellant is not prejudiced by the court's order appointing a guardian of the estate as well as of the person.

From what has been said it becomes unnecessary to consider incidental questions presented which are of necessity embraced therein.

The judgment and orders appealed from are affirmed.

Workman paid wages by piece or quantity comes within provisions of Workmen's Compensation Act the same as if he had been paid by the day.

5. Master and servant ⇨367—Right of control was important in determining whether workman was independent contractor or employee.

Where contractor employed workman to shingle house, and workman employed other shinglers, contractor's right of control was important in determining whether workman was an independent contractor or employee.

Proceeding under the Workmen's Compensation Insurance Safety Act by C. E. Tyler, claimant, opposed by G. H. Johnson, employer, and Chas. C. Woodward and the Pacific Employers' Insurance Company, insurer. From an order of the Industrial Accident Commission granting an award, the employer and insurer bring certiorari. Affirmed.

F. Britton McConnell, of Los Angeles, for petitioners.

G. C. Faulkner, of San Francisco, for respondent Division of Industrial Accidents and Safety.

HOUSER, J. The purpose of this proceeding is to review an order of award of compensation made by the respondent tribunal, known as Department of Industrial Relations, Division of Industrial Accidents and Safety, to one Tyler for injuries sustained by him in the course of his employment.

From the petition for a writ of review and the return thereto, briefly, but so far as are here essential, the facts which said respondent tribunal was justified in assuming were established by the evidence appear to be that one Johnson, who was a building contractor, was engaged in the construction of a house which, in due course and without delay, he desired to have shingled. To that end he made an effort to secure the services of a man who was engaged in that sort of work, but who, owing to press of business, was unable to give the matter his immediate attention. However, in order to accommodate Johnson, he communicated with another shingler by the name of Woodward. It appears that, although Woodward also was engaged on another shingling job, and consequently believed himself unable to devote his personal attention to the proposed Johnson job, he did secure the immediate services of a third shingler named Tyler. It so happened that, after Tyler had commenced work on the job, Woodward found that temporarily he could spare some time from the shingling job on which he was engaged, and consequently, during the first day of the employment, he and Tyler worked together on the Johnson job. Johnson ordered, or at least requested, that the house be shingled as soon as possible. Accordingly, Woodward endeavored to get other men to assist in the work, and succeeded in doing so on the next day after he and Tyler had started the job. So far as the employment was concerned, Tyler had no personal communication with Johnson. The compensation expected for the labor was for no definite total amount, but was understood as having been fixed at the rate of "$1.35 a thousand (shingles) and 3 cents a foot for cut work." On previous similar jobs on which Woodward had worked for Johnson, the manner in which payment had been made was that Johnson paid Woodward the total amount due for labor on the job and out of such sum Woodward paid himself and any men whom he had secured to assist in the work, less a commission of 10 per cent. usually charged by Woodward to such men for his services in procuring the employment for them. However, since the particular job had been taken at a low rate of compensation, and as Woodward personally expected to do no work on it, he had no intention of charging, and did not charge, Tyler or either of the other men any commission for getting the employment for them. As was testified by Woodward:

"Q. How much were you going to take on this job? A. Not a thing.

"Q. Why was that? A. Well, it had been no trouble to me other than a telephone call to get it. I didn't expect to handle the job myself. I expected to turn it over to the men that worked on it."

It also appeared that Johnson assisted in constructing a ladder for the use of the shinglers; that he furnished the shingles and the necessary nails; that, if the work was not properly done Johnson would not be required to pay for it; and that, although other than directing where the work should be commenced and requesting that the job be finished as soon as was possible, he gave no orders in connection with the job, if at any time during the progress of the work he so desired, he had the right, without liability therefor, to terminate the employment of Woodward, Tyler, or any other man employed on the job. Relating to the right on the part of Johnson to discharge Woodward from the employment, Woodward testified:

"Q. Has anybody any control over you? A. Mr. Johnson.

"Q. Could he discharge you? A. Absolutely.

"Q. What time of day? Could he discharge you any time of day? A. Any time he wanted to.

"Q. Could you turn around and ask for the money for the rest of that job? A. No, sir. Not under the conditions that the job was being done."

On the second day of his employment, and in the course thereof, Tyler was injured, and the shingling job was completed by the two other men whom Woodward had secured to assist in the work. Thereafter, on application of Tyler, an order of award of compensation was made by the respondent tribunal in favor of Tyler and against the insurer of Johnson. By the same order Woodward was discharged from liability.

So far as are here material, the findings of fact upon which the order in question was made are as follows:

"C. E. Tyler, applicant, while employed as a shingler * * * by G. H. Johnson, sustained injury occurring in the course of and arising out of his employment. * * * Chas. C. Woodward was not the employer and is entitled to be dismissed and discharged. * * *"

Petitioners herein attack the award and the findings on the ground that the respondent tribunal acted in the premises without and in excess of its power and authority, and that the evidence adduced and the proof made in the matter did not justify or support the findings of fact to which reference has been had.

[1] Obviously the paramount question to be determined is whether from the facts and surrounding circumstances the shingler Woodward, who procured the services of Tyler was an independent contractor. If Woodward was not an independent contractor, it would follow that, within the purview of the provisions of section 8(b) of the Workmen's Compensation, Insurance and Safety Act (Stats. 1917, p. 831, as variously amended), for the injuries sustained by him, Tyler was entitled to recover compensation from Johnson or his insurer. The determinative words of the statute are as follows: "Any person rendering service for another, other than as an independent contractor, or as expressly excluded herein, is presumed to be an employee within the meaning of this act. The term 'independent contractor' shall be taken to mean, for the purposes of this act: Any person who renders service, other than manual labor, for a specified recompense for a specified result, under the control of his principal as to the result of his work only and not as to the means by which such result is accomplished." St. 1917, p. 835, § 8(b).

The case of Hillen v. Industrial Accident Commission, 199 Cal. 577, 250 P. 570, 571, is a "deadly parallel" with the case here under consideration. It is so thoroughly considered, not only as to the facts of the particular case (which are nearly identical with those in the instant case), but also with reference to pertinent authorities, that it would be a waste of time and energy on the part of the members of this court to attempt any elaboration upon the principles of law governing the situation. Among other things, it is there said:

[2, 3] " * * * Whether or not the relation of employer and employee existed in this case, under the oral contract entered into, is a question of mixed law and fact, to be proved like any other question. The finding of the Commission, in effect, that the relation existed between Hillen and Downing, is binding on this court. Pacific G. & E. Co. v. Ind. Acc. Comm., 180 Cal. 497, 499, 181 P. 788. Unless there is such an entire absence of evidence in the record as to render the finding unreasonable, or in excess of the powers of the Commission the court is not empowered to set it aside. Eastman Co. v. Ind. Acc. Comm., 186 Cal. 587, 598, 200 P. 17. The award of the Commission may be annulled only if there is no substantial evidence in support of its findings. Press Pub. Co. v. Ind. Acc. Comm., 190 Cal. 114, 124, 210 P. 820. * * *"

[4, 5] "A workman who is paid wages by the piece or quantity comes within the provisions of the Workmen's Compensation Act the same as one who is paid by the day. Wages may be measured by time, by the piece, or by any other standard. [Citing authorities.] One of the best tests to determine whether the relation is that of an independent contractor or that of employer and employee is the right of control. It is not the fact of actual interference with the control, but the right to interfere, that makes the difference between an independent contractor and a servant or agent. [Citing authorities.] It is not a question of interference, or non-interference, not a question of whether there have been suggestions, or even orders, as to the conduct of the work, but a question of the right to act, as distinguished from the act itself or the failure to act. [Citing authorities.] The evidence in this case fully supports the conclusion that Hillen, through his superintendent of construction or foreman could at any moment direct the details of the work done by Downing. On occasions that was done. Coincident with the right of control is the right of either the employer or the employee to terminate the relation without liability. This is but another way of stating the rule, for the right to immediately discharge involves the right of control. [Citing authorities.] * * * There is nothing in the record to indicate that Downing was not free at all times to discontinue the work without legal liability, and, as to the right of Hillen to discharge him at any time, he testified that if he was discharged the builder 'would pay (him) for what (he) put on and that would be the end of it.'"

Industrial Accident Commission*, 194 Cal. 660, 230 P. 1; Montezuma Mountain Ranch School v. Industrial Accident Commission, 201 Cal. 603, 258 P. 84; Fidelity & C. Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission, 86 Cal. App. 445, 260 P. 928.

It is clear that each of the principles of law hereinbefore set forth and announced in the Hillen Case has direct application to the facts in the instant case.

The award is affirmed.

CONNELL v. CRAWFORD. (Civ. 6843.)★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Oct. 9, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Nov. 8, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Dec. 5, 1929.

Homestead §57(3)—Defendant who had residing on premises with her unmarried brother, 68 years old, held "head of family" under evidence (Civ. Code, § 1261, subd. 2).

In proceeding under Civ. Code, §§ 1245-1261, for appointment of appraisers to appraise homestead property, defendant who had residing on premises with her and under her care and maintenance unmarried brother, 68 years old, held under evidence to be "head of a family," within section 1261, subd. 2, and, as such, entitled to homestead exemption of $5,000.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First, Second, and Third Series, Head of a Family.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; T. W. Harris, Judge.

Action by Mary A. Connell against Jennie C. Lewis Crawford. From an order denying a motion to appoint appraisers to appraise homestead property, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

See also 268 P. 948.

Lovett K. Fraser, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Charles H. Sooy, of San Francisco, for respondent.

NOURSE, J. Plaintiff, a judgment creditor of the defendant, had levied execution upon real property of the defendant upon which defendant had filed a homestead. Plaintiff then instituted this proceeding under sections 1245 to 1261 of the Civil Code for the appointment of appraisers to appraise the homestead property. The trial court denied plaintiff's petition, and she has appealed from the order on a bill of exceptions.

Upon the hearing it was stipulated that all the allegations of the petition were true with the exception of the value of the property, which, it was agreed, was $4,500. The controversy submitted to the trial court was whether defendant was the head of a family under subdivision 2 of section 1261 of the Civil Code, and, as such, entitled to a homestead exemption of $5,000, or whether, being a single woman, she was entitled to an exemption of but $1,000.

Section 1261 of the Civil Code reads in part: "The phrase 'head of a family,' as used in this title, includes within its meaning: * * * 2. Every person who has residing on the premises with him or her, and under his or her care and maintenance, either: * * * (e) An unmarried sister, or any other of the relatives mentioned in this section, [brother] who have attained the age of majority, and are unable to take care of or support themselves."

The facts are that defendant had residing on the premises with her, and under her care and maintenance, an unmarried brother of the age of 68 years. The only question in dispute was whether this brother was unable to take care of or support himself. Two witnesses were called—the defendant and her brother. The defendant testified that her brother was not sick or feeble, that he worked as an interior decorator whenever he had a chance, and earned approximately $20 a week. The brother testified that he worked only at odd jobs, was unable to join a union because of his age and state of health; that he was troubled with rheumatism and could not work upon a ladder because he would faint; that he could not do a whole day's continuous work, but that when he did work he earned sometimes $4 and sometimes $5 a day; that the preceding year was "a very good year for me" having earned gross between $250 and $260, but that in the year before that he did not earn more than $60. He also testified that what money he earned he gave to his sister, but that he did not earn enough year by year to pay for his clothing and board; that his sister gave him his room, prepared and gave him his meals, and did his laundry all without charge; that he was unable, because of his advanced age and enfeebled condition, to earn enough to support himself.

Upon this evidence the trial court made the implied finding that the brother was dependent upon the defendant within the meaning of the section cited. Though there is some conflict, there is evidence to support that finding, and that ends the controversy.

Order affirmed.

PEOPLE v. ROCCO. (Cr. 1823.)★

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Sept. 30, 1929.

Hearing Granted by Supreme Court Oct. 28, 1929.

1. Criminal law ☞641(6)—Requiring defendant in murder trial to proceed under charge of lawyers engaged in defense of one with inimical interests held erroneous (Const. art. 1, § 13).

Action of trial court in compelling defendant in murder trial to proceed under the charge of lawyers engaged in defense of other defendant whose interest was inimical to his after attempt of such lawyers to withdraw held erroneous, under Const. art. 1, § 13, guaranteeing right of all persons charged with crime to appear and defend in person and with counsel.

2. Criminal law ☞641(6)—That defendant indicated desire that counsel continue to act after attempted withdrawal did not prevent error in requiring them to proceed.

Fact that defendant, in response to question by judge after attempted withdrawal of attorneys, indicated a desire that counsel should continue to act for him, did not prevent error in requiring attorneys to proceed, regardless of fact that they were engaged in defense of one whose interest was inimical to that of defendant.

3. Criminal law ☞641(6)—Counsel's attempt to withdraw, after discovering facts showing separate trial of joint defendants was necessary, was not too late after taking of testimony.

Attempt of lawyers engaged in joint defense in murder trial to withdraw, after discovering that interests of defendants required separate counsel, was not too late, after testimony had been taken for some time, where it appeared that statement of counsel relative thereto was made as soon as facts had been ascertained.

4. Criminal law ☞641(6)—Failure of attorneys to present reasons for attempted withdrawal from defense in murder trial by affidavits held immaterial (Code Civ. Proc. § 282, subd. 4).

Failure of counsel attempting to withdraw from defense in murder trial, after ascertaining interests of defendants required separate counsel, to present reasons by affidavits, was immaterial, in view of Code Civ. Proc. § 282, subd. 4, relative to duties of lawyer to use only such means as are consistent with truth.

5. Criminal law ☞1144(13)—It will be presumed that evidence taken at hearing without record thereof will support findings of court.

Where question of sufficiency of evidence is presented on appeal, and it appears that some evidence was taken at a hearing of which no record was made, it will be presumed that such evidence was there heard as will support findings of court.

6. Criminal law ☞641(6)—Action of judge in requiring counsel to proceed after attempted withdrawal could not be sustained merely because there was conference in chambers without record.

Action of trial judge in requiring attorneys appointed for defense in murder trial to proceed after attempted withdrawal could not be sustained upon the mere ground that there was a conference in chambers without record made, in view of fact that private session was sought for purpose of discussion only and to make counsel's position clear.

7. Criminal law ☞1035(3)—Defendant appellant could raise question of counsel's disqualification, regardless of fact that counsel, after attempted withdrawal, had receded from position.

Defendant in murder trial had right on appeal to raise question of disqualification of counsel by reason of being engaged in joint defense of one with inimical interests, regardless of fact that counsel, after attempted withdrawal, had receded from position after being adjudged guilty of contempt.

8. Homicide ☞165—Defendant's statements as to having discussed liquor question with deceased and as to close association with deceased were inadmissible to show motive.

In prosecution for murder, evidence consisting of defendant's statements as to defendant and deceased having frequently discussed liquor question and that both had been engaged in liquor business and were frequently together and in close association was inadmissible for purpose of showing motive.

9. Homicide ☞165—Statements of defendant as to acquaintance with and relation with deceased held inadmissible under circumstances to show opportunity and knowledge.

In prosecution for murder, evidence consisting of statements by defendant as to acquaintance and relation with deceased held inadmissible.

ble for purpose of showing opportunity and knowledge of defendant, in view of circumstances of killing.

10. Criminal law ⚡396(2)—Defendant's statement showing acquaintance and association with deceased were admissible, in view of other portion of statement admitted.

Where portions of statement by defendant in murder prosecution disclosed assertions to effect that he never knew deceased, evidence as to other statements tending to show an acquaintance and association were properly admitted in evidence as showing a consciousness of guilt.

11. Criminal law ⚡396(2)—Neither party is authorized to offer severable part of conversation or statement containing nothing within issues.

Though party is entitled to introduce in evidence the whole of a conversation or statement or to offer the remainder where one party introduces a part of a conversation or statement, nevertheless such rule does not entitle either party to offer a severable part of a conversation or statement that contains nothing that is within issues at time being tried.

12. Homicide ⚡165—Objections to questions as to friendly relations between defendant and deceased held erroneously sustained.

In prosecution for murder, sustaining objections as to questions showing relations between defendant and deceased was erroneous, in view of right of prosecution to offer similar evidence.

Appeal from Superior Court, Ventura County; Edward Henderson, Judge.

Frank Rocco was convicted of murder, and he appeals. Reversed, and remanded for a new trial.

R. D. Knickerbocker, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., John L. Flynn, Deputy Atty. Gen., J. C. Hollingsworth, Dist. Atty., and Don R. Holt, Deputy Dist. Atty., both of Ventura, for the People.

WORKS, P. J. Defendants were charged with the crime of murder and were tried together. Leo was acquitted. Rocco was convicted, and was sentenced to life imprisonment. He appeals from the judgment.

The defendants being unrepresented by counsel when the trial commenced, the trial judge appointed three certain lawyers to conduct the defense of both defendants, and these gentlemen assumed the task thus assigned to them. The counsel who appears for appellant on the present appeal was not one of those so designated, but came into the case after the appeal was perfected. The trial consumed several days. When a little more than one-fourth of the evidence, in volume, apparently, had been submitted to the jury, one of the defense counsel arose in his place, and, in the absence of the jury, addressed the court in part as follows:

"The three counsel who have been appointed by the court have entered upon and attempted to faithfully discharge their duties as officers of the court in representing the defendants jointly as ordered by the court. A situation has now developed, however, where counsel are convinced that they cannot continue to represent the defendants jointly. Counsel respectfully suggest to the court that its order as originally made should have been the appointment of separate counsel to act for each defendant. The order made requiring counsel to represent the defendants jointly was apparently predicated upon an assumption on the part of the court that the true facts in the case were as assumed by the prosecution, from the evidence given before the Grand Jury. Without disclosing to the court what the facts are or what the position of the defendants may or should be in the case, counsel take this opportunity to state to the court on their professional obligation that it has become an impossibility for them to discharge that obligation and continue to represent the defendants jointly in this case. Counsel further state to the court that because of confidential communications and knowledge which have been received from each of said defendants, while endeavoring to act jointly for the said defendants, counsel are now disqualified from representing either one of said defendants separately. Counsel therefore notify the court that it has become imperative for them to withdraw immediately from further participation in this case either as joint counsel for the said defendants or as counsel for either of said defendants separately. * * * In making this statement counsel desire to call to the attention of the court that said statement is made solely and purely because of the fact that in their opinion a fair presentation of the case requires a separation of the interests of each of the defendants one from the other. Counsel further represent that no more definite statement can be made because of the fact that to do so would tend to violate their position as counselors and their oath of office. Counsel are mindful of the language of the Supreme Court contained in the reported case of In re Cowdery, 69 Cal. 32, 35, 10 P. 47, 48, 58 Am. Rep. 545, wherein the Supreme Court states that 'one of the principal obligations which bind him [the attorney] is that of fidelity, under all circumstances, to his client; the maintaining inviolate the confidence reposed in him by those who employ him; and, at every peril to himself, to preserve the secrets of his client.' Counsel believe further, however, that it is not a violation of the duties reposed in them to state generally to the court that in the event counsel continue to act in this matter, either as joint counsel for the two defendants or as separate counsel for either of the defendants, they would find themselves in a situation similar to that occupied by counsel in the case of Weidekind v. Water Co., reported in 74 Cal. at page 386, 19 P. 173, 5 Am. St. Rep. 445, wherein it was held reversible error in a civil case for the court not to discontinue the representation of an attorney in that case who was representing one of the clients. Counsel respectfully call the attention of the court that this is not a motion on the part of counsel requesting that they be relieved from the duties incident to their appointment, and that the court appoint other counsel, but that it is a positive withdrawal under a personal privilege, necessitated by the obligation of their oath of office. Counsel therefore notify the court that it is imperative for them to withdraw from further participation in the case. Counsel are, of course, not precluded from commenting upon the evidence which has been introduced in the case, and counsel would suggest to the court that a careful perusal of the evidence introduced to date will show upon its face the surface indications of a condition which not only exists at the present time, but will become intensified as the trial proceeds and which shows an essential conflict of interest between these defendants. * * * Counsel have made and are making this statement and assuming this position after grave deliberation, and are not unmindful of the gravity of the situation and the complications which might ensue. Counsel can only state that the position which they are adopting is one in which they are in good faith following the admonition of our Supreme Court to preserve inviolate the confidences of their clients regardless of the peril in which counsel may place themselves by so doing. In further explanation of the above statement, counsel believe that it is no betrayal of the interest of their client, or the facts of the case, to state to the court that had counsel accepted the employment upon a basis of ample compensation from friends of the defendants, and a situation arisen such as now confronts counsel, it would be incumbent upon them to take the same steps which have been taken in this case, to return any unearned compensation which had been received and to withdraw from further participation in the case. While that statement is made by way of explanation rather than a part of the statement to the court, it is made as a comment merely for the purpose of further illustrating to the court the position in which counsel find themselves."

To the remarks of counsel, the trial judge made the following response:

"If this statement had been made to the court before the jury was impaneled, the court would have been well inclined to grant the request. Of course, we are in this situation here where defendants are charged with a criminal offense, and the jury has already been impaneled and certain testimony has already been taken. It is impossible now to appoint other counsel."

After a statement by the district attorney, followed by a colloquy between the judge and the defense counsel who had precipitated the argument, the record shows, in part, the following; the defense counsel in question being designated merely as "Counsel", and his two associates, respectively, as "Second Counsel" and "Third Counsel":

"[Counsel]: The court has raised the point that this statement from counsel comes too late. Your honor, we cannot state to you the reason, the judge of this court, upon our oaths as attorneys—

"The Court: I understand.

"[Counsel]:—any more than we have stated. I will, however, state to your honor that we have made this statement to the court at the earliest opportunity that it could be made.

"The Court: I have no doubt of that, Mr. ——. Everything you have said I have taken absolutely as I always have, at its face value. * * *

"[Second Counsel]: If the court please, I do not desire to add anything to the statement that Mr. — has made other than to state that here and now I adopt word for word the statement as read to the court and state to the court that as far as counsel are concerned we make no motion in respect to this case whatever, but we do positively and definitely here and now withdraw as counsel in this case.

"The Court: Well, the court, under the circumstances, Mr. —, which are without precedent or authority, after the jury is impaneled, cannot permit such a thing.

"[Second Counsel]: Then, if the court please, we have no alternative under our oath of office, as we see the situation, but to persist in the withdrawal which we have made to your honor.

"The Court: No, Mr. —, I do not think you intend to persist in your withdrawal when the court—

"[Second Counsel]: We must, your honor. We see no other way out; and not only must, but we do and we will.

"The Court: I do not see how you can. * * * That is unfair to the court and to the whole system of jurisprudence.

"[Third Counsel]: If I may be permitted to make a statement, we worked many hours into the night last night, and carefully deliberated upon our move this morning. We did not arrive at a definite conclusion until we had given the matter thorough and careful consideration. We thought of the position of the court, we thought of the position of our clients, we thought of the position of the district attorney, we took into consideration the people of Ventura county, and I am candid when I say that if there was ever a time in the lives of members of this bar when we needed Divine guidance, we needed it last night.

It might be well if the court would adjourn, if I may be permitted this suggestion, and that we discuss this matter in chambers, as the court may see fit, and perhaps we can more clearly point out our position, in order that the ends of justice may be subserved.

"[Second Counsel]: Mr. ——— has stated that which is entirely proper, that it would be a violation of professional ethics to make any statements of the detailed knowledge which prompts this statement to the court. We would be entirely willing to make such statement in detail to a member of the Judicial Council on his oath of office, and we say without hesitation that in our opinion if that statement were made to any such person he would instantly and definitely advise us and advise this court that in his opinion our position was the only position that, as representatives at the bar, we can take.

"The Court: I must state, gentlemen, that it is impossible for the court to conceive of such a situation. Let me see a copy of the motion. I notice here that counsel 'further hold themselves in readiness to perform the obligations of counsel to the court in any other way that can be done without the violation of professional ethics'. Can there be a violation of professional ethics in continuing after the commencement of a criminal case in which the attorneys have spent two days or more in the examination of witnesses? I am merely making these statements for the purpose of discussion, gentlemen.

"[Counsel]: May I make a statement in aid of the court there, that we are not making a statement of the violation of professional ethics based on the matter of any testimony now in the case. Of course, that is in the record. It is not, in other words, the information that we have received through the record of this case that we have reference to.

"The Court: How in the world could the Judicial Council in any way remedy a situation which, as counsel states, has never been adjudicated? * * * This is the question before the court: Can counsel, who have been appointed by the court and who have entered upon the trial of a criminal case in which the jury has been impeached and in which testimony has been given, withdraw from the case? When you gentlemen were appointed by this court you were appointed as officers of this court to represent the defendants. Now, can you withdraw without the permission of the court? That is the question, gentlemen. The court doubts very much whether you can.

"[Counsel]: Of course, may it please the court, each man must be the sole judge of his own feelings and belief with reference to professional ethics. I doubt even if a court can say to an attorney, 'You have not a right to be the judge of your own professional ethics according to your own conscience.' We feel that this is a duty that rests with each individual, and we have come to this decision only after thorough discussion and deliberation and hours of thought. It goes without saying that we are absolutely sincere in the position we take, your honor.

"The Court: Mr. Leo, do you desire these gentlemen to continue as your attorneys?

"Defendant Leo: Yes, your honor.

"The Court: Mr. Rocco, do you desire these gentlemen to continue as your attorneys?

"A. Yes, sir.

"The Court: Gentlemen, I don't see how, under those circumstances, I can possibly relieve you from the representation of these defendants.

"[Second Counsel]: If the court please, we would be very glad, as counsel has suggested, to discuss in chambers the matter with the court. We are definite in our statement and in our position, and if need be, and however regretful we may be, we will submit ourselves to the judgment of the court in contempt, because to do otherwise we would be violating our professional oaths, and we must maintain our position with such perils to ourselves as may be.

"[Third Counsel]: The situation, if your honor please, seems quite tense, and may I suggest that we have a short recess in order that we may confer with you a few minutes.

"The Court: Very well.

"[Third Counsel]: We believe we can present to you under such circumstances certain situation [sic] that we cannot present in court, but which we would present in open court if, after you have read them, you think they should be."

The presentation of these matters to the court began at 10 o'clock in the morning, and the judge now declared "a brief recess" until 11 o'clock. How long the recess actually lasted, or what transpired in chambers during its progress, is not disclosed by the record. It is merely shown that immediately after the termination of the interim the jury was called into court, and the judge declared a further recess until 2 o'clock. When court reconvened, the following proceedings were had in the presence of the jury:

"The Court: Are you ready to proceed?

"[Second Counsel]: Your honor, we maintain the same position as we stated to the court this morning.

"The Court: I understand, then, from that same position you and each of you attorneys refuse to comply with the order of the court which heretofore has been made, namely, that you represent these defendants in the trial of this cause?

"[Second Counsel]: That is correct.

"The Court: Is that your position, Mr. ———?

"[Counsel]: Yes, your honor, upon the statement made to your honor this morning in the absence of the jury.

"The Court: Is that your situation, Mr. ———?"

"[Third Counsel]: With all due respect to the court, if the court please, that is my position."

The jury was then again excluded, and, after a short recess, the following proceedings were had, in part, the jury still remaining out of the courtroom:

"The Court: Defendants are in court with counsel, and, as I understand, they are ready to proceed for the purposes of the motion we have heretofore made.

"[Counsel]: Yes, your honor.

"The Court: For the sake of the record, gentlemen, I am going to ask you individually, Mr. ———, Mr. ———, Mr. ———, if you will comply with the order of the court to proceed with the trial.

"[Third Counsel]: We refuse at this time, if your honor please.

"[Counsel]: I make the same answer as Mr. ———.

"[Second Counsel]: Same statement, your honor.

"The Court: The court necessarily must find you gentlemen and each of you guilty of contempt. * * * [The] defendants were present in court and it was intimated by the district attorney of this county that he was informed defendants were not represented by counsel. The court interrogated the defendants and ascertained that they were not at that time represented by counsel. The court then appointed three members of the bar of this county, ———, ——— [and] ———, to represent the defendants. Counsel were then informed of their appointment. Mr. ——— and Mr. ——— appeared in court on the afternoon of the * * * 19th day of March, 1929; at that time the defendants were asked if they had any money or property with which to secure and employ counsel, and from their answers it was apparent to the court they did not. Thereafter, on the said 26th day of March, 1929, the court proceeded to the trial of this cause, at which time a jury was selected. That the jury was selected and sworn to try the cause, and thereafter for a day and a half testimony of some of the witnesses for The People was heard; they were cross-examined by the attorneys for the defendants. That on this day a motion was made by attorneys for the defendants in which they stated that it would be impossible for them to proceed in the defense of these defendants because certain information from these defendants had been received by them since the commencement of the trial, which, in their opinion, would make it unethical for them to proceed. The court heard the motion of the defendants and being fully advised in the premises the same was denied. That thereafter the court on several occasions requested you and each of you to proceed with the trial of the cause; to each request of the court there was a refusal on the part of each of you to comply with the order of the court to proceed with the trial in accordance with your appointment. Therefore, I am going to ask you gentlemen a formal question: If there is anything you have to say or legal excuse you have to offer why judgment of the court should not at this time be pronounced upon you.

"[Counsel]: May it please the court, it occurs to me, and I respectfully call the court's attention to the fact, in your honor's order just now made for the record may it also show that upon the date of the commencement of the trial of this action, and pursuant to notice given, a request for continuance was made by the attorneys?

"The Court: That is a correct statement.

"[Counsel]: Also, a little further on in your honor's order reference was made to the testimony taken on the first two days of the trial. The record will disclose the names, I take it, of the witnesses examined?

"The Court: The record will speak for itself.

"[Counsel]: Yes.

"The Court: You have no legal excuse to offer at this time?

"[Second Counsel]: If the court please, for the purposes of the record, the same statement is now made as made this morning in court.

"The Court: Is that your situation?

"[Third Counsel]: It is my position. I present the same reason.

"The Court: That is yours, Mr. ———?

"[Counsel]: Yes.

"The Court: It is the judgment of the court, Mr. ———, Mr. ———, and Mr. ———, that you and each of you be confined in the county jail of the County of Ventura until you comply with the order of the court, namely, proceed with the trial of the cause of The People of the State of California vs. Frank Rocco and Dominic Leo, you and each of you having been heretofore appointed by the court so to do. Remanded to the custody of the sheriff for execution.

"[Second Counsel]: The record now shows we are in the custody of the sheriff.

"The Court: That is what the record shows.

"[Second Counsel]: Where is the sheriff? Are we—

"The Court: The sheriff is right there.

"[Second Counsel]: If the court please, it will be understood we are in the custody of the sheriff from the present time. This leaves counsel with two courses to pursue. One course will be to accompany the sheriff to the county jail and to then issue out a writ to the court of appeal for the purpose of reviewing the order of the court just made. The other course would be to bow to the superior force which has been exerted upon counsel by this court and proceed with the trial of the case. We are agreed that if we were to go to the appellate court and present this situation to that court and that court directed us to proceed with the trial of this case that we would feel as members of the bar and officers of the court that the proposition of law had been definitely settled and that under the law and our statement of the case it would be our duty to proceed with the trial of this case. We appreciate the fact that that particular course of procedure would entail a delay certainly of several days more, probably of a week or two or three weeks, and that during that time we would have the situation of a jury of citizens of this county locked up, a situation where the orderly procedure of the trial of this case would be interfered with and disturbed. We feel that we have now made a record which will protect we three counsel, no matter what eventualities might later come about in this case. Therefore, we feel, as good citizens having the interest of the county of Ventura and the court at heart, we will take the latter of the two courses of procedure, that we will bow to the will of this court, and we now offer to proceed under protest and upon the same statement which we have heretofore made to the court.

"The Court: Do you desire any recess? If not we will proceed.

"[Second Counsel]: Very well, you may go ahead.

"The Court: Very well. Call the jury. Gentlemen, let the record show that having agreed to comply with the order of the court you have purged yourselves of contempt and are no longer in the custody of the sheriff."

We have taken thus copiously from the record—although, indeed, much that was said during the presentation of the motion has been omitted—because we think the situation disclosed by the proceedings is one of the most important, touching the duties of attorneys at law and bearing upon the relations between lawyers and courts, that has ever come before the judicial tribunals of California, as it is contended that the trial judge erred in declining to release the three counsel from the obligation he had imposed upon them, and because the various questions presented require a full statement of the facts.

[1] It is provided by section 13 of article 1 of the State Constitution that all persons charged with crime "shall have the right * * * to appear and defend, in person and with counsel." In the enlightened polity of civilized nations there are few, if any, guarantees that are more precious to the people than this. The right is so firmly fixed, not only by constitutional mandate, but in actual practice, that it is doubtful whether a case can be found in modern times in which it has been absolutely denied any person by any court in an English speaking country. In a case in which the right of one charged with crime to consult with his counsel while suffering incarceration was in question, it was said that the right "is one of the fundamental rights guaranteed by the American criminal law—a right that no legislature or court can ignore or violate" (In re Rider, 50 Cal. App. 797, 195 P. 965), and the case proceeded upon the theory that the right to consult counsel was one included within the right to defend by counsel. The question here to be decided is whether the trial court invaded the right of appellant to defend through the efforts of attorneys at law by compelling him to proceed under the charge of lawyers engaged in the defense of one whose interest was inimical to his.

[2] Respondent contends, upon various grounds, that the trial judge did not err in ordering the three lawyers to continue to act as counsel for appellant. It is said, first, that the order was proper for the reason that, in response to a question put to him by the judge, appellant indicated a desire that the counsel should continue to act for him. This point is so palpably ill-founded, for various reasons, that it seems not worth while to expend any considerable time in disposing of it. It is enough to say that the three lawyers knew the circumstances which rendered the position of Leo, as a defendant in the case, inimical to that of appellant, while appellant himself did not. At least, we cannot assume that Rocco knew the nature of any communication which Leo may have made to the three lawyers, especially considering the high-minded attitude—with exceptions hereafter to be noted—assumed by them before the court and concerning their duty to maintain inviolate all communications made to them by either of the defendants. In responding to the question put by the court, Rocco answered, therefore, without a full understanding of the circumstances upon which, only, an answer could have been based—granting, in considering this particular question, that under any circumstances he could have made an answer, founded upon his judgment alone, which would have controlled the situation.

[3] It is said by respondent that the attempt of the three lawyers to withdraw from the case came too late. We quote from the brief: "The cause proceeded to trial and testimony was taken for a period of three successive days [but the trial judge says it was a day and a half], whereupon for the first time counsel for defendant asked leave to be permitted to withdraw from the case on the ground that the interests of the two defendants were opposed to each other, and that they were entitled to separate counsel to represent them. This, we submit to the court, was, under all the circumstances, a most extraordinary request. * * * Counsel can certainly not be permitted to speculate upon the outcome of a trial, have testimony taken for several days, and then seek to have a mistrial declared, or the case indefinitely continued so that the court might appoint independent counsel to represent the defendants." The duty of the representative of the state who penned this language did not require him to take the attitude represented in part by it. Counsel's "request," as respondent terms it, was not extraordinary. Indeed, it would have been most extraordinary if counsel had not made the announcement of their withdrawal, under all the circumstances which impelled it. Again, there is not the slightest ground for the insinuation that the counsel made their announcement after having speculated on the outcome of the trial. The insinuation is not only unfair to counsel, but it does violence to the attitude of the trial judge toward them during the trying time through which they passed. One of the counsel said that "we have made this statement to the court at the earliest opportunity that it could be made." To this the judge responded: "I have no doubt of that Mr. ——. Everything you have said I have taken absolutely as I always have, at its face value." If, however, the judge had not thus testified to his faith in counsel, the result must have been the same. Fidelity to their clients forbade a disclosure of the communications which had been made to them, and their obligation as sworn officers of the court was such that it must be presumed that they spoke truth when they stated the effect which the disclosures had wrought upon their minds. Nor, in presenting their statement, did counsel "seek to have a mistrial declared" nor to have "the case indefinitely continued." In short, in closing upon the particular point now under scrutiny, the statement of counsel did not come too late. It could not have come earlier. That fact is indisputably fixed by the record.

[4] It is next contended by respondent that the reasons for the attempted withdrawal of counsel were not presented by affidavits. It is to be observed, in viewing this point, that practically no matters of fact were communicated to the court except the mere statement that some communications, the name of which were not disclosed, had been made to the lawyers by each of the defendants. The substantial matter stated was that counsel concluded that they could no longer represent the defendants jointly nor either of them separately. This assertion, necessarily, and also, as they expressly stated, they made on their "professional obligation." We cannot see how the presentation of the statement upon oath taken before a notary public could have made it more fit and proper for the consideration of the trial judge. It is a part of the duties of a lawyer "to employ, for the purpose of maintaining the causes confided to him, such means only as are consistent with truth, and never seek to mislead the judge or any judicial officer by an artifice or false statement of fact or law." Code Civ. Proc. § 282, subd. 4. This obligation rests upon him throughout his professional career, and for a breach of it he may be deprived of his license as a lawyer. We think these circumstances show a sanction, securing against the falsity of counsel's statement, at least as binding as the oath which accompanies an affidavit. But, even if this were not so, the point made by respondent is not good. Neither the judge nor the district attorney suggested that the matters stated by the lawyers should be made to appear by affidavit. Not only so, but at one time, as we have already pointed out, the judge announced that he took as true everything that counsel had said up to the time the judge spoke. We think the statement of counsel was made in proper form. An affidavit from them was not necessary.

[5, 6] There are two other points involved in the action of the trial judge in forcing counsel to continue to act for the two defendants, neither of which points is made by respondent. It will be noted from the record that some sort of hearing or consultation was had in the judge's chambers while the matter presented by counsel was under consideration, and that the record fails to show what transpired at this private session. If the session appeared from the transcript to have been held for the purpose of presenting evidence to the judge, and it further appeared that evidence was heard by him thereat, the point now made by appellant would not be open to him. There is abundant authority, without citing it, for the proposition that, where a question of sufficiency of evidence is presented on appeal, and it appears that some evidence was taken at a hearing of which no record was made, it will be presumed that such evidence was there heard as will support the findings of the court. Here, however, it was suggested only, after the statement of counsel's position had been fully made to the court, that "we discuss this matter in chambers, * * * and perhaps we can more clearly point out our position." This suggestion was in effect repeated by one of the counsel immediately before the session in chambers, although one of the others added that a "situation" could there be presented which could not be disclosed in open court. After the private hearing and after the noon recess, one of the lawyers remarked that "we maintain the same position as we stated to the court this morning." During the statement he made in accompaniment to the order adjudging the lawyers guilty of contempt, the trial judge said: "That on this day a motion was made by attorneys for the defendants in which they stated that it would be impossible for them to proceed in the defense * * * because certain information from these defendants had been received by them since the commencement of the trial, which, in their opinion, would make it impossible for them to proceed. The court heard the motion * * * and being fully advised in the premises the same was denied." Soon after these remarks one of the counsel said that "for the purposes of the record, the same statement is now made as made this morning in court." The three were then sentenced and committed to the custody of the sheriff. We can see in the entire circumstances involved in the point under discussion no reason for a presumption that there were occurrences at the session in chambers which would uphold the action of the trial judge, assuming for the moment that the record as made in the courtroom fails to do so. The private session was sought for the purpose of "discussion" only and to make counsel's position "clear." We cannot assume that they disclosed to the judge in his chambers the communications which had been made to them by the defendants. Not only had they pointedly—and very correctly—declared in the courtroom that it was their duty to maintain inviolate the confidence reposed in them by their clients, although they so far forgot themselves as to offer to disclose the privileged matter to some member of the judicial council, but after the session in chambers they in effect repeated in its entirety the statement they had made in the morning. In his remarks made just before he committed the counsel to the custody of the sheriff, the judge spoke as if the judgment of contempt was rendered upon the statement made in open court. We think the judge's action cannot be sustained upon the mere ground that there was a conference in chambers and that no record was made of it.

With the exception of the offer concerning a member of the judicial council, the attitude of the lawyers before they were sentenced was highminded and praiseworthy. After the sentence they receded from the position which they had so gallantly assumed. Forgetting that they were not before the court of last resort of the state, they bowed to the force displayed by the trial judge, preferring that course to the relatively insignificant ignominy of suffering an imprisonment until their release could be procured upon application to a higher tribunal. The one of the counsel who made the principal statement to the court, after outlining the situation which confronted them, said: "Counsel therefore notify the court that it has become imperative for them to withdraw immediately from further participation in this case. * * *" He further said that "this is not a motion * * * but that it is a positive withdrawal under a personal privilege. * * *" One of the other counsel, when the judge put forth a remark to the effect that he could not "permit such a thing" as the withdrawal of the lawyers, responded, "we have no alternative under our oath of office, as we see the situation, but to persist in the withdrawal which we have made. * * *" The judge then observed: "I do not think you intend to persist in your withdrawal when the court—" And the counsel answered: "We must, your honor. We see no other way out; and not only must, but we do and we will." A little later the counsel who had been the chief spokesman of the three made this significant statement, one which was fully justified, at least as addressed to the court to which he made it: "[E]ach man must be the sole judge of his own feelings and belief with reference to professional ethics. I doubt even if a court can say to an attorney, 'You have not a right to be the judge of your own professional ethics according to your own conscience.' We feel that this is a duty that rests with each individual, and we have come to this decision only after thorough discussion and deliberation and hours of thought."

[7] It is to be regretted that the lawyers did not maintain to the end the attitude which they assumed with such apparent bravery and determination. That they did not do so gives rise to the second of the two questions which, as we have observed, are not presented by respondent. The lawyers had the entire question in their own hands. They could have settled it by refusing to act despite the fact that they had been sentenced for contempt and committed to the custody of the sheriff. Is appellant precluded from presenting the question now before us for the reason that the lawyers did not protect him from the danger of a representation by disqualified counsel when it was in their power to do so? We think not. It will be observed that the lawyers dealt with the question before the trial judge largely as one of professional ethics. So it was. But when they spoke for themselves, as they did so masterfully, they spoke also for appellant. What they referred to partially as a question of ethics was one also of vast moment to appellant, one which affected deeply his rights under the Constitution, and this, of course, they thoroughly understood. They could desert their attitude so far as it involved merely a question of professional ethics if they chose, but they could not desert it in its aspect as affecting the constitutional rights of appellant. After what they had said so vigorously as to the conscientious scruples under which they labored, a desertion of their position merely involved them in the error which was committed by the trial judge in his successful attempt to force them to act. The counsel made themselves parties to the error. In their submission to the will of the judge, they could not drag appellant along with them. In truth and in legal contemplation appellant was without counsel from the moment when they, by their statement to the court, made their disqualification an unrefuted fact in the case. We are satisfied that the point now insisted upon by appellant is open to him despite the fact that the counsel receded from the thoroughly defensible position they had taken.

As we have indicated several times during the progress of our discussion, we are convinced that the trial judge erred in the course he took in response to the statement of the three lawyers. He did all he could to deprive appellant of the important right to be heard in court by counsel, a right guaranteed to him by the Constitution. We have not been at pains to examine minutely the record, pursuant to the provisions of section 4½ of article 6 of the Constitution, in order to determine whether the error has probably resulted in a miscarriage of justice. Without an examination of the entire record, including the evidence, we find it impossible to say whether appellant would have been convicted but for the error, and we should be in exactly the same position if we were to make the examination, especially as the evidence against him was wholly circumstantial. With the scrutiny or without it, we should be bound to say that there is great probability that there has been a miscarriage of justice because of the error of the court, in which the three lawyers mistakenly joined and to which they, with erring judgment, submitted. It is to be observed that the counsel were enabled to procure an acquittal of appellant's codefendant. From the moment they determined to make to the court the commendable statement they actually presented the next day, they abode in the conscientious belief that they might do injustice to one or the other of the defendants by remaining in the case as the counsel of both or of either. Like Desdemona, in tragic contemplation of her father on the one hand and the dusky Moor on the other, they perceived a divided duty. It is impossible to say to what extent, in discharging their duty to the acquitted defendant, they did violence to their duty to appellant. By the record they have certified to us in the most positive terms, under their oaths as attorneys at law, their apprehension that, if they continued in the case they might sacrifice the rights of one or both of the defendants. The acquitted defendant, by the verdict, is placed beyond the reach of harm. We cannot say to what extent appellant was harmed by the efforts which saved his codefendant, or by a remission of effort in his behalf, caused by fidelity to the defendant whose position before the court, in the minds of the lawyers, was inconsistent with his own.

As affecting the question whether it is incumbent upon us to peruse the lengthy record of the trial, we refer to the language of the Supreme Court in a late case: "The fact that a record shows a defendant to be guilty of a crime does not necessarily determine that there has been no miscarriage of justice. In this case the defendant did not have the fair trial guaranteed to him by law and the constitution." People v. Mahoney, 201 Cal. 618, 258 P. 607, 610. We can conceive of no case to which this language is applicable if it is not apposite to one in which a defendant is denied the right to appear and defend by counsel. We are satisfied that a reversal must result.

In support of the view which we have adopted under appellant's claim of error upon the point of which we have just made disposition, appellant cites People v. Bopp, 279 Ill. 184, 116 N. E. 679. Respondent contends that the case is not in point. We have not attempted to settle this controversy, purely academic as it is to us. We have made no examination of the case, and cite it merely for the perusal of those who may desire to examine further into the question presented by the record before us. To us the point is plain without the aid of judicial precedent.

It now becomes necessary to determine such points made by appellant as are likely to arise on a new trial. The prosecution offered in evidence three statements made by appellant. All three were in writing and in the form of question and answer; the material having been taken in shorthand and afterwards transcribed. The statements were each objected to as a whole, and in addition specific objection was made to every question and answer contained in each. The objections were overruled, and the statements were received in evidence.

The first statement was taken in the sheriff's office; questions being propounded to appellant by a deputy sheriff and by a captain of police. Some portions of this statement are now pointed to as having been erroneously received. We shall list and number these portions for the purpose of making convenient reference to them hereafter:

(1) "Q. Where are these girls that you were living with at the apartment in Venice? A. I don't know, I picked them up."

(2) "Q. Ever go down to Venice? A. Yes. Q. Did you go down there with these two girls, an Italian girl and a blonde? A. When? Q. A few nights ago? A. Yes, sir. Q. Where did you go down there? A. To an apartment house. Q. What is the name? A. I don't know. Q. You went in and registered there? You registered under the name of Henry Barona? A. No. Q. You went down there and stayed there under the name of Barona—stayed there with an Italian girl called Tony? A. I picked them up. Q. Who was with you? A. There was this blonde girl. Q. Who was with the blonde girl? A. She was all alone. Q. Who was down there at Venice staying with this blonde girl? A. Nobody. Q. Who was the other guy with you? A. That was my friend there, Leo. Q. Who else? A. That is all. Q. Who stayed with the blonde girl? A. Nobody. Q. You stayed with the blonde girl? A. Yes, sir. Q. Are you sure you did? A. Yes, sir. Q. As a matter of fact you stayed with the Italian girl, isn't that so? A. Yes, sir."

The second statement was taken in the office of the district attorney, the questions being asked by that officer. The portions of the statement which are now said to have been erroneously received are here listed, with a continuation of the numbering above commenced:

(3) "Q. What were you doing [at a certain specified place]? A. I had a pool room over there, and we used it to sell some stuff on the side. Q. What were you handling, a little alcohol? A. Yes. Q. Alcohol on the side? A. Yes, sir. * * * Q. Some alcohol racket between yourself and [the deceased]? A. No sir. Q. There was some alcohol in the deal? A. No, sir. * * * Q. And you talked to [the deceased] about running alcohol? A. Yes, sir. Q. And he told you he might get you in on the game, didn't he? A. No. Q. Well, but you know it was all right. You would have gone in if everything was all right there, wouldn't you? A. No, sir. Q. You would not do that? A. No. If I was in good health, maybe if I could make a few dollars—Q. Sure! If you could turn a few dollars you were going to do it. A. Well, there ain't no harm in bringing a load of stuff over. Q. You know how to bring a load over? A. Well, maybe I could bring a load. Q. I know; but you were out here from Boston and you knew how to do it, and were in the business back there. A. Why, anybody knows that racket. Q. Well, I know; but everybody don't know that racket. You knew it, didn't you? A. Why, I knew it all the time—the racket—Q. Why, sure you knew the racket all the time, and you got in with [the deceased] there, and you knew he was running alcohol; and if you could make a few dollars you were not going to throw it away, were you? A. Why, no. Q. Certainly not. You were out here in California and it was nice weather and you had a good car and about $900 in your pocket, and found you could pick up a little easy money in the meantime."

(4) "Q. Well, when did you see [the deceased] again? A. I seen him when he picked his girl up; when I picked this girl up at the Louise Hotel. Q. What girl? A. A girl by the name of Tony. Q. Was she a friend of Morosco? A. I don't know. Q. Was it Morosco? A. No, Morisco. Q. Did you know what her name was? A. No, I see in the paper what it was. Q. How did you happen to pick her up at the Hotel Louise? A. I see her in the lobby there, and she came over to me. Q. Now, when was this? Let's get the date as near as we can? A. Well, it is a little over two weeks—about 17 or 18 days. Q. Of course, this was before you had met Brady? A. Yes. I was up at the Louise Hotel and she was living there with somebody. Q. Tony was? A. Yes, sir. Q. Who? Do you know? A. Some fellow by the name of Patty. Q. What was his last name? A. I don't know his last name. Q. Who introduced you to Tony? A. Nobody introduced me to her. Q. You just picked her up? A. Yes, sir. Q. Where, in the lobby? A. Yes; and then we went to have something to eat, and then we went to the room. Q. Went there to your room 311? A. Yes; and stayed there awhile until half past three or four o'clock in the morning, and she went off again. Q. How long did she stay in your room? A. She stood [sic] there about seven or eight hours. Q. Was Leo there at the time? A. No, sir. Q. Where was he? A. I made him sleep with this other fellow. Q. Who? A. This 507. Q. You made Leo go over with 507? A. Yes, sir. Q. Who was in 507? A. Fellow by the name of Jimmie. Q. You mean Jimmie, the Priest? A. Yes, sir. Q. Well, you stayed in the room with Tony? A. Yes, and then about half past three or four o'clock in the morning she went away to her own room and she says, 'In the morning I am going to pack my clothes and bring them down.' Q. In other words, she was going to bring them into your room? A. Well, she said she couldn't stay there. Q. She would come down in the morning? A. Yes, sir."

The third statement was also taken at the office of the district attorney and the questions were put by that officer and by the sheriff. We list the portions to which objection is now urged, continuing the same scheme of numbering:

(5) "Q. * * * Listen here, Rocco. You said you were telling me the truth. A. Yes. Q. But you did not. A. I did. Q. No, you did not, and I will tell you where you were not. You brought your wife out here. A. Yes, sir. Q. You lied to me. I asked you who came out here with you and you told me just the two of you. Leo brought your wife down to New York to meet you. What did you keep that back for?"

(6) "Q. What was the difficulty with your wife? A. She didn't want to stay here; she didn't like to stay here. Q. Why didn't she? What was the racket you had in the hotel that night—the night before she left? * * * You had trouble with your wife, then. What was it? A. Oh, I always have trouble with my wife. Q. Well, you were having a quarrel with her? A. Yes."

(7) "Q. Does your wife know about your going there with this other girl Tony? A. No, sir. Q. Right away after your wife left you picked up with this other girl, Tony Morisco? A. A few days after she went. Q. You went right down with Tony, didn't you? A. Yes."

(8) "Q. Now, you were in the penitentiary once before, weren't you? A. Yes, sir. Q. Where? A. At 59th street. Q. 59th street? A. Yes, sir. Q. New York City? A. Yes, sir. Q. Under what name? A. Frank Rocco. Q. What were you sent there for? A. Vagrancy. Q. Did you go to the penitentiary for vagrancy? A. Workhouse, that is what they called it—not penitentiary. Q. How long did they send you up for? A. Six months."

At the conclusion of the reading of the three statements, one of the counsel for appellant assigned the presentation of them to the jury as misconduct of the district attorney. The trial judge remarked, merely: "Note the assignment of the attorney for the defendants and proceed."

Respondent contends that these matters were all properly received in evidence upon six grounds, to which, for convenience, we shall hereafter refer by the letters A, B, C, D, E, and F.

[8] Respondent's proposition A is to the effect that the evidence was admissible for the purpose of showing motive. Prefacing with the statement that the name of the man with whose death appellant was charged was Brady, we quote from respondent's brief: "It was certainly competent in the case at bar to introduce evidence by way of statements voluntarily made by appellant showing the relations existing between the two men, that they had frequently discussed the liquor question, that they had both been engaged in the liquor business, and that they were frequently together and in close association; and furthermore that the defendant Rocco knew that the deceased Brady was about to leave for the north to bring through 'a load,' evidently referring to illicit liquor." We think that no motive for the killing of Brady by appellant was disclosed by any part of the record above quoted through a showing that the two "had frequently discussed the liquor question," or "that they had both been engaged in the liquor business," or "that they were frequently together and in close association." The fact that "Rocco knew that the deceased Brady was about to leave for the north to bring through 'a load'" is entirely beside the mark, as the circumstance was not made to appear by any of the questions or answers to which appellant now takes exception.

In further developing proposition A respondent says in the brief: "In this connection it will be noticed that after the finding of the body of the deceased with the pockets turned inside out, a further search of the body at the undertaking parlors showed that the deceased had the sum of $220.00 in his inside shirt pocket, which was evidently overlooked when his pockets were turned inside out." We cannot perceive that this assertion aids in determining either the propriety or impropriety of allowing the jury to have any of the questions or answers embraced above in paragraphs numbered from 1 to 8 inclusive.

[9] Proposition B is that the evidence was admissible "to show opportunity and knowledge on the part of appellant." We cannot conceive how any of the questions or answers stated in paragraphs 1 to 8 helped to show "opportunity or knowledge," when it is observed that the death of Brady was unconnected with any event disclosed by those questions and answers. Other evidence in the record showed without dispute that Brady and the two defendants, at 10:30 on a certain evening, left an apartment house in Venice, in the county of Los Angeles, in an automobile belonging to appellant, with appellant at the wheel, and, omitting certain occurrences in the interim, that the body of Brady was found in a field in the county of Ventura at 4:30 on the next morning. We think no question or answer in the eight paragraphs added in any degree to this complete showing of "opportunity and knowledge."

[10] It is contended, as proposition C, that the evidence was "admissible to show a consciousness of guilt." In support of this contention, respondent points out that some of the questions and answers set forth in the eight paragraphs show that appellant was well acquainted with Brady and was in close association with him immediately before his death, while portions of the statements made by appellant and not contained in those paragraphs disclose assertions by him to the effect that he never knew Brady. Under these circumstances we think that all questions, together with the answers thereto, which tend to show an acquaintance and an association between Brady and appellant, and which are shown in paragraphs numbered 3 and 4, were properly admitted in evidence.

Proposition D presents the contention that the evidence was admissible "to show the relations and situation existing between the defendant [Rocco] and the deceased." This ground is well taken in so far as the questions and answers tend to show an association and relationship between the two men. Such questions and answers are to be found in paragraphs numbered 3 and 4.

[11] It is insisted by proposition E that each of the three statements of appellant was admissible in its entirety "under the doctrine of verbal completeness." By this we understand that respondent invokes the well-known rule of evidence to the effect that a party is entitled to introduce in evidence the whole of a conversation or statement, or that, where one party introduces a part of a conversation or statement, the other party may offer the remainder. This rule, however, does not entitle either party to offer a severable part of a conversation or statement that contains nothing which is within the issues at the time being tried by the court. 27 Cal. Jur. 105; Jones, Ev. § 822. Certainly the rule cannot permit the prosecution in a criminal trial to offer, as a part of its case, admissions by the defendant that he has committed other crimes or indulged in immoral practices or pursuits, merely on the ground that the admissions are contained in the same conversation or statement in which are disclosed matters relevant to the inquiry in progress. Respondent's proposition E adds nothing to the contentions advanced in the five other propositions which accompany it.

Proposition F is that "the statements were admissible in their entirety as a part of the prosecution's main case." Disposition is made of this point by what is said in the last preceding paragraph of this opinion.

We are satisfied that the trial court committed error and that the district attorney was guilty of misconduct in giving to the jury all the questions and answers set forth in our numbered paragraphs 1 to 8 inclusive, with the exception of those declared to be proper during the consideration of respondent's propositions C and D. Upon the score of the district attorney's misconduct, it is pointed out by respondent that counsel for appellant at the trial did not make to the court a request to admonish the jury to disregard the improper questions and answers. This point bears merely upon the effect to be ascribed to the misconduct and not upon the question whether it was committed, and is not now of moment, for the reason that we have already determined that a reversal must be ordered because of the error committed by the court upon the point we have first considered. The effect of the misconduct of the prosecutor is of no interest for another reason. The court erred in exactly the same matters to which the misconduct related, and the effect of the error was not dissipated by a failure to ask that the misconduct be cured by admonition.

[12] Appellant's counsel at the trial addressed the following questions to a witness who had seen appellant and Brady together: "Q. What was their attitude toward each other? Did you observe that? * * * Q. Did they seem friendly? * * * Q. Was their attitude friendly?" Our discussion above as to the right of the prosecution to offer similar evidence shows the rulings sustaining objections to these questions were error.

Other points are made by appellant, but we think they are not likely to arise upon a second trial of the cause.

Judgment reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial.

DUKE et ux. v. LEVY et al. (S. F. 12652.)★

Supreme Court of California. Oct. 15, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Nov. 14, 1929.

- 1. Usury ☞137—Debtor held not entitled to difference between amount of loan and note trebled, where no payment had been made (Usury Act).

In debtor's action for treble amount of usurious charge, where debtor had borrowed $2,000 and had given note for $2,500, no part of which had been paid, and debtor claimed to be entitled, under Usury Act (St. 1919, p. lxxxiii), to have difference between sum of $2,000 and $2,500 trebled and deducted from amount of their indebtedness, held debtor was liable for $2,000 and not entitled to such deduction, as recovery can be had only where payment has been made.

- 2. Usury ☞140—Where maker of note given as security for loan to borrower paid usurious interest to borrower, who transmitted money to holder, held borrower was not entitled to benefits of Usury Act (St. 1919, p. lxxxiii).

Where borrower caused third party to execute note as security for sum borrowed, and maker thereafter gave usurious interest money to borrower to be transmitted by borrower to holder of note, and borrower did so transmit, held borrower was not entitled, under Usury Act (St. 1919, p. lxxxiii), to have amount of interest payment trebled and deducted from indebtedness, as borrower had not made such payment.

- 3. Usury ☞102(1)—If transaction was usurious, borrower could not recover amount of usurious charge, where no money had been paid on such account.

Borrower could not recover amount of charge even though transaction was usurious, where no money had been paid on such account.

4. Execution 158(1)—Where order staying execution was improperly granted, court's order setting aside such prior order held proper (Code Civ. Proc. § 945).

In borrower's action for treble amount of usurious charge, where court held that legal portion of obligation and deed of trust were enforceable, trial court did not err in setting aside its prior order staying execution on judgment, as under Code Civ. Proc. § 945, such order staying execution was improperly granted.

Appeals from Superior Court, Alameda County; J. D. Murphey, Judge.

Three actions by George E. Duke and wife against Irving S. Levy and others, consolidated by stipulation for purposes of trial and appeal. From judgments for defendants and orders after judgment vacating the prior order staying proceedings on the judgments, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Superseding opinion 274 P. 1031.

Robert E. Hatch, of San Francisco, and G. E. Duke, of Oakland, for appellants.

Owen D. Richardson, of San Jose, for respondents.

RICHARDS, J. There are in the record herein six separate appeals in three cases wherein the parties are substantially the same and the facts are similar. The first three of these appeals are, respectively, from the judgment in each of said actions. These three actions were consolidated by stipulation of the parties for the purposes of trial and appeal, and are presented upon a single transcript and the same briefs. The other three appeals are from an order made in each case after final judgment vacating a prior order of the trial court staying proceedings upon the judgment in each case pending appeal. In the three main appeals the facts are as stated in the findings of the trial court and are practically undisputed. The sole question of law upon each of said appeals is as to whether the judgment in each is supported by the findings. Each of said actions was instituted by the plaintiffs and appellants herein for the purpose of having certain transactions between the parties declared to be usurious and to have it adjudged that certain notes and trust deeds made and executed in the course of these transactions were void for usury.

The facts in the first of these cases, as found by the trial court, are briefly as follows: On or about March 14, 1925, the plaintiffs borrowed from the defendant Meyerfield the sum of $2,000, and thereupon made, executed, and delivered to him their promissory note for $2,500, payable one year after date, and bearing interest at the rate of 1 per cent. per month; and, as security therefor, made, executed, and delivered to him a deed of trust in the usual form upon certain real property in Alameda county, by the terms of which the defendant San Jose Abstract & Title Company was designated as trustee and was authorized and empowered to sell said real property at trustee's sale in the event of the failure of the makers of the promissory note to make payment thereof and of the interest thereon in accordance with its terms. By mesne assignments the promissory note and trust deed were transferred successively to the defendants Irving S. Levy, Federal Finance, and J. D. Shaw, the latter of whom is now the owner and holder thereof. The court found that said assignments were not for value but merely for collection, and further found that no part of said sum of $2,500, the face value of said promissory note, or of the sum of $2,000, the amount of money actually borrowed by the plaintiffs, or of the interest thereon, had been paid. As conclusions of law from the foregoing findings of fact, the court found that said promissory note and deed of trust securing the same were and each was valid and enforceable for the principal sum of $2,000 and no more, and that the trustee in said deed of trust was entitled to sell the real property described therein to satisfy said indebtedness of $2,000 and no more, as provided in the deed of trust. The judgment of the trial court followed said findings of fact and conclusions of law, and upon the entry thereof the plaintiffs have prosecuted this appeal.

In the second of said causes the parties are substantially the same, except that the wife of the plaintiff Duke is omitted, and the added defendants E. E. Pitman, Mary Alice Pitman, and August M. Saleneek were never served with process and did not appear therein. The facts in this case as found by the trial court are briefly as follows: On March 9, 1925, the plaintiff George E. Duke borrowed from said defendant Meyerfield the sum of $10,000, and as security therefor caused to be made, executed, and delivered to Meyerfield a certain promissory note of said defendants E. E. Pitman and Mary Alice Pitman, his wife, for said principal sum, payable one year after date, with interest thereon at 7 per cent. per annum; and thereupon also, and as security for said last-named instrument, caused to be made, executed, and delivered to the defendant Meyerfield another certain promissory note of defendant Saleneek for the principal sum of $8,500, payable one year after date, with interest thereon at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum. As security for the payment of the promissory note executed by Pitman and his wife, the plaintiff caused to be made, executed, and delivered to the defendant Meyerfield by the defendants Pitman and wife a certain deed of trust covering certain real property in the county of Merced, wherein Meyerfield was named as beneficiary and defendant San Jose Abstract & Title Company as trustee, with authority to sell said real property in the event that said principal sum of $10,000 and the interest thereon were not paid in accordance with the terms of said promissory note; and, as further and additional security for said note, caused to be made, executed, and delivered to Meyerfield by one August M. Saleneek, also a defendant herein, a deed of trust of certain real property in the city of Oakland, of which trust deed also the defendant San Jose Abstract & Title Company was designated as trustee with the usual powers. The trial court further found that by mesne assignments said promissory notes and deeds of trust had been assigned successively to Irving S. Levy, Federal Finance, and J. D. Shaw, and that the latter was now the owner and holder of said notes and deeds of trust, but that said assignments were and each of them was made for collection only. The court further found that the plaintiff at the time of the commencement of this second action was and still is the owner of the real property described in the deed of trust executed by said Saleneek as aforesaid; and further found that the plaintiff had paid upon account of interest upon the principal sum of $10,000 due and owing from himself to said defendant the sum of $49.50, which sum the trial court found to have been a usurious payment and that the plaintiff was entitled to have a recovery of treble the amount of said interest so paid. In addition to said sum of $49.50 paid by the plaintiff as interest on the Saleneek note it appears from the brief transcript herein that the defendant Pitman delivered to the plaintiff Duke the sum of $358.25 which the plaintiff was to transmit to the holder of the Pitman note as interest thereon and which the plaintiff Duke did so transmit. The trial court apparently treated said payment as one made by the Pitmans to the owner and holder of their said promissory note through their intermediary, the plaintiff Duke, and that as to said plaintiff, being a mere intermediary, he was entitled to neither credit nor deduction on account of said payment, and hence that transaction is omitted from the findings of the trial court. As conclusions of law from the foregoing findings of fact, the trial court found that the total sum due and owing from plaintiff to the defendant Shaw was the principal sum of $9,851.20 and no more, which sum was arrived at by deducting from the principal sum of $10,000 the trebled interest paid by the plaintiff as aforesaid, and that, as to the remaining sum of $9,851.20, the said promissory notes and deeds of trust were valid and enforceable, and that the trustee named in each thereof was entitled to sell successively the real property described in said deeds of trust and to apply the proceeds derived from such successive sales to the payment of the aforesaid principal sum of $9,851.20 and no more. In his complaint in said second cause the plaintiff undertook to allege upon his information and belief that as to the Saleneek transaction there was an agreement between the plaintiff and said Levy to the effect that the sum of $8,500 represented in said transaction was to be divided between the plaintiff and Levy and that the amount to be thus received by Levy was to constitute a bonus to be received by him for negotiating said loan of $10,000 from Meyerfield to the plaintiff. These averments in the plaintiff's amended complaint were, however, fully denied by the defendants both in their pleadings and in their proofs offered at the trial of the cause. The trial court apparently gave no credence to the plaintiff's pleadings and proof in that regard, but found the transaction, in so far as the Saleneek note was concerned to be that which upon its face it appeared to be, that is to say, security for the Pitman note, and which was to be resorted to by the trustee only in the event that the Pitman deed of trust was found insufficient to satisfy the original loan of $10,000 from Meyerfield to the plaintiff Duke, and that as to said transaction the plaintiff was entitled to no deduction or recovery based upon the ground that said agreement for a bonus had been in fact made, or, if made, had ever been carried into effect. The trial court accordingly made its decree in effect denying to the plaintiff any relief based upon the payment of the sum of $358.25 made by the Pitmans, or by reason of the alleged agreement for a bonus to the extent of one-half of the Saleneek note, which the trial court, inferentially at least, found to have never been made. From the decree thus made and entered, the plaintiff has prosecuted his second appeal.

In the third of said actions the parties thereto are the same as those named in the first of said actions, and the facts thereof, as found by the trial court, are briefly as follows: On or about March 23, 1925, the plaintiffs borrowed from the defendant Meyerfield the sum of $3,500, and no more, and thereupon made, executed, and delivered to him their promissory note for $5,000, payable one year after date, with interest at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum, and, as security for the payment thereof, made, executed, and delivered to Meyerfield a deed of trust of certain real estate in the county of Alameda, of which deed of trust Meyerfield was designated as the beneficiary and San Jose Abstract & Title Company the trustee, with the usual powers, and which promissory note and deed of trust descended by mesne conveyances through the said defendants Irving S. Levy and Federal Finance to J. D. Shaw, who was and is the owner and holder thereof, but which assignments the court found were not for value, but for collection only. The court further found that no part of the principal or interest of said note had been paid and that the plaintiffs had only received upon the principal sum thereof the sum of $3,500, which sum remained unpaid. The trial court also found that said promissory note and deed of trust were valid and enforceable for the principal sum of $3,500, and no more, and that the trustee was entitled to sell said real property under the terms of said deed of trust for the payment of said indebtedness of $3,500, and no more. A decree was entered accordingly, from which the plaintiffs have taken their third appeal.

Upon the taking of their respective appeals, the plaintiffs caused to be prepared and certified a brief transcript, under the provisions of section 953a of the Code of Civil Procedure, which the parties hereto have stipulated to be a full, true, and correct transcript of the record upon the trial of said actions, and which is chiefly devoted to a statement of the evidence pro and con as to the alleged agreement for a bonus to be derived by one or other of the said defendants from the transaction involved in the Saleneek note, and which was apparently discredited by the trial court.

[1] The appellants insisted before the trial court and urge upon this appeal that as to the first of the above causes they were entitled under the Usury Act (St. 1919, p. lxxxiii) to have the difference between the sum of $2,000, which they actually received upon the loan in question, and the sum of $2,500, for which they gave their note and trust deed to the defendant Meyerfield, trebled and deducted pro tanto from the amount of their debt; and in the third of said actions they insisted, and here urge, that they were entitled to have the sum of $1,500, representing the difference between the amount which they received and the $5,000 for which they gave their note and trust deed in that transaction, also trebled and deducted from that indebtedness. The trial court, however, upon the authority of our recent decision in the case of Haines v. Commercial Mortgage Co., 200 Cal. 609, 254 P. 956, 255 P. 805, 53 A. L. R. 725, held that the plaintiffs were not entitled to said deduction, for the reason, as stated in that decision, that the transaction as to the legal and illegal portions thereof was severable, and that it was not the legislative intent, as expressed in said act, to declare the whole contract void, but only such portion thereof as came within the inhibition of the statute. We fully approve our former decision and the application which the trial court made thereof to the first and third causes of action, with relation to which the plaintiffs have prosecuted their present appeal.

[2] As to the second of said causes of action, the trial court found and decided that as to the sum of $49.50 actually paid by the plaintiff as interest he was entitled to have the same trebled and deducted from the total sum of $10,000 borrowed by him from the defendant Meyerfield. The respondents do not quarrel with this conclusion, and we therefore see no reason to further comment upon it. As to the payment, however, of the sum of $358.25 paid as interest upon the Pitman note and mortgage, the trial court apparently treated said sum as having been paid thereon by the Pitmans, who merely used the plaintiff as the intermediary to transmit said sum to the then holder of their obligation. The testimony of the plaintiff Duke himself fully supports this finding, and hence also supports the conclusion of law which the trial court based thereon, to the effect that the plaintiff, not having actually paid any other sum than said $49.50 as usurious interest, he was not, upon the authority of Haines v. Commercial Mortgage Co., supra, entitled either to recover any other than the said amount or to have the amount thereof trebled and deducted from his indebtedness. As to this conclusion also there can be no doubt of its correctness upon the authority of the Haines Case.

[3] This leaves for consideration upon this particular appeal only the appellant's contention that there existed an agreement between himself and the defendant Levy by which they were to divide between themselves the sum of $8,500, which was represented by the Saleneek transaction. But, as we have already seen, the evidence upon that subject was conflicting, and the trial court found, inferentially at least, against the plaintiff's contention. But, even if it were to be conceded that the pleadings and evidence in the case were such as to have justified the trial court in coming to the conclusion for which the plaintiff contends, he would still be entitled to no relief in the present action, for the reason that no sum of money has ever been paid or collected on account of the Saleneek transaction, and hence, upon the authority of the Haines Case, no state of facts has arisen to which the usury laws can be given application.

It follows that, as to the three main appeals, the judgment of the trial court must be and is hereby affirmed.

[4] With regard to the three other appeals from the order of the trial court after final judgment, which had the effect of vacating and setting aside a prior order which had been made by the trial court staying execution of the judgment upon each of said main appeals, the facts were these: The plaintiffs commenced and prosecuted each of said actions for the purpose of having such sums in each as were claimed to come within the interdiction of the usury law trebled to the reduction of their admitted indebtedness to one or the other of the defendants in each of said cases, and which but for such claimed reductions would remain wholly due, payable, and unpaid, and would be subject as to the collection thereof to the provisions of the respective deeds of trust which had been given to secure each of said respective obligations. The trial court by its decree in said cases adjudged that, as to the legal portion of the obligation in each of said transactions, the promissory note and deed of trust were enforceable under the terms and in the manner provided in the deed of trust executed by the plaintiffs. Such was the full force and effect of the decree of the trial court in each of said causes, and, this being so, it would seem to be apparent upon the taking of the appeal in each instance the plaintiffs would not be entitled to give a stay bond under the provisions of section 945 of the Code of Civil Procedure, since there was nothing in either or any of said decrees to which the provisions of that section of the Code could be given application. It follows that, when the trial court by its order made ex parte undertook to fix the amount of a stay bond and to approve the undertaking to stay the execution of said decrees, it was acting beyond its jurisdiction, and its orders made ex parte in that behalf were subject to be set aside upon proper application. Eisenberg v. Superior Court, 193 Cal. 575, 226 P. 617. It is no doubt true that the trial court possessed the power to incorporate in its judgment in each of said causes a provision suspending its operation and effect pending appeal, but the plaintiffs sought no such suspensory order prior to the perfection of their appeal to the District Court of Appeal and have made no application for that form of relief either to that or to this tribunal, but contented themselves with an appeal from the orders made by the trial court respectively, vacating its prior invalid order staying execution under a section of the Code which did not have application to the situation presented upon each of said appeals.

It follows that the plaintiffs' three later appeals were ineffectual, and that the orders of the trial court from which they were respectively taken must also be, and they are hereby, affirmed.

S. W. TOWLE LUMBER CO. v. ANDERSON
et al. (S. F. 13255).★

Supreme Court of California. Oct. 15, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Nov. 14, 1929.

1. Corporations ⇨514(1)—Denial of allegation of incorporation on information and belief held insufficient.

Where complaint alleged that plaintiff was corporation duly organized and existing under and by virtue of laws of state, denial of such allegation on information and belief held insufficient.

2. Abatement and revival ⇨80—Failure to object in answer to plaintiff corporation's capacity to sue waived such objection (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 433, 434).

Defense that plaintiff corporation had no capacity to sue held waived by failure to plead such objection, under express provisions of Code Civ. Proc. §§ 433, 434.

3. Pleading ⇨236(3)—Refusing amendment offered during trial denying allegation of plaintiff's incorporation held not abuse of court's discretion (Code Civ. Proc. § 473).

Where original answer denied incorporation of plaintiff corporation on information and belief, denying motion offered during trial to amend answer so as to deny directly such incorporation held not abuse of court's discretion, as granting of permission to amend under Code Civ. Proc. § 473, is within discretion of court to be exercised in furtherance of justice.

4. Corporations ⇨515—Failure to plead defense that plaintiff corporation had no capacity to make contract sued on waived such defense.

Defense that plaintiff corporation had no capacity to make contract sued on was waived by failure to plead such defense.

5. Mechanics' Liens ⇨315—Materialman had privilege to apply contractor's payment to oldest obligation, although contractor received money from obligation on which there was surety (Civ. Code, § 1479).

Where defendant as surety for contractor contended that application of payments to materialman out of money which contractor received from owner for erection of building on contract for erection of which defendant was surety should have been made on obligation for which defendant was surety, and that application of such payments on prior obligation of contractor released defendant, held that, as payments were made without request that they be applied to any particular obligation, materialman had privilege under Civ. Code, § 1479, to apply such payment to oldest indebtedness.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; James M. Troutt, Judge.

Action by the S. W. Towle Lumber Company against the Maryland Casualty Company and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, named defendant appeals. Affirmed.

John Ralph Wilson and C. S. Morbio, both of San Francisco (Everette C. McKeage, of San Francisco, of counsel), for appellant.

Maurice Carey, Walter E. Drobisch, Esmond Schapiro, and Jones & Dall, all of San Francisco, for respondent.

LANGDON, J. This appeal is by the defendant Maryland Casualty Company, surety on a contractor's bond, from a judgment rendered against it in favor of plaintiff, who had furnished materials used in the erection of a building in the city and county of San Francisco.

The complaint was in the usual form for the foreclosure of a mechanic's lien, and joined, as defendants, the owner of the building, the contractor, and the surety. The action was dismissed before trial as to the owner, the contractor defaulted, and the case was tried against the surety alone, the appellant here. The surety denied the corporate existence of plaintiff, upon information and belief, which was the manner in which all the denials of the answer were made.

[1] The complaint having alleged that the plaintiff was at all of the times referred to therein a corporation duly organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the state of California, the denial of this allegation upon information and belief was insufficient to raise an issue. Art Metal Construction Co. v. A. F. Anderson Co., 182 Cal. 29, 186 P. 776.

[2, 3] During the course of the trial, the defendant made a motion asking that it be permitted to amend its answer so as to deny, directly, the allegations of the complaint with reference to incorporation. The court denied the motion, in the exercise of its discretion, stating in effect that, if any defect in the corporate organization existed, it did not go to the merits of the claim, and since it had been waived by the failure to deny the allegations of the complaint with reference thereto, the plaintiff would not be put to its proof on that issue. This ruling is one of the assignments of error upon the appeal, and we think appellant's objection thereto is without merit. Defendant waived objection to plaintiff's capacity to sue because it was not made in the answer. Sections 433 and 434, Code Civ. Proc. In the case of Kehrlein-Swinerton Construction Co. v. Rapken, 30 Cal. App. 11, 156 P. 972, 973, it was said: " * * * It has been held in a long line of well-considered cases bearing upon the rights of partnerships or of corporations to commence or maintain actions until they have complied with certain requirements of the legislature restricting such right, that the plea and proof that such partnerships and corporations may not maintain actions while under the disabilities provided in such statutes are matters of affirmative defense, and are in the nature of dilatory pleas, which are waived by the failure on the part of the defendant to make the required averments and proof; and that in the absence of such plea and proof a partnership or a corporation, although subject to such disabilities, may still maintain an action and recover and enforce a judgment therein in its own name. [Citing cases.]"

The granting of permission to amend the answer, at the time the privilege was sought, was a matter within the sound discretion of the trial court, which discretion is to be exercised "in furtherance of justice." Section 473, Code Civ. Proc. We cannot say that there was an abuse of discretion in this case.

[4] The defense that the plaintiff had no capacity to make the contract sued upon was also waived by the failure to plead it. No evidence upon this question was before the court and could not properly have been introduced, because not directed to any issue in the case.

The statement of counsel for plaintiff made to the trial judge, in response to his question, was expressly stated to be no part of the record; it was so understood by the trial judge, who ordered it stricken from the record. Under the circumstances, its inclusion here in the briefs, as the basis of an argument on the lack of capacity of the corporation to make the contract, is improper.

[5] The only other question involved upon the appeal is the contention of defendant that it had a right to insist that the payments made by the contractor out of the money which he received from the owner for the erection of the building should be applied upon the obligation for which the defendant was surety and not upon a prior obligation of the contractor, and that since these payments were applied to an obligation of the contractor for which defendant was not surety, defendant is released from its obligation as surety. It appears that the contractor was indebted to the plaintiff for lumber furnished to do other work; that the contractor paid plaintiff several sums of money which he had received upon the building involved in the present controversy, without any request, however, that they be applied in any particular way. The plaintiff thereupon exercised his privilege of applying this money to the oldest indebtedness. This procedure is sanctioned by section 1479, Civil Code, in so far as the contractor is concerned, and it is assumed in the case of Ray v. Borgfeldt, 169 Cal. 253, 146 P. 679, that the surety would be amenable to the same rule as the principal debtor. In 30 Cyc. 1251, it is said: "Third persons, such as guarantors, sureties, indorsers, and the like, secondarily liable on one of the debts, cannot control the application of a payment by either the debtor or the creditor, and neither the debtor nor the creditor need apply the payment in the manner most beneficial to such persons." In Standard Oil Co. v. Day, 161 Minn. 281, 41 A. L. R. 1291, 201 N. W. 410, 412, the Supreme Court of Minnesota considers this precise legal situation and says: "The position of appellant assumes that a surety has a right that the earnings of the contractor under his contract shall be applied upon the labor and material going into the structure when no such agreement is stated in the bond or provided by statute. Our public contractor's bond contemplates that the contractor will receive and disburse his money as suits his convenience. The original contractor in this instance could have protected itself by requiring a bond from the subcontractor. It may have done so. Where the bond is furnished the surety must recognize the possible occurrence of what here did occur as one of the perils of its business. In other words one who becomes surety takes the risk that honest payment of unsecured debts may leave a deficiency which the surety must make good." To the same effect are Salt Lake City v. O'Connor, 68 Utah, 233, 249 P. 810, 49

A. L. R. 941; People v. Powers, 108 Mich. 339, 66 N. W. 215; and many others cited by respondent.

O'HARE et al. v. DUSENBERRY et al.
(S. F. 13250.)

Supreme Court of California. Oct. 23, 1929.

Appeal and error ⇨ 1011(1)—Finding on conflicting evidence that judgment debtor was owner of properties involved at time of levy of execution would not be disturbed.

Finding, in action to enjoin sale of real property under execution, that judgment debtor was owner of properties involved at time of levy of execution, would not be disturbed, where evidence was conflicting and abundantly supported finding.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Leon E. Gray, Judge.

Action to enjoin sale of property under execution by Con O'Hare and others against Joseph Dusenberry and others, in which defendants filed a cross-complaint against S. W. George, William Jones, Sr., William Jones, Jr., and others. From a judgment in favor of defendants and cross-complainants, cross-defendants named and their attorney, George F. Sharp, appeal. Affirmed.

George F. Sharp, of Oakland, for appellants.

Crozier C. Culp and Lynn W. Culp, both of Oakland, for respondents.

LANGDON, J. Plaintiffs filed a complaint asking for an injunction against defendants to prevent them from selling at execution sale certain real property alleged to be owned by plaintiffs, under an execution issued on a judgment against William Jones, Sr., which judgment grew out of an award made by the industrial accident commission in favor of defendant Joseph Dusenberry.

Defendants obtained an order granting them leave to file a cross-complaint and to bring in additional parties, and an answer and cross-complaint was filed against the plaintiffs in the original action and against William Jones, Sr., and William Jones, Jr., which cross-complaint alleged, in effect, that a conspiracy existed to defeat the satisfaction of the judgment in favor of Dusenberry; that William Jones, Sr., was the equitable owner of the real property sought to be sold and any transfers which had been made thereof were made as a part of the conspiracy to defraud Dusenberry. After the cross-defendants had answered the cross-complaint, putting in issue its material allegations, the cross-complainants disclaimed any right or interest in the real property standing of record in the name of Con and Louisa O'Hare, and the matter went to trial upon the question of whether or not the defendants and cross-complainants were entitled to levy execution upon certain real property alleged to be owned by plaintiff and cross-defendant S. W. George. The court found the facts in favor of defendants and cross-complainants, and an appeal has been taken by cross-defendants S. W. George, William Jones, Sr., and William Jones, Jr., and their attorney, George F. Sharp.

The appeal presents a single question of fact: Whether W. Jones, Sr., was, in fact, the owner of the properties involved herein at the time of the levy of execution on said properties on November 5, 1927. Though the title must be traced through a tortuous maze of transfers, sales, redemptions, etc., which gives the effect in the record of most complicated and intricate problems, a careful and patient examination of the transcript on appeal leads to the conclusion reached by the trial court, that throughout the changes in the record title of the property, the beneficial interest, or at least a beneficial interest, remained in the cross-defendant William Jones, Sr., and was and is subject to execution upon a judgment against him. Upon this question the trial court found: That on or about the 26th day of March, 1922, defendant and cross-complainant Joseph Dusenberry was by the industrial accident commission awarded a judgment against W. Jones, cross-defendant; that said judgment, as of the 31st day of October, 1927, amounted in the aggregate, inclusive of interest thereon, to the sum of $5,780; that on the 31st day of October, 1927, the real properties now claimed by cross-defendant George were sold by the sheriff of the county of Alameda under a writ of execution issued upon the aforesaid judgment; that by said execution sale of said properties said judgment was satisfied in part, leaving a deficiency judgment in the sum of $4,659.14 still due to Joseph Dusenberry, which deficiency judgment was duly and regularly entered on the 3d day of November, 1927, and thereafter, on November 5, 1927, a writ of execution, duly issued upon said deficiency judgment, was levied upon said real properties. At all times mentioned in the complaint for injunction, W. Jones, also known as William Jones and as W. Jones, Sr., the judgment debtor, was, ever since has been, and is now the owner of the real properties involved herein, and plaintiff and cross-defendant S. W. George did not at any of the times mentioned in said complaint have, nor has he now, any right, title, or interest in said properties.

We shall not attempt to rectify the evidence produced at the trial; it is voluminous, involved, direct and indirect, often conflicting, and some of the witnesses are self-contradictory. Suffice it to say that the record abundantly supports the findings made.

There are no other matters involved in the appeal which are worthy of consideration. The judgment is affirmed.

BARNES v. COCKE. (Civ. 6557.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Oct. 9, 1929.

Appeal and error ⇨766—Appellant's brief held sufficient, as against motion to dismiss appeal on ground brief failed to present any point separately (Rule 8 of District Court of Appeal).

Appellant's brief held sufficient, on motion to dismiss appeal from judgment on ground that brief did not comply with rule 8 of District Court of Appeal, in that it failed to present any point separately under appropriate heading showing nature of question presented, and that it contained but one heading, to wit, "Statement of Case."

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Arthur P. Will, Referee.

Action by Peter Barnes against R. V. Cocke, in which defendant filed a cross-complaint. On motion to dismiss plaintiff's appeal from the judgment. Motion denied.

M. W. Conkling, of San Diego, for appellant.

William A. Alderson, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

IRA F. THOMPSON, J. This is a motion to dismiss the appeal, on the ground that appellant's opening brief is not in the form required by the rules of the Supreme Court and of the District Courts of Appeal.

A motion was formerly made on the same ground, and this court, in disposing of it, ordered appellant's opening brief stricken from the files, and granted him leave to file another in lieu thereof. Barnes v. Cocke (Cal. App.) 279 P. 190. Appellant filed his opening brief pursuant thereto, which is the subject of the attack on this second motion to dismiss.

Respondent, in his notice of motion to dismiss the appeal, uses the following language: "That said second and further opening brief does not comply with Rule VIII of this court, in that it fails to present 'any point separately, under an appropriate heading, showing the nature of the question to be presented'; that the appellant's opening brief last filed contains but one and a single heading, to wit, 'Statement of Case.'" A careful examination of appellant's opening brief discloses that the opposite of this statement is true; i. e., appellant's brief contains a "statement of the case," with its appropriate heading in black type; thereafter follows appellant's argument, presenting the point that the judgment is contrary to the findings; this point is properly set apart from the other portions of the brief, and it is preceded by an appropriate heading in black type, "showing the nature of the question to be presented." It is true that but one point is raised in the brief, but this is immaterial, in view of the fact that it is properly set forth.

The other contentions made by respondent deal with the merits of the case, which fact precludes us from any discussion thereof. Motion denied.

MESSNER v. SUPERIOR COURT IN AND FOR CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO et al. (Civ. 7140.) ★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Oct. 14, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Nov. 13, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Dec. 9, 1929.

Time ⇨5—Where verdict was rendered on February 28, 1929, order granting new trial made on April 29 held within two months' statutory period (Code Civ. Proc. § 17, subd. 4, and § 660).

Where verdict was rendered on February 28, 1929, and order granting new trial was entered on April 29, 1929, such order held within two months' period provided by Code Civ. Proc. § 660, providing that power of court to pass on motion for new trial shall expire within two months after verdict, as word "month" as used by Code is, under the direct provisions of section 17, subd. 4, interpreted to mean calendar month, unless otherwise expressed.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First, Second, and Third Series, Month.]

Application by Frank G. Messner for writ of mandate to be directed to the Superior Court of the State of California in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and Hon. J. J. Trabucco, Judge thereof, and another, to compel issuance of execution. Writ denied.

Hearing denied by Supreme Court; SEAWELL and CURTIS, JJ., voting for a transfer.

Vincent W. Hallinan and James J. Roach, both of San Francisco, for petitioner.

Sloss & Ackerman, of San Francisco, for respondents.

KNIGHT, J. Petitioner obtained a judgment for damages after verdict by a jury in an action for malicious prosecution, and subsequently the trial court granted a new trial. Petitioner now seeks, by this proceeding in mandamus, to compel the issuance of an execution, claiming that the order granting the new trial was not made within the period of time allowed therefor by section 660 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and for that reason is void.

The verdict was rendered on February 28, 1929, and on April 29, 1929, the court made an order to the effect that if petitioner remitted forthwith in writing $10,000 of the damages awarded by the jury the motion for a new trial would be denied; otherwise it would be granted. Petitioner refused to comply with the condition thus imposed, and consequently the order granting the new trial became effective. At the time these proceedings took place the concluding paragraph of said section 660 read as follows: "The power of the court to pass on motion for new trial shall expire within two months after the verdict of the jury or service on the moving party of notice of the entry of the judgment. If such motion is not determined within said two months, the effect shall be a denial of the motion without further order of the court." (Italics ours.) As will be observed, the verdict was rendered on the last day of February, and respondent contends therefore that since the statute allowed "two months" thereafter within which to pass on the motion for a new trial, the second succeeding month after the verdict was rendered did not expire until April 30. Petitioner contends that, regardless of the fact that said verdict was rendered on the last day of February, that day was the 28th day of the month, and that consequently the two months' limitation fixed by the statute expired on the 28th day of the second succeeding month, or on April 28th.

We are of the opinion that the case of Church Mfg. Co. v. Superior Court, 79 Cal. App. 637, 250 P. 705, is decisive of the question here presented. There notice of the judgment was served on December 31, 1925, which, as will be noted, was the last day of that month, and in construing the meaning of the words "two months" as used in that portion of section 660 above quoted the court said: "Respondent had the judicial days of the two calendar months of January and February within which to rule on the motion for a new trial. * * *" Here, as stated, the verdict was rendered on the last day of February, and the word "month" is interpreted by the Code to mean a calendar month, unless otherwise expressed (Code Civ. Proc. § 17, subd. 4); therefore, under the decision in the case cited, the respondent court was given the full period of the two succeeding calendar months of March and April, or until and including April 30th, within which to rule upon the motion for a new trial.

Aside from the controlling effect of the decision in the case cited, respondents have urged a number of other grounds upon which we think the writ may be properly denied. Some of them relate to the legal insufficiency of the petition and are raised by demurrer, and others go to support the foregoing construction placed upon the words "two months" as used in said section 660. But since there have been no convincing reasons advanced to justify a departure from the construction placed upon said Code section by the case cited, we deem it unnecessary to discuss the other grounds urged.

The demurrers to the petition are and each of them is sustained, and the writ is denied.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Edmund P. Mogan, Judge.

Action to declare a deed a mortgage by Irene Cohn against Levi Cohn and another, executors of the last will and testament of Charles Cohn, deceased. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

F. E. Borton and James Petrini, both of Bakersfield, and Joseph A. Brown, of San Francisco, for appellants.

Harry I. Stafford, of San Francisco, for respondent.

KOFORD, P. J. Plaintiff executed to Charles Cohn, deceased, during his lifetime, a deed conveying to him certain real property, with improvements thereon, in the city and county of San Francisco. This action is brought against the executors of said Charles Cohn, deceased, for the purpose of having said deed, which is absolute in form, declared to be a mortgage. The complaint alleged that pursuant to agreement, the said decedent took possession of said property immediately after said conveyance, and thereafter collected all the rents therefrom, applying them to the indebtedness, and that the rents so collected, at the time suit was commenced, exceeded the amount of plaintiff's indebtedness to said decedent. The complaint prayed for an accounting and for a reconveyance of the property. At the trial the plaintiff waived her prayer for a money judgment against the estate of said decedent for any amount of rent which might have been collected in excess of her indebtedness to the decedent. An interlocutory judgment was given in favor of plaintiff for an accounting. The defendants appeal.

[1, 2] The points urged on the trial by the defendants were: First, that plaintiff could not maintain the action because she had not filed a claim with the executors of the estate before commencing the action; second, that her action was upon a claim against the estate, and that she was therefore incompetent to testify as a witness on account of the provisions of subdivision 3 of the Code of Civil Procedure, section 1880. These two points have been directly passed upon by the Supreme Court and appellate courts of this state. It has been held that in an action to recover specific real property as owner thereof, it is not necessary to allege or prove the filing of a claim with the executors. Newport v. Hatton, 195 Cal. 132, 231 P. 987; Maguire v. Cunningham, 64 Cal. App. 536, at page 548, 222 P. 838. It has likewise been held that the plaintiff is a competent witness in an action of this kind. Wadleigh v. Phelps, 149 Cal. 627, 640, 87 P. 93; Maguire v. Cunningham, supra.

[3, 4] On this appeal appellants also urge that the plaintiff's action is barred by laches. The deed was made in 1917, the decedent died in June, 1926, and this action was commenced January, 1927.

We find that the record fails to show laches, either in the pleading or in the evidence.

The fact that ten years elapsed from the date of the execution of the deed until the time suit was commenced does not show that plaintiff waited ten years to assert her rights. The day after she executed the deed she had no cause of action, and under the allegations of the complaint this condition continued until such time as her indebtedness had been paid, which fact would entitle her to a reconveyance, or until such time as Charles Cohn denied and repudiated the plaintiff's claim that the property was held by him solely for security for her indebtedness, which fact would entitle her to sue for a decree fixing the rights of the parties in and to the property. Neither the complaint nor the evidence shows at what particular time, if at all, the rents collected by Charles Cohn liquidated the indebtedness. There is no competent testimony that Charles Cohn ever repudiated the arrangement testified to and alleged by plaintiff. A copy of a letter, dated October 31, 1921, was found among the papers of the decedent after his death. It purported to be a copy of a letter written by him to Mr. Stafford, who was then acting as attorney for the plaintiff. The substance of the letter was such that, had it been mailed to Mr. Stafford, it would have constituted such a repudiation as would have given plaintiff cause to commence an action at that time for an accounting and for a decree declaring the deed to be a mortgage. This element of fact, however, does not enter into the case, for the reason that there was no proof offered that the original letter, of which the said paper was a copy, had ever been communicated or transmitted to Mr. Stafford or to the plaintiff. There was considerable discussion at the trial concerning the admissibility of this paper, but so far as the record discloses, the argument related to whether or not the declarations of the decedent contained in it were hearsay and self-serving. It does not appear that the paper was considered by defendants' counsel as competent evidence of the fact of a communicated repudiation of the mortgage arrangement. It seemed to have been the position of defendants' counsel that even though not communicated to the plaintiff or her agent, it was admissible merely as a declaration of the decedent upon the issue of whether such an arrangement had originally been made by him. The paper was actually received in evidence, but it only proved that decedent had written his ideas on a piece of paper, and it did not prove that he had communicated a denial of the mortgage character of the deed in 1921.

There being no evidence of a repudiation by Charles Cohn and nothing appearing in the complaint or in the evidence indicating the full payment of the indebtedness for which the conveyance was made, the plaintiff was never required to commence this action at any time prior to the death of Charles Cohn.

For the foregoing reasons the judgment is affirmed.

Appeals from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; F. M. Jamison, Judge.

Two separate actions by James T. Dunn against William J. Farrow and others, the actions being tried together. Judgments for plaintiff, and defendant named appeals. Affirmed.

Charles H. Adkins and J. Everett Brown, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Wm. T. Kendrick, Victor H. Kendrick, Wilson & Snow, and Hawkins & Hawkins, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

PLUMMER, J. Two actions and two appeals, numbered respectively in this court 3906 and 3907, are involved herein. The two actions were tried together in the court below, are presented here upon one transcript, and will be decided as though only one action were involved. Both actions were brought to quiet title, one to quiet title to lots 5 and 6 in block E, and the other to quiet title to lot 7, in block E, townsite of Howard (formerly Rosecrans), in the county of Los Angeles. The plaintiff had judgments quieting his title as to the lots involved, one judgment quieting title as to lots 5 and 6, and the other judgment quieting title as to lot 7. The testimony set out in the transcript and the arguments of counsel relate to all of the lots alike. We shall henceforth speak of the two actions as one.

The plaintiff's judgments rest upon two grounds—record title and title by adverse possession. Prior to the 20th day of June, 1892, one Emil R. d'Artois was the record owner of the lots involved upon this appeal, and on that day executed a deed of conveyance whereby he granted, bargained, and sold to Mrs. James Carroll lots 5, 6, and 7 in block E of the townsite of Rosecrans, being the lots hereinbefore referred to. This deed was recorded on June 20, 1894. On the 13th day of August, 1892, Emil R. d'Artois, by deed of conveyance, granted and sold a large number of lots situate in the town of Rosecrans to one W. E. de Groot, not including lots 5, 6, and 7 in block E. This deed was recorded September 23, 1892. Thereafter, and on the 17th day of September, 1892, Adelaide d'Artois (a single woman), remised, released, and forever quitclaimed to William E. de Groot all the right, title, and interest of the party of the first part in and to all the lots in the townsite of Rosecrans. This deed was recorded on the 17th day of September, 1892. On the 3d day of November, 1892, W. E. de Groot remised, released, and forever quitclaimed unto James T. Dunn, the plaintiff in this action, a number of lots, included in the townsite of Rosecrans, including lots 5, 6, and 7 in block E. On the 8th day of June, 1892, Adelaide d'Artois bargained and sold all of her interest in certain property in the townsite of Rosecrans, the property being described as lots lying in south half of section 12, township 3 S., range 14 W., S. B. M., north half townsite of Rosecrans. On the 6th day of July, 1892, Emil R. d'Artois reconveyed the same property to Adelaide d'Artois. The appellant William J. Farrow claims, through the conveyance made to Mrs. James Carroll heretofore mentioned, we need not set forth this chain of title, for the reasons hereinafter stated. The right of the plaintiff to succeed in this action depends upon the effect of the conveyance of Emil R. d'Artois to Adelaide d'Artois of all his right, title, and interest in and to the townsite of Rosecrans, and the deed by Adelaide d'Artois conveying all her right, title, and interest in and to the townsite of Rosecrans to William E. de Groot, and the subsequent conveyance of William E. de Groot, to the plaintiff, of lots 5, 6, and 7 in block E of the townsite of Rosecrans. All these instruments were recorded long prior to the recording of the conveyance under which the appellant claims. The conveyance to the plaintiff was made on the 3d day of November, 1892, and was recorded on the 12th day of November, 1892. The conveyance under which the appellant claims purports to have been executed on the 20th day of June, 1892, but was not recorded until the 20th day of June, 1894. Other conveyances affecting the plaintiff's title were recorded some months prior to November 12, 1892.

[1] The appellant contends that the quitclaim deeds or instruments of conveyance under which the plaintiff claims were and are insufficient, though executed and recorded prior to the recordation of the deed under which the appellant claims. In this particular it may be stated that the record shows the plaintiff paid for the lots purchased the sum of $2,400 and there is no contention made or anything in the record indicating that the sum paid by the plaintiff was not an adequate consideration or the full value of the premises purchased. A large number of eastern cases are cited by appellant which, if the rules of law therein stated were applicable here, judgment of reversal would necessarily follow. These decisions, however, are rendered inapplicable by reason of the provisions of section 1214 of the Civil Code relative to the recording of instruments of conveyance, by which it is provided that an unrecorded instrument is not good as against a subsequent one where the subsequent purchase has been made in good faith and for a valuable consideration. The only suggestion of lack of good faith on the part of the purchase of the lots in question by the plaintiff is that he acquired title by quitclaim deeds. We may here state that the assertion by the appellant on page 63 of his brief, that "When Dunn took his deed from de Groot he took it with notice that de Groot had no title to these lots," has absolutely no support in the record and appears to have been made upon the theory that the instruments referred to conveyed no title. That a quitclaim deed such as we have referred to herein is good as against an unrecorded grant, bargain, and sale deed, has been the decided law of this state for a great many years. In the case of Graff v. Middleton, 43 Cal. 341, it is held: "A quitclaim deed, received in good faith, and for a valuable consideration, and which is recorded before a prior deed of bargain and sale, will prevail over such prior deed." In that case the grantee, just as in this case, took his deed without notice, actual or constructive, of any prior deed. In that case, just as in this case, upon taking the deed to the premises the plaintiff entered into the possession of the lots conveyed. To the same effect is the case of Frey v. Clifford, 44 Cal. 335. There, the quitclaim deed was identical in its terms with the instruments attacked in this case. The quitclaim deed in the Frey Case read as follows: "All my right, title, and interest in Sacramento City, Upper California, consisting of town lots and buildings thereupon." In the case of Flores v. De Flores, 55 Cal. App. 595, 204 P. 54, 56, we find the following: "A deed conveying all the lands of the grantor is not void for uncertainty of description, and passes the title to all lands in which he has an interest." * * * A deed describing property as 'all my right, title, and interest in Sacramento City, Upper California, consisting of town lots and buildings thereupon,' was held a sufficient description to convey title. * * * A similar holding was made as to a descriptive clause in a deed reading: 'All lands and real estate belonging to said party of the first part, wherever the same may be situated.'" Cases are cited supporting these statements in the opinion of Flores v. De Flores, supra, on page 598 of 55 Cal. App., 204 P. 56. In Packard v. Moss, 68 Cal. 123, 8 P. 818, it is held that a quitclaim deed gives color of title. In Allison v. Thomas, 72 Cal. 562, 14 P. 309, 1 Am. St. Rep. 89, it is held that a quitclaim deed is good as against a prior unrecorded deed, where taken in good faith and for a valuable consideration. That such a deed is sufficient to give color of title and lay the basis upon which to found title by adverse possession is supported by the rule stated in 1 California Jurisprudence, pp. 571 and 572. That such a deed is sufficient to convey title is supported by the text found in section 90, 9 California Jurisprudence, p. 204. See, also, Brusseau v. Hill, 201 Cal. 225, 256 P. 419, 55 A. L. R. 157.

[2] The record shows, and the court found, that the plaintiff went into possession of the premises involved immediately after the execution of the conveyance referred to, in 1892, and has since remained in possession of the premises, claiming to own the same; that his possession was open, notorious, and adverse to all the world; and that he paid taxes thereon for more than twenty years, to wit, from the time of taking possession thereof up to and including all taxes levied against said property prior to the year 1924. The court held that the title was taken in good faith, and for a valuable consideration; that the plaintiff had no knowledge, either actual or constructive, that any person claimed to have any right, title, or interest in the premises; that the consideration paid by the plaintiff was fair and reasonable.

Whatever the law may be in other states, under the circumstances which we have detailed and the cases cited, it is not apparent how any other judgment could be rendered in this case than was rendered quieting the plaintiff's title to the lots in controversy.

It follows that the judgments appealed from must be, and they are, affirmed.

E. Garcia was convicted of manslaughter, and he appeals. Affirmed.

A. H. Carpenter, of Stockton, for appellant.
U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Chas. Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

THOMPSON, J. The defendant was convicted of manslaughter, for the negligent driving of an automobile which resulted in a collision and the death of John Browning.

At dusk on the evening of May 31, 1929, the defendant, who is a Filipino, was driving a large Chrysler sedan car containing four other countrymen at a high rate of speed along the Thornton road in San Joaquin county. At the same time the deceased with two other companions was driving a Pontiac coach from Stockton to Lodi along the Turner highway. Upon reaching the intersection of these highways, the speed of the Pontiac machine was diminished to a rate of about 15 miles an hour. When it reached a point past the center of these roads, it was struck midway along its side by the Chrysler machine, running, as two witnesses who observed the collision testified, at 50 miles an hour. The Pontiac car was hit with such force that, as Mr. Alderson testified, "the Pontiac flew up in the air and turned over about three times." It was hurled from the highway and landed in the ditch 25 or 30 steps from the point of collision. The course of the Chrysler was diverted by the impact, and it landed at a considerable distance from the point of collision out in a vineyard by the roadside, cutting off vines and breaking down a pole which was 6 inches in diameter. Both cars were demolished. As a result of the accident, John Browning was instantly killed, one of the occupants of the Chrysler car subsequently died, and all of the other occupants of both cars who were more or less injured were immediately taken to the Buchanan hospital. Dr. Buchanan, who rendered medical aid to the injured persons, testified that the defendant was cut on the arm, and that he had a scalp or face injury which he sewed up, and that he was bleeding profusely, but added that his condition was not bad, and that his mental capacity was not affected by the injuries; that he could answer questions. "Q. Did you hear him answer the questions? A. I did, yes." That same evening about 10 p. m. the defendant and his companions were interviewed at the hospital by Carroll, a deputy coroner, and J. E. Hopkins, police judge of Lodi, and subsequently by one Whitman, all of whom testified to conversations with the defendant, who spoke poor English, but seemed to understand and responded intelligently to the interrogations. To each of these witnesses the defendant admitted that he was driving the Chrysler car at the time of the accident.

The testimony regarding the defendant's admissions to the effect that he was driving the Chrysler car at the time of the accident was received over defendant's objections upon the ground that these statements were incompetent and inadmissible for the purpose of establishing the corpus delicti. There is no evidence other than defendant's admission, which tends to establish the identity of the driver of the Chrysler car.

[1, 2] There is no merit in the contention that the record fails to show that the defendant was able to understand and speak English. There is a conflict of evidence regarding this subject, which must be resolved in favor of the judgment. This was a question for the jury to determine, and this court is bound by its implied finding that he could understand and speak English clearly enough to bind him by his admissions.

[3] The appellant assumes that the mere admission of the defendant that he drove the car at the time of the accident was a necessary element of the corpus delicti, and that it was therefore inadmissible under the rule announced in the cases of People v. Quarez, 196 Cal. 404, 238 P. 363; People v. Bedoy, 80

Cal. App. 783, 252 P. 1061, 1062; People v. Frey, 165 Cal. 140, 131 P. 127; People v. La Rue, 62 Cal. App. 276, 216 P. 627; People v. Jones, 31 Cal. 566; and other similar cases. In most of these cases, however, the challenged admissions or confessions were essential to establish the corpus delicti, without which that important element of the crime would have no support in the record. In the Jones Case, supra, a conviction of the defendant was reversed for lack of competent evidence of the corpus delicti. The court said: "Without some evidence * * * tending in some degree to show that Ah Po [was] robbed, the question as to who robbed him cannot well arise. * * * Extra-judicial confessions of a prisoner, without other proof of the fact that a felony has been committed, are insufficient to justify a conviction." In the Bedoy Case, supra, a statement was made which is equally applicable to the Quarez Case, above cited, as the nature of the offenses was the same. The court said: "The foreign nativity, of the defendant [in a charge of the possession of a firearm by a foreign-born unnaturalized citizen], being an essential element of the corpus delicti, should be established by evidence independent of his extra-judicial statements."

In the present case, however, the killing of John Browning as the result of a collision with the Chrysler car while it was being driven at a high rate of speed in a reckless manner, without due caution or circumspection, was established independent of any admissions of the defendant, and furnished ample proof of the corpus delicti as that crime is defined in section 192 of the Penal Code. The identity of the individual who committed the crime under such circumstances is no part of the corpus delicti. In the case of People v. Domenighini, 81 Cal. App. 484, 254 P. 292, it is said the essential elements of the corpus delicti are: "(1) Certain facts forming its basis; and (2) the existence of criminal agency as the cause of them."

In the La Rue Case, above cited, in which the defendant was convicted of syndicalism, it was contended that evidence of extra-judicial admissions of membership in the objectionable organization constituted reversible error on the theory that such acknowledgments of membership were a necessary part of the corpus delicti. The court said: "It seems clear that the criminal organization constitutes the corpus delicti. Proof of membership therein serves only to connect the defendant with the crime. Proof of the killing of a human being by a criminal agency establishes the corpus delicti in homicide, without any evidence tending to show who committed the act. After such proof has been made, the fact that the defendant struck the fatal blow may be shown by his extra-judicial admissions alone. * * * Such admissions [of membership in the organization] * * * did not tend in any degree to show the criminal character of the organization."

"Likewise, in the present case, the admission on the part of the defendant that he drove the Chrysler machine at the time of the accident was not an admission that he was driving it in an unlawful or reckless manner without due caution or circumspection. This admission was therefore no part of the corpus delicti, and the objection to this evidence was properly overruled.

In the case of United States v. Jones (C. C.) 10 F. 469, 470, an objection to the evidence of an admission by the defendant that he was the sender of a letter through the mail in violation of law, on the ground that the identity of the sender was a part of the corpus delicti, was similarly disposed of as follows: "We are, therefore, of the opinion that the offense charged was proved by the evidence. Another point taken is that there was no evidence of the corpus delicti except the defendant's admission. But the gist of the offense consists in the abuse of the mail. The corpus delicti was the mailing of the letter in the execution of the unlawful scheme. There was direct evidence of the mailing of the letter by some one, and the letter itself showed its unlawful character. This much being shown, it was certainly competent to prove that the defendant was the sender of the letter by his admission to that effect."

So in the present case there was ample direct evidence of the unlawful speed and the reckless manner in which some one operated the Chrysler machine resulting in the death of a human being. It was certainly competent to prove by his own admission that the accused was the individual who drove the machine.

The judgment is affirmed.

WESTBERG v. WHITTICKEN et al.
(Civ. 3891.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Oct. 14, 1929.

1. Pleading ☞129(2)—Where allegation of agency in petition was not denied, such allegation stood admitted.

In materialman's action against owner of building where allegation that purchaser was agent of owner was not denied, such allegation stood admitted, and it was unnecessary to introduce proof thereon.

2. Payment ☞18—Materialman's acceptance of trade acceptances issued by agent of builder did not constitute payment of account for building materials.

Where materialman accepted trade acceptances of agent of builder for price of materials furnished and indorsed account rendered, held, such acceptance did not constitute payment for account of building materials, where there was no agreement that they should be so accepted.

3. Principal and agent ☞133—Where builder acted as agent of owner, owner was liable for all materials used in construction of building, although materialman had entered account against agent.

Where builder acted as agent of owner of property on which building was being erected, owner was personally liable for all materials furnished by materialman and used in construction of such building, and also for cost and expense of labor performed in and on such building, although materialman had entered on his books an account against agent.

4. Principal and agent ☞160½—Indorsement of word "paid" on agent's account, and payment by principal to agent, did not estop materialman from collecting from principal (Civ. Code, § 3543).

Indorsement by materialman of word "paid" on agent's account did not estop materialman from collecting from principal price of materials furnished to agent and used in building principal's building, although principal had paid agent, as principal cannot plead estoppel based on failure of agent to make proper application of money intrusted to his care; Civ. Code, § 3543, providing that where one of two innocent persons must suffer he by whose negligence it happened must suffer, being inapplicable.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John L. Fleming, Judge.

Action by Ed Westberg against R. E. Whittiken and others, doing business as the De Luxe Building Company. From a judgment in favor of plaintiffs, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Glen Behymer, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

John F. Poole, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

PLUMMER, J. The plaintiff had judgment against R. E. Whittiken and Mayme B. Whittiken, his wife, for the sum of $985.75, and also for the foreclosure of a mechanic's lien on certain property described in the complaint. From this judgment said defendants appeal.

The action was originally begun for the collection of $1,750 and the enforcement of a lien to secure the payment thereof, on account of work and labor performed by the plaintiff in furnishing plastering material and plastering a certain residence constructed by R. E. Whittiken and Mayme B. Whittiken, his wife. After the beginning of the action, the sum of $729.25 was paid on said account. The record shows that the defendants Whittiken constructed a certain residence by days' labor; that no contract for the erection of the building was ever entered into by the defendants with any one. The record further shows that at about the time of the beginning of the erection of the building referred to, the defendants Whittiken employed A. B. Maescher and V. E. Maescher, doing business as De Luxe Building Company, as their agents, to take charge of the construction, and manage the construction of the building referred to. The complaint alleges that after entering upon the construction of the building, A. B. Maescher and V. E. Maescher, doing business as De Luxe Building Company, as agents of the owner of the described premises, entered into an agreement with plaintiff whereby the plaintiff was to furnish certain materials and labor necessary to do the interior and exterior plastering required for the construction of the building, etc. This allegation of agency is not denied in the answer, and therefore stands admitted. The evidence, however, is in accordance with the allegations of the complaint. The court found that the De Luxe Building Company was acting as agent of the owners of the property, and was acting as the superintendent of the construction of the building; that the building was being constructed by days' labor, and no contract was entered into between the owner and the De Luxe Building Company for the construction of the building. In other words, there was no contractor, but the De Luxe Building Company was acting as the agent and superintendent of the owners of the property. Upon the completion of the work by the plaintiff, the plaintiff made out and delivered to the De Luxe Building Company a statement thereof, showing the amount due in the sum of $1,750. The De Luxe Building Company thereupon executed and delivered to the plaintiff certain trade acceptances for the amount thereof, and at the same time the plaintiff indorsed on the account the word "paid." The account is in the following words:

"Los Angeles, Cal. Aug. 4, 1923.

"Sold to DeLuxe Bldg. Co.,

"Union League Bldg.

"Job Address: Whittiken, 619 Friend, Whittier.

"To plastering as per contract, $1715.00

"[Rubber stamp]: Entered A.B.M.

"Paid Aug. 8/23 Ed Westberg.

"[Rubber Stamp]: Checked.O.K.

"Acct: Whittiken."

The trade acceptances not being honored, the plaintiff filed a lien as provided by the Codes, and brought this action for foreclosure. The De Luxe Building Company went into insolvency, and only the sum of $729.25 was ever paid on account of the trade acceptances.

[1] The first point urged by the appellants is that "the evidence is insufficient to sustain the findings contained in the third and fourth lines of the third paragraph of the complaint, to the effect that the De Luxe Building Company, as the agent of the owner, entered into the agreement with the plaintiff. The evidence clearly showed that the contract was made between the plaintiff and the De Luxe Building Company, the credit being extended by the plaintiff to the De Luxe Building Company and not to the defendant owner." This statement entirely ignores the fact that the complaint alleges the agency, and that the agency was not denied by the answer of the defendants. All that the answer does deny is that the De Luxe Building Company entered into an agreement with the plaintiff for the furnishing of the materials and performance of the work as alleged by the plaintiff. There being no denial of the agency, it was unnecessary to introduce any proof, though there is some testimony in the record supporting the allegation of agency and the fact that the De Luxe Building Company was simply acting as agent. Furthermore, the record shows that a stipulation was entered into during the course of the trial showing that the building was constructed by days' labor; that the owner, about the 22d day of May, 1923, began, by day labor, the erection and construction of the building involved in this action.

[2, 3] The next contention of the appellants is to the effect that the taking of the trade acceptances issued by the De Luxe Building Company constituted a payment. All there is in the record upon which this argument can be based is the simple indorsement of the word "paid" appearing upon the account rendered for the materials furnished and labor performed. There does not appear to have been any agreement or understanding that the trade acceptances in and of themselves should constitute payment. Under such circumstances the general rule relating to payments as set forth in 48 C. J. p. 610 prevails. The rule is there stated as follows: "The rule obtaining in most jurisdictions is that, in the absence of agreement or consent to receive it, as such, a draft or bill of exchange, although accepted by the drawee, or a promissory note of the debtor, or his acceptance of a draft or bill of exchange drawn upon him does not, in itself, constitute payment or amount to a discharge of the debt, although it may postpone the right of action thereon until the maturity of the paper, but if such paper, delivered to a creditor, is thereafter honored or paid, the debt is discharged pro tanto as of the date of such collection or payment, and accordingly a bill or note is often designated prima facie or conditional payment." The authorities supporting this statement of the law cited in Corpus Juris, supra, are simply legion. The rule is stated in different language, but to the same effect, in 20 California Jurisprudence, p. 920: "The giving of a note or check of a debtor or a third party for the amount of a debt does not constitute payment unless there is an agreement between the parties that it shall be so accepted. The rule is based upon the obvious ground that nothing is to be considered as payment in fact but that which is in truth such unless something else is expressly agreed to be received in its place." It is further there stated that if the note or check is not paid, action may be had upon the original debt. And as further stated in the same volume, pages 925 and 926, the marking of the account as paid does not prevent the court inquiring into and ascertaining the true facts, and if the checks or notes or bills of exchange are dishonored, the indorsement of the word "paid" on the original statement of account is immaterial. The following cases show that the rule announced in Corpus Juris and California Jurisprudence is followed in the state of California: Ellison v. Henion, 183 Cal. 171, 190 P. 793, 11 A. L. R. 444; South S. F. Packing, etc., Co. v. Jacobsen, 183 Cal. 131, 190 P. 628. Other cases might be cited, but the two California cases just referred to take up and consider very fully the law as to what does and does not constitute payment. The fact that the De Luxe Building Company was acting as the agent or superintendent of the owner of the property rendered the owner liable personally for all the materials furnished by the plaintiff and used in the construction of the building belonging to the owner, and also the costs and expenses of the labor performed in and upon the building. The fact that the plaintiff entered upon his books an account against the De Luxe Building Company on the Whittiken job does not relieve the owner from liability to pay for the materials furnished and work and labor performed by the plaintiff.

[4] The appellants further rely upon the provisions of section 3543 of the Civil Code, which provides that where one of two innocent persons must suffer by the act of the third, he by whose negligence it happened must be the sufferer. The claim here is made that the owners gave the De Luxe Building Company sufficient money to pay the plaintiff's account in full. Had the De Luxe Building Company been an independent contractor instead of the agent of the owner, it might be urged that the indorsing of the account "paid" by the plaintiff misled the owner and would constitute an estoppel. We do not very well see how a principal can plead any estoppel based upon the failure of his agent to make proper application of the money entrusted to his care.

The judgment of the trial court is affirmed.

McLACHLAN v. McLACHLAN. (Civ. 6223.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Oct. 4, 1929.

In divorce actions, question of desertion is an ultimate fact to be found by the court on the establishment of several probative facts.

2. Jury ⇨18—Refusing defendant in divorce action jury trial after jury impaneled had disagreed held not error.

Refusing defendant wife, in action for divorce, right of jury trial, when demand was made after jury impaneled disagreed and was discharged, held not error, since any verdict rendered would not have been binding on judge, if he saw fit to disregard it; verdict of jury in such cases being only advisory.

3. Divorce ⇨133(3)—Evidence held to support findings that wife sued for divorce willfully deserted husband for year before action, that wife's return was not in good faith, and that wife refused to live and cohabit with husband without just cause.

Evidence, in action by husband against wife for divorce, held sufficient to support findings that wife deserted husband for period of year prior to filing of action, that wife willfully deserted husband, that wife's return was not in good faith, and that wife refused to live and cohabit with husband without just cause.

4. Divorce ⇨184(10)—Findings of court on conflicting evidence in divorce action will not be disturbed on appeal.

Where evidence was conflicting in action by husband for divorce, findings made by trial court who had parties before him and had opportunity to question them will not be disturbed on appeal.

Appeal from Superior Court, Imperial County; William Hazlett, Judge.

Action for divorce by Argyle McLachlan against Pauline Viola McLachlan. From an interlocutory judgment of divorce for plaintiff and from an order denying defendant's motion for a new trial, she appeals. Judgment affirmed, and the appeal from the order denying the motion for new trial dismissed.

Superseding former opinion, 273 P. 873.

M. C. Atchison, of Calexico, for appellant.
Ault & MacKinnon, of Calexico, for respondent.

YORK, J. This appeal is from an interlocutory decree of divorce granted to plaintiff, and from an order denying the defendant's motion for a new trial based upon the ground that the decision is contrary to the evidence.

There was evidence introduced proving or tending to prove the following facts: The plaintiff and defendant intermarried on the 20th day of December, 1910, at Victoria, Tex. In the spring of 1912 they came to El Centro, which is situated in the Imperial Valley in California, where they lived for about two months, after which defendant returned to Victoria. However, she made another trip to El Centro the following winter, and in the spring of 1913 again returned to Victoria because of her ill health, and has since then lived in Victoria with her mother, separate and apart from her husband, except for visits made each year by the plaintiff to Victoria. His last visit was made at Christmas time in 1924. Meantime the plaintiff was employed at El Centro earning a salary of $533 per month, and in addition operated a 160-acre cotton ranch, which he owned. At various times during the years the plaintiff requested the defendant to come to California and make her home with him at El Centro, but she refused on the ground that her health would not permit her to live in that climate. The plaintiff in 1920 offered to procure a home for the defendant and their son (who was born in 1915) in San Diego, Cal., in order that he might be near enough to see them, but defendant refused the offer, giving as her reason therefor the fact that plaintiff could not afford it. Just before leaving California for his annual visit to defendant in December, 1924, plaintiff arranged to rent a comfortable house in Calexico, with the view of making it a home for himself and family, but, when he broached the subject to defendant, she informed him that she would never come to Imperial Valley, whereupon he investigated business opportunities at Victoria, but was unable to find anything attractive or which gave indication that he could make a living there.

Plaintiff left Victoria early in January, 1925, and early in the fall of that year he wrote defendant that he had decided to plan the future for himself alone. After a delay of some months, the defendant, in company with their son, made a trip to California, but remained only five days, and in February, 1926, plaintiff filed action for divorce on the ground of desertion. The cause came on for trial before a jury, which failed to agree, whereupon the court discharged them and determined the issues without their aid, granting to the plaintiff an interlocutory decree of divorce from defendant on the ground of willful desertion.

The appellant's first contention is that the court should have granted her motion for a new trial, for the reason that the judgment of the court is contrary to the evidence.

Appellant next contends that the court should have granted her motion for a nonsuit, for the reason that plaintiff failed to establish that defendant deserted him, and for the further reason that there was no testimony to corroborate the plaintiff as to the desertion.

[1] In divorce actions the question of desertion is an ultimate fact to be found by the court on the establishment of several probative facts. Section 130, Civil Code, only requires that there shall be some corroborating evidence in an action for divorce, the purpose being to prevent collusion, and upon an examination of the record we are convinced that plaintiff was sufficiently corroborated by the testimony of his two sisters and by the letters introduced into evidence by the defendant. Appellant further contends that the court erred in refusing the defendant the right of a jury trial, when demand was made after the jury impaneled had disagreed and had been discharged.

[2] In the instant case the jury disagreed after six hours' deliberation, and it was proper for the court to discharge them and decide the case himself, especially when any verdict rendered would not have been binding upon him, if he saw fit to disregard it. 9 California Jurisprudence, p. 718, § 81: "As the Constitution secures the right only in those cases in which it existed at common law, and as the right of trial by jury did not exist in divorce cases at common law, it follows that a trial by jury in a divorce action cannot be demanded as a matter of right under the Constitution. * * * However, it is optional with the judge to submit special issues to the jury. * * * The verdict in such cases is only advisory. * * *

"In actions of this character, a party is not entitled to a jury as a matter of right, and, if a jury be called in, it simply acts in an advisory capacity, the court being compelled to make findings of its own, and, in so doing, it is free to adopt or reject the findings of the jury as it deems proper." De Arellanes v. Arellanes, 151 Cal. 443, 90 P. 1059, 1061.

The appellant maintains that the several findings of the court, to wit: (1) That defendant deserted plaintiff for a period of one year prior to filing of action for divorce; (2) that defendant wilfully deserted plaintiff; (3) that defendant's return was not in good faith; (4) that defendant refused to come to Imperial Valley and live and cohabit with plaintiff, without just cause—are contrary to the evidence, and that there is no evidence that the defendant had any intent to desert plaintiff or that plaintiff had chosen a reasonable place of abode for defendant.

The record shows that the parties had lived

apart for the entire period from their marriage, except for a few months, the husband visiting the wife once each year for a period of several weeks, and that the wife, although repeatedly requested to do so by the husband, refused to live with him in Imperial Valley, assigning her ill health as her reason for such refusal. The court's finding in regard to her health is as follows: "But the Court finds that it is not true that at Plaintiff's request, Defendant, and/or their son, remained in Victoria, Texas, on account of the ill health of the Defendant, and/or by reason of their son being frail, and/or because both, or either of them, could have the advantage of the services of their family physician, or for any other reason whatsoever. That it is not true that Plaintiff discouraged Defendant each, or any, time Defendant desired to return to California for the purpose of again establishing a home with the Plaintiff, or for any other reason, but the Court finds on the contrary, that Defendant never did desire, or offer to, return to California, at any time, but did on many occasions fail, and refuse, to return to California, or to go any other place than to Victoria, Texas, to establish a home with Plaintiff, although Plaintiff did, on many occasions, ask that she do so."

When the husband finally told her he intended to go his way alone, she came to California, but remained only a few days. The court's finding as to this trip is as follows: "The Court finds that it is true that on the 23rd day of December, 1925, Defendant and their son came to Calexico, and did offer to again live there with the Plaintiff, but the Court finds that such visit and offer was not made in good faith, and that Plaintiff believed that such visit and offer was not made in good faith, and that in fact such visit and offer were made only for the purpose of preventing Plaintiff from filing an action for divorce."

[3, 4] We are of the opinion that there was sufficient evidence to support each and every finding made. As is usual in cases of this character, the evidence is conflicting, and the findings made by the trial court, who had the parties before him and the opportunity to question them, will not be disturbed upon appeal.

The interlocutory judgment of divorce is affirmed. The appeal from the order denying motion for a new trial is dismissed.

EASOM v. GENERAL MORTGAGE CO.
(Civ. 6944.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Oct. 14, 1929.

1. Continuance ⇨10—In action for balance due on purchase price of notes, continuance on ground defendant was foreclosing trust deed securing note held properly denied.

In action to recover balance due upon purchase price of promissory notes, motion for continuance on ground that defendant was foreclosing deed of trust securing one of notes purchased held properly denied, since defendant's action in that respect had no bearing upon issues involved.

2. Pleading ⇨129(2)—Where complaint alleged that title to promissory notes sold was cleared, performance of that condition was admitted by failure to deny.

In action to recover purchase price of promissory notes sold, where complaint alleged that title to promissory notes was cleared as required by contract, performance of that condition was admitted by failure to deny.

3. Pleading ⇨35—Where complaint in action for price of notes sold stated complete cause of action otherwise, paragraph that plaintiff had performed all conditions could be considered as surplusage.

In action to recover purchase price of notes sold, where complaint stated complete cause of action without paragraph alleging that plaintiff had performed all of conditions in contract, such paragraph could be considered as surplusage or as immaterial allegation which it was not necessary to deny.

4. Pleading ⇨126—Where complaint alleged plaintiff had performed all conditions of contract, denial, in form a negative pregnant, admitted substantial compliance.

Where complaint alleged that plaintiff had performed all of conditions in contract, denial reading, "Denies allegations in paragraph IV of said complaint, and in this respect denies that said H. or plaintiff had performed all of the conditions in said contract to be performed by the said H.," being in form a negative pregnant, was insufficient, and was admission that substantially all of conditions had been complied with.

5. Trial ⇨163—Motion for nonsuit on ground plaintiff failed to prove performance held properly refused, where counsel did not direct court's attention to particulars in which proof failed.

Motion for nonsuit held properly denied, where only ground assigned was failure to prove performance on part of plaintiff, and counsel failed to direct court's attention to any particulars in which proof failed.

6. Appeal and error ⇨241—Appellate court will not review trial court's ruling denying motion for nonsuit on ground not specifically stated in motion.

An appellate court will not review ruling of trial court denying motion for nonsuit upon any ground not precisely and specifically stated in motion.

7. Contracts ⇨221(3)—Under contract requiring payment on completion of contractual outlets and not later than 60 days from first payment, completion of contractual outlets was not condition precedent to second payment.

Under contract requiring payment of $10,400 upon completion of contractual outlets and not later than 60 days from date of first payment, completion of contractual outlets was not condition precedent to payment of $10,400.

8. Trial ⇨419—Order denying motion for nonsuit will not be disturbed, where evidence subsequently admitted fully supports judgment.

Order denying motion for nonsuit will not be disturbed on appeal, where evidence subsequently admitted fully supports judgment.

9. Appeal and error ⇨1011(1)—Truth of conflicting testimony was for trial court.

Where testimony with reference to offsets was conflicting, trial court was at liberty to accept as true testimony of plaintiff's witnesses in reference thereto.

10. Bills and notes ⇨539—Findings that plaintiff's assignor represented to purchaser of notes that $4,000 interest was paid in advance and that $2,000 fire insurance premiums were paid and that representations were not false, and finding that interest payable on certain date was not paid, held not contradictory.

In action to recover purchase price of promissory notes sold, finding that plaintiff's assignor had represented to purchaser that $4,000 had been paid as interest in advance and that $2,000 had been paid as premiums on fire insurance policies and that such representations were not false, and finding that interest on deeds of trust was not paid when due on July 2, 1926, held not contradictory.

11. Bills and notes ⇨516—In action for purchase price of notes, defense of misrepresentation was affirmative defense to be proven by defendant by preponderance of evidence.

In action to recover purchase price of notes sold, defense of fraud and misrepresentation on part of plaintiff's assignor was an affirmative defense to be proven by defendant by preponderance of evidence.

12. Appeal and error ⇨1033(7)—Defendant could not complain that finding in its favor was unsupported by evidence.

Defendant could not complain on appeal that finding in its favor was not supported by evidence.

13. New trial ⇨99—Evidence justifying new trial must be newly discovered, must not be cumulative merely, must be such that different result is probable, and must have been undiscoverable with reasonable diligence.

To entitle one to new trial on ground of newly discovered evidence, it must appear, first, that evidence, and not merely its materiality, be newly discovered; second, that evidence be not cumulative merely; third, that it be such as to render different result probable on retrial of cause; fourth, that party could not with reasonable diligence have discovered and produced it at trial; and, fifth, that these facts be shown by evidence of which case admits.

14. Appeal and error ⇨981—Court's action denying new trial for newly discovered evidence will not be disturbed except for abuse of discretion.

Action of trial court in denying motion for new trial on ground of newly discovered evidence will not be disturbed except for an abuse of discretion; presumption being that discretion was properly exercised.

15. New trial ⇨108(1)—New trial held properly refused where newly discovered evidence would not have rendered different result probable.

New trial on ground of newly discovered evidence held properly denied where affidavit was based largely on hearsay, and evidence was not such as to render different result probable on retrial.

16. New trial ⇨1—New trial for purpose of setting up new offset arising out of deficiency judgment recovered against plaintiff's assignor subsequent to trial held properly refused.

New trial for purpose of setting up offset arising out of deficiency judgment recovered subsequent to trial against plaintiff's assignor on foreclosure of deed of trust securing one of notes involved in action held properly refused.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; John J. Van Nostrand, Judge.

Action by Harry Easom against the General Mortgage Company, in which defendant filed a cross-complaint. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Alden Ames and Rudolph J. Scholz, both of San Francisco (Donald Scott, of San Francisco, of counsel), for appellant.

Brobeck, Phleger & Harrison, of San Francisco, for respondent.

LUCAS, Justice pro tem. This action was brought by plaintiff (respondent herein), as the assignee of one James H. Hardy, to secure a balance due upon the purchase price of certain promissory notes which the General Mortgage Company, defendant below and appellant herein, had purchased under contract from the said Hardy. The answer of the mortgage company purported to deny the performance of conditions precedent, and, as a separate defense, set up certain small counterclaims. There was also included in the answer a cross-complaint alleging fraud and praying for a rescission of the original contract. Issues were framed thereon, and the case proceeded to trial. Thereupon plaintiff and respondent rested on the pleadings, and defendant and appellant moved for a nonsuit. The motion was denied. Appellant then introduced evidence in support of the allegations contained in its answer and cross-complaint, and, after the case was submitted to the court, judgment was given plaintiff and respondent for the full amount sued for.

[1] After a motion for a new trial had been made and denied, the mortgage company appealed, assigning as error the court's action in denying the motions for a nonsuit and for a new trial, in disallowing a certain offset or counterclaim, and in making allegedly contrary and inconsistent findings and findings not supported by the evidence. The court is also said to have committed error in denying a motion for a continuance of the trial. This latter motion was made on the ground that the mortgage company was foreclosing a deed of trust securing one of the notes purchased under the contract involved in the case at bar. As appellant's action in that respect could have no possible bearing upon the issues involved herein, the motion was properly denied.

To pass upon the propriety of the trial court's action in denying the motion for a nonsuit, it will be necessary to briefly examine the pleadings. The complaint, after alleging defendant's corporate existence, alleges that on August 5, 1926, James H. Hardy entered into a written contract with said defendant (appellant herein) whereby the said Hardy conveyed to it a promissory note of Anna M. and Charles A. Clark in the principal sum of $18,457.71, a promissory note of James Michael and Margaret Sinnott in the principal sum of $1,800, and a promissory note of Robert Burns and Estelle Boardman Jensen in the principal sum of $1,500; each of said promissory notes being secured by a separate second deed of trust. In consideration thereof, the mortgage company agreed to pay the said Hardy $10,500 "when the title to said promissory notes had been cleared in accordance with the recommendations of the preliminary title search submitted by the East Bay Title Company, which said search was to show clear title to date of assignment to General Mortgage Company," and $10,400 "not later than sixty (60) days from the date of said first payment." It is then alleged that on August 5, 1926, the said Hardy transferred his interest in said contract to plaintiff, that the General Mortgage Company was notified of said assignment, and that on the same date the title to said promissory notes was cleared in accordance with the recommendations of the preliminary title search referred to in said contract; the search showing clear title to the date of assignment. It is further alleged that of the payments due under said contract only the sum of $14,000 had been paid, and that there was still due, owing, and unpaid from the mortgage company to plaintiff (respondent herein) the sum of $6,900, together with interest. None of these allegations was denied by the answer. In addition to the foregoing, however, the complaint contained the following allegation:

"IV. That said Hardy and said plaintiff had performed all of the conditions in said contract on the part of said Hardy contained."

The answer attempted to deny this paragraph in the following words: "Denies the allegations in paragraph IV of said complaint, and in this respect denies that said Hardy or plaintiff had performed all of the conditions in said contract to be performed by the said Hardy."

[2] This denial, according to appellant, placed in issue the allegations of performance of all conditions to be performed by Hardy, and therefore made it incumbent upon respondent to prove performance. We do not agree with appellant. The only condition mentioned in the complaint as a condition precedent to payment was that concerning the clearing of title to the promissory notes, and the performance of that condition was admitted by failure to deny.

[3] There are several reasons why appellant cannot be heard to complain of the court's ruling on the motion for a nonsuit. In the first place, the complaint stated a complete cause of action without paragraph IV, and, the contract being pleaded in terms and not being set forth in full, paragraph IV may be considered as surplusage, or at least an immaterial allegation which it is not necessary to deny. 21 Cal. Jur. 143.

[4] Secondly, if the allegations contained in paragraph IV may be considered material, the denial thereof being in form a negative pregnant was insufficient. It had the effect of admitting that all the conditions precedent except the least material thereof had been performed. In law this has been held to amount to an admission that substantially all of the terms and conditions of the contract had been complied with. Jones & Laughlin Steel Co. v. Abner Doble Co., 162 Cal. 497, 500, 123 P. 290.

[5, 6] Again, the motion did not sufficiently state the grounds relied upon. The only ground assigned was failure to prove performance on the part of respondent. Counsel failed, however, to direct the court's attention to any particulars in which the proof failed. It has been many times held that an appellate court will not review the ruling of a trial court denying a motion for a nonsuit upon any ground not precisely and specifically stated in the motion; the reason being that the court and opposing counsel are entitled to have their attention directed particularly to the supposed defects in plaintiff's case. Millar v. Millar, 175 Cal. 797, 167 P. 394, L. R. A. 1918B, 415, Ann. Cas. 1918E, 184. It develops from a reading of the transcript of the evidence taken at the trial that moving counsel was in no position to direct the court's attention to particulars in which the proof failed, for the simple reason that there were no other conditions to be performed by respondent or his predecessor.

[7] It is true that, in the written contract introduced in evidence as Plaintiff's Exhibit A, where reference is made to the payment of $10,400 the following language appears: "10,400 upon completion of contractual outlets and not later than sixty (60) days from the date of the first payment made above." Neither from the contract nor from the evidence can it be ascertained what was meant by the words "contractual outlets," nor whose duty it was to complete them; but, since in any event the $10,400 payment was to have been made not later than 60 days from the date of the first payment (i. e., from August 5, 1926), the completion of contractual outlets—whatever they may be—was certainly not a condition precedent to payment.

[8] Finally, even if it could be said that the court erred in denying the motion for a nonsuit, such error could not be taken advantage of herein because the evidence subsequently admitted fully supports the judgment. In such a case the order denying the motion for a nonsuit will not be disturbed. Lowe v. San Francisco, etc., Ry. Co., 154 Cal. 573, 98 P. 678; Mayr v. Goldschmidt, 63 Cal. App. 381, 218 P. 621.

[9] The point attempted to be made concerning the alleged error of the court in disallowing certain offsets is entirely without merit, as the testimony in reference to offsets was conflicting, and the court was at liberty to accept as true the testimony of respondent's witnesses in reference thereto.

[10] The claim of conflicting and insufficient findings we find also to be without merit. As a so-called third and separate defense and by way of cross-complaint appellant alleged that respondent's predecessor, Hardy, represented at the time of transfer of one of the notes and second deeds of trust that there had been paid on a certain first deed of trust the sum of $4,000 as interest in advance, and that there had also been paid the sum of $2,000 as premiums on fire insurance policies covering the incumbered property. It is then alleged that these representations were false; the facts being that the interest on said first deed of trust payable July 2, 1926, had not been paid, that default had occurred prior to August 5, 1926, in the payments due under said first deed of trust, and that no interest thereon whatsoever had been paid in advance, and that said property on August 5, 1926, was not covered by fire insurance on which payments had been made in the sum of $2,000, or any other sum. The court found in reference to these allegations:

"8. That it is true that said James H. Hardy represented to the cross-complainant and defendant that there had been paid on said first deed of trust * * * the sum of Four Thousand Dollars ($4,000), as interest in advance, and also that there had been paid the sum of Two Thousand Dollars ($2,000) as premiums on fire insurance policies covering the said property, but it is not true that said representations, or either of them, were false or fraudulent; that it is true that the interest on said first deed of trust which was payable on the 2nd day of July, A. D. 1926, had not been paid, and that default had occurred prior to August 5, 1926, in the payments due under said first deed of trust; but it is not true that no interest thereon whatsoever had been paid in advance; but, on the contrary, it was true that the said sum of Four Thousand Dollars had been paid as interest thereon in advance; that it is true that said property on said 5th day of August, 1926, was covered by fire insurance on which premiums had been paid in the sum of Two Thousand Dollars ($2,000)."

These findings are not contradictory. It is found to be true that the sum of $4,000 had been paid in advance as interest upon the first deed of trust. It is also found to be true that default had occurred in the payment of interest due July 2, 1926; but there is no finding, nor in the evidence is there any justification for a finding, or even an assumption, that the interest found to be paid in advance was interest falling due July 2, 1926.

[11] Appellant further attacks the above findings on the ground that that portion thereof finding it untrue that the representation in regard to the interest payment of $4,000 was neither false nor fraudulent is not supported by the evidence. The attack is unmerited. The defense of fraud and misrepresentation was an affirmative defense to be proven by appellant by a preponderance of the evidence. Appellant failed in this proof, and therefore the court properly found against the averments of fraud and misrepresentation.

[12] As a matter of fact, the only erroneous finding of the court shown by the record is the finding that Hardy represented that a $4,000 advance interest payment had been made. In regard thereto, appellant's employee, to whom the representation was said to have been made, testified positively:

"Q. You handled that transaction, did you?
A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Now, at the time that this agreement was entered into did Mr. Hardy mention to you anything about the payment of interest on the first deed of trust on property on Broadway Street? A. I don't remember any statement of that kind.

"Q. Did he at any time ever tell you that the interest on that property was in arrears or had been paid? A. No."

While this finding was clearly unsupported by the evidence, being in its favor, appellant cannot complain. On the other hand, since in point of fact no such representation was made, it could neither be fraudulent nor relied upon as a matter of inducement.

The motion for a new trial which appellant insists should have been granted was made upon several statutory grounds, but the only one relied upon by appellant was that of newly discovered evidence.

[13, 14] "In People v. Sutton, 73 Cal. 243, 15 P. 86, 88, it is said: 'To entitle a party to a new trial, on the ground of newly discovered evidence, it must appear—"(1) that the evidence, and not merely its materiality, be newly discovered; (2) that the evidence be not cumulative merely; (3) that it be such as to render a different result probable on a retrial of the cause; (4) that the party could not with reasonable diligence have discovered and produced it at the trial; and (5) that these facts be shown by the best evidence of which the case admits.'" 1 Hayne on New Trial and Appeal, § 88. "Applications on this ground are addressed to the discretion of the court below, and the action of the court below will not be disturbed except for an abuse of discretion, the presumption being that the discretion was properly exercised." (1 Hayne on New Trial and Appeal, § 87.)" People v. Urquidas, 96 Cal. 239, 241, 31 P. 52.

[15, 16] In this case the affidavit in support of appellant's motion was based largely on hearsay. Many of the alleged facts contained therein were immaterial and entirely insufficient, either of themselves or in connection with the other testimony in the case, to establish any defense to the action and were not such as to render a different result probable on a retrial of the cause. The affidavit also contained averments attempting to set up a new offset arising out of a deficiency judgment recovered subsequent to the trial against respondent's assignor on foreclosure of a deed of trust securing one of the notes involved in this action. Permission was asked to present such evidence at a new trial and to file an amended answer and cross-complaint setting up such offset. There would be no end to litigation if such procedure were generally allowed. We are unable to see, therefore, any abuse of discretion on the part of the trial court in denying appellant's motion.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

WITHERS et al. v. SOUTHERN PAC. CO.
(Civ. 6243.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Oct. 21, 1929.

Appeal and error $\S$ 635(1)—Where there is failure to print parts of transcript justifying reversal of judgment, judgment will be affirmed (District Court of Appeal and Supreme Court Rule VIII).

It is incumbent on appellants to print such parts of transcript as will justify reversal of judgment, and, where there is failure to do so, judgment will be affirmed, especially where nonobservance of requirements of Rule VIII of rules governing practice in District Court of Appeal and Supreme Court was brought to appellants' attention by respondent's brief.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John L. Fleming, Judge.

Action by F. M. Withers and others, co-partners as Withers Bros. & Co., against the Southern Pacific Company. From a judgment of nonsuit, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

I. Henry Harris, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

W. I. Gilbert, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

IRA F. THOMPSON, J. The plaintiffs have appealed from a judgment of nonsuit rendered against them in the court below. Their opening brief is all contained under one heading, to wit, "Statement." Some of the pleadings are set forth, and then appellants tell us in the most general way about some testimony which was excluded, whether erroneously we cannot judge because sufficient to enable us to say is not printed either in the brief or an appendix thereto. Neither the questions nor objections are set forth. Whether they were sufficient in form or substance cannot be determined from any printed matter. In truth the only way left open for us to determine the merits of the appeal, if we are to undertake the task, is to make a complete examination of the typewritten transcript. This we are not called upon to do. It is incumbent upon the appellants to print such parts of the transcript as will justify a reversal of the judgment, and, where there is a failure in this regard, the judgment will be affirmed. Filmer v. Davis (Cal. App.) 266 P. 985, and Keele v. Clouser (Cal. App.) 268 P. 682. Particularly should this be the rule where, as here, the dereliction of counsel in this particular, as well as his nonobservance of the requirements of rule VIII of the rules governing the practice in this and the Supreme Court, was brought to his attention by the brief of respondent.

Judgment affirmed.

LICHTENBERG v. BURDELL. (Civ. 6548.) ★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Sept. 30, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Oct. 29, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Nov. 29, 1929.

1. Evidence $\S$ 82—It is presumed that official duty was performed in appraisal of estate, and that probate proceedings were regularly conducted.

Probate proceedings will be presumed in the absence of evidence to have been regularly conducted, and appraisal made in due performance of official duty.

2. Evidence $\S$ 601(4)—In action to declare involuntary trust by reason of executor's fraud, evidence held not to sustain court's finding as to value of corporate stock in excess of appraisal.

In an action to declare an involuntary trust in favor of plaintiff by reason of executor's fraud and concealment, finding that certain corporate stock was worth $50,000 held unwarranted in view of original appraisal at $1,000 and entire lack of evidence to show value of corporate assets indicating greater value at time of appraisal.

3. Trial $\S$ 395(3)—General findings of fraud, concealment, domination, and trust, unsupported by evidence of specific facts, are insufficient to sustain judgment declaring trust for executor's wrongdoing.

General findings of fraud, and concealment and domination and trust, unsupported by evidence of specific facts, indicative of fraud or wrongdoing, will not support judgment declaring involuntary trust for executor's fraud and concealment.

4. Descent and distribution $\S$ 74—Wills $\S$ 721—Estate vests in devisees, legatees, or heirs immediately on death of decedent.

An estate of a decedent vests in his heirs or devisees and legatees immediately on his death.

5. Wills $\S$ 723—Legatee derives title to specific legacy, not from decree of distribution, but from will, which takes effect on testator's death.

Legatee of specific legacy does not derive title from the decree of distribution, but from the will, which takes effect immediately upon testator's death.

6. Fraud $\S$ 25—Fraud without damage creates no cause of action.

Fraud without damages gives rise to no cause of action.

7. Trusts $\S$ 105—Executor who was also specific legatee cannot be charged as trustee for fraud by reason of concealment of partnership interest with purchaser of specific legacy, estates in no wise suffering loss.

Executor, who was also legatee of specific legacy, cannot be charged as involuntary trustee because of his sale of corporate stock belonging to estate including his specific legacy and concealment of partnership interest with purchaser in subject-matter of such specific legacy, no contention being made as to the existence of fraud with respect to other corporate property, and the estate in no wise suffering injury or loss, by reason of his conduct with respect to his own specific legacy.

8. Wills ☞717—Renunciation of specific legacy of corporate stock held not established by testimony of legatee that stock was owned by estate.

Renunciation of specific legacy of corporate stock cannot be found as a fact from legatee's testimony on witness stand that stock was part of testatrix's estate and that estate owned stock, such testimony not being inconsistent with legatee's claim under legacy, and in any event being a mere conclusion in no way affecting status of legacy.

9. Trusts ☞110—Evidence held insufficient to charge executor as involuntary trustee for wrongdoing in acquiring interest in corporate stock sold by him as executor.

Evidence that plaintiff under mother's will bequeathing to her son and executor certain shares of corporate stock and to her daughter, plaintiff, portion of ranch equal in value to the value of such stock, entered into agreement with her father and brother whereby he released his claim to the corporate stock, and she released her claim to any portion of the ranch, on consideration of the father paying to each of them during his life the sum of $100 per month, and thereafter the executor sold the corporate stock, and evidence that he acquired a partnership interest in stock appraised at $1,000, and thereafter acquired sole ownership of business represented by such stock, held insufficient on which to charge him with an involuntary trust as wrongdoer.

10. Fraud ☞50—Fraud must be proved, and is not presumed.

Fraud must always be proved and is never presumed, where the evidence and proven facts are equally susceptible of the inference of fair dealing.

11. Equity ☞88—Limitation of actions ☞15—In action to declare executor involuntary trustee, stipulation that plaintiff's suspicions were aroused shortly before commencement of action held not waiver of defense of limitations and laches.

In action to declare executor involuntary trustee for fraud and wrongdoing, stipulation by defendant's counsel admitting that plaintiff's suspicions were first aroused shortly before commencement of action held not waiver of defense of limitations and laches.

12. Limitation of actions ☞1—Statutes of limitation are statutes of repose.

Statutes of limitation are statutes of repose and designed to bring about peace and harmony.

13. Equity ☞67—Defense of laches rests on public policy disfavoring stale demands, and doctrine is relaxed only where fraud or injustice will result.

The doctrine of laches is founded, not on particular concern for individual rights, but as matter of public policy, and the defense of laches will be available in all cases to bar stale demands, except where fraud or injustice will result.

14. Trusts ☞365(3)—Delay of 24 years in bringing suit to declare involuntary trust held laches barring relief, in view of plaintiff's knowledge and opportunities to know facts.

Delay of heir for 24 years in questioning transaction upon which she now predicates suit to declare executor involuntary trustee, for fraud and concealment, held laches precluding relief, in view of evidence of her knowledge and opportunities for knowledge of facts.

Appeal from Superior Court, Marin County; Edward I. Butler, Judge.

Action by Mabel Burdell Lichtenberg against James B. Burdell. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals, and plaintiff cross-appeals. Judgment reversed on defendant's appeal.

Brittain & Weise and Brobeck, Phleger & Harrison, all of San Francisco (Maurice T. Dooling, of Hollister, of counsel), for appellant.

R. P. Henshall, Robert R. Moody, and Nat Schmulowitz, all of San Francisco, for cross-appellant.

PARKER, Justice pro tem. This action was commenced to declare a trust in favor of plaintiff and to enforce an accounting thereof.

In the court below plaintiff prevailed, and after accounting had, it was found that a large sum of money was due to the plaintiff and judgment entered accordingly. The defendant appeals from said judgment and urges that under the facts as shown no judgment at all should have been rendered against him. Plaintiff appeals and contends that under the facts found by the trial court, as a matter of law, the judgment should be for a much greater amount.

The basis of the action and the theory upon which it was tried embraces fraud and concealment on the part of an executor with reference to the funds of the estate of his testator. It therefore becomes necessary that we review, in some detail, the facts of the controversy.

Plaintiff and defendant are brother and sister, and, as far as the record discloses, are the only children of Mary A. Burdell, deceased. In order to avoid a possible confusion of names, we will refer to Mary A. Burdell hereafter as the mother. The mother died some time in the year 1900, and at the time of her death she was survived by her husband, Galen Burdell, and the children named. The plaintiff at that time was the wife of one John Coleman, and there was one child of their union, a daughter, Kathlyne, at that time a minor. Prior to her death, the mother had made a last will and testament and also a codicil thereto. After her death and after proceedings regularly had, the will and codicil were admitted to probate in the superior court of the state of California in and for the county of Marin and the persons designated by her as executors were duly appointed as such and thereafter qualified. These executors were the surviving husband, Galen Burdell, James B. Burdell, defendant, and John Coleman, husband of the plaintiff. Here it might be noted that at or about this time, in any event, during the times in question here, plaintiff and the said John Coleman had discontinued their marital relations and a decree of divorce had been entered. Likewise it might be noted that notwithstanding this, the said John Coleman was and remained the guardian of the estate of the minor Kathleenne. The estate of the decedent was of a value in excess of $400,000, and with the exception of a few minor personal bequests the entire estate was devised to the parties hereinbefore named by specific bequests to each.

The general thought prevailing throughout the instrument was that eventually, after a life estate in a portion to the husband, the entire estate, with little exception, should go in equal shares to the son James Burdell in fee and the daughter Mabel Coleman, the plaintiff here, for life with remainder over to her issue. The instrument was dated November 7, 1899.

There are two provisions of this will which demand specific attention, namely paragraphs 9 and 10 thereof. Paragraph 9 is as follows: "I give and bequeath unto my son James B. Burdell all the shares owned by me at the time of my death in the corporation known and designated as The Western Refrigerating Company."

Paragraph 10 reads: "I give and bequeath to my daughter Mabel such portion of the Nicasio Ranch as shall be equal in value as appraised in the inventory of my Estate, to the value of the shares in the Western Refrigerating Company devised to my son James. To have and to hold the same for her use and benefit during the period of her natural life; and upon her death I give and bequeath the same unto her children living at the time of said event in equal shares."

The codicil to the will was dated January 16, 1900. Little change is made in the previous terms of the will, but there are two paragraphs in this codicil that are worthy of note, namely, paragraphs 2 and 5. Paragraph 2 reads: "After that portion shall have been taken from the Nicasio Ranch to make up the equivalent of the shares in the Western Refrigerating Company now known as the Electric Light Power Company, which is bequeathed to my daughter Mabel for life in paragraph Tenth of my will, I give and bequeath the remainder of the said Nicasio Ranch to my husband Galen Burdell to have, hold and enjoy the same during the term of his natural life * * *" Then follows disposition of remainder.

Paragraph 5 reads: "The portion of the Nicasio Ranch bequeathed to my daughter Mabel, etc., as the equivalent of the shares in the Western Refrigerating Company now the Electric Light and Power Company is to include the dwelling house and such portion of the lands adjoining or surrounding the same as may be selected by her of the value directed."

The mother died on January 23, 1900, and the will was admitted to probate on March 5, 1900, at which time the executors were appointed.

In the regular course of probate appraisers were appointed, and on October 11, 1900, the inventory and appraisal of the estate was filed. This inventory, as far as it is before us in the present record, contains the following:

"1,396 shares in Petaluma Gas & Electric Company, appraised at $40,000.

"146 shares in Western Refrigerating Co., $1,000."

In the early part of 1901, Mr. John Martin comes into the field as an organizer and promoter of power and light corporations. At that time this class of corporation was somewhat in disorder; there being many small companies, each covering a limited field. Martin had already secured numerous little companies throughout the state and being, as he modestly admitted, a man of vision, his purpose was to group many of these corporations and form a larger controlling company. At this period he was operating a corporation known as and called California Central Gas & Electric Company. The record discloses that this corporation was, to a great extent, if not wholly, the mere instrumentality of Martin, who owned a large majority of the stock.

In the spring of 1901 Martin began negotiations with defendant James B. Burdell, looking toward the purchase of the properties called Petaluma Gas & Electric Company. This was the same company whose stock was inventoried in the estate of Mary A. Burdell. It will assist in outlining the case to dwell further on the condition of this Petaluma Gas & Electric Company, briefly, for the present. Mrs. Burdell, the mother, as her estate indicates, was a person of wealth. Her interests had been mostly in farming lands and live stock. Her favored interest was the development of the dairy industry and the installation of modern methods and refrigeration. She had visited fairs and agricultural expositions in many places and was interested in starting something in the section where her properties were located. Some time in 1897 or thereabouts there was for sale an old electric light plant in Petaluma, and it was her idea that a refrigerating plant could be operated with the same overhead and crew of help. Accordingly she purchased this plant.

and business known as the Petaluma Light & Power Corporation. This was the beginning of her ventures along the line of distribution and sale of electric light and energy and the supplying of gas. Subsequently she purchased other machinery and equipment to the point where she organized the corporation whose stock is referred to in the inventory. Her power and light business was conducted on a small scale, compared with present methods, and she remained the sole owner of all of the stock in the corporation formed. The business of refrigeration was conducted under the same roof as the power business, the rooms being divided into various departments wherein there was an ice plant, a creamery and butter business, and the vegetable and produce business.

As may be more or less frequent where several corporations are organized and controlled by the same persons, there were, from time to time, dealings between the corporate entities whereby properties were exchanged and agreements made. As is likewise usual, these transactions really, by a person with himself, leave much indefinite and uncertain as to the exact status of either the person or his or her corporations. It will suffice to say that both the refrigerating plant and the power plant, while each a separate corporation, were entirely owned by the mother and operated, in a great measure, together. The means of gas distribution were antiquated; the power plant was equipped with even then old machinery, and the refrigeration and icing plant was put together with mixed new and second-hand machinery. This was the situation when John Martin entered the Petaluma field.

The trial of the present action in the court below was commenced in June, 1926, and John Martin was called as a witness for plaintiff. An analysis of his testimony disclosed that he had some general knowledge, that in 1901 he had purchased an electric plant or the stock of an electric plant in the city of Petaluma and in the purchase had negotiated with James B. Burdell. He did remember the price paid and that is about the extent of his testimony. His story of the transaction was not relied upon by plaintiff nor did the court find the facts as Martin recalled them. This is in no way intended as a criticism of the witness. He stated throughout his testimony, as was the fact, that he was in 1901 engaged in many big projects, of which this Petaluma matter was a comparatively small venture. He testified further that the details of the transfer and the questions of legal formalities were in the hands of his attorneys exclusively. And, further, his memory had not retained the events of 25 years back. There is testimony, however, that the negotiations covered a period of several months. There was a difference in the price offered and the price asked; inspection was made of the premises, and title examinations were entered into. Negotiations ended in an agreement to sell to Martin the electric light plant and the refrigerating plant with its allied creamery and produce business. This last statement, in so far as it includes the refrigerating plant, is the subject of dispute, but found by the court and practically agreed upon by all sides, though denied equivocally by Martin.

We now go back to the record of the court in probate. On August 30, 1901, there was filed in said court a petition for order of sale of personal property. This petition was signed by the three executors and after preliminary recitals showing indebtedness of estate and need of funds, set forth the property desired to be sold. This property embraced 1,396 shares of Petaluma Gas & Electric Company, 146 shares of the Western Refrigerating Company, and 5 shares in the Dairyman's Union of California. The last-named shares have no connection with this case in any way and there will be no further mention thereof. The petition then recites: That the heirs of the deceased to whom the said 1,396 shares would be distributed if not needed for the payment of the debts of the estate are Galen Burdell, husband, James B. Burdell, a son, and Mabel Smith, formerly Mabel Coleman, a daughter, all of whom are desirous that the said personal property should be sold and applied to the payment of the indebtedness. The petition then further recites: That the shares of the Western Refrigerating Company, although devised to James B. Burdell, are so connected with the gas and electric plant represented by the shares of the Petaluma Gas & Electric Company that it is necessary to sell the said shares with the others to secure a favorable sale of the same and it is absolutely necessary that all of the shares should be sold together. The petition prays for an order authorizing the sale of the said stocks. Pursuant to the law as it then read, the court set a date for hearing said petition and ordered notice thereof given by posting. Thereafter on September 10, 1901, the court made its order authorizing and directing the sale of the said stocks at private sale. This order recited that the 146 shares of Western Refrigerating Company were so connected with the Petaluma Gas & Electric Company that it was necessary and advisable for a sale of the same to be made jointly with the shares of stock of the gas and electric company in order to obtain a full and adequate price for the said shares of both companies, and the order directed and authorized that the sale of the stock in these two companies might be sold jointly in one parcel.

On September 20, 1901, a return of sale was made and filed, which said return was executed by the three executors. It recited the proceedings had under the order of sale and that at the said sale there was received the bid of John Martin offering the sum of $65,000 for the stocks mentioned. The return prayed the confirmation of the court. This return was verified by each and all of the executors. After proceedings regularly had, the court on September 26, 1901, confirmed the sale to John Martin and directed the necessary transfers.

On March 31, 1902, there was filed in said court the second annual account of the executors. This account was executed by James B. Burdell and John Coleman, two of the executors, but the names of the three appear thereon; the name of Galen Burdell being signed by James B. Burdell. In this account the proceeds of the sale were accounted for as follows:

"Received for 1400 shares Pet. Gas & Electric Co. $64,000.00.

"Received for 146 shares Western Refrig. Co. $1,000.00."

On April 14, 1902, an order was made by the court decreeing the account, in all respects as rendered, approved, allowed, and settled.

On January 30, 1902, there was filed in the said court a petition for leave to borrow certain moneys and as security for the repayment thereof to execute a mortgage on certain real estate belonging to the estate of the decedent. The petition recited the execution and admission to probate of the will and detailed certain legacies thereunder. Further, it showed other debts which were due, amounting in all to some $130,000. The petition then recites: That in addition to the said legacies mentioned, a devise was made by will of the deceased to James B. Burdell, her son, one of the petitioners, "of all the shares owned by her at the time of her death in the corporation known and designated as the Western Refrigerating Company, which shares are referred to in a codicil of the will as now known as the Electric Light and Power Co.," and there was devised to the daughter of the deceased such portion of the Nicasio ranch as should be equivalent in value as appraised in the inventory of the estate to the value of the shares devised to said James B. Burdell. The petition then recites that at the time of the death of Mary A. Burdell, the mother, there were three corporations answering, or in some way answering to the one mentioned in the will and named these as the Western Refrigerating Company, the Petaluma Electric Light & Power Company, and the Petaluma Gas & Electric Company. Further the petition recites that it is claimed by James B. Burdell that it was the intent of the testatrix to devise to him the 1396 shares in the Petaluma Gas & Electric Company and that the same are devised by the will but were misnamed and incorrectly described. The said James B. Burdell therefore claims the equivalent in cash to the appraised value of the said shares. The petition is signed and verified by James B. Burdell and Galen Burdell, executors. It is not signed by the remaining executor, Coleman, and the reason appears in the petition itself as follows: "The belief and claim of James B. Burdell is not acquiesced in by John M. Coleman, one of the executors, and also the Guardian of Kathlynne Coleman, a minor interested in the estate, and he therefore has not joined in this petition."

Thereafter all of the parties came together, namely, Galen Burdell, James B. Burdell, John Coleman, executors, the latter being also guardian of Kathlynne Coleman, and the plaintiff Mabel Smith, formerly Mabel Coleman. The last-named Mabel Smith was represented in these negotiations by Leonard Stone, her attorney. As a result of this conference an agreement was entered into between the parties to the effect stated as follows: "In consideration of James B. Burdell releasing and abandoning any claim under the will of any interest in and to any shares in the Petaluma Gas and Electric Company or in the Western Refrigerating Company or the Electric Light and Power Company, and the said Mabel Smith releasing and abandoning any claim under the will to an interest in the Nicasio Ranch equivalent to the value of such shares as shown by the inventory or otherwise, Galen Burdell agrees to pay to James B. Burdell and to Mabel Smith from the date of the Decree of Distribution, during the term of his, Galen Burdell's natural life, the sum of one hundred dollars per month each."

This agreement, as far as the record indicates, was fully complied with by all of the parties thereto. Nothing further appears of interest in the probate proceedings down to the decree of final distribution, which decree was preceded, as a matter of course, and record, by the final account, which was duly approved. The decree of final distribution was entered on September 2, 1902, and distributes the property remaining as per the terms of the will. No mention is made in this decree of any of the stocks herein discussed nor is mention made of the life estate of Mabel Smith in the Nicasio ranch.

After distribution of the specific legacies the decree contains the general wording of distribution of any residuum to the named heirs, the surviving husband and two children, as follows: "There is distributed to Galen Burdell, James B. Burdell and Mabel Smith all and singular any property not now known or discovered or not included in any inventory on file which may belong to the estate of Mary A. Burdell, or in which the estate may have any right, title or interest." And thus, as far as the record of probate discloses, the matter of the estate of Mary A. Burdell, deceased, closed.

The present action was commenced in July of 1925. In the complaint many of the matters hereinbefore detailed are recited and alleged. It is the gravamen of the complaint that there was irregularity in the proceedings involving the sale of the stock and assets of the Western Refrigerating Company. The complaint sets forth and alleges: That the sale of the stock of the Western Refrigerating Company was in fact no sale. That no stock of the Western Refrigerating Company was involved in the sale to John Martin. That the defendant James B. Burdell, as the controlling executor, had dominated the remaining executors and made them believe that a sale of the Refrigerating Company's stock had taken place, when, in fact, all that John Martin purchased was the stock in the Petaluma Gas & Electric Company. Further, the complaint alleges the value of the stock of the Western Refrigerating Company to have been worth more than $50,000. Many other allegations are contained, such as the trust and confidence placed by plaintiff in defendant, his representations to her and her absolute faith in him; likewise, her unfamiliarity with business, and in general all of the so-called classical allegations of a complaint in equity, seeking the creation of a trust in favor of one who has been fraudulently deprived of the benefits of his inheritance.

We pass thus over the allegations of the complaint for the reason that on the trial the plaintiff conceded that her understanding of the facts surrounding the sale were purely on information and belief and beyond her knowledge. The facts as developed, of which hereinafter, came through the testimony of defendant and the court records, and on this testimony and records the court made its findings in favor of plaintiff. The plaintiff also pleaded the reason for her long delay in bringing the action, which reasons will be discussed when we come to the claim of defendant on the point of laches. After the evidence was in the court found the fraud alleged and declared that defendant had by this fraud unlawfully and inequitably come into the possession of assets of the estate of which he was executor, and ordered an accounting. Upon the account being taken, it was found by the court that the plaintiff was entitled to recover from the defendant the sum of $58,672.02 in cash and to have delivered to her by him certain corporation stocks of the par value of $34,900.

The findings of fact are detailed and lengthy and in some instances apparently in conflict and in other instances wholly unsupported by the record and without even the foundation of legitimate inference.

It was argued in the court below as the position of the plaintiff that she would stand on the story of defendant concerning what actually was the transaction between him and Martin, and inasmuch as the trial court adopted in its findings this testimony we will detail the same. As suggested hereinbefore the testimony of Martin was unsatisfactory and indefinite. He testified that he did not know that he was dealing with an executor or that the property involved was in any wise connected with a probate proceeding or subject to the supervision of a court. He testified further that his chief part in the transaction and in all similar transactions was to give personal attention to the securing of the certificates representing the stock with particular note of the legality and sufficiency of the indorsements. It was shown that the certificates he received were indorsed by the executors as such, thus bringing directly to his attention the character of the transfer. Likewise, he testified that the regularity of the legal steps was intrusted to his counsel and the counsel named were stipulated to be and the fact is they were outstanding members of the California bar at that time. All conceded that they were men of such standing in the profession that they and each of them had and would have a complete familiarity with the details of probate and the statutory requirements accompanying any sale of the assets of a decedent, whose estate was in course of probate. Without further analysis of the testimony of this witness, whose recollection was dimmed by the intervening years, we will, as did the trial court and plaintiff's counsel, adopt, at least as far as was done in the court below, the version given by defendant.

[1, 2] It might be noted here that no claim of any sort is made or involved concerning the shares of stock or the assets of the Petaluma Gas & Electric Company. As far as this record goes, it is conceded that plaintiff makes no claim by reason of any irregularity in this. Therefore the question is confined to the Western Refrigerating Company. It is alleged that the stock and assets of the Western Refrigerating Company were worth the sum of $50,000. The trial court makes no finding on the value. We must presume that official duty was performed and our presumption likewise extends to the regularity of probate proceedings or other ordinary transactions. With this in mind, we have the appraisement return of the stock of the said corporation as $1,000. There was no evidence on values nor is there anything in the record that impeaches the fairness of the appraisement. Indeed, the entire record and the attendant circumstances seem to support it. The executors who turned over the inventory for appraisement were those persons who had been closest to the affairs of Mrs. Burdell in her lifetime and had a close familiarity with her estate. The appraisers, at least one of them, had been theretofore associated in the conduct of the general refrigerating and power business of Mrs. Burdell; Coleman, one of the executors, had a personal interest, as the guardian of his daughter, in having a full and fair valuation placed upon these shares. This by reason of the fact that the life interest in the Nicasio ranch, equivalent in value to the value of these shares, carried a remainder over to the ward, as issue of the daughter Mabel. Also the record develops that the Western Refrigerating Company really owned practically no assets by reason of an extent but not completely executed agreement whereby everything owned by the said corporation was transferred to the electric company. In fact, it is conceded and found that the most valuable part of the refrigerating company was its good will and this finding is made 25 years after, when the business had shown that the then good will must have had some value.

The plant of the refrigerating company was an assembled plant, mostly secondhand, and there is nothing to indicate the volume of business, if any, that was being done. Everything would indicate that the entire business was merely an experiment of an enterprising woman, keen on development of the dairy industry and with refrigeration yet in its infancy.

When John Martin came into the field, it was then generally known and was a fact that he was seeking control of the power and light industry throughout that entire region and was in a position to either buy or ruin. He came seeking to buy, rather than being sought after by the executors. His first contact was with James B. Burdell, with whom he had many discussions, mostly bargaining as to the price to be paid. His first offer was $60,000 and it was not until much negotiation that the price was finally agreed upon as $65,000. James B. Burdell took him through the various plants and properties and was continuously insisting that the refrigeration plant was such an integral part of the operating system that a sale of both was advisable and necessary. Martin explained that he had no interest in such a plant nor in the business of eggs, butter, or kindred products. Finally, Martin stated that if conceded the necessity of one entire purchase it would mean a total loss to him, inasmuch as he could not run the refrigerating company business and could not devote any time or attention thereto. Thereupon Burdell suggested that it might not be a difficult matter to interest someone who would take it over for Martin. In any event, after some bargaining, it was agreed between Martin and James B. Burdell that the purchase by Martin should include both the electric company and the refrigerating company and that Burdell would manage and operate the refrigerating company, and that as to the refrigerating company, Martin and James B. Burdell would be equal partners. Thereafter followed all of the probate proceedings, returns of sale, accounts, etc., as hereinbefore detailed. When the sale to John Martin was confirmed, the stock of the gas company was forthwith turned over to Martin. The stock of the Western Refrigerating Company was indorsed by the executors, as far as the stock of the mother was concerned, the remaining shares being indorsed by the parties in whose name they stood, though Mary A. Burdell was the acknowledged owner, and were in possession of James B. Burdell. Nothing was done with this or these stock certificates in the way of delivery. The assets of the gas and electric company followed the stock of that company, and John Martin, acting through his corporation, took immediate possession. For a short time the refrigerating business went on as usual under the management of James B. Burdell, defendant, but within a very short time he caused to be opened in his books, or in the books of the company, a partnership account between himself and John Martin. This was pursuant to the agreement or understanding prior to the sale. This partnership paid rent to the California Central Gas & Electric Company, then owner of the premises wherein the refrigerating plant was situate. The partnership continued on for approximately a year and one-half, or thereabouts, when Burdell purchased the interest of Martin. However, it is here to be noted that upon the opening of the partnership books, James Burdell placed into the business under the account of capital investment the sum of $1,000, being credited capital of $500 for each partner. After Burdell had purchased the interest of Martin in the concern for the sum of $3,000, he (Burdell) resurrected the old stock certificates of the Western Refrigerating Company and the corporation went through a process of what might be termed reorganization. The stock books were reopened and transfers made of the entire stock to James Burdell with sufficient qualifying shares for a directorate. He carried on the business up to approximately 1917, when the same was sold; though portions thereof had been sold at an earlier period.

[3] It was on this state of facts that the trial court determined that a fraud had been accomplished as against the estate of the decedent and against the plaintiff, and ordered the accounting. The court found that the relationship between John Martin and James B. Burdell was knowingly and willfully fraudulent and in violation of the duty of an executor and that the stock and assets of the Western Refrigerating Company, having been fraudulently obtained from the estate, a constructive trust had arisen in favor of the plaintiff as beneficiary, with the duty of accounting. Incidentally, as defendant phrases it, the findings were fully embroidered and adorned with general findings of fraud and concealment and domination and trust, many of which general findings have not the slightest support in the record. It seems that after fraud was found in the main transaction, that it was taken for granted that all of the stigmata were present. For example, it was found that James B. Burdell was the controlling and active factor and "he controlled and dominated the other executors in and about all things found in the premises." Not a word of evidence appears in support of this finding and any inference that might be drawn from the conduct of the remaining executors would negative this finding. To take up each finding and analyze the same would cover hundreds of pages, but throughout 50 pages of findings we find general unsupported conclusions and in nearly all of the specifications of insufficiency of evidence to support the findings, the complaining defendant has sustained his burden. Each attacked finding is so drawn that to point out its weakness would necessitate taking it phrase by phrase, for the reason that a little scrap of fact is taken and polished up with epithets and then builded upon by the addition of the general concomitants of a fraud, whether founded in fact or otherwise. It was found by the court that the transaction with Martin, as a matter of fact, was really a sale of the assets of Western Refrigerating Company, which passed with a partnership reservation in the defendant executor. Further, it was found that there was no sale of the stock of the said corporation and that the most valuable of the assets, namely, the good will and business, remained inherent in the stock. While upon analysis this construction might work out, yet on its face and from the state of the record, it seems rather too finely spun. The corporation remained dormant and ceased to function until revived after the termination of the partnership. Whatever business it was capable of doing must have been through its equipment, which was a part of the assets transferred. If it will be assumed, in support of the finding, that the business was done in the name of Western Refrigerating Company, then it might logically follow that it being the name that attracted the business, the success of the venture was attributable to the good will incident to that name. However, no evidence supports this construction.

[4-7] The court's finding that the transfer of the assets was with a partnership reservation supported the further finding that the transaction was a fraud upon the estate. Likewise, the finding that there was actually no transfer of the stock would have the necessary effect of leaving the stock still undistributed. Let us therefore analyze the situation in view of the admitted facts. The stock of the Western Refrigerating Company represented only $\frac{1}{400}$ part of the entire inventoried value of the estate. Under the terms of the will this stock was a specific legacy to defendant, James B. Burdell. The estate was admittedly solvent and to a healthy degree. The testatrix had been dead for more than one year and her estate had been in probate for over one year. Under these conditions the legatee was entitled to the stock bequeathed him. That the estate of a decedent vests in his heirs or devisees and legatees immediately upon his death cannot be disputed. The legatee does not derive title from the decree of distribution but from the will, which takes effect immediately upon the death of the testator (Western Pacific Ry. Co. v. Godfrey, 166 Cal. 349, 136 P. 284, Ann. Cas. 1915B, 825), citing many cases supporting the holding.

Let us suppose in the instant case that upon the petition to sell the stock of Petaluma Gas & Electric Company, the defendant James B. Burdell had set forth to the court fully the facts now found; that he had shown the court his ownership and right to the stock as a specific legatee thereof, the solvency of the estate, and its then admitted condition with reference to all of the things now disclosed. Undoubtedly the court would have had the power to sanction the arrangement. Had the court, however, upon closer scrutiny, determined that it would not be the proper thing to do, then what result would have followed? The court, upon the unquestioned showing made, would have approved the sale of the stock of the Petaluma Gas & Electric Company and refused its approval of the sale of the stock or assets of the Western Refrigerating Company. The situation then would have been exactly the same as though no proceedings or negotiations had taken place with reference to this latter stock. Then let us suppose that Burdell went to Martin and they then had the arrangement here complained of and that Burdell made an assignment to Martin of his stock with the agreement that they would be partners in the business. What possible fraud could be attached to the arrangement? If Burdell had title to this specific legacy, and no claim is made that he did not, he surely could anticipate its full delivery and either sell, assign, or give away the stock or any portion thereof that he chose. Disregarding any of these suppositions, respondents contend that the fact is Burdell did nothing of the sort and it is with the fact alone that we must deal. The gravamen of his offense and the essence of his fraud is that irrespective of the quality of his act the method he chose to bring about the result obtained was fraudulent. We may even concede this, and then immediately arises the pertinent query as to the manner in which the estate or its assets was depleted or in any way affected by this fraud or the manner in or through which this complaining plaintiff was damaged. The law seems well settled that fraud without damage gives rise to no cause of action. Holton v. Noble, 83 Cal. 9, 23 P. 58; Hunter v. McKenzie, 197 Cal. 176, 239 P. 1090.

[8] In the early case of Patterson v. Donner, 48 Cal. at page 378, it is said: "No man can complain in equity of the fraudulent practices of another, unless he has been injured by such practices." In the more recent case of Gaffney v. Graf, 73 Cal. App. at page 626, 238 P. 1054, 1055, it is said: "It is axiomatic that deceit or misrepresentation without damage does not give a cause of action; that the essential element of an action of deceit or fraud is the concurrence of both fraud and damage. It has been put in another way, that neither fraud without damage nor damage without fraud is sufficient to support an action." See also 12 Ruling Case Law, p. 239, et seq. With the application of these principles, we repeat, the damage to any one is not apparent. If it is true that a fraud was committed, the net result was of benefit to the estate in that the funds purporting to be derived from the sale were actually turned into the estate; if, on the other hand all of the funds received were to be credited to the Petaluma Gas & Electric stock, then all the estate apparently lost was the stock of the refrigeration company, which it held to be distributed to the defendant. Respondent, however, has anticipated this conclusion and as far as it goes might concur. But, she argues, there are two reasons why the argument or the citations have no application. First, she contends, the legacy was renounced. On this there is no finding nor was there any issue made at the trial of a renunciation of the legacy. Respondent bases this contention upon two excerpts from the testimony of defendant. One was the statement of defendant, in reply to a query as to who owned the stock of Western Refrigeration Company at the time of the Martin negotiations, that the estate owned the stock. Another was a statement of defendant that at the time of the death of Mary A. Burdell this stock was a part of her estate. Respondent submits these without comment or argument. Surely, it could not be contended that these two statements evidenced any renunciation. As a strict matter of fact, disregarding any legal construction, it might be truly said that every legacy, specific or otherwise, is a part of the estate and owned by the estate. In any event, it would be a mere conclusion of ownership and could in no way control or determine the status of the legacy, or, of itself, establish a renunciation.

[9] The second argument of respondent in this connection is based upon the stipulation entered into between Mabel Smith, James B. Burdell, and Galen Burdell wherein and whereby both of the children waived certain claims against the estate and Galen Burdell agreed to pay to each the sum of $100 per month during his lifetime. Here it might be noted that the reason and purpose of the defendants found fraudulent conduct was determined and found by the court to be for the purpose of defrauding Mabel Smith out of her life interest in the Nicasio ranch. This necessitates somewhat of a review of what has gone before. Under the terms of the will as hereinbefore noted, it was stated that the testatrix gave to James B. Burdell "all of the shares owned by me at the time of my death in the corporation known and designated as The Western Refrigerating Company." In the very next clause it is provided: "I give and bequeath to my daughter Mabel such portion of the Nacasio ranch as shall be equal in value as appraised in the inventory of my estate to the value of the shares in the Western Refrigerating Company devised to my son James." It is then argued that the yardstick by which the estate of Mabel was to be measured was the amount that James received from the estate through the stock devised; that if James received nothing from the estate, or if he waived his inheritance, then the inheritance of Mabel fell in toto. It is impossible to see by what forced construction this conclusion is arrived at. The testatrix very carefully avoided the possibility of such a contingency. She herself, familiar as it seems she must have been with the fact that an inventory would be returned in her estate, provided that the means provided by law for determining value should be adopted in determining the values of the respective legacies. The reference to values could in no sense be controlling. If she had provided and named three persons to make the evaluation, the result would have been the same. Or, if she had herself appraised the value of the shares or fixed a valuation thereon there would have been little difference. If instead of either, she had made a direct bequest of $10,000 to James and then provided that there should be cut out of the Nicasio ranch a portion sufficient to equal in value the legacy to James, we know of no rule of law and none is cited to us which even indirectly holds that a waiver of one specific legacy operates to cancel and nullify another legacy to a different person. No claim was made by him to any proceeds from Western Refrigerating Company stock or proceeds thereof. If he prevailed in his claim, it would naturally follow that the values obtained by him would have been the value of the life estate going to the daughter Mabel.

There is not the slightest suggestion of evidence of any representations, misrepresentations or other contact, direct or indirect, made by defendant to plaintiff or to any one else on the subject. As far as the record indicates he stood upon that claim opposed by his coexecutor Coleman, and the plaintiff, being represented by counsel in the negotiations.

Galen Burdell, the father, entered into an agreement for the avowed purpose of preventing the threatened litigation and avoiding the possible delay or other troublesome results thereof, whereby he would pay to each child the sum of $100 per month, if James would release and abandon any claim under the will of any interest in and to any share in the Petaluma Gas & Electric Company or Western Refrigerating Company, or Electric Light & Power Company, and if Mabel would likewise release and abandon any claim under the will to an interest in the Nicasio ranch equivalent to the value of said shares. This agreement was executed and carried out. The plaintiff, or rather in plaintiff's behalf, it is contended that she would not have executed this agreement if she had known that her brother was then interested as a partner with Martin in the stock or assets of the Western Refrigerating Company, valued at $1,000. The agreement recites that both James and Mabel were in accord with James' claim as to the proceeds of the Petaluma Gas & Electric Company, belonging to James under the will. This brought directly to the mind of plaintiff the claim of James, at least to the extent of the value of the gas and electric shares, namely, in excess of $40,000 and possibly to the full $64,000 or $65,000 of the Martin sale. As a matter of record, there is no evidence from which it could even be inferred that defendant Burdell, directly or indirectly or at all, represented or misrepresented to plaintiff that he had received nothing from the Western Refrigerating Company or that he had received anything.

It is apparent from the terms of the codicil that the testatrix intended that the gift to James should include something more than the shares of stock in the Western Refrigerating Company, inasmuch as the said codicil referred to this company as now being the Electric Light & Power Company. Twice in her codicil, she thus refers to the Western Refrigerating Company, and her idea is more evident when in the legacy to the daughter she made provision that the portion of the Nicasio ranch that should be the equivalent of the stock, should embrace a dwelling house and appurtenances. Even then not much of a dwelling house could be included in a one thousand dollar bequest. Therefore, James B. Burdell, under at least some claim of right, as frequently recognized by decisions of courts in the construction of wills wherein there is a misdescription of property devised or persons to whom devised, set up his claim to the proceeds of the sale of the Petaluma Gas & Electric stock as coming within the terms of the bequest. His claim thus presented, if allowed, would have greatly increased the value of the life estate to the plaintiff in the Nicasio ranch rather than depleting her legacy.

It is interesting to here note the only concrete evidence of the domination and control over the executors alleged to have been exercised by James B. Burdell. The executor Coleman refused to join in this claim and threatened litigation. The only claim of James Burdell was to the proceeds or at least the inventoried value of the stock of Petaluma Gas & Electric Company. It is evident that the estate was not depleted in any way by or through the agreement. The estate, if anything, was enriched to the extent of the withdrawn claim for the proceeds of the sale of the stock. There is not a scrap of testimony that would indicate the value of the Nicasio ranch or the value, if estimated, of plaintiff's life estate therein, save and except the valuation placed thereon by the appraisers, as indicated in the will, namely, $1,000. Therefore, the most that could be made of the complaint of plaintiff would be that by reason of the fact that James concealed the fact that he had indirectly, or even directly received a small portion of the claim, she consented to an agreement wherein and whereby she gave up an estate valued at $1,000 for a consideration of her receiving $1,200 annually during the life of her father, she being, at the same time, the owner of a remainder over for life after her father's death. The agreement was one binding upon Galen Burdell for the payment of money to each of the children. There is no evidence, one way or the other, that Mabel, the daughter, would or would not have entered into the agreement but for the concealment of the facts by her brother. There is no evidence that she knew anything about the Western Refrigerating Company's stock or its value. There is no evidence that she relied upon any representation or misrepresentation. In fact, there is no evidence at all forthcoming from the plaintiff Mabel. She was not called as a witness nor was her deposition offered. No account was made for her absence, and in view of the entire case there can be nothing but the remotest inferences concerning what she knew or believed at the time.

This concludes our view of the first part of the case. It is our opinion that it is not a case where the allegations of actionable fraud have been sustained in any particular. It may be that testing the transactions by all of the rigid rules governing, there was an irregularity of procedure and that the defendant secured what actually belonged to him in a manner that might have been better had he waited the distribution of the estate. But the claim of plaintiff is predicated wholly as an heir to funds of the estate held in trust by the defendant. We hold this claim not supported by the record.

[10] In Ryder v. Bamberger, 172 Cal. at pages 799 and 800, 158 P. 753, 756, it is said: "If there be two inferences equally reasonable and equally susceptible of being drawn from the proved facts, the one favoring fair dealing and the other favoring corrupt practice, it is the express duty of court or jury to draw the inference favorable to fair dealing. [Citing cases.] For fraud must always be proved, so that when the plaintiff's case goes no further than to establish a state of facts from which the inference of fraud may or may not be reasonably drawn, he has failed to establish his charge by a preponderance of the evidence, and it becomes the duty of court or jury * * * to find in favor of innocence and uprightness. This does not, of course, mean that the fraud must be proved by direct evidence. This is not always, nor even often, possible; but it does mean that the indirect evidence and the inference to be drawn from the proved facts must be so convincing as to satisfy trial court or trial jury that fraud was designed and accomplished."

We are mindful, too, of the disfavor with which a court of equity looks upon anything savoring of fraud. The prevention of fraud and the integrity of trust relationship have been subjects of many learned opinions in chancery. Down through the ages have come the scathing denunciations of the learned chancellors against those who by fraud and deceit overcome the trust and confidence of their cestui que trust. Epics have been written on the power of equity to relieve those distressed through violation of confidential relations. But in no instance has equity ever wavered in its holding that fraud would not be presumed in the absence of evidence. Equity itself has its foundation in man's honesty of purpose, and for its continuance it must rely upon the presumption that this continues. For if ever it were a presumption to be indulged that all men were dishonest, not only courts of equity but all law would fail.

The next important point is the question of laches, raised by the appellant at every stage of the proceedings and found against him on each occasion by the court.

[11] Preliminary to a discussion of this phase of the case, we take up the respondent's claim that all questions of laches and limitation were stipulated out of the case. As much stress is placed upon this stipulation and the facts surrounding the same, and as there was a finding by the court that the stipulation did take the question of laches out of the case, which said finding embraces a one-page sentence, it becomes necessary to detail the circumstances and the stipulation. It was claimed, on behalf of plaintiff that she first was put upon suspicion by an event that happened in 1924, in the course of the settlement of her father's estate. There was an item in the father's estate referred to as the Howard note. Defendant, James B. Burdell, was the executor of the estate of Galen Burdell. It was claimed that when the account of the executor came on for settlement, it was represented that the Howard note was an asset of no value. This representation was made in the account of the executor and his account charged with a small sum of ten dollars on account of the said note. It was claimed by the attorneys representing plaintiff in the estate matter that the face value of the note, namely, $1,200, had in fact actually been received by a dummy to whom the note had been assigned. The controversy coming on to be heard in open court, before the hearing or at the hearing, the defendant, who was executor of the estate of Galen Burdell, made admission of the amount due the estate and paid in the $1,200. When, in the instant trial, this subject was opened up, a colloquy between court and the respective counsel ensued:

"Mr. Henshall (counsel for plaintiff): Of course, I do not know the peculiar form in which the admission is made. I should not be misled or trouble these witnesses again by ordering them back. I do not know by this admission, and I so claim it, and will now claim it so it may be denied that after Mr. Meyer had settled the Howard note, which theretofore had not been known to the plaintiff, that for the first time her suspicions were aroused and as a result of investigation for the first time she became aware of the alleged cause of action set up. This is my understanding of the admission.

"Mr. Brittain (counsel for defendant): We are perfectly willing to stand on that, reserving the right to argue the facts in regard to matters antecedent to that time relating to matters in issue in this case. We will not contest anything about the Howard note because it is entirely immaterial and will be settled according to the statement of counsel. We will not question as to whether there was a foundation for Mrs. Lichtenberg's suspicions by reason of the Howard note. It does not make any difference what aroused her suspicions, as your Honor has well said, if she had suspicions, and if she thereafter made a discovery and brings herself within the rule of law putting the burden upon her of making discovery promptly of frauds, we will not make any question about that, we will not raise any questions as to the suspicions which she alleged she had. I do not know if I can go any further in an admission. It seems perfectly clear.

"The Court: I think with those admissions before us it will not be necessary to go into the details of the settlement of this account of 1924.

"Mr. Henshall: I do not think we should go into any of these matters at all. If it is admitted her suspicions were aroused in 1924, why trouble ourselves."

A fair reading of this so-called stipulation will readily convince one that all that was involved was the question of whether or not the plaintiff's suspicions were aroused by this transaction surrounding the Howard note. The very last statement of counsel for plaintiff indicates that he so understood it. The careful statement of the counsel for appellant does not indicate any waiver of the questions of limitation and laches. It is a most appropriate place for the application of the old maxim that he who sticks on words, sticks in the bark. The language used must be stretched and distorted out of all proportion to get from it the meaning given by respondent. Granting that it was admitted that the plaintiff's suspicions were aroused at this time does not remove from her the duty of diligence and watchfulness, nor does it impose upon the courts any additional duty to disregard the wholesome laws and rules enacted to prevent the inquiry into stale claims and demands.

[12, 13] We conclude that the point of limitations and laches was not taken from the case but still remains, and as will be disclosed hereinafter, bars the plaintiff's action.

The transactions around which the action centers occurred some 24 years before action brought. During all of this time the plaintiff was of the age of majority and not under any legal disability. As the evidence discloses, for many years she was the active manager of a ranch of some 4,000 or 5,000 acres in close proximity, territorially, to the place wherein the defendant was conducting the business of the Western Refrigerating Company. The books of the company at the very outset showed the existence of the partnership and at all times the defendant was in the actual management and control thereof. The record further shows that in the conduct of the said business the defendant purchased cream and dairy products from plaintiff and was friendly with her. The record further shows: That the father of both plaintiff and defendant was on the usual terms of family intimacy with each of the children and that social visits were exchanged between all of the families. That defendant was held out in the city of Petaluma as the active owner of the refrigerating company and its allied activities. That the father knew of the partnership, at least after it was formed, speaking of the original partnership between Martin and the defendant. This appears from the undisputed testimony that the father advanced to defendant the money, or a part thereof, with which defendant purchased the interest of Martin. The plaintiff for more than 20 years was a close personal friend of John Martin, and Martin was often a visitor at the home of plaintiff and her husband. That plaintiff had, at all of the times mentioned, independent advice and counsel, inasmuch as throughout the original proceedings she was represented by counsel. The record further shows without dispute that the business was conducted in a small city and within the knowledge of any one who cared to become interested to ascertain any of the facts connected therewith. The record discloses no act, representation, or misrepresentation of defendant, other than the solitary fact that he did not directly in so many words or at all give to plaintiff any of the facts surrounding the transaction in the original estate matter. Further than this, it is undisputed that all of the principals who could throw any light upon the subject have died. Galen Burdell, the father, died in 1906; Leonard Stone, attorney for Mrs. Lichtenberg, plaintiff, is dead; the attorneys who represented Martin and who made fullest investigation of the affairs attending the transfer of the stock, and to whom was entrusted exclusively this matter, are all dead. And chiefly to be noted is the fact that the plaintiff herself was not a witness nor did she present any testimony on her own behalf as to what her knowledge might have been or what facts she knew. All that is presented to overthrow the claim of laches is that 25 years after the fraud alleged was perpetrated, the plaintiff felt that she had been defrauded in a transaction then occurring, and thereby her suspicions were aroused and she made investigation. No record appears as to what this investigation was or what facts were discovered thereby or why, if at all, these facts could not have been discovered before. The final and ultimate test of what was operating in the plaintiff's mind and indisputably the best evidence on that subject, and evidence that was easily available to plaintiff, was her own statement on the subject. The only finding that would support her case is that she believed from what she had heard, presumably from the record of the court proceedings, as no evidence of any representations by defendant or others on his behalf appears, that there had been a sale and she took it for granted that this was the case. If the doctrine of laches has not its fullest application here, it is difficult to determine what the doctrine means or when, if ever, it can be applied. It is to be noted also that the defendant does not rely entirely if at all upon the strictly equitable definition of laches. He asserts, and has asserted at every stage of the proceedings, the bar of the statutes of limitation. Statutes of limitation are statutes of repose and designed to bring about peace and harmony.

The doctrine of laches is founded, not on a concern particularly as to individual rights, but as a matter of public policy. At a very early period in the history of the law, statutes were enacted to prevent the pursuit of stale demands and to bar recovery thereon. Only where it is apparent that a fraud will result and injustice follow have the courts of equity relaxed. And this does not appear here. It is doubtful if the reports will disclose any case wherein a plaintiff has been able to invoke the aid of a court of equity after a delay of 25 years upon no greater showing than that he did not have occasion to mistrust defendant until after a lapse of such great time and without the plaintiff offering any testimony concerning his knowledge or lack of knowledge prior to the time of the arousal of these suspicions. If the doctrine of laches is founded on public policy and the preservation of the general good, it may be wondered just how far consistent with the general good it might be to hold that the doctrine did not apply in a case where the facts are as hereinbefore detailed.

[14] In the instant case, with no showing of diligence, with ample opportunity to know and almost positive knowledge that the defendant was operating the business involved, and dealing with him herself in this business, all that the plaintiff offers to justify a delay of almost 25 years is the fact that after she became convinced in 1924 that the defendant was unfaithful to his trust in another family matter it dawned on her that perhaps all was not well some 25 years back. It may be reasonably asked just why did she pick out for investigation this particular transaction of the Western Refrigerating Company stock. The obvious answer, in the absence of further testimony forthcoming from her, is that all of the time she knew that he had operated and carried on this business as his own, without account to her or to any one else on her behalf or on behalf of the estate of the mother. The only reason for her suspicion lighting upon this particular transaction must have been a prior knowledge or at least reasonable grounds of doubt on the integrity of that particular transaction. How would she, or any one else, without knowledge or facts, out of an estate of some $400,000 immediately light upon this obscure item, out of a clear sky? More than seven periods of limitation had elapsed. The right of action was given to plaintiff within a period of three years after the discovery of the fraud. It was not incumbent on the defendant to prove that plaintiff had not discovered the fraud or that she had not discovered facts sufficient to compel her investigation. The right accorded plaintiff was an exceptional one and upon her devolved the duty and burden of bringing herself within the exception as an essential part of her cause of action. Defenses based upon statutes of limitation are meritorious defenses and the defense of laches is a favorable defense in equity. As we have held hereinbefore, the fraud alleged was more of an irregularity than a positive fraud; it involved a small portion of a large estate and involved a portion which of right belonged to the defendant. The irregularity, or fraud, if it might be so termed, was acquiesced in by the other member of the family, the father, with full knowledge. If the judgment of the lower court can be upheld, it would mean chaos in the courts and in society at large. Every heir or legatee, after 25 years or 50 years, could come forward with a complaint to the effect that but recently he had cause to suspect something wrong, not about the original probate, but concerning the honesty of the executor or a coheir and without the necessity of making any showing as to what his own knowledge had been through the intervening years, seize upon something that perhaps he had been carefully nursing for many years and demand relief. Business would become necessarily unsettled and affairs generally in a state of havoc.

In the case of Kleinclaus v. Dutard, 147 Cal. 251, 81 P. 516, 517, it is said, quoting from Story's Equity: "Where time and long acquiescence have obscured the nature and character of the trust, or the acts of the parties or other circumstances give rise to presumptions unfavorable to its continuance, in all such cases a court of equity will refuse relief upon the ground of lapse of time and its inability to do complete justice. This doctrine will apply even to cases of express trust." An all-sufficient reason for the application of the doctrine, as announced in the case just cited, was the impossibility of doing complete justice between the parties. Such a condition is present here. The business had been discontinued since 1917 and a large part thereof discontinued since 1912. Books of account were missing and the evidence of income or expenditures almost wholly conjectural. All in all, there is no appeal to a court of equity in a demand for more than $100,000 arising out of a technical trust alleged to have been involuntarily created some 25 years ago, involving a sum of $500, and particularly where the actual state of mind or knowledge on the part of the plaintiff is withheld.

In our opinion the judgment should be reversed, on the appeal of the defendant. This leaves nothing further to be done in respect to the appeal of the plaintiff. The judgment is not reversed on the plaintiff's appeal and obviously it cannot be affirmed on that appeal. In its entirety the judgment is reversed, and if express order is necessary, it is ordered that for all intents and purposes the judgment, being reversed, no longer serves as the basis for any claim on behalf of plaintiff.

O'NEILL et al. v. HICKS et al. (Civ. 6246.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Oct. 21, 1929.

Appeal and error ⇨78(3)—Judgment merely reciting that demurrer to complaint was sustained, without containing adjudication as to dismissal or costs, held not appealable.

Judgment which merely recited that demurrer of defendants to plaintiffs' complaint was sustained without leave to amend, without adjudication that plaintiffs take nothing, or that demurring parties recover costs, or that action be dismissed as to them, held not appealable.

Action by William J. O'Neill and others against Lee J. Hicks and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiffs appeal. Appeal dismissed.

Killian & Bentson, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Willis O. Tyler, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

IRA F. THOMPSON, J. A complaint seeking to enjoin 20 named defendants and a large number sued by fictitious names from violating certain restrictions, alleged to have been imposed by agreement upon about 100 lots in Hopper & Sons Western Avenue tract in the city of Los Angeles, was filed in the court below. Eleven of the defendants interposed a general and special demurrer, which was sustained without leave to amend. Thereafter the judge signed a document, entitled "Judgment Sustaining Demurrer," which, after reciting preliminary matters, reads as follows: "The demurrer of defendants to complaint of plaintiffs is sustained without leave to amend." This is the purported judgment from which the plaintiffs appeal.

There is no adjudication that plaintiffs take nothing from the named defendants, or that the demurring parties recover their costs, or dismissing them from the action. In De La Beckwith v. Superior Court, 146 Cal. 496, 80 P. 717, 719, we read: "An order sustaining a demurrer is not a judgment, and does not have the effect of finally and irrevocably dismissing the demurring party from the action. 'It may form the basis for rendering a judgment, but it is not itself a judgment' (Sivers v. Sivers, 97 Cal. 518, 32 Pac. 571), is not appealable, and can be reviewed by an appellate court only on appeal from a final judgment subsequently given. Upon such an order being made without leave to amend, or where it is made with leave to amend, and no amendment is made, the party whose demurrer has been sustained may become entitled to a judgment, which may effectually bar further proceedings against him in the matter from which he has been dismissed. In the absence of such a judgment, however, the mere order constitutes no bar, and if, at any time prior to judgment, it is made to appear to the court that a complete determination of the controversy cannot be had without the presence of such party, we can conceive of no good reason why the court may not make such orders as will have the effect of bringing such party into the action again. He has never really been effectually dismissed from the action, and technically speaking is not a new party at all; but the order sustaining his demurrer has the effect of relieving him from the necessity of further defending, in the absence of subsequent action by the court." Or we may liken the order sustaining a demurrer to any other order made during the progress of the case, which may, if further light be shed upon the subject, be reversed or modified. People v. Lucas, 78 Cal. App. 421-425, 248 P. 691. We also make reference to the case of People v. Carillo, 66 Cal. App. 146, 225 P. 475, and cases there cited, as covering the same principles.

The appeal is dismissed.

BARLOW v. SOUTHERN TRUST CO.
(Civ. 3895.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Oct. 18, 1929.

1. Trusts ⇨117—Conveyances to trust company and trust agreement respecting property held to be considered as parts of single transaction.

Conveyances to trust company and trust agreement respecting property conveyed held to be considered as parts of single transaction, so that, if trust was void, whole transaction was void, where deed was dated April 25, acknowledged April 27, and recorded April 29, and trust agreement was dated April 29.

2. Trusts ⇨72—Resulting trust is presumed in favor of company paying consideration for transfer of property to trust company.

Where property was conveyed to trust company, resulting trust will be presumed in favor of company which paid entire consideration for transfer without regard to trust agreement.

3. Banks and banking ⇨95—Bank held not required to sell property held in trust, under statute protecting stockholders and creditors (Bank Act, § 54).

Under Bank Act, § 54 (St. 1917, p. 622), bank held not required to sell property which it holds in trust and in which it has no beneficial interest, since provisions of such statute were written for benefit and protection of stockholders and creditors of bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Hartley Shaw, Judge.

Action by Charles Henry Barlow against the Southern Trust Company to compel sale of minerals and mineral rights reserved on sale of real property. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

James W. Bell, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Newlin & Ashburn and W. C. Mathes, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

FINCH, P. J. The complaint alleges that the defendant is engaged in the general banking business under the banking laws of this state; that in the year 1907 it became the owner of a tract of land described in the complaint; that in the year 1911 it conveyed the land to the plaintiff, reserving and excepting all minerals and mineral rights therein; that its title to and ownership of such minerals and mineral rights have continued for more than five years; that such property "is not necessary for carrying on its business, and is in contravention of section 54 of the Bank Act" (St. 1917, p. 622), and that the plaintiff desires to purchase the minerals and mineral rights reserved by the defendant. The prayer is for a judgment compelling the defendant to sell the property so reserved.

The answer, filed by the Security Trust & Savings Bank, alleges and the proof shows that the defendant, on December 3, 1921, became merged into the Security Trust & Savings Bank, to which all the assets and liabilities of the defendant have been transferred and that neither corporation at any time owned or claimed any interest in the property for its own benefit and that the "Security Trust & Savings Bank does not now own, hold or claim or assert any right, title or interest in or to the said property, or any part thereof, except as trustee for another."

The deed conveying the property to the defendant was dated April 25, 1907, acknowledged April 27, 1907, and recorded April 29, 1907. There was admitted in evidence a trust agreement, dated April 29, 1907, executed by the defendant's grantors as trustors, the defendant as trustee, and the Atlantic & Pacific Fibre Importing & Manufacturing Company as beneficiary, which agreement contained the following:

"The trustee has received and accepted two deeds, dated April 25, 1907, made and executed by the trustors, conveying to said trustee that certain real property (describing the lands in controversy and other lands). The interest of the said trustors by virtue of said deeds has passed to and is now vested in the said trustee. The entire purchase price and consideration paid the trustors for the said property was paid by the said beneficiary, and no part of said purchase price or consideration was paid by the trustee herein, and the said trustee therefore holds and will hold said property in trust for the said beneficiary for as long a time as the said beneficiary desires the said trustee to hold said title, and the said trustee will transfer, sell, lease, dedicate or otherwise dispose of the said property upon the written request of the said beneficiary."

The trust officer of the Security Trust & Savings Bank testified that such corporation "does not claim or assert any right to the real property described in the complaint other than under the provisions of the (trust) agreement."

Judgment was entered in favor of the Security Trust & Savings Bank for costs of suit, and the plaintiff has appealed.

[1, 2] Appellant contends that the trust agreement is void. It need not be determined whether or not that agreement is void. The conveyances to the defendant and the trust agreement must be considered as parts of a single transaction. Younger v. Moore, 155 Cal. 767, 771, 103 P. 221. If the trust is void, the whole transaction is void, and no title passed to the trustee. Ruddick v. Albertson, 154 Cal. 640, 98 P. 1045. Without regard to the trust agreement, a resulting trust is presumed in favor of the Atlantic & Pacific Fibre Importing & Manufacturing Company from the payment by it of the entire consideration for the transfer of the property to the defendant. Civ. Code, § 853.

[3] Section 54 of the Bank Act (St. 1917, p. 622) provides that all real estate "owned or held" by a bank, "which is not necessary for carrying on its business, must be sold or exchanged for other real estate by such bank within five years after title thereto shall have vested in it by purchase or otherwise; * * * Parcels of such real estate not sold or exchanged within said time may be purchased by any person wanting the same upon the conditions and proceedings following: The intending purchaser may file a petition in the superior court in and for the county wherein said real estate or any portion thereof is situated; upon the filing of such petition a citation shall be issued out of said court directed to the bank owning such real estate requiring such bank to show cause * * * why commissioners should not be appointed by said court for the purpose of appraising the value of the real estate described in the petition and of selling the same at public auction under the provisions of this section. * * * If it shall appear at the hearing of such petition that the real estate therein sought to be purchased is held by such bank in violation of the provisions of this section or of the constitution of this state, the court shall appoint three commissioners to appraise the value thereof and sell the same at public auction * * * In case of any sale made under the provisions of this section and of the refusal of any bank owning such real estate * * * to execute the conveyances or releases necessary or proper to vest the title of such bank, * * * in the purchaser thereof the court shall have power in such proceedings to direct said commissioners to execute such deeds, conveyances or releases upon the payment to them of the purchase price therefor."

It has been said that "the provisions of the Bank Act were written for the benefit and protection of the stockholders and creditors of the bank." Patterson v. Southern Trust Co., 80 Cal. App. 411, 414, 251 P. 938, 939. That purpose would not be furthered by requiring a bank to sell property which it holds in trust and in which it has no beneficial interest. The language of section 54 indicates that its provisions were not intended to apply in a case such as this. Notice of the application is to be directed only to "the bank owning" the real estate. The commissioner is to execute a conveyance to the purchaser in the event of the refusal of the "bank owning such real estate" to make the conveyance. The conveyance is to be such as to vest "the title of such bank" in the purchaser. If a bank holds real estate in trust in violation of law, other remedies may be provided or invoked, but it seems clear that section 54 of the Bank Act was not intended to apply in such a case.

The judgment is affirmed.

DEACON v. DEACON et al. (Civ. 3653.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Oct. 14, 1929.

1. Appeal and error ⇨707(1)—Question of stipulated judgment, where record on appeal did not indicate any stipulated order or decree, held not presented for review.

Where there was nothing in record on defendant's appeal in action for an accounting and partition which indicated in any particular that single order or decree made by trial court was based on any kind of agreement or stipulation, no question of agreed or stipulated judgment was open for consideration.

2. Divorce ⇨322—Husband and wife ⇨272(4)—Husband and wife, after divorce decree not mentioning community, were tenants in common, and wife was entitled to maintain partition proceedings (Code Civ. Proc. § 752).

Where decree of divorce was granted, without any mention of community property of husband and wife, their relationship thereto immediately became that of tenants in common, entitling wife to institute and maintain partition proceedings, under Code Civ. Proc. § 752.

3. Husband and wife ⇨272(4)—Wife, after divorce decree not mentioning community, held entitled to maintain partition, irrespective of manner in which community was managed by husband under separation agreement (Code Civ. Proc. § 752).

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 752, entitling tenants in common to institute and maintain partition proceedings, wife, after decree of divorce was granted without any mention of community property, held entitled to institute and maintain partition proceedings as tenant in common, irrespective of manner in which community property was managed by husband under separation agreement.

4. Husband and wife ⇨272(4)—Satisfying mortgage on homestead set aside to wife under separation agreement out of proceeds of sale of community property held not improper.

Where separation agreement between husband and wife before divorce obligated husband to discharge mortgage on homestead set aside to wife, which husband failed to do, satisfying such mortgage out of proceeds of sale of part of community property, in action for partition and accounting, before dividing proceeds, held not improper.

5. Husband and wife ⇨272(4)—Attorney's fees in action for accounting and for partition held improperly allowed, so far as accounting proceedings were concerned.

In action for accounting and for partition of community property after separation agreement and divorce, attorney's fees, so far as accounting proceedings were concerned, held improperly allowed, since court had no jurisdiction to allow attorney's fees in action for accounting.

6. Husband and wife ⇨272(4)—Fact that community estate sought to be partitioned was bankrupt to large extent should be considered in allowing attorney's fees (Code Civ. Proc. § 796).

In action for partition of community estate, fact that referee's report shows bankruptcy of estate to extent of several thousand dollars should be considered in allowing attorney's fees under Code Civ. Proc. § 796, authorizing court on partition to include reasonable counsel fees expended by plaintiff or either of parties for community benefit.

7. Husband and wife ⇨272(4)—Husband's contention that decree in accounting and partition action took away possession of community vested in him by separation agreement held without merit.

Contention by husband that decree in action for accounting and for partition of community property, after separation agreement and divorce took away possession and control of community property vested in him by separation agreement, held without merit, where property agreement failed to mention subject of possession of property of which parties after decree of divorce became tenants in common, further than to provide that parties should cooperate in disposition thereof.

8. Appeal and error  1172(2)—Contention that decree should be reversed, because part was void, held without merit, where void part could be stricken without affecting material rights.

Contention that decree in action for partition and accounting of community property should be reversed, because decree imposed limitation on sale price of part of property which was beyond jurisdiction of court, held without merit, where portion of decree complained of could be stricken therefrom without affecting material rights of any of parties.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; W. P. Cary, Judge.

Action by Clara E. Deacon against Daniel A. Deacon and another, in which A. R. Roark filed cross-complaint and complaint in intervention. From the judgment rendered, defendant Deacon appeals. Affirmed in part, and reversed and remanded in part.

Glen H. Munkelt, of San Diego, for appellant.

Sloane & Sloane, of San Diego, for respondent.

PLUMMER, J. This is an action for an accounting and partition of certain property described in the plaintiff's complaint. The record shows that on and prior to the 14th day of July, 1923, the plaintiff, Clara E. Deacon, and the defendant, Daniel A. Deacon, were husband and wife; that on said date an agreement settling and adjusting their property rights was executed and acknowledged. This agreement recited that the parties had separated on the 13th day of March, 1923, were living apart, and that an action for divorce had been instituted, and for the purposes of settling and adjusting the property rights of the respective parties it was agreed, among other things, that the defendant, Daniel A. Deacon, should pay to the plaintiff certain sums of money for her support, and for the support of the children, the issue of said marriage. Said agreement also provided that there should be set apart, and said agreement purported to set apart and convey to the plaintiff, as her separate property, a certain dwelling house, the furniture therein, and the lot upon which it is situated, the lot in question being described as the south 50 feet of the north 100 feet of lots 1, 2, 3, and 4 in block No. 456 of Seaman's addition to the city of San Diego. The agreement further provided that the mortgage incumbrance on said property in the sum of $2,500 should be assumed and paid by the defendant, Daniel A. Deacon. The agreement then provided for the setting aside to the defendant, Deacon, of certain property known as the south 25 feet in block 59, Horton's addition to the city of San Diego, and the store situated thereon, and the stock of merchandise then in said store building. The agreement then described other real property belonging to the parties entering into the agreement, and described the same as the community property of Daniel A. Deacon and Clara E. Deacon. It was further provided that the community property should be disposed of and applied to the payment of the community debts, and the excess, if any, divided equally between the parties entering into the agreement.

The record shows that, within a short time after the execution of this agreement, a divorce was granted to the plaintiff, Clara E. Deacon, from the defendant, Daniel A. Deacon. It does not appear that any mention was made of the community property in the decree of divorce, nor does it appear that the property settlement to which we have referred was considered by the trial court, or adopted as a settlement of the property rights of the respective parties in the decree of divorce granted as aforesaid. The record shows that the community property referred to remained in the possession of the defendant, Daniel A. Deacon, for about two years, during which time he collected the rents and profits thereof, and, according to the findings of the court, did not render any account of the same to the plaintiff in this action. In this connection, however, it may be stated that the defendant, Daniel A. Deacon, during said two years, applied the sum of approximately $16,000 toward the payment of the community debts existing on the 14th day of July, 1923. Upon the hearing of the action the trial court determined that an accounting should be had, and appointed a referee to take such an accounting and report to the court the condition of the accounts between the parties and the status of the community property. This report shows that at the date of the execution of the agreement referred to the community debts aggregated the sum of $36,945.43; that at the same date the possible community assets were of the value of about $29,300; that during the two years intervening between the execution of the property agreement and the beginning of this action the defendant, Daniel A. Deacon, had advanced out of his own property toward the payment of community debts the sum of $16,355.43, which was a charge against the community property. The record thus shows that at the date of the execution of the property settlement the liabilities of the community exceeded the assets in the sum of $7,645.43.

In the agreement settling the property rights there was listed as community property the undivided half of the westerly half of lots 7 and 8, block 60, Middletown, city of San Diego, upon which there was situated an apartment house known as the "Ivy Apartments," including as well a like interest in the furniture and furnishings in said apartment house. After the beginning of the action herein, as just mentioned, the defendant and cross-complainant, A. T. Roark, filed a complaint in intervention, setting forth his interest in said property, by which it appears, and also, as found by the court, he owned a one-half interest, subject to the payment by him of a mortgage existing on said property in the sum of $6,500, which he had assumed and agreed to pay.

The court, in its decree, after finding the status of the property, among other things, directed that the property which we have mentioned, and known as the "Ivy Apartments," be sold; that from the one-half interest of the said A. T. Roark in and to said property and the proceeds there be deducted, first, the sum of $6,500 on account of the mortgage thereon which he had assumed and paid. It was further provided in the decree that said property should not be sold, unless there could be obtained therefor a price of at least $14,000 in excess of the existing mortgage of $6,500 thereon, and the discharge and cancellation, in addition thereto, of the mortgage existing thereon in the sum which we have mentioned. The decree further provided that, out of the proceeds of the sale of said Ivy Apartments, the mortgage existing upon the homestead setting aside to the plaintiff, in the sum of $2,500, should be paid and discharged, being the mortgage which the defendant, Daniel A. Deacon, had assumed and agreed to pay in the agreement adjusting the community rights of the parties entered into on the 14th day of July, 1923. The decree then provided that all of the community real and personal property, other than the Ivy Apartments, should be set over and awarded to the said Daniel A. Deacon, subject to the obligations and liens existing thereon, and that the plaintiff, Clara E. Deacon, should forthwith execute a good and sufficient quitclaim deed or deeds and bill of sale conveying and transferring to said Daniel A. Deacon all of said community property, and that the acceptance by said Daniel A. Deacon should be an assumption by him of the community indebtedness referred to in the decree, and that he should thereafter save harmless the said Clara E. Deacon from all liability arising therefrom. The decree then provided for the appointment of a referee to sell the Ivy Apartments, and the proceeds of the sale of said premises apportioned as directed in the decree, and then further ordered "that there be allowed and adjudged and paid as attorney's fees to Sloane & Sloane, as attorneys for the plaintiff in this action, the sum of $1,500.00; to Wright & McKee, as attorneys for defendant Daniel A. Deacon and the defendant the First Trust & Savings Bank of San Diego, the sum of $1,500.00." Costs were allowed the referee in the sum of $490. Likewise there was allowed, and made a charge against the community property, the sum of $200 for an abstract of title obtained by the plaintiff. The record further shows that Sloane & Sloane, as attorneys for the plaintiff, had obtained the sum of $607-

29 on account of attorney's fees, out of the community property, which should be charged against them.

[1] In the order of the questions raised upon this appeal, we will first consider the contention of the respondents that the decrees entered in this proceeding were consent decrees; that is, that the parties to the action stipulated to the entry of the various decrees and the making of the various orders of the trial court, and therefore are bound by the same upon this hearing. While certain papers in connection with the motion heretofore made in this cause for a dismissal of the appeal indicate to some extent that the attorneys for the parties did stipulate, at least as to the form of the orders and decrees to be made, and that were made by the trial court, and to some extent that the substance of the decrees were stipulated and agreed to by counsel for the respective parties, there is absolutely nothing in the record upon this appeal which we can consider indicating in any particular that a single order or decree made by the trial court in this proceeding was upon any kind of an agreement or stipulation. The affidavits submitted upon the motion heretofore presented to the Supreme Court and denied, as appears in the case of Deacon v. Deacon, reported in 201 Cal. 190, 255 P. 798, are no part of the transcript upon this appeal, and therefore no question of an agreed or stipulated judgment is open for our consideration.

[2] We do not need to determine whether the property settlement, as evidenced by the agreement to which we have referred, constituted the plaintiff, Clara E. Deacon, and the defendant, Daniel A. Deacon, tenants in common, because it is evident that, when the decree of divorce was granted without any mention of the community property of the defendants, their relationship thereto immediately became that of tenants in common. See Estate of Brix, 181 Cal. 667, and cases cited on page 676, 186 P. 135, 138. Under the provisions of section 752 of the Code of Civil Procedure, tenants in common are entitled to institute and maintain partition proceedings. This section of the Code answers the contention of the appellant that partition proceedings cannot be maintained in actions such as are presented upon this appeal.

[3, 4] We come next to that provision of the decree of partition which provides for the disposal or sale of the Ivy Apartments and the application of the proceeds. The appellant contends that the court had no authority to direct that out of the proceeds the mortgage on the homestead set aside to the plaintiff should be first discharged. This was an obligation resting upon the defendant, Daniel A. Deacon, and we do not very well see how he is in any wise prejudiced by this provision in the decree. True, there is no finding in the decree that the defendant, Deacon, had been remiss in any particular in his management of the community property, or of the property in which he and the plaintiff were in law tenants in common; but under the provisions of section 752 of the Code of Civil Procedure the plaintiff had a right to institute and maintain partition proceedings, irrespective of the manner in which the business was being conducted by the defendant, Daniel A. Deacon, and the argument of the appellant in this particular need not be considered or further referred to in this opinion. The agreement obligated the defendant, Daniel A. Deacon, to discharge such mortgage, and therefore it was proper for the trial court, upon ordering the sale of the Ivy Apartments, to decree that out of the proceeds this mortgage should be paid, and the proceeds divided in the manner set forth in the decree, which followed the terms of the agreement, save and except that it provided for the payment of the referee's costs and the attorney's fees, which we have heretofore mentioned.

[5, 6] The appellant further contends that the court had no jurisdiction to allow the sum of $1,500 as attorney's fees to Sloane & Sloane as attorneys for the plaintiff in this action, nor to allow Wright & McKee, as attorneys for the defendant in this action, the sum of $1,500. Section 796 of the Code of Civil Procedure allows a court, upon partition, to include reasonable counsel fees expended by the plaintiff, or either of the parties, for the common benefit, fees of referees, and other disbursements. There is no finding to the effect that any attorney's fees have been expended or obligations for attorney's fees incurred by any of the parties, for the benefit of any of the parties. While the section to which we have referred does purport to allow attorney's fees in partition proceedings, there is no provision in the Codes allowing attorney's fees for an action seeking an accounting. The decree of the court does not purport to fix the attorney's fees for the partition part of the action.

The action is twofold in its nature, really an action for an accounting, and then an action for partition. So far as the accounting proceedings were concerned, the court had no jurisdiction to allow attorney's fees. The record in this case shows and establishes beyond doubt that practically all of the services rendered by counsel were connected with the accounting proceedings. The partition relates to only one piece of property, and while the court had jurisdiction to allow compensation for the services, in so far as it pertained to the partition of the particular property decreed to be partitioned, or rather sold, and the proceeds divided, it could not make an allowance of a lump sum covering the attorney's fees for the entire action. The record fails to show, as we have said, that the court made any finding as to the fact of any expenditures having been made or incurred for the common benefit of the plaintiff or either of the parties. The only possible benefit that the record shows rendered in this case for any of the parties is that portion of the decree providing that, "when the Ivy Apartments are sold, $2,500.00 of the proceeds shall be applied to the payment of the mortgage subsisting upon the homestead further set aside to the wife." The decree leaves the remainder of the property practically in the status where it was found, though it does show that the defendant advanced a considerable sum of money toward paying off the community obligations.

By reason of the order hereinafter to be made, we do not deem it necessary to discuss the contention of the appellant that the allowance of attorney's fees is excessive, but will content ourselves with the statement that in the allowance of attorney's fees for the services performed by the attorneys in this case, in so far as it related to the partition, or rather sale, of one piece of property, the court should consider the fact that the referee's report shows the bankruptcy of the estate to the extent of several thousand dollars.

[7, 8] Returning again to that portion of the decree relating to the execution of deeds and bills of sale by the plaintiff to the defendant, Daniel A. Deacon, it is evident that no injury can be suffered by him, for the simple reason that the decree does not make it obligatory upon him to accept the deed under the conditions there mentioned. The contention of the appellant that the decree takes from the possession of the defendant, Daniel A. Deacon, the management and control of the community property vested in him by the agreement entered into between him and the plaintiff, does not appear to be well taken. The property agreement fails to mention the subject of possession of the property of which the parties, after the decree of divorce, became tenants in common, further than to provide that both parties should co-operate in the disposition thereof. The limitation as to the sale price of the Ivy Apartments, though appearing to be beyond the jurisdiction of the court, as the court has full power to determine the adequacy of the price paid for the property upon return of the sale, appellant's contention that the judgment should be reversed for that reason is not tenable, as it may be stricken therefrom without affecting the material rights of any of the parties.

It follows, from what has been said, that the judgment of the trial court is affirmed, save and except as to that portion thereof providing for the payment of attorney's fees, and also that portion limiting the sale price, which is hereby stricken from the decree. As to that portion fixing the attorney's fees, the judgment is reversed and remanded to the lower court for further proceedings. The appellant will have and recover his costs on appeal, but such costs are hereby made a charge against the community property, payable out of the proceeds, if any there be, after the discharge of the community obligations found to be existing as of the date of July 14, 1923.

MONROE v. GROLIER SOCIETY OF LONDON. (L. A. 9989.)

Supreme Court of California. Oct. 28, 1929.

1. Master and servant ⇨70(2)—General agent of book company having charge of sales and collections held not entitled to commissions on collections after termination of employment, notwithstanding collections represented sales during employment.

Under contract of employment whereby plaintiff was engaged as general agent for defendant, having management and control of sale of books and collection of purchase price, and was to be paid commission on all net collections after deduction of discounts, held that plaintiff was not entitled to commissions on payments made after termination of contract on sales made during term of contract.

2. Contracts ⇨147(3)—Intention of parties must be gathered from contract construed as whole.

A contract must be construed as a whole, and intention of parties collected from entire instrument, not from detached portions.

3. Master and servant ⇨50—Business and duties of employee may be considered in construing contract, where writing relates only to compensation (Civ. Code, § 1647).

Where writing relates only to compensation of employee, his business and duties, so far as necessary to determination, may be considered in arriving at true construction of contract of employment, in view of Civ. Code, § 1647.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frank C. Collier, Judge.

Action by H. R. Monroe against the Grolier Society of London, a corporation. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed, with directions.

For opinion of District Court of Appeal, see 277 P. 1105.

Brown & Bissell and Leet W. Bissell, all of Los Angeles, Wm. R. Crawford, Jr., of New York City (J. Fearon Brown, of New York City, of counsel), for appellant.

Erwin P. Werner, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. Petition for hearing after decision of the District Court of Appeal, Third Appellate District, Plummer, J., writing the opinion of the court. Upon a more thorough investigation of this case than we were able to give it on the petition for hearing, we have concluded that the decision of the District Court of Appeal fully and correctly decided the cause, and we therefore adopt its opinion as the decision of this court.

Plaintiff had judgment against the defendant in this action for the sum of $2,180.68 alleged to be due as commissions earned on a certain contract of employment hereinafter set forth. From this judgment the defendant appeals.

The plaintiff in his complaint asks for the sum of $3,099.78, against which the court allowed a counterclaim or offset in favor of the defendant in the sum of $919.10. The defendant, in its answer, set up a counterclaim against the plaintiff in the sum of $795. This counterclaim was allowed in the amount just stated, as an offset to plaintiff's demand.

The record shows that the defendant is a corporation engaged in the business of selling books; that during the time hereinafter mentioned the plaintiff was employed by the defendant as the general agent of the defendant, having the management and control of the sale of books and the collection of the purchase price thereof from the persons to whom books were sold. The method of conducting the business is not disclosed by the record, but there is sufficient to lead to the conclusion that books were sold upon the installment plan, and it was the duty of the plaintiff to supervise the sale and distribution of books and to look after the collection of the installments to be paid by purchasers to whom books were sold. In other words, the record shows that the plaintiff had at least two important duties to perform—first, to make sale of books; second, to attend to collection of the purchase price of the same. The extent of the agency is not disclosed by the record, further than that the evidence would indicate that the territory over which the plaintiff had supervision included the state of California and part of the state of Oregon, as the documents in the record refer to Los Angeles, San Francisco, and Portland. The record shows that considerable correspondence was had prior to reducing the terms of the employment to writing, and that finally the parties came to an agreement which was and is embodied in the following instrument:

"The Book of Knowledge
The Children's Encyclopedia
The Grolier Society
2 West 45th Street
New York

"Telephone: 0200 Vanderbilt June 23, 1922.

"Mr. H. R. Monroe. Dear Sir: Confirming our conversation we agree to pay you four per cent. (4%) on all net collections (after the discount has been deducted) on all business which was booked prior to October 1, 1921.

"On all business booked subsequent to October 1, 1921, we will pay you a commission of two per cent. (2%) on all net collections after the discounts have been deducted, with the exception of orders where the total collections have not exceeded fifteen per cent. (15%) of the contract price. In other words, on a $65.00 account, accompanied by a $4.00 payment, no commission would be due you on such collection until after the third payment of $4.00 has been made. The commission is then due you on these three payments the same as on subsequent payments—settlements to be as of October 1, 1922, and March 1, 1923.

"This agreement is retroactive to October 1, 1921, and terminates February 28, 1923.

"Yours very truly,

"The Grolier Society,

"A. E. Smith.

"Accepted by H. R. Monroe."

The record shows a stipulation to the effect that the plaintiff's employment was continued under the foregoing contract to and including the 30th day of September, 1923. The plaintiff, under this agreement, was employed as a resident manager of the San Francisco office which controls the western territory or what is known as the western territory.

[1-3] The subject of dispute in this action is the compensation to which the plaintiff is entitled on business booked subsequent to October 1, 1921. The trial court accepted the theory that the plaintiff was entitled to 2 per cent. on all net collections on business booked subsequent to October 1, 1921, irrespective of whether collections were or were not made during the period for which the plaintiff was employed; in other words, that the plaintiff was entitled to 2 per cent. of net collections, irrespective of whether collections were made by him or by some one else after his employment had terminated. The appellant contends that, as the plaintiff had the duty of making collections as well as the duty of making sales, his sales and collections during the period of his employment were concurrent duties, and that the plaintiff was an is entitled only to 2 per cent. on all net collections made by him on business booked subsequent to October 1, 1921, and prior to the 30th day of September, 1923, and in furtherance of this contention appellant calls attention to the fact that the first clause of the employment, to wit, that clause which specifies that the plaintiff should receive 4 per cent. on all net collections, less certain discounts, on all business which was booked prior to October 1, 1921, indicates and shows the intent of the parties in entering into the agreement that collections and commissions went together (that is, that the right to commissions was dependent upon collections); otherwise, the defendant, on old business, would be paying double commissions, to wit, 4 per cent. to the plaintiff and whatever per cent. had been agreed upon to the predecessor of the plaintiff. To understand the meaning of the terms used in the writing which we have set forth, it is necessary to bear in mind that the collections were just as important a branch of the business to be managed by the plaintiff as that of making sales. If the collections were not properly attended to, the sales would prove profitless. If sales were made to hazardous risks, or, in other words, to persons from whom collections could never be made, there would be no profit either to the defendant or to the plaintiff, and thus, the intention is enforced, by the very terms of the contract, that collections and commissions should go together, and that the contract, taken as a whole, means this, that "on all business booked subsequent to October 1, 1921, we will pay you a commission of 2 per cent. on all net collections made by you after the discounts have been deducted," etc., this, to insure efficient management on the part of the plaintiff. Any other construction would lead to this: That the plaintiff might devote his entire time and attention to the sales department of the undertaking, leaving the collections not attended to, and then, at the expiration of the term of his employment, retire and quietly await the collections made on the sales during his administration, and demand his 2 per cent. If it had been the duty of the plaintiff only to make sales, then this construction might be held permissible, but, in view of the fact that the plaintiff had a double duty to perform as manager of the company, we conclude that sales and collections were joint duties and obligations, and began and ended with the beginning and termination of the contract of employment. As said in 13 C. J. 625, § 486: "A contract must be construed as a whole, and the intention of the parties is to be collected from the entire instrument, and not from detached portions, it being necessary to consider all of its parts in order to determine the meaning of any particular part, as well as the whole. Individual clauses and particular words must be considered in connection with the rest of the agreement, and all parts of the writing, and every word in it, will, if possible, be given effect." In construing the writing involved in this action, as we have said, it is necessary to look into the business to conduct which the plaintiff was being employed. The writing itself only relates to compensation. The business and the duties of the plaintiff, so far as necessary to a determination of this cause, are set forth in the record, and the plaintiff was required to attend to all the business as manager, and not to a part, and the intent of the instrument, as we have said, was to secure efficient management and encourage the plaintiff, not only in making sales, but in making collections. This is apparent from the correspondence set forth in the record.

A somewhat similar contract was involved in the case of Ortega v. Collins New Medical Institute, 127 App. Div. 293, 111 N. Y. S. 427, and it was there held that "one employed to carry on business correspondence in a foreign language under a contract giving him a certain sum per year and a special commission on all receipts in his department, settlements of his compensation to be made monthly, is not, after his discharge, entitled to commissions on moneys received on business procured by him during the employment." Likewise, in the case of Crum v. Murray (C. C. A.) 102 F. 92, where it was held that a contract for commissions for services read, "80 per cent. of the first month's dues collected, 5 per cent. of the succeeding months' dues collected, $7.50 per share flat for fully-paid stock," and "1 per cent. of all dues collected after the first" of the month, did not apply to, and did not give to the person employed any right to dues collected after the termination of the contract. While the contracts involved in those cases, as we have said, differ somewhat from their terms from the one under consideration, they are in substance the same in relation to the compensation to be paid for the services to be performed. Again, as provided by section 1647 of the Civil Code: "A contract may be explained by reference to the circumstances under which it was made, and the matter to which it relates." Thus, the matter to which the contract we have to consider relates to the performance of the duties which we have herein specified, and when read in the light of the duties to be performed, we conclude that there is no ambiguity in the instrument relating to the plaintiff's compensation, and that he was to be compensated for the duties performed by him, and not for the duties left unperformed; that is, his failure to make collections during the term of his employment. This is further evidenced, as we have hereinbefore said, by the fact that the plaintiff was employed to perform duties left unperformed by his predecessor, and paid a separate compensation therefor.

The record shows that the defendant's counterclaim for $769.10 was for overpayments made by the defendant to the plaintiff, on account of drafts drawn by the plaintiff in excess of the amount to which the plaintiff was entitled under the contract set forth herein, and that the court found said amount justly due the defendant, and that there were some other items considered by the court which increased the counterclaim allowed to the sum of $919.10. As to these items the record gives us no information, and, for the purposes of terminating this litigation without further trial, we will act upon the appellant's request and accept the figures set forth in the defendant's answer as a counterclaim, and direct judgment in its favor therefor.

It follows from what has been said that, the error of the trial court consisting only of a misconstruction of the contract, no further proceedings need be had.

The foregoing consideration of the cause impels a reversal of the judgment and a direction to the trial court to enter judgment in favor of the defendant for the amount of its counterclaim set forth in its answer, to wit, in the sum of $769.10, and costs.

It is so ordered.

PEOPLE v. REILLY. (Cr. 3245.)★

Supreme Court of California. Oct. 18, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Nov. 14, 1929.

1. Criminal law $\S$ 723(1)—Court properly limited scope of defendant's counsel's argument in murder trial to effect that neighbors would ask jurors about verdict.

In murder prosecution, court properly limited scope of defendant's counsel's argument to jury to effect that trend of time was away from death penalty, and that, after jury had sat upon case and returned verdict, their neighbors, friends, and acquaintances would ask them something about verdict.

2. Criminal law $\S$ 723(1)—In murder prosecution, court properly directed defendant's counsel to refrain from argument sketching word picture of execution scene.

In prosecution for murder, court did not abuse discretion in directing defendant's counsel to refrain from argument sketching for jury, in vivid and harrowing detail, a word picture of execution scene, for which they would be responsible if they permitted death penalty to be imposed upon defendant.

3. Criminal law $\S$ 730(7)—District attorney's argument that defendant was hardened criminal and "I know things that you don't know—" held not prejudicial, after objection sustained and jury cautioned.

In murder prosecution, district attorney's remarks in argument to jury that he had said that defendant was a hardened criminal and "I know things that you don't know—" held not prejudicial error, where court sustained objection to last sentence and instructed jury to disregard remark.

4. Criminal law $\S$ 1037(2)—District attorney's argument it was common knowledge that life sentence meant defendant would serve a while and be "turned out" held not reversible error without objection or request.

In murder prosecution, remark of district attorney that it was matter of common knowledge that sentence of life imprisonment meant that defendant would serve from seven to ten years and then be "turned out" on society held not reversible error, where no objection was made to remark and no request was made that jury be admonished to disregard statement.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles W. Fricke, Judge.

Alphonse Reilly was convicted of murder in the first degree, and he appeals. Affirmed.

G. A. Benedict, Richard F. Bird, Frederic H. Vercoe, Public Defender, and Franklin Padan, Chief Deputy Public Defender, all of Los Angeles, for defendant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., John L. Flynn, Deputy Atty. Gen., and Buron Fitts, Dist. Atty., and Thurmond Clarke, both of Los Angeles, for the State.

LANGDON, J. The defendant was convicted of murder in the first degree and sentenced to suffer the death penalty, the jury having made no recommendation of life imprisonment. He has appealed from the judgment, but does not contend that the offense was not committed by him nor that the crime was not murder in the first degree. The killing occurred in the commission of a felony and there is no dispute about the facts of the case.

[1] The only point made upon the appeal is that a new trial should be granted because, it is contended, that the jury was prevented, by certain matters to be hereinafter mentioned, from giving to the question of the proper penalty to be inflicted unbiased consideration. This contention is made, first, because the court limited the scope of the argument of defendant's counsel to the jury. A reference to the transcript discloses that the limitation was properly imposed. Counsel sought to urge before the jury that "the trend of the time is away from the death penalty. Whatever your verdict in this case is going to be, after you have sat upon the case and returned that verdict your neighbors, your friends, perhaps your acquaintances, are going to ask you something about that verdict." A mere reading of this line of argument discloses that it is improper. Juries are not to be influenced by the opinions of their neighbors, friends, or acquaintances.

[2] The attorney for the defendant also attempted to sketch for the jury, in vivid and harrowing detail, a word picture of an execution scene, for which they would be responsible if they permitted the death penalty to be imposed upon defendant. In directing counsel to refrain from this line of argument the court we think did not abuse its discretion.

[3] It is also contended that the district attorney committed prejudicial error in the course of his argument to the jury by using the following language: "Mr. Benedict has told you that I have said, and correctly, he told you I said that this defendant is a hardened criminal. I know things that you don't know—" To the last sentence objection was properly made. The objection was sustained, and the court instructed the jury to disregard the remark. Under the circumstances, the error would not warrant a reversal of the judgment. In the light of the entire record, it is clear that this remark did not influence the action of the jury.

[4] The other remark of the district attorney, which is assigned as error, was to the effect that it was a matter of common knowledge that a sentence of life imprisonment in this state means that a defendant will serve from seven to ten years and then be "turned out" on society. It is unfortunate that such overzealous argument sometimes occurs in the course of a criminal trial, but no objection was made thereto, nor was any request made that the jury should be admonished to disregard this statement, and, in view of the entire record in this case, we cannot say that a different result would have followed had this statement been omitted.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

In re ROACH'S ESTATE.

ROACH v. ROACH.

(S. F. 13315.)

Supreme Court of California. Oct. 22, 1929.

Executors and administrators  69—One opposing setting aside of entire estate to widow may show deed by deceased to wife shortly before death, while mentally incapable (Code Civ. Proc. § 1469).

On hearing to determine whether entire estate of deceased should be set aside to widow, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1469, it could be shown that deceased, shortly before death, while under influence of narcotics and mentally incapable, was influenced to execute deed, not recorded until after his death, of certain real property to wife, since probate court has jurisdiction to determine, as against administratrix, amount of money or property of estate that has come into her hands, for purpose of charging her therewith, and in determining such question to determine all issues necessarily incidental thereto.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Frank H. Dunne, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of Joseph Roach, deceased. From an order setting aside the entire estate to Marie Roach, the widow, Joseph Francis Roach appeals. Reversed.

Superseding Opinion of District Court of Appeal in 279 P. 817.

Matthew A. McCullough, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Kington & Cunningham, of San Francisco, for respondent.

PRESTON, J. The order appealed from is reversed. On March 3, 1928, Joseph Roach died intestate in the city and county of San Francisco, leaving surviving him a widow, respondent herein, their minor daughter, and, by a former marriage, a 30 year old son, appellant herein.

Respondent, upon proceedings in due form, having been appointed administratrix of the estate of said deceased, filed therein her duly approved inventory, listing as the entire estate the following items: $1,510.22 in money, $250 in bonds, and an automobile appraised at $500, all stated to be community property of herself and said deceased. Thereafter she petitioned, under section 1469 of the Code of Civil Procedure, to have set over to her the whole estate, the net value of which did not exceed $2,500, but, after deduction of costs and expenses, was about $1,500.

Appellant thereupon filed his objections to the inventory and his petition for the removal of said administratrix upon two general grounds, to wit: First, her failure to account for, report, or inventory certain real estate, which at the time of his death was the separate property of said deceased; and, second, her failure to account for the sum of approximately $9,000, also the separate property of deceased, which was carried in their joint names in a certain bank, from which it was withdrawn by said administratrix and converted to her own use.

Upon the hearing, appellant placed on the stand as his first witness the pharmacist who had filled the physician's prescriptions during the last illness of deceased, preparatory to offering further proof by which he intended to show that deceased, shortly before his death, while under the influence of narcotics and mentally incapable, had been influenced to execute a deed, not recorded until after his death, of certain real property to respondent, which property, so fraudulently procured, she had failed to include in the assets of said estate. The court, upon learning its purpose, stopped the examination of said witness, and refused to hear further testimony upon the subject. After considerable discussion, he ruled that the only remedy of appellant was a suit to set aside the deed, or some proceeding in equity, and he thereupon granted respondent's application, and made his order settling her account, discharging her as administratrix, and assigning the entire estate to her as the widow of said deceased, for the use and benefit of herself and said minor child. From said order, appellant thereupon pursued this appeal.

The above ruling of the court below was erroneous. It is now well settled that the court, sitting in probate, is clothed with jurisdiction to hear and determine, as against an administratrix the amount of money or property of the estate that has come into her hands, for the purpose of charging her therewith, and in determining that question to determine all issues necessarily incidental thereto. Stevens v. Superior Court, 155 Cal. 148, 99 P. 512; Estate of Fulton, 188 Cal. 489, 205 P. 681; Bauer v. Bauer, 201 Cal. 267, 256 P. 820, 821; Estate of Kelsch, 203 Cal. 613, 265 P. 214. In the case of Stevens v. Superior Court, supra, where an executor alleged that the testator, prior to death, had transferred certain money to him in his individual capacity, which he claimed as his individual property, it was held that the probate court had power to determine the title.

A similar conclusion is reached in the other cases cited, all of which are directly in point. Indeed, the facts of the Bauer Case and the doctrine there set forth are so pertinent that they will be reviewed briefly as decisive authority for the holding we here announce. In said case the deceased had executed and placed in his safe deposit box, without delivery to any one, a gift deed to defendant of certain real property, which deed, after his death, she procured and caused to be recorded, thereafter selling the land and claiming the sale proceeds as her individual property, failing to include either money or land in the inventory of the estate. Plaintiffs sought relief through an equitable proceeding. This court, affirming the action of the court below in sustaining a demurrer without leave to amend, and granting a motion to dismiss the cause, said:

"It is undoubtedly the rule that the superior court, sitting in probate, is without jurisdiction to try the question of title to property as between a representative of the estate and strangers to the estate. Ex parte Casey, 71 Cal. 269, 12 P. 118; Estate of Haas, 97 Cal. 232, 31 P. 893, 32 P. 327. * * * It has, however, been held that when the title to property is claimed by a representative of an estate in his individual capacity the superior court, sitting in probate, is vested with the jurisdiction of determining the validity of such claim upon the settlement of the final accounts of such representative. Stevens v. Superior Court, 155 Cal. 148, 99 P. 512; Estate of Fulton, 188 Cal. 489, 205 P. 681; 2 Woerner's American Law of Administration (3d Ed.) note, p. 1007; 3 Woerner's American Law of Administration, p. 1769."

The necessary effect of the above decision, in dismissing said proceeding in equity, is to vest in the probate court exclusive jurisdiction to hear and determine issues of this character. Had appellant followed the ruling of the lower court here, and instituted an equitable proceeding, it could, under the holding of the Bauer Case, only have met with dismissal, and his efforts to so secure relief would have been unavailing; hence our conclusion first herein announced.

PEOPLE v. KELLEY. (Cr. 3195.)

Supreme Court of California. Oct. 22, 1929.

1. Homicide ☞233—Presence or absence of motive is only one circumstance to be considered in connection with others surrounding homicide.

Presence or absence of motive for homicide is only a circumstance to be considered by jury in connection with other circumstances in case.

2. Homicide ☞233—Motive for homicide need not be proved, if homicide can otherwise be established by sufficient competent evidence to overcome presumption of innocence.

Where homicide can otherwise be established by sufficient competent evidence to overcome presumption of innocence, it is not necessary to prove motive, and defendant must stand convicted, notwithstanding no motive has been shown.

3. Criminal law ☞1184—Where evidence sustains contention that crime charged was not established, appellate court need not reverse, but may modify judgment in degree (Pen. Code, § 1181, amended by St. 1927, p. 1037).

Contention that there is no evidence to establish charge set forth in indictment presents question of law, but, on appeal from conviction, court having jurisdiction need not reverse judgment of conviction, if evidence sustains contention, in view of Pen. Code, § 1181, amended by St. 1927, p. 1037, providing that, if evidence shows defendant guilty of a lesser degree of crime than that of which he was convicted, appellate court may modify judgment accordingly.

4. Criminal law ☞1184—Appellate court, if it finds evidence justifies conviction of lesser degree than that charged, or some lesser and included crime, may direct modification of judgment (Pen. Code, § 1181, amended by St. 1927, p. 1037).

Under Pen. Code, § 1181, amended by St. 1927, p. 1037, providing that, if evidence shows lesser degree of crime than that of which defendant was convicted, appellate court may modify judgment accordingly without granting or ordering new trial, where appellate court finds evidence insufficient to justify conviction of crime charged, but sufficient to justify conviction of lesser degree or some lesser and included crime, it may direct modification of judgment without ordering new trial and remand cause for sole purpose of enabling trial court to prescribe proper penalty.

5. Homicide ☞347—Where circumstances in record on appeal from conviction of murder established defendant did not commit murder, Supreme Court adjudged defendant guilty of manslaughter (Pen. Code, § 1181, amended by St. 1927, p. 1037).

Where record on appeal from conviction for murder firmly established that defendant caused death of deceased, but there was nothing in record showing that acts causing death were inflicted with that intent or malice aforethought necessary to constitute murder, nor that killing was willfull, deliberate, or premeditated, nor circumstances showing an abandoned and malignant heart, Supreme Court, under Pen. Code, § 1181, amended by St. 1927, p. 1037, adjudged defendant guilty of manslaughter, and remanded cause, with directions to pronounce judgment as prescribed by law.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Fletcher Bowron, Judge.

Leo P. Kelley was convicted of murder in the first degree without recommendation, and he appeals. Modified and remanded, with directions.

S. S. Hahn, Dan Heyfron, and Orfa J. Shontz, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., John L. Flynn, Deputy Atty. Gen., and Asa Keyes, Buron Fitts, and Tracy Chatfield Becker, all of Los Angeles, for the People.

WASTE, C. J. The defendant was indicted for the murder of Mrs. Myrtle Mellus. The jury returned a verdict of murder of the first degree, without recommendation. The court below denied a motion for a new trial, and pronounced sentence and judgment imposing the death penalty, whereupon the defendant appealed from the judgment of conviction and from the order denying him a new trial.

The decedent, a married woman, 43 years old at the time of her death, although residing with her husband, had maintained illicit intimacy with the appellant, much younger, for a period of 4 or 5 years. The appellant was often seen in company with the woman, and was a frequent visitor at her home when her husband was away, and on those occasions they indulged freely in intoxicating liquor and in sexual intercourse. Mrs. Mellus gave the appellant presents of clothing and personal effects, and assisted him in making his own purchases. On the morning of Sunday, August 5, 1928, the husband of the deceased left home at an early hour, leaving the decedent and a maid in the house. He intended to be gone the entire day. The appellant was summoned by telephone to the Mellus home by Mrs. Mellus shortly after the husband's departure, and arrived there about two hours later. He found Mrs. Mellus, partially dressed, and, according to his own testimony, the two spent the forenoon of the day drinking whisky and indulging in sexual intercourse.

The woman's husband returned to his home about 5 or 5:30 o'clock in the afternoon. The doors of the house were locked or fastened on the inside, and he gained entrance through a window. On going upstairs, he found his wife lying on a bed, partially covered. Her body had been frightfully maltreated, and she was dead. Further discussion of the gruesome condition of the body is unnecessary, in view of the conclusions we have reached, in considering the appeal. Police officers, making a search of the house, found the appellant hiding in a closet. His face and body were scratched, and there was blood on the shirt he was wearing. Blood was also found under his finger nails. When asked "why he so brutally attacked her (the deceased)," he said he loved her too much to kill her, but finally admitted that "he mussed her up a bit." Beyond that, he made but few answers when closely questioned by the arresting officers as to what had occurred. When taken to the police station, he gave other details as to what he said had occurred during the day, but strenuously denied intentionally so injuring the decedent as to cause her death.

It is first contended by the appellant that there is no evidence to sustain the verdict of murder in the first degree, for it raises only a suspicion of guilt, and fails to show any motive for the crime. The record of the trial in the court below is contained in a transcript of nearly 2000 pages, from which it irresistibly appears that the appellant, and none other, inflicted the injuries on the woman which caused her death. No jury, in our opinion would ever find otherwise. The evidence of the defendant, that of the witnesses called in his behalf, and the circumstances of the killing relied on by him fail to remove the absolute conviction, established by the entire record, that Kelley inflicted the fatal injuries on Mrs. Mellus during a sexual debauch in which the decedent was a willing participant, and while the passions of both were probably more or less inflamed by the use of intoxicating drink. We are, at the outset of our consideration, therefore, satisfied that on the facts of the case the verdict of the jury was just, in so far as it found the defendant guilty of causing the death of Mrs. Mellus, and that from that point of view no miscarriage of justice resulted.

[1, 2] The conclusion we have reached on the point just discussed disposes, also, of the further contention of the defense that the evidence is insufficient to sustain the conviction because of the absence of proof of a motive. The presence or absence of a motive is only a circumstance to be considered by the jury in connection with the other circumstances in the case. People v. Weston, 169 Cal. 393, 397, 146 P. 871. It is essentially a question of fact, and, like every other fact, is not necessary to be proved, if the crime can otherwise be established by sufficient competent evidence. The absence of proof of motive is a fact to be reckoned on the side of innocence; but, if the proof of guilt is, nevertheless, sufficient to overcome the presumption of innocence, the appellant must stand convicted, notwithstanding no motive has been shown. People v. Tom Woo, 181 Cal. 315, 328, 184 P. 389. The proof in this cause, that appellant inflicted the injuries that caused the death of the decedent, is so strong and convincing that any benefit the appellant could seek to allocate to himself by reason of the absence of a motive is entirely swept aside in so far as it might be claimed that he did not inflict the fatal injuries on the woman.

But another phase of the conviction of the appellant presents itself on this appeal, on which the absence of a motive has a bearing. On reargument the prosecution and the defense were asked to discuss the following question (among others): "In view of the absence of a motive, which is a circumstance in favor of the defendant, is the evidence sufficient to support a verdict of murder in the first degree, carrying the death penalty? Should the verdict of guilty have been of any greater degree than manslaughter?" But for a vital change recently made in the law relating to criminal causes in this state, this query would not have been propounded. People v. Durrant, 116 Cal. 179, 48 P. 75; People v. Peete, 54 Cal. App. 333, 202 P. 51; People v. Weston, 169 Cal. 393, 146 P. 871; People v. Tom Woo, 181 Cal. 315, 184 P. 389. Section 1181 of the Penal Code, as amended in 1927 (St. 1927, p. 1037), which must now be considered for the first time by this court, provides that, if the evidence (in criminal causes) shows the defendant to be not guilty of the degree of the crime of which he was convicted, but guilty of a lesser degree thereof or of a lesser crime included therein, the trial court may modify the judgment accordingly without granting or ordering a new trial, and this power shall extend to any court to which the cause may be appealed. The meaning and purpose of the amendment are so clear that we need not consume time in discussing the reason for its passage, beyond saying that its application to many criminal prosecutions will prevent reversals and new trials. The section was amended after the decision in the case of People v. Nagy, 199 Cal. 235, 248 P. 906, in which this court was compelled to reverse the cause for an entire new trial when there was ample evidence that the accused committed arson of the second degree, but not of the first degree, as found by the jury.

[3, 4] The contention that there is no evidence to establish the charge set forth in the indictment presents a question of law, but, on appeal, the court having jurisdiction is no longer confronted with the necessity of reversing a judgment of conviction if it sustains the contention. If it finds the evidence insufficient to justify the conviction for the crime alleged in the indictment, but sufficient to justify the conviction of a lesser degree of the crime or of some lesser, and included crime, it need not set aside the verdict entirely, but may direct a modification of the judgment without ordering a new trial, and remand the cause to the trial court for the sole purpose of enabling that court to prescribe the proper penalty in punishment for the crime the appellate court finds to have been committed.

The prosecution concedes that to be the effect of the new law; but its answer to the question propounded for reargument was that, as the present amendment to the statute imposed a new duty upon the court, the prosecution declined to "express an opinion" as to what the court should do. We have approached the consideration of this new duty with a great deal of hesitation, not only because the duty is one not to be assumed lightly, but also because the amendment to the Code section marks a complete departure in our criminal jurisprudence, and one which on first impression seems a startling innovation in our procedure. It is a matter of regret that a case of such shocking details should be the first one in which the provision of the new law should be invoked; but we are convinced that, but for the miserable circumstances under which the crime was committed, and which no doubt outraged the moral sense of the people of the community in which it was committed, including the jurors, a verdict of murder would not, in all probability, have been rendered. It is in just such a case that the provisions of the new law may well be invoked.

[5] That a crime was committed, and that the appellant committed it, are firmly established by this record. We have therefore concerned ourselves with the degree or the extent of the crime which was committed. The injuries inflicted on Mrs. Mellus, and from the effects of which she died, were disgusting, bestial, and shocking. But there is nothing in the record from which it may with reason be argued that they were inflicted with that intent or that malice aforethought which is a necessary ingredient of the crime of murder. Nor can we bring ourselves to believe that there was a willful, deliberate, and premeditated killing. The prosecution, the defense, and all others connected with the cause are so familiar with the crime that an analysis of the evidence seems unnecessary. No express malice was shown, for there was not manifested a deliberate, or any, intention to unlawfully take the life of a fellow creature, and the circumstances attending the killing in this case, as proved, do not show an abandoned and malignant heart.

We have gone over the evidence in this case with minute care. The errors alleged to have occurred during the trial have not escaped our attention. Were we compelled, as formerly, to either affirm the judgment or reverse the case, we would be driven to the latter course because of prejudicial errors committed. Appellant was properly found guilty, on competent evidence, of a most serious offense, and the errors complained of did not, in our judgment, prejudicially contribute toward bringing about the finding that he killed Mrs. Mellus. No miscarriage of justice, therefore, resulted, except that, as a matter of law, the jury improperly fixed the degree of the crime and imposed the penalty therefor. That injustice may now be righted without subjecting the state and the defendant to the delay and expense of a new trial.

The judgment of the lower court of murder of the first degree is modified. The cause is remanded to the trial court with "directions to enter a judgment against the defendant finding him guilty of manslaughter, and to thereupon pronounce judgment upon him as prescribed by law.

LOS ANGELES COUNTY v. JUSTICE'S COURT OF BEVERLY HILLS et al.
(S. F. 13659.)

Supreme Court of California. Oct. 24, 1929.

Justices of the peace $\S$ 31—Justices' courts must exercise jurisdiction, when political subdivisions in which they are located have required population, as determined in any proper manner (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 112, as amended by St. 1929, p. 834; Pen. Code, $\S$ 1425, as amended by St. 1929, p. 861).

Where it is found by any proper mode of ascertainment that various political subdivisions in which justices' courts are located have required population, justices' courts must entertain and consider all matters and causes falling within jurisdiction prescribed by Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 112, as amended by St. 1929, p. 834, and Pen. Code, $\S$ 1425, as amended by St. 1929, p. 861, relating to jurisdiction of justices' courts, though no census was taken by county supervisors under Pol. Code, $\S$ 4055, since jurisdiction of justices' courts depends on fact of there being specified number of inhabitants within respective territorial boundaries.

In Bank.

Application by the County of Los Angeles, through its duly authorized county counsel, for writ of mandate, prayed to be directed to the Justice's Court of Beverly Hills Township, Los Angeles County, and others, to compel respondents to exercise original jurisdiction in certain causes which respondent courts and justices have refused to entertain. Writ granted.

Everett W. Mattoon and S. V. O. Prichard, both of Los Angeles, and Robert A. Cushman, for petitioner.

Elliot Gibbs, of Pasadena, Edward H. Miller and Fogel & Beman, all of Los Angeles, F. D. Macomber, of Santa Monica, and Tanner, Odell & Taft, of Los Angeles, for respondents Garrett and Santa Monica Township Justice's Court.

Bert L. Cooper and Joseph A. Allard, Jr., both of Pomona, for respondent San Jose Township Justice's Court.

WASTE, C. J. The county of Los Angeles, through its duly authorized county counsel, is here seeking a writ of mandate to compel the respondent justices' courts, located in the county, and the duly elected justices of such courts, to exercise original jurisdiction in certain causes which the respondent courts and justices have refused to entertain.

At the recent session of the Legislature section 112 of the Code of Civil Procedure of the state of California and section 1425 of the Penal Code of the state, relating to the jurisdiction of justices' courts, were amended (Stats. 1929, p. 834; Stats. 1929, p. 861); the amendments, generally speaking, having the effect of changing and enlarging the jurisdiction of these courts, particularly in cities, cities and counties, towns, and judicial townships having a population of 30,000 or more. It is alleged in the petition that the townships in question have a population of 30,000 or more. This allegation, except as to the township of Pasadena, is denied by the answer of certain respondents, who also assert that there is no official census showing the number of inhabitants in the townships to be that alleged in the petition.

Respondents allege themselves to be ready, willing, and desirous of entertaining causes involving the increased jurisdiction prescribed by the sections, supra, but, because of the uncertainty as to the population in their respective political subdivisions, in the absence of a federal enumeration of inhabitants, they hesitate to act in such matters unless and until a census be taken by the supervisors of the county under section 4055 of the Political Code, or the federal census of 1930 be taken and the result announced. As an alternative, the respondents asked that this court judicially determine the jurisdiction of the respective courts conferred by the amendments, supra. This we have decided to do, because of the delays incident to an enumeration of the inhabitants by the taking of a census.

The jurisdiction of the respondent courts depends upon the fact of there being the specified number of inhabitants within their respective territorial boundaries, and not upon any report or proclamation of the fact. People v. Wong Wang, 92 Cal. 277, 280, 28 P. 270; Puterbaugh v. Wadham, 162 Cal. 611, 618, 123 P. 804. That being true, it would seem to follow that, when it is found by any proper mode of ascertainment that the various political subdivisions in which the respondent courts are located have the required population, the respondent courts must entertain, consider, and act in all those matters and causes falling within the jurisdiction prescribed by the present law.

By consent of all the parties to this proceeding, the court appointed Leonard E. Thomas, Esq., referee to ascertain, determine, and report the population of the various political subdivisions here in question.

The referee has filed herein a report of his proceedings, from which it appears that he conducted hearings, took testimony, both oral and documentary, made an investigation, and examined witnesses concerning the population of each of the designated townships. No objection was made to the report of the referee, and all the parties to this proceeding joined in a written stipulation that the report be affirmed as presented. That was done, and the court now finds, as a fact and in accord with the report of the referee, that each of the following townships of the county of Los Angeles, state of California, has a population of 30,000 inhabitants or more, viz.: Beverly Hills township, Glendale township, Inglewood township, Montebello township, Pasadena township, San Antonio township, San Gabriel township, San Jose township, and Santa Monica township; and that each of the following townships of the county of Los Angeles, state of California, has a population of less than 30,000 inhabitants, viz.: Compton township, Redondo township, and Whittier township.

Therefore let a peremptory writ of mandate issue, directed to and commanding the respondents justice's court of Beverly Hills township and H. E. Billings, justice of the peace thereof; justice's court of Glendale township and Harry W. Chase, justice of the peace thereof; justice's court of Inglewood township and Albert F. Monroe, justice of the peace thereof; justice's court of Montebello township and E. P. Woods, justice of the peace thereof; justices' court of Pasadena township and Elliot Gibbs and J. Russell Morton, justices of the peace thereof; justice's court of San Antonio township and Edward H. Miller, justice of the peace thereof; justice's court of San Gabriel township and W. M. Northrup, justice of the peace thereof; justice's court of San Jose township and Ulysses E. White, justice of the peace thereof; justice's court of Santa Monica township and W. R. Garrett, justice of the peace thereof—all of said townships being situated in the county of Los Angeles, state of California, to forthwith accept and exercise the jurisdiction prescribed by section 112 of the Code of Civil Procedure of the state of California and section 1425 of the Penal Code of the state of California for justices' courts in cities, cities and counties, towns, and judicial townships having a population of 30,000 or more; and further commanding the justice's court of Compton township and Irving P. Austin, justice of the peace thereof; justice's court of Redondo township and Joseph G. Moodie, justice of the peace thereof; and justice's court of Whittier township and Frank G. Swain, justice of the peace thereof—all of said townships being situated in the county of Los Angeles, state of California, to forthwith accept and exercise the jurisdiction prescribed by section 112 of the Code of Civil Procedure of the state of California and section 1425 of the Penal Code of the state of California for justices' courts in cities, cities and counties, towns, and judicial townships having a population of less than 30,000.

Rehearing Denied Nov. 21, 1929.

1. Escrows ⇨9—Escrow holder cannot make valid delivery of deed to grantee who has not complied with stipulated conditions.

Where deed was placed in hands of third person as escrow with agreement between grantor and grantee that it should not be delivered until grantee had complied with certain conditions, grantee who had not satisfied such conditions was not entitled to delivery of deed, and escrow holder cannot make valid delivery; rule that actions subsequent to execution and delivery of deed cannot affect its integrity and subsequent failure of consideration or breach of personal covenant will not void deed being inapplicable.

2. Vendor and purchaser ⇨100—Delay in rescinding contract resulting from indulgences extended to defaulting party cannot be asserted as laches or affirmation of contract.

Delay in rescinding contract for sale of land, which is result of indulgences extended to defaulting party, may not be availed of by him as showing laches on part of his adversary, nor as constituting affirmation of contract by such adversary.

3. Estoppel ⇨110—Estoppel to be available as defense must be specially pleaded.

Estoppel to be available as defense to action to rescind contract for sale of land must be specially pleaded.

4. Escrows ⇨14(2)—Where purchaser acquired deed from escrow holder without performing stipulated conditions, vendors' attempts to secure performance held not to constitute ratification of escrow holder's delivery.

Where purchaser obtained deed from escrow holder without performing stipulated conditions, conduct of vendors in making efforts to have purchaser comply with contract and in relying on his promises of performance held not to constitute ratification of escrow holder's delivery.

5. Escrows ⇨9—Where title did not pass to purchaser acquiring deed from escrow holder without performing stipulated conditions, his grantee took no title.

Where title did not pass to purchaser who acquired deed from escrow holder without performing stipulated conditions, his grantee who had knowledge of vendor's claims held to have taken nothing under deed from purchaser purporting to transfer and convey property to her.

6. Equity ⇨36—In suit to rescind land contract, court having jurisdiction of parties may compel conveyance of land involved situated outside jurisdiction.

In suit to rescind contract covering sale of real property located outside jurisdiction, court of equity having acquired jurisdiction of parties may compel conveyance of real estate involved.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; John J. Allen, Judge.

Suit by Josephine Promis and others against G. E. Duke and others to rescind a contract covering the sale of real property. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Robert Duncan and Robert E. Hatch, both of San Francisco, Henry C. McPike, and G. E. Duke, both of Oakland, for appellants.

Louis O'Neal and Wm. F. James, both of San José, for respondents.

WASTE, C. J. This action, instituted to rescind a contract covering the sale of certain real property, for an accounting of the rents and profits received therefrom, and to secure a reconveyance thereof to the plaintiffs, terminated in the court below with the entry of a judgment for the plaintiffs, from which the defendants have prosecuted this appeal.

A painstaking examination of the reporter's transcript has satisfied us that there is no merit in the appellants' contention touching the asserted insufficiency of the evidence to support the findings of the lower court. In substance, it is found that on September 25, 1925, the respondents entered into a contract with the appellant G. E. Duke, under and by the terms of which the former agreed to sell and the latter to purchase certain described real property situate in the city of Victoria, British Columbia, for the sum of $55,000—respondents to deposit in escrow with the Alameda County Title Insurance Company a deed conveying good and merchantable title to Duke, who was thereupon to pay and deliver to the escrow holder $10,000 in cash and his promissory note for $45,000, together with a mortgage securing the same on certain improved real property situate in the city of Berkeley, county of Alameda; that in and by the terms of the agreement between the parties it was understood and agreed that the mortgage securing the promissory note for $45,000 was to be subject only to a then existing incumbrance of record against said Berkeley property in the sum of $22,500, and was to be subsequent to no other lien or incumbrance; that at the time of the making of said agreement there was, in addition to the incumbrance of $22,500, an existing and unpaid lien, or incumbrance of $9,605 secured by deed of trust on the Berkeley property, which latter incumbrance the appellant G. E. Duke was to pay and discharge prior to his taking the title to the Victoria property, in order that he might be in position to deliver the $45,000 mortgage on the Berkeley property free and clear of said incumbrance; that pursuant to this agreement the respondents signed, acknowledged, and deposited with the title company a deed to the Victoria property which would, on delivery, vest a good and merchantable title thereto in G. E. Duke; that shortly after the deposit of this deed in escrow, the appellant G. E. Duke obtained the possession thereof without the knowledge or consent of the respondents, and without having complied with the terms of the agreement between the parties, and in violation of the terms of the escrow agreement; that he thereupon caused the deed to be forwarded to the city of Victoria for recordation, thus causing the title to the property to be, in form, registered and vested in his name; that thereafter, and in the month of November, 1925, the respondents first learned of Duke's actions and thereupon demanded that he free the Berkeley property from the $9,605 incumbrance and comply fully with the terms of their written agreement, which he promised to do; that contrary to his repeated promise, Duke failed and neglected to free the Berkeley property of the $9,605 incumbrance, and by reason of such failure and neglect the property was sold on September 18, 1926, by the trustee under the deed of trust securing the $9,605 indebtedness; that the Berkeley property was thereby completely lost to all the parties hereto, and by reason thereof and wholly through the fault of the appellant G. E. Duke the consideration for which the respondents agreed to convey their Victoria property to Duke had wholly failed; that in due time the respondents gave and served Duke with written notice of their election to rescind the written contract, offering to return to him everything of value which they may have received thereunder; that subsequent to Duke's improper registration of the deed to the Victoria property he conveyed the property to the appellant M. E. Duke, his wife, who claims to be the owner thereof; that this latter conveyance was without consideration and in fraud of respondents' rights, the appellant M. E. Duke, having at the time full knowledge of the claims and rights of the respondents in and to the Victoria property, and of the improper acts of her husband in violation of his agreement and of the escrow; that, subsequent to G. E. Duke's registration of the Victoria deed, he and M. E. Duke incumbered the Victoria property to the extent of $30,000 and have since the recording of said deed received the rents, issues, and profits therefrom, for which they have never accounted to the respondents; that the appellants have received and retained and applied to their own use and benefit, over and above all proper credits or offsets, the net sum of $16,804.11. As conclusions of law, the trial court held that the deed to the Victoria property placed in escrow by the respondents and improperly withdrawn therefrom by the appellant G. E. Duke, in violation of the escrow instructions, had never been delivered to him and consequently passed no title; that he could not, therefore, transfer title to M. E. Duke, his wife; that these two deeds were, however, a cloud on respondents' title, from which they were entitled to be relieved; that the respondents were entitled to a judgment and decree directing and requiring the appellants to execute, acknowledge, and cause to be recorded and registered, according to the forms and laws of British Columbia, a deed conveying to the respondents and vesting in them title to the Victoria property, subject to the $30,000 incumbrance above referred to, and requiring appellants to do or perform such other act or acts as might be necessary or proper to restore the respondents to the ownership and possession of the Victoria property, or, in the event of their failure or refusal so to do, that a commissioner, appointed by the court, should execute such deed for them and in their names under the direction of the court; and that the respondents were entitled to recover of and from the appellants the sum of $16,804.11, together with their costs of suit. Judgment was entered accordingly.

[1] Where a deed is placed in the hands of a third person, as an escrow, with an agreement between the grantor and grantee that it shall not be delivered to the grantee until he has complied with certain conditions, the grantee does not acquire any title to the land, nor is he entitled to a delivery of the deed until he has strictly complied with the conditions. If he does not comply with the conditions when required, or refuses to comply, the escrow holder cannot make a valid delivery of the deed to him. Los Angeles City High School Dist. v. Quinn, 195 Cal. 377, 383, 234 P. 313; McLaughlin v. Clausen, 85 Cal. 322, 327, 24 P. 636. At the time the appellant G. E. Duke obtained possession of the Victoria deed from the escrow holder, he had not satisfied the conditions precedent to a valid delivery of that instrument to him. Title to the Victoria property did not, therefore, pass to and vest in him by virtue of such improper delivery. This being so, the early case of Lawrence v. Gayetty, 78 Cal. 126, 132-135, 20 P. 382, 12 Am. St. Rep. 29, so strongly relied on by the appellants, is clearly distinguishable from the present case, and the principle therein announced is not at all pertinent to the inquiry now before us. The decision in that case merely declares that a conveyance of real property, fully executed on the part of the grantor, cannot be set aside for a failure of consideration, on the sole ground that the promises and agreements which induced its execution, and which, by the terms of the contract under which the deed was made, were not to be performed until after its execution, had not been performed. In other words, acts done subsequent to the execution and delivery of a deed cannot affect its integrity, and a subsequent failure of consideration or breach of a personal covenant, not amounting to a condition, will not avoid the deed. Duckworth v. Watsonville Water Co., 170 Cal. 425, 434, 150 P. 58; Masero v. Bessolo, 87 Cal. App. 262, 271, 262 P. 61. The deeds sought to be avoided in Lawrence v. Gayetty, supra, and in the cases last above cited had been properly delivered and were fully effective from the time of delivery. In the case now before us the delivery of the Victoria deed not having been such as gave it force, no title passed to the appellant, G. E. Duke, and the judgment entered herein has not the effect, as urged by the appellants, of undermining the integrity of a validly executed and delivered deed of conveyance.

[2-4] It is contended, however, that the respondents, after learning of the improper and ineffective delivery of the Victoria deed by the escrow holder, so conducted themselves as to estop them from thereafter asserting the invalidity of the instrument. The record discloses that the respondents, upon learning of Duke's improper withdrawal of the Victoria deed from escrow, made many efforts to have him fully and faithfully discharge his obligations under the terms of the written agreement, and that, as a consequence of his oft-repeated promise to so perform, they were lulled into temporary inactivity. However, upon the foreclosure of the $9,605 incumbrance on the Berkeley property, the respondents were, for the first time, confronted with definite and uncontrovertible evidence of the falsity of Duke's promises and the utter unfaithfulness of his purpose, and they thereupon, and in due season, proceeded to invoke the usual and ordinary processes of the law to undo the wrong done them. We have but recently held that a delay in rescinding which is the result of indulgences extended to a defaulting party, may not be availed of by him as showing laches on the part of his adversary nor as constituting an affirmation of the contract by such adversary. Hunt v. Field, 202 Cal. 701, 704, 262 P. 730. Moreover, respondents' efforts to have Duke perform as agreed were not pleaded by the appellants as an affirmation of the contract after breach. It is the settled law of this state that an estoppel to be available as a defense to an action must be specially pleaded. Producers' Holding Co. v. Hill, 201 Cal. 204, 209, 256 P. 207. Nor do we think respondents' conduct may properly be said to have worked a ratification of the escrow holder's delivery of the Victoria deed. Weghorst v. Clark, 66 Colo. 535, 180 P. 742, 744, presented a situation somewhat analogous to the one now before us, in that the plaintiff in that case was seeking to rescind a contract covering an exchange of real properties and to secure a reconveyance of his lands because of the defendant's violation of the escrow instructions. In response to the contention that the plaintiff had ratified the improper delivery of the escrow instrument, the court stated: "True, he was willing at all times to carry out the agreement according to its terms, and urged that that be done; and if it had been done the instrument would have been ratified and would have become a deed, but it was not done, and John R. Clark never signed or tendered a deed according to the terms of the contract, but refused to carry out the contract by paying the irrigation tax for 1913, by reason of which Weghorst rescinded. The conveyance, therefore, from Weghorst, never took effect." So it is in the present case. Respondents made many efforts to have Duke comply with the terms of his contract, and for a time accepted and relied on his promises of full and faithful performance thereof. In this he failed, and he is not now in a position to urge that respondents' conduct amounted to a ratification of the improper delivery by the escrow holder of the deed to the Victoria property. Furthermore, a ratification, to be binding, must have been made with full knowledge of all the material facts. Dixon v. Bristol Sav. Bank, 102 Ga. 461, 31 S. E. 96, 99, 66 Am. St. Rep. 193. The conduct asserted to have worked a ratification of the delivery of the Victoria deed transpired at a time when the respondents believed, and justly so, that Duke, in good faith, intended to satisfy and discharge his obligations under the contract.

[5] Title to the Victoria property not having passed to the appellant G. E. Duke, his grantee, M. E. Duke, took nothing under the deed purporting to transfer and convey the same to her. On competent and sufficient evidence the trial court found that she had full knowledge of the respondents' claims and rights at the time of her asserted purchase of the premises. However, even if she were to be regarded as a bona fide purchaser for value, it would avail her nothing, for, in line with the great weight of authority, it has been held in this state "that the fraudulent procurement of a deed deposited as an escrow from the depositary by the grantee named therein will not operate to pass the title, and the subsequent purchaser from such grantee, without notice, and for a valuable consideration, derives no title thereby, and will not be protected." Gould v. Wise, 97 Cal. 532, 536, 32 P. 576, 577, 33 P. 323. In passing, it might be said that we are not now concerned, as appellants would have us be, with the rights of persons who have neither been named nor appeared herein as parties. It is unnecessary, therefore, that we consider and determine what rights in the Victoria property, if any, an innocent incumbrancer under the Dukes may have procured by reason of their claim of title. However, appellants' query, "How about the innocent incumbrancer?" tends to indicate that they have failed to read the judgment actually entered in the cause, for it is therein provided, among other things, that the appellants execute and deliver and cause to be recorded and registered, according to the forms and laws of British Columbia, a deed of conveyance of the Victoria property vesting in the respondents the title thereto "subject to an incumbrance of Thirty Thousand ($30,000.00) Dollars now of record. * * * The respondents have not appealed from that portion of the judgment purporting to subject their Victoria property to the lien of the $30,000 mortgage placed thereon by the Dukes.

[6] Appellants' contention, raised in the lower court by means of demurrer, that the court was without jurisdiction to grant the relief sought, is, in our opinion, without merit. In 10 California Jurisprudence, 496 § 40, it is stated that: "A court of equity having acquired jurisdiction of the parties may, by decree operating on them in personam, control their actions with regard to properties situated without the jurisdiction, when such action is necessary for a complete disposition of a controversy. Thus a court of equity has jurisdiction to compel a conveyance of real estate situated outside the state, through its control of the parties before it. * * * In cases of fraud, trust or contract, the jurisdiction of a court of chancery is upheld wherever the person is found, although lands in another state may be affected by the decree." The following authorities support the text: Title Ins., etc., Co. v. Cal. Dev. Co., 171 Cal. 173, 198, 152 P. 542; Peninsular, etc., Co. v. Pac. S. W. Co., 123 Cal. 689, 697, 56 P. 604; McGee v. Sweeney, 84 Cal. 100, 23 P. 1117; Smith v. Davis, 90 Cal. 25, 30, 27 P. 26, 25 Am. St. Rep. 92.

[7] In conclusion, we find no error in the account made by the trial court. An accounting was well within the issues of the cause, and the proper subject of adjudication by the court.

The judgment is affirmed.

Assignments for benefit of creditors — Assignees, suing for benefit of creditors merely, could not recover consideration for drilling well, where such consideration had been returned by assignor's president (Civ. Code, §§ 3449, 3460).

Where president of company returned certain moneys and stocks to trustees of another firm, which had been paid as consideration for drilling oil well, trustees of company, suing as assignees for benefit of creditors, and not as individual creditors, who were misled, could not recover what president had returned, since they could have no greater right than their assignor had, as provided by Civ. Code, § 3460, and in view of section 3449, stating when debtor may execute assignment.

Action by J. A. Smith and another, as trustees of and for the Orange County Drilling Company, against Charles Kirkpatrick and others. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendants appeal. Reversed.

Frank P. Dougherty, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

W. W. Hyams and Hyams & Himrod, all of Los Angeles (Aubrey Devine, of Los Angeles, of counsel), for respondents.

LANGDON, J. Plaintiffs brought this action as assignees of the Orange County Drilling Company, for the benefit of the creditors of said company. They alleged that the defendants and each of them had received $215,000 from said company, for the use of said company. This allegation was denied by defendants. The essential facts were stipulated by the parties to be as follows:

Some time in September, 1922, the Orange County Drilling Company entered into a contract with the Kirkpatrick Bros. Syndicate to drill a well at Santa Fé Springs for a price of $155,000, and this consideration was paid, $90,000 in cash and $65,000 in units of the Syndicate. In October, 1922, the Kirkpatrick Syndicate No. 2, an independent syndicate, made and entered into a contract with the Orange County Drilling Company for the drilling of a well at Santa Fé Springs for the total consideration of $175,000. In November, 1922, the Kirkpatrick Syndicate No. 3 made and entered into a contract with the Orange County Drilling Company for the drilling of a third well at Santa Fé Springs for a total cash consideration of $175,000. At the time of making the contracts, and at all times mentioned in the complaint, the defendants, C. H. Kirkpatrick, W. O. Kirkpatrick, and Willis H. Cates, were the trustees of Kirkpatrick Bros. Syndicate, and the defendants C. H. Kirkpatrick and Willis H. Cates were the trustees of Kirkpatrick Syndicates 2 and 3.

During the times mentioned in the complaint R. W. Edens was president and general manager of the Orange County Drilling Company and owner of all the stock in the company, and he returned to C. H. Kirkpatrick, W. O. Kirkpatrick, and Willis Cates said units of Kirkpatrick Syndicate of the par value of $65,000, which said units were part of the consideration for the drilling of the well provided for in the contract of September, 1922. These units were sold afterwards by the defendants for about $40,000 in cash. R. W. Edens, in his official capacity, returned to the defendants C. H. Kirkpatrick and Willis H. Cates $75,000 in cash out of the contract price for drilling the second well, and also returned to said C. H. Kirkpatrick and Willis H. Cates a like sum out of the contract price for drilling the third well.

The judgment went against the three defendants in the sum of $190,000. The theory upon which this judgment was predicated is not clear from the record, but it is immaterial, for we think that the agreed facts do not entitle the assignees of the Orange County Drilling Company to recover. The plaintiffs are not suing as individual creditors who have been misled, but as assignees to hold in trust for all creditors. As such they can have no greater right than their assignor. Section 3460, Civ. Code. In the case of Francisco v. Aguirre, 94 Cal. 180, 29 P. 495, 496, the court said:

"Upon the principle that an assignor cannot confer upon his assignee any greater right than he himself had in the property, it is held in an almost unbroken line of authorities that, in the absence of any statute giving such power, the assignee cannot maintain an action to recover property that had been conveyed by his assignor in fraud of his creditors. This rule rests upon the ground that the assignee is merely the representative of his assignor, and does not represent the creditors, and that notwithstanding the assignment they are not bound to accept its provisions, but may themselves subject such property to the satisfaction of their debts. This right is held by them, not as beneficiaries under the assignment, or by virtue of any of its provisions, but as creditors of the assignor, and wholly independent of its provisions. 'Under the common law of assignments the assignee stands in the place of the assignor, and can assert no claim to property which the assignor might not. The assignment, therefore, does not carry with it to the trustee the title to property which the assignor had previously transferred in fraud of his creditors, for the purpose of hindering, delaying, and defrauding them' [citing cases]."

The cases of Ruggles v. Cannedy, 127 Cal. 290, 53 P. 911, 916, 59 P. 827, 46 L. R. A. 371, and First National Bank v. Menke, 128 Cal. 103, 60 P. 675, also contain language directly in point and in favor of the appellants in this action. In the former case it is said: "The failure to observe the well-defined distinction between the powers of the assignee in insolvency, who thus represents the creditors, and those of an assignee for the benefit of creditors, who is the representative of the assignor, has led to much conflict of authority upon this question. In this state it is held that an assignee for the benefit of creditors may not maintain such an action, but the distinction between such an assignee and the assignee in insolvency is clearly pointed out."

A later case than those hereinbefore cited, and which is directly in point and applies the rule of the earlier cases to a voluntary assignment other than an assignment to the sheriff under the provisions of section 3449, Civil Code, is Moore v. Schneider, 196 Cal. 380, 238 P. 81. That case, together with the others cited herein, is conclusive against the right of the plaintiffs to recover.

The judgment is reversed.

PEOPLE v. POST. (Cr. 3223.)

Supreme Court of California. Oct. 24, 1929.

1. Criminal law $\S$ 778(5)—Instruction that defendant must prove mitigating circumstances when killing is proved held erroneous (Pen. Code, $\S$ 1105).

In prosecution for murder, instruction, under Pen. Code, $\S$ 1105, that when killing is proved defendant must show mitigating circumstances by preponderance of evidence, held erroneous for placing burden when killing was proved instead of when killing by defendant was proved.

2. Criminal law $\S$ 782(13)—Instruction requiring defendant's proof of mitigating circumstances after killing was proved held erroneous for statements requiring proof by defendant by preponderance of evidence (Pen. Code, $\S$ 1105).

In prosecution for murder, instruction under Pen. Code, $\S$ 1105, that when killing is proved defendant must show mitigating circumstances by preponderance of evidence, held erroneous for statement that defendant's proof of mitigating circumstances must be by preponderance of evidence, which was by some proof stronger in some appreciable degree than proof of prosecution, since under section 1105 defendant's only burden was to raise reasonable doubt as to guilt.

3. Criminal law $\S$ 1186(4)—In murder case, instruction requiring defendant to prove mitigating circumstances after killing was shown held prejudicial error, though verdict was for manslaughter (Pen. Code, $\S$ 1105; Const. art. 6, $\S$ 4½).

In prosecution for murder, instruction under Pen. Code, $\S$ 1105, that when killing is proved defendant must show mitigating circumstances by preponderance of evidence, held prejudicial error, notwithstanding Const. art. 6, $\S$ 4½, and notwithstanding that verdict of manslaughter was returned, where defendant's plea was that homicide was excusable because deceased was responsible for accident.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; Shelley J. Higgins, Judge.

Ralph N. Post was convicted of manslaughter, and he appeals. Reversed.

Superseding opinion of District Court of Appeal in 274 P. 988.

Fitzgerald & Gusweiler and Edgar B. Hervey, all of San Diego, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., John L. Flynn, Deputy Atty. Gen., John D. Richer, of Los Angeles, Stephen Connell, Dist. Atty., and J. H. McKinney, Deputy Dist. Atty., both of San Diego, for the People.

RICHARDS, J. [1-3] The appellant was informed against in the superior court in and for the county of San Diego for the crime of murder and was convicted of the crime of manslaughter, and, from the judgment and order denying his motion for a new trial, he appealed to the District Court of Appeal in and for the Second District, Division 1, which tribunal affirmed said judgment; whereupon a petition for hearing in this court was duly made and granted. The appellant presented to the appellate tribunal a number of contentions in urging a reversal of the judgment. These were disposed of in the main adversely to the appellant and were, with the exception of the single contention which appellant urges before this court, correctly disposed of. The sole contention which the appellant has presented in his brief for the consideration of this court arises out of the giving of the following instruction to the jury: "You are instructed that up to the moment when the killing is proved the prosecution must make out its case beyond any reasonable doubt. When the killing is proved, it devolves upon the defendant to show any circumstances in mitigation to excuse or justify by a preponderance of evidence on his part. That is, the killing being proved, the defendant must make out his case in mitigation to excuse or justify by some proof stronger in some appreciable degree than the proof of the prosecution. The burden of proof changes. It must be in some degree, no matter how small, stronger than the proof of the prosecution on the other side."

The foregoing instruction was an apparent paraphrase of section 1105 of the Penal Code, which reads as follows:

"When burden of proof shifts in trials for murder. Upon a trial for murder, the commission of the homicide by the defendant being proved, the burden of proving circumstances of mitigation, or that justify or excuse it, devolves upon him, unless the proof on the part of the prosecution tends to show that the crime committed only amounts to manslaughter, or that the defendant was justifiable or excusable."

It is the contention of the appellant that the foregoing instruction departed, in at least two vital particulars, from the language and intent of the section of the Penal Code above quoted and in so doing imposed upon the defendant certain burdens which the letter and spirit of the law generally relating to trials for murder do not justify, and that said instruction was, for the reasons urged, prejudicially erroneous so as to entitle him to a reversal of the judgment. That this instruction does so depart from the language and apparent intent of the foregoing section of the Penal Code is made apparent by a comparison of the instruction with said provision. The code section in its opening sentence states that: "Upon a trial for murder, the commission of the homicide by the defendant being proved, the burden," etc. The opening sentences of the instruction read: "You are instructed that up to the moment when the killing is proved the prosecution must make out its case beyond any reasonable doubt. When the killing is proved, it devolves upon the defendant," etc. It is thus made plain that while the section of the Penal Code above quoted requires the presentation of proof of the commission of the homicide by the defendant before the burden of presenting evidence tending to prove circumstances in mitigation, justification, or excuse, the instruction by its terms placed no such requirement upon the prosecution, but, on the contrary, informed the jury that, from and after the moment in the trial of the cause when the killing was proved, the burden shifted to the defendant to establish whatever circumstances in mitigation, justification, or excuse of the homicide might constitute his defense. It will thus be seen that an entirely different rule is declared in this instruction for the shifting of the burden of proof from that which the terms and intent of the foregoing section of the Penal Code provide. The importance of this variation, in so far as it may be found to have constituted prejudicial error, is discovered when the facts of the instant case come under review. The homicide in question occurred on the evening of April 8, 1928, and resulted in the death of a woman named Parentha K. Simpson, who at the moment thereof was riding with the defendant in an automobile of which he was the driver, along the pier abutting upon the bay of San Diego, when suddenly the automobile was so turned as to run off the pier into the deep water of the bay. The defendant, by breaking a window, escaped from the submerged car, but the woman was drowned. The defendant, upon being charged with her murder, insisted throughout that the casualty was accidental and was caused by the fact that when the machine was being driven by him slowly near the edge of the pier it ran into a depression of some sort, whereupon the woman frantically seized the wheel and turned the car into the bay. It is thus seen that, while the killing of the deceased was an admitted fact in the case, the question as to whether such killing had occurred through any willful act of the defendant was at all times an issue in the case. This being so, the defendant was entitled to have the burden of proof as to the commission of the homicide by him remain with the prosecution until sufficient evidence had been introduced to establish at least prima facie the corpus delicti as to him.

All that the foregoing instruction, however, required of the prosecution was the mere proof of the death of the deceased in order to shift the burden of proof from the people to the defendant. That such instruction was erroneous in that regard standing alone was practically admitted by counsel for the people. It was, however, urged by the latter that when the foregoing instruction is considered in connection with the other instructions in the case, and also in the light of the evidence produced upon the trial thereof as to the circumstances attending the decedent's death, and which circumstances were fully presented by the prosecution upon its main case, the defendant was not prejudicially harmed by the giving of that portion of the instructions above referred to. We would be inclined to adopt this view were it not for the inclusion in the instruction of the concluding portions thereof which constitute the appellant's main ground for his claim of prejudicial error. The instruction proceeded to say that upon proof of the killing "it devolves upon the defendant to show any circumstances in mitigation to excuse or justify by a preponderance of evidence on his part." The instruction proceeded to amplify the latter statement by the following illustration thereof by stating that: "The killing being proved, the defendant must make out his case in mitigation to excuse or justify by some proof stronger in some appreciable degree than the proof of the prosecution. The burden of proof changes. It must be in some degree, no matter how small, stronger than the proof of the prosecution on the other side." The foregoing instruction as given in its entirety by the trial court seems to have been taken bodily from the instructions given to the jury in the case of People v. Hong Ah Duck, 61 Cal. 387, 394, and the instruction as thus given in that case met, for the time being, with the approval of this court. In the case of People v. Bushton, 80 Cal. 160, 165, 22 P. 127, 129, this court expressly withdrew its approval of said instruction, holding that the same as given in the Hong Ah Duck Case was "based upon an erroneous construction of section 1105 of the Penal Code," and the Bushton Case was reversed on account of the giving of such or a similar instruction. In the case of People v. Elliott, 80 Cal. 296, 22 P. 207, this court again expressed its disapproval of an instruction in substantially the same form, holding that the same was not only erroneous, but was prejudicially so, and reversing the case. The particular ground upon which this court in the two foregoing cases based its conclusion was that, under section 1105 of the Penal Code, the only burden cast upon the defendant under the provisions of said section of the code was that of presenting evidence sufficient to create in the minds of the jurors a reasonable doubt as to his guilt, and this conclusion as to the proper interpretation to be placed upon the foregoing section of the Penal Code has been consistently adhered to by this court since its decision of the foregoing cases. The latest declaration of this court upon the subject is to be found in People v. Roe, 189 Cal. 550, 565, 209 P. 560, 567, wherein, in criticizing a somewhat similar instruction to that given in the instant case, it was stated: "Under the law it was necessary only that defendant produce evidence the weight of which was sufficient to create in the minds of the jurors a reasonable doubt as to the existence of the alleged circumstances which justified the homicide, and if, based thereon, they entertained a reasonable doubt as to the existence of the same, the defendant was entitled to an acquittal. By the instruction as given, defendant was required to produce in her defense evidence of greater weight than that which the law demands, the effect of which is identically the same as though she had been wrongly deprived of evidence touching the subject altogether."

It is the contention of the respondent that conceding, as it must, the error in the foregoing instruction, it was rendered harmless by the fact that the jury having returned a verdict of manslaughter, the instruction was rendered inapplicable to the case for the reason that section 1105 of the Penal Code has reference by its express terms only to trials for murder. It is argued by the respondent that, since the jury apparently considered the evidence of the defense sufficient to so far mitigate the homicide as to only justify a verdict of manslaughter, the defendant has suffered no harm from the giving of such instruction. The difficulty with this contention consists in the fact that the instant case was a trial for murder, and that the defendant's main defense consisted in his claim, supported by his evidence, that the homicide was excusable by virtue of the fact that the deceased herself was responsible for the accident which caused her death, and that this fact, if believed by the jury, would have resulted in his acquittal rather than in a verdict of manslaughter, and that he was therefore entitled throughout the entire trial to have the jury apply to this defense the rule as to reasonable doubt. A further answer to the contention of the respondent in this regard is to be found in the fact that, in People v. Bushton and People v. Elliott, supra, the verdict of the jury was one of manslaughter, and that this court, notwithstanding, held the instruction herein criticized to have been prejudicially erroneous. It is the further contention of the respondent that the error complained of was one in procedure and that the same ought not to be held sufficiently prejudicial to justify a reversal of the case in view of the provisions of article 6, section 4½, of the Constitution. This question, however, was apparently put at rest by the decision of this court in People v. Roe, supra, wherein it was held that an instruction which cast upon the defendant the burden of establishing his defense by a preponderance of evidence was so far prejudicial as to take the case beyond the curative provisions of section 4½ of article 6 of the Constitution. We are satisfied that a similar ruling should be applied to the facts and circumstances of the instant case.

It follows that the judgment and order should be reversed, and it is so ordered.

Supreme Court of California. Oct. 22, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Nov. 21, 1929.

1. Automobiles ⇨76—Words "transportation company," in statute prohibiting operation without certificate of public convenience and necessity, means common carrier (Auto Stage and Truck Transportation Act 1917, as amended by St. 1919, p. 457).

Words "transportation company" in Auto Stage and Truck Transportation Act (St. 1917, p. 330, as amended by St. 1919, p. 457), prohibiting transportation company from operating automobiles, etc., for transportation of persons or property for compensation without having first obtained certificate of public convenience and necessity, means a public transportation company or a common carrier.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First, Second, and Third Series, Transportation Company.]

2. Judgment ⇨547—Railroad Commission's order to defendant to discontinue operation of stage line was not res judicata of question in action by one having certificate of convenience for damages for operating stage line.

Railroad Commission's order to defendant, which had been denied certificate of convenience and necessity, to discontinue operation of its stage line over route for compensation, held not res judicata of question whether defendant was common carrier, in action by one having certificate of public convenience and necessity authorizing him to operate stage line over such route against defendant for damages for operating stage line over such route.

3. Automobiles ⇨76—Corporation carrying its own employees, their families, and persons doing business with it was not "common carrier," and could transport them without certificate (Auto Stage and Truck Transportation Act 1917, as amended by St. 1919, p. 457; Civ. Code, § 2168).

Light and power corporation, carrying its own employees, their families, and those having business with it between its camps and certain town, held not to be "common carrier," under Civ. Code, § 2168, and it could operate stage line without procuring certificate of public convenience and necessity, under Auto Stage and Truck Transportation Act (St. 1917, p. 330, as amended by St. 1919, p. 457).

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First, Second, and Third Series, Common Carrier.]

4. Automobiles ⇨76—That private carrier entered into written contracts with passengers did not make it common carrier required to obtain certificate (Civ. Code, § 2168; Auto Stage and Truck Transportation Act 1917, as amended by St. 1919, p. 457).

That light and power corporation, transporting its employees, their families, and persons doing business with it between its camps and certain towns, entered into written contracts with passengers before hauling them in stages, did not make it a common carrier, under Civ. Code, § 2168, so as to require it to obtain certificate of public convenience and necessity, under Auto Stage and Truck Transportation Act (St. 1917, p. 330, as amended by St. 1919, p. 457).

5. Automobiles ⇨76—Company transporting employees, their families, and customers held not liable to one having certificate of convenience and necessity (Auto Stage and Truck Transportation Act 1917, as amended by St. 1919, p. 457).

Defendant company, transporting without certificate, its employees, their families, and persons doing business with it over route over which plaintiff operated its stage line under certificate of public convenience and necessity, under Auto Stage and Truck Transportation Act (St. 1917, p. 330, as amended by St. 1919, p. 457), held not liable to plaintiff, since defendant was not common carrier, and transportation of passengers did not legally damage plaintiff.

6. Automobiles ⇨107(1)—One operating stage line without certificate is liable only for net profit one having certificate would have made (Auto Stage and Truck Transportation Act 1917, as amended by St. 1919, p. 457).

One operating stage line without certificate of public convenience and necessity under Auto Stage and Truck Transportation Act (St. 1917, p. 330, as amended by St. 1919, p. 457), over route over which another operates stage line under such certificate, is liable only for net profit which latter would have made in carrying passengers carried by former.

Miller & Thornton, of San Francisco, for respondent.

CURTIS, J. On August 29, 1919, the Railroad Commission of the state of California issued and delivered to J. Scott and others, doing business under the fictitious name of the Kings River Transportation Company, a certificate of public convenience and necessity, authorizing them to operate an automobile stage line over the public highway between the city of Fresno and Maxsons, in the county of Fresno, state of California, for the purpose of transporting thereby persons for compensation. About the time of the granting of said certificate, the defendant, the San Joaquin Light & Power Corporation, began the construction of a hydroelectric power project in Kings River Canyon. The construction work upon said power plant continued to about the 14th day of January, 1928. In this construction work the defendant established a number of camps on and along Kings river. These camps were reached by means of the public highway from Fresno to Maxsons, a distance of approximately 40 miles, and from Maxsons over private rights of way leading to defendant's various camps. These camps were situated at different distances from Maxsons, ranging from 15 to 40 miles. After the granting to the Kings River Transportation Company of the certificate of public convenience and necessity, as stated above, the defendant filed its application before the Railroad Commission for a certificate of public convenience and necessity, authorizing it to operate an automobile stage line over the public highway between the city of Fresno and said Maxsons, for the purpose of transporting thereby, for compensation, its employees and those having business with it. This application was denied by the Railroad Commission on the 13th day of September, 1920. Thereafter the plaintiff, Ross Forsyth, purchased from J. Scott and others said automobile stage line, and, after application in due form therefor, the Railroad Commission, on the 22d day of August, 1923, granted to plaintiff, doing business under the fictitious name of the Kings River Transportation Company, a certificate of public convenience and necessity, authorizing him to operate said automobile stage line over the same route as that designated in the certificate to his predecessors, for the transportation of passengers, for compensation, and from the date of said order to the middle of February, 1928, plaintiff was the sole and exclusive owner of said certificate and the only person operating an automobile stage line over said route for the transportation of persons, for compensation, under authority of said Railroad Commission. Notwithstanding the fact that it had been denied a certificate of public convenience and necessity, the defendant, on or about the 27th day of April, 1925, began to operate upon said public highway, between the city of Fresno and Maxsons, an automobile stage line, and from said last-named date up to the 15th day of January, 1928, continued to operate said automobile stage line over said route without any certificate, or other permission or authority so to do, from the State Railroad Commission. During said period of time defendant transported, by means of its said stage line and over the route between the city of Fresno and Maxsons, its employees, their families, and those having business with defendant. The defendant transported said persons under a separate contract, in writing, with each of said persons, whereby it collected and received the sum of $4 for transporting each of said persons from the city of Fresno to the said camps of defendant. Prior to January 20, 1926, these several contracts provided that the fare from the city of Fresno to the camps of defendant would be the sum of $4. On said last-named date, after proceedings had before the Railroad Commission, that body issued its order to said defendant to discontinue operating its said stage line between the city of Fresno and Maxsons, for compensation, unless and until defendant should receive from the Railroad Commission a certificate of public convenience and necessity permitting such operation. No such certificate was ever issued to defendant, but, after the making of said last-mentioned order, the defendant continued to operate said stage line and carried passengers thereon, but under a written contract differing somewhat from the contract formerly used by it. This latter contract provided that said passengers would be carried free of charge from the city of Fresno to Maxsons, but from Maxsons to the camps of defendant the charge or fare for each person would be the sum of $4. The defendant carried, on its said stage line, between the 27th day of April, 1925, and the 20th day of January, 1926, 2,106 passengers, for which it received the sum of $4 for each passenger. Between the 20th day of January, 1926, and the 15th day of January, 1928, when it discontinued to operate its said stage line, it carried 4,914 passengers, for which it received $4 per person. The passengers transported by defendant during the time it operated its said stage line constituted over 98 per cent. of the total number of persons transported by everybody, for compensation, during said period of time. The fare which the plaintiff was authorized to charge by the Railroad Commission for transporting passengers between the city of Fresno and Maxsons was $2.50 each way. There was evidence that the plaintiff was fully equipped to transport all persons over said route who might apply for transportation during the period of time defendant operated its said stage line. The total number of passengers transported by defendant, for compensation, during the period of time aforesaid between the city of Fresno and Maxsons was 7,020. This action was instituted by the plaintiff to recover from the defendant damages alleged to have been sustained by the plaintiff by reason of the operation by defendant of its said stage line from the 27th day of April, 1925, to the 15th day of January, 1928, and also for exemplary damages. The action was tried by a jury and resulted in a verdict in favor of the plaintiff in the sum of $17,550 actual damages; the jury refusing to award any exemplary damages. From the judgment entered thereon, the defendant has appealed.

As stated by respondent, in which statement the appellant acquiesces, "the vital question involved in this action—the one around which everything else revolves—is whether or not appellant herein, in the light of the admitted facts, was or was not a common carrier of persons, or a transportation company."

[1] It might be well to first consider the meaning of the words "transportation company" before taking up the main question just stated. By the Auto Stage and Truck Transportation Act (St. 1917, p. 330, as amended in 1919 [St. 1919, p. 457]) "The term 'transportation company,' when used in this act, means every corporation or person, * * * owning, controlling, operating or managing, any automobile, jitney bus, auto truck, stage or auto stage used in the business of transportation of persons or property, or as a common carrier, for compensation, over any public highway in this state between fixed termini or over a regular route, and not operating exclusively within the limits of an incorporated city or town or of a city and county."

The purpose of this act, as amended in 1919, was to make its provisions applicable to private carriers as well as common carriers. Frost v. Railroad Com., 197 Cal. 230, 234, 240 P. 26. In so far, however, as the act purported to give to the Railroad Commission the power to govern and regulate the business of private carriers or private transportation companies, the provisions thereof have, by the Supreme Court of the United States, been held to be unconstitutional and violative of the due process clause of the Fourteenth Amendment of the Federal Constitution. Frost v. R. R. Com., 271 U. S. 583, 46 S. Ct. 605, 70 L. Ed. 1101, 47 A. L. R. 457. A transportation company, therefore, under the Auto Stage and Truck Transportation Act, as thus construed, must be held to be a public transportation company or a common carrier. The pivotal question, therefore, is whether the appellant, under the facts in this case, was or was not a common carrier.

[2] Respondent contends that this question has been foreclosed against the appellant by the various findings and orders made by the Railroad Commission, which orders we have already referred to, and particularly the order and findings of the commission under date of January 20, 1926, in which the commission ordered the appellant to discontinue the operation of said stage line over said route for compensation. The finding upon which this order was based was as follows: "From the record herein we (the Railroad Commission) conclude and find as a fact that the operation by defendant, San Joaquin Light and Power Corporation, of an auto stage for the transportation of its employees and their families between Fresno and construction camps on Kings River, in so far as such operation is conducted over the public highways, for a fixed and definite compensation, is operation of a transportation company as such term is defined by Section 1 of Chapter 213, Statutes of 1917, and effective amendments thereto, and is being conducted by said defendant without the authority of a certificate of public convenience and necessity from this Commission as required by the provisions of the above mentioned statutory enactment." It will be observed that by this finding the commission found that the auto stage line which the appellant was then operating was a transportation company as such term was defined by the Statutes of 1917, "and the effective amendments thereto." At the date of said order, January 20, 1926, the amendment of 1919, hereinbefore referred to, was in effect. By this amendment the term "transportation company," as we have seen, was broad enough to include private transportation companies as well as public transportation companies. The commission therefore made no finding that the auto stage line operated by appellant was a public transportation company. It is true it made an order based upon said finding that the appellant discontinue the operation of said stage line, and respondent argues that it was absolutely necessary for the Railroad Commission to find that the appellant was a common carrier before it could make said order. We agree with respondent in this contention, but he has failed to point out, and we have been unable to find, any finding of the Railroad Commission to the effect, that the appellant was a common carrier. This order may have been made under the mistaken belief that the commission had been given the power by said act to regulate private as well as public transportation companies operating upon the public highways. We are fortified in this assumption by the action of the commission in the Frost Case, as construed by the United States Supreme Court, 271 U. S. at page 590, 46 S. Ct. 606, of the opinion therein, wherein said court stated, "The commission, while agreeing that plaintiffs in error were, in fact, private carriers, held that they were subject to the provisions of the act and directed them to suspend their operations under their contract unless and until they should secure a certificate that public convenience and necessity required the resumption or continuance thereof." But, as we have seen, said court held that the provisions of said act which sought to confer such power upon the commission were in violation of the Federal Constitution. Under this state of facts, we think it manifest that the commission made no finding that the appellant in the operation of said stage line was operating as a common carrier. This question is not, therefore, res judicata as between the parties to this proceeding.

There may be some question under the recent rulings of this court (Stratton v. R. R. Com., 186 Cal. 119, 198 P. 1051; Motor Transit Co., v. R. R. Com., 189 Cal. 573, 209 P. 586; McCullagh v. R. R. Com., 190 Cal. 13, 210 P. 264) just how far the courts, or the commission itself, is concluded by a previous finding or order of the commission. This action, however, is not based upon any finding or order of the commission, nor was it instituted for the purpose of enforcing any order of the commission. On the other hand, it was brought to recover damages for certain acts of the appellant, some of which were alleged to have been committed long prior to the date of said finding and order of January 20, 1926. But as the commission made no finding that the appellant in the operation of said auto stage line was a common carrier, the question suggested does not arise in this proceeding.

[3] We now come to the question whether the appellant, in operating said stage line for the transportation of its employees, their families and guests, for compensation, was a common carrier of passengers. It was contended at one time during the trial that the appellant was transporting freight as well as passengers, but, by the stipulation of the parties, the freight feature was eliminated from this controversy, and the issues were narrowed to the single one of appellant's liability, if any, as a common carrier of persons.

Section 2168 of the Civil Code defines a common carrier as follows: "Every one who offers to the public to carry persons, property, or messages, excepting only telegraphic messages, is a common carrier, of whatever he thus offers to carry."

"Private carriers are such as carry for hire and do not come within the definition of common carrier. Certain prominent characteristics mark the difference between these two classes. To impress upon one the character of common carrier it must be shown that he 'undertakes generally and for all persons indifferently to carry goods and deliver them for hire; and that his public profession of his employment be such that if he refuses, without some just ground, to carry goods for anyone, in the course of his employment and for a reasonable and customary price, he will be liable to an action.' On the other hand, private carriers are not bound to carry for any person unless they enter into a special agreement so to do." 4 Cal. Juris., 815. This same principle is enunciated in the case of Associated Pipe Line Co. v. R. R. Com., 176 Cal. 518, 169 P. 62, 65, L. R. A. 1918C, 849. In that case this court said, quoting in part from the case of Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S. 113, 24 L. Ed. 77: "'When, therefore, one devotes his property to a use in which the public has an interest, he, in effect grants to the public an interest in that use, and must submit to be controlled by the public for the common good, to the extent of the interest he has thus created.' But so long as he uses his property for private use, and in the absence of devoting it to public use, the public has no interest therein which entitles it to a voice in its control."

In Thayer v. California Dev. Co., 164 Cal. 117, 128 P. 21, 25, this court quotes with approval the following language from an early California case: "This public use need not be a use general or common to all the people of the state alike. It may be a use in which a small portion of the public will be directly benefited, as a street in a town, a bridge, or a railroad, necessarily local in its benefits and advantages, but it must be of such a character as that the general public may, if they choose, avail themselves of it."

When measured by the definitions of a common carrier given in these authorities, the appellant appears to come far short of the characteristics required of one who exercises the privileges and is subject to the liabilities of a common carrier. The appellant in the operation of said stage line made no offer to the public to carry passengers or property. It did not, therefore, come under the definition of a common carrier contained in the section of the Civil Code above quoted and the other authorities cited. It confined its activities to carrying its own employees, their families, and those having business with it. The public was not invited, nor did it have any right to the use of the facilities provided by the appellant for transporting its own employees over said route. In its application before the Railroad Commission for a certificate of public convenience and necessity, it asked for no right or privilege to transport the public over said route, but confined its application for a certificate permitting it to transport its own employees and their families. It was stipulated in open court by counsel for the respondent that no one except the employees of the appellant, their families, and those having business with the company, were carried by appellant on the said stage line. This case in its essential features is much like the case of State of Utah v. Nelson et al., 65 Utah, 457, 238 P. 237, 239, 42 A. L. R. 849. Nelson was paid $20 per day by the Utah Out-Door Association to operate an automobile omnibus from Salt Lake City to the association's summer camp for the purpose of transporting persons from said city to said camp. A charge for the privileges of the camp was made, which charge included transportation to and from the camp. The association had been denied a certificate to operate the bus line by the Railroad Commission of the state of Utah, and a proceeding had been instituted by the state to enjoin Nelson from operating his said bus line. The Supreme Court of the state of Utah, in denying an injunction in that action, referring to the authorities cited in the opinion, said: "They all recognize that a common or public carrier is one who, by virtue of his business or calling or holding out, undertakes for compensation to transport persons or property, or both, from one place to another for all such as may choose to employ him. Running through the cases is a recognition of the dominant element of public service, serving and carrying all persons indifferently who apply for passage or for shipment of goods or freight. To constitute a common carrier such element is also requisite under the Utilities Act. It defines a 'common carrier,' as the term is used therein, to include among others every automobile corporation engaged in the transportation of persons or property for public service over regular routes between points within the state and an automobile corporation to include every corporation or person engaged in or transacting business of transporting passengers or freight, merchandise, or other property, for compensation by means of automobiles or automobile stages on public streets, roads, or highways along established routes within the state. Public service, as distinguished from mere private service, is thus a necessary factor to constitute a common carrier. Such element, in portions of the act, is not as clearly expressed as might be. Nevertheless, it necessarily is implied. It is only by the presence of such factor or element that the commission has power or authority to regulate or control such business."

Respondent has cited a number of authorities which he contends support his contention that the appellant in the operating of said stage line was engaged in the business of a common carrier. The principal authorities so cited by the respondent are as follows: Barbour v. Walker, 126 Okl. 227, 259 P. 552, 556, 56 A. L. R. 1049; Goldsworthy v. Public Service Commission, 141 Md. 674, 119 A. 693, 694; Restivo v. Public Service Commission, 149 Md. 30, 129 A. 884; Public Service Commission v. Western Maryland Dairy, 150 Md. 641, 135 A. 136; Doskovitch v. Board of Public Utility Com., 103 N. J. Law, 570, 138 A. 110; Davis v. People, 79 Colo. 642, 247 P. 801, 802. Practically all of these cases we think can be distinguished from the action now before us. The case of Barbour v. Walker was decided by the Supreme Court of Oklahoma after the case of Frost v. R. R. Com., supra. That case was decided by the court expressly upon the authority of Ex parte Tindall, 102 Okl. 192, 229 P. 125, and said court differentiates said last-named case from the Frost Case in the following language: "Thus the distinction between the California case and Ex parte Tindall, the case here controlling, is clear, in that the California law was held to be a regulation of a business of a private carrier, whereas the law in this state is a regulation of the use of the highways by motor carriers." That the Supreme Court of Oklahoma correctly construed "the California law" (the Auto Stage and Truck Transportation Act) is evidenced by the following excerpt from the decision of the Frost Case by the Supreme Court of the United States: "It is very clear that the act (The Auto Stage and Truck Transportation Act of California), as thus applied, is in no real sense a regulation of the use of the public highways. It is a regulation of the business of those who are engaged in using them. Its primary purpose evidently is to protect the business of those who are common carriers in fact by controlling competitive conditions. Protection or conservation of the highways is not involved. This, in effect, is the view of the court below plainly expressed. 240 P. 26 (70 Cal. Dec. pp. 464-465, 466)." 197 Cal. 230, 240 P. 26. It is true the Supreme Court of Oklahoma further distinguished the case of Barbour v. Walker from the Frost Case by the fact that in the Frost Case "the transportation company was operating as a private carrier under a single contract with a single concern, while in the case at bar the defendants were operating under five separate contracts with as many different firms dealing in different classes of commodities on a large scale." Respondent relies on this and other language of a similar import found in the case of Barbour v. Walker, as supporting his contention that the appellant, as it entered into a written contract with each passenger transported by it, amounting in all to over 7,000 contracts, was acting as a common carrier.

[4] The fact that the appellant entered into written contracts with its passengers before hauling them in the stages is a matter of slight significance in this action. In our opinion, these written contracts neither helped nor prejudiced the position of the appellant. If it was holding itself out as a common carrier—that is to transport any person who might apply for transportation—then if it carried only one passenger it would be held to be engaged in the business of a common carrier, even if it had made a written contract with such passenger, regarding his transportation. On the other hand, if the appellant was transporting only a particular class, such as, for instance, its employees, and was not holding itself out to serve the public generally, then it could not be held to be a common carrier and the fact that it might or might not be operating under written contracts with its passengers would be a matter of no materiality. In the recent case of Haynes v. MacFarlane (Cal. Sup.) 279 P. 436, the subject of written contracts entered into by a carrier was before this court. In that case the defendant had been ordered to discontinue his business of common carrier of freight by autotruck between Fresno and Hanford. Instead of complying with this order, he continued to operate his truck line and to carry on his business by means of a separate written contract entered into by him with each of his former customers. The trial court found that the status of the defendant had not been changed by the so-called "private contract" method of his operations, and we held that "the record supports the finding and the conclusion based thereon." It was evident in that case that the defendant was holding himself out to the public as a common carrier of freight. He had already entered into separate contracts with seven of his old customers and was about to make twenty additional contracts for the carriage of freight over his truck line. His position would have been the same had he attempted to carry on his business without these "private contracts" between him and his customers. It was the manner in which he carried on his business that determined his status as a common carrier, and not the fact that he was transacting business with his customers under a written contract. So in the present action we see nothing determinative of any question involved herein in the fact that the appellant entered into written contracts with its passengers. These contracts contained many provisions which we may consider the appellant deemed necessary to protect it in its transportation of its various employees, such as the agreement of the employee to pay for his transportation out of the wages earned by him, and, in the event of his discharge before such payment was made, an admission on the part of the employee that he was liable for the amount of said transportation. It also contained a further provision that, in case the employee should work 60 days, then a certain part of the cost of said transportation would be repaid him. The plan of having each passenger sign such a contract may have been adopted by appellant as a subterfuge to defeat certain provisions of the Auto Transportation Act. If so, it was a failure in that respect. But if adopted with the object of definitely setting forth the respective rights of the parties thereto, then it had some useful and meritorious purpose.

Goldsworthy v. Public Service Commission, supra, was an action instituted by the Public Service Commission of the state of Maryland against Goldsworthy and Buckell to enjoin them from operating a motor vehicle for the public transportation of passengers for hire. The defendants contended that they were not operating as common carrier, but under a contract between themselves, the purport of which clearly showed that they were simply operating a private carrier or transportation company. The court said, referring to the contract, "Its terms are peculiar, to say the least," and further added, "As Buckell was to pay $2 for each trip, whether there were 14 or less, it is not reasonable to suppose that he would not be expected by Goldsworthy to solicit business and take all he could get, up to the capacity of the truck, and there is nothing whatever in the contract to prevent that." The Supreme Court of Maryland held that a complaint showing these facts stated a good cause of action against the defendants, and sustained the order of the trial court overruling defendants' demurrer thereto. It is perfectly clear in that case that the defendants were soliciting business from the public and held themselves out at least to the carrying capacity of their truck as willing to carry all persons who might apply for passage. They were therefore common carriers under the definition of the authorities hereinbefore cited.

Restivo v. Public Service Commission, supra, was also decided by the Supreme Court of Maryland. The action was brought by Restivo against the members of the Public Service Commission of that state to restrain the Public Service Commission from preventing the plaintiff from operating certain busses and touring cars belonging to the plaintiff. The facts in the case show that the plaintiff was the owner of an autobus line and operating it between two certain cities of the state of Maryland under a legal permit from said commission. While such owner he sold the good will of said business for $6,000, and his permit was transferred to the purchaser. Shortly after the sale of the good will, the plaintiff began to run his busses and cars on Sunday over a portion of the same route without obtaining any permit to do so. He was indicted and convicted of operating said busses and cars without a permit from the commission. He continued after his conviction to operate his busses and cars as he had done before conviction. He was notified by the commission that he would be further prosecuted if he did not cease his operation. He then brought action against the commission as stated above. The Supreme Court held he was operating a common carrier and sustained a judgment in favor of the commission. There was no pretense in that case but that the plaintiff held himself out to carry any and all persons who would apply for passage. He therefore brought himself clearly within the terms of the law defining a common carrier.

The case of Public Service Commission v. Western Maryland Dairy, supra, was decided upon the authority of the two cases of Golds-worthy v. Public Service Commission, supra, and Restivo v. Public Service Commission, supra. The case of Public Service Commission v. Western Maryland Dairy is more favorable to the contention of plaintiff than any of the cases cited by him. The Western Maryland Dairy conducted its place of business in the city of Baltimore. It purchased at wholesale its milk supply from the farmers residing in the state of Maryland and nearby states, and retailed the same to the inhabitants of the city of Baltimore. It owned its own trucks, and the greater part of its milk supply was transported on said trucks from the different dairies or farms on which it was produced to its own place of business in the city of Baltimore. The Public Service Commission of the state threatened to prosecute the dairy company for its failure to obtain a permit from the Public Service Commission for the operation of its motortrucks in the transportation of milk. This the company refused to do on the ground that it was merely transporting its own milk. Thereupon the dairy company filed a bill in equity against the commission to enjoin such prosecution. The trial court rendered judgment enjoining the commission, but on appeal this judgment was reversed. It appears that the main, if not the only, grounds advanced by the dairy company for its refusal to obtain a permit was that it was transporting its own milk in its own trucks to its own dairy in Baltimore and was not subject to the provisions of the act. The Supreme Court held that the contention of the dairy company that it was transporting its own milk was not supported by the evidence and accordingly reversed the judgment. This case may lend some slight support to respondent's contention that the appellant is a common carrier and therefore subject to the provisions of the Auto Transportation Act of this state. But, if it does, it is the exception to the rule, and is contrary to the general rule enunciated by both the courts of this state and those of other jurisdictions. The parties to that action, if the opinion correctly states their position, appear to have been principally concerned with the issue as to the ownership of the milk which the dairy company was transporting, and, the court having decided that the producers of the milk and not the dairy company owned the milk, both court and counsel appear to have considered that the decision of that issue was determinative of the action itself. There was no showing whatever that the dairy company had ever carried or solicited transportation of any milk except that which it had purchased from the producers, nor was there any proof that it had held itself out to the general public as a carrier of milk or any other commodity. It is difficult, therefore, to understand, in view of the great unanimity of authority upon this subject, how the court could have held the dairy company under such circumstances was a common carrier.

The case of Doskovitch v. Board of Public Utility Commissioners, supra, involved the construction of a section of Kates Act, passed by the Legislature of the state of New Jersey (P. L. 1916, p. 283, as amended by P. L. 1926, p. 219) governing the use and operation of automobile busses for hire in that state. Doskovitch contended that he was transporting only the employees of the Michelin Tire Company and therefore was not a common carrier. The Supreme Court of that state held to the contrary. That case differs from the present one in that there was no proof or even claim that Doskovitch had any connection with or was acting on behalf of the Michelin Tire Company. Had the facts shown that the tire company was transporting its own employees through the agency of Doskovitch, a different case would have been presented to the court, and one in which a different determination would probably have resulted.

In the case of Davis v. People, supra, the facts show that Davis was engaged in the transportation of freight of all kinds between Grand Junction and Paonia in the state of Colorado. His purported employer was an association of merchants, which he himself had formed, evidently for the purpose of evading the statute of the state of Colorado, governing the operation of common carriers. The court held that his scheme or plan was "a mere device to hoodwink the law."

The case of Vallejo Ferry Co. v. Solano Aquatic Club, 165 Cal. 255, 131 P. 864, 867, Ann. Cas. 1914C, 1197, has been cited by each of the parties hereto, and some reliance appears to be placed upon the decision in this case by each of said parties. The plaintiff was the owner of a franchise to operate a ferry between the city of Vallejo and Mare Island. Mare Island is owned by the government of the United States, and there were located thereon extensive ship-building plants in which were employed a large number of men, practically all of whom, resided in the city of Vallejo. These government employees, or at least a considerable part of them, organized a club called the Solano Aquatic Club, which club after its organization and incorporation, began the operation of a ferry between the city of Vallejo and Mare Island for the transportation of its members only. Regarding the defendant corporation, the court said: "Moreover, while it is said that the membership consists exclusively of government employes, and while for the purpose of this consideration this may be conceded to be a fact, it is nevertheless true that the by-laws do not limit the membership to such persons, but expressly throw the membership open to the general public, making no other requirement of an applicant than 'good character and industrious habits.' Furthermore, the by-laws declare that the membership shall not be limited, but 'shall depend upon the facilities available, the same to be increased in the discretion of the board of directors.' This, so far as concerns the ferry business of appellant (defendant) can mean nothing more than that the corporation will take into its so-called membership as many individuals as it can transport, and will increase its membership with its transportation facilities. Finally, it should be stated that defendant is not operating under any ferry license from the state or its mandatories, or from the United States or any of its agencies. It runs its launches at its pleasure, owing responsibility to no one and denying responsibility to any one." The result of that litigation was that the order of the trial court granting a temporary injunction pendente lite against the defendant was affirmed by the court. We find nothing in that case nor in the opinion of the court rendered therein which in the least lends any support to the respondent herein in its conclusion and claim that the appellant in operating its stage line for the transportation of its employees and their families was engaged in the business of a common carrier. This concludes the review of respondent's authorities. We find nothing in them which would cause us to change or modify our conclusion already stated herein that the appellant in the operation of its said auto stage line was not acting as a common carrier.

[5] Under the Frost Case, as decided by the Supreme Court of the United States, the Railroad Commission of this state, therefore, had no jurisdiction over appellant in any manner whatever. It was free under these circumstances to operate its auto stage line in the manner shown by the evidence herein without securing any certificate of public convenience and necessity from said commission. The operation of said stage line, and the carrying and transportation of passengers therein, did not, therefore, legally damage the respondent. The implied finding of the jury adverse to this conclusion finds no support in the evidence.

[6] There is one other contention of the appellant which should receive consideration in this opinion. The court instructed the jury that the measure of the plaintiff's damage was the sum of $2.50 for each passenger carried by the defendant. This the appellant claims was error, and we think its contention must be sustained. Plaintiff, if damaged at all, would only have been damaged to the extent of the net profit, which he would have made in transporting the passengers which he lost by reason of their riding in defendant's stage. This net profit would have been the difference between $2.50 per passenger, the fare which plaintiff was entitled to charge, and the cost to the plaintiff of transporting said passenger. This cost would be the expense of maintaining and operating said stage line. It is true that the evidence shows that the plaintiff maintained and operated his stage line, during all the time the defendant was transporting its said employees, and that during this time it carried only 2 per cent. while the defendant carried 98 per cent. of all the passengers transported over said route. Had plaintiff transported all of said passengers, including the 98 per cent. carried by defendant, it is manifest that the cost of said transportation would have exceeded the cost incurred by plaintiff in transporting only the 2 per cent. which he did carry in his own auto stage; at least the court could not say as a matter of law that the cost in the two instances could have been the same.

The judgment is reversed.

WRAY et al. v. CHATTERSON et al.
(Civ. 1.)

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California. Oct. 17, 1929.

Joint adventures. ¶4(1)—Contract between contiguous landowners to acquire land for street extension purposes held to show intention to jointly and severally assume purchase price.

Contract between parties mutually engaged in subdividing and developing contiguous tracts of land which they owned in severalty, to acquire strip of land for street extension purposes wherein they jointly and severally agreed to pay grantor $2,500, and to proportionately share all expenses of paving, installing of curb and gutter, sewer, gas, and water lines, held to show intention to jointly and severally assume liability for purchase price of strip of land, so that corporation by paying for the land exceeding cost of improvements more than met its share of contribution to the total obligation.

Appeal from Superior Court, Orange County; H. G. Ames, Judge.

Action by Newton Wray and others against L. H. Chatterson and another. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant the Southern California Investment Company appeals. Reversed.

J. M. Chatterson, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Head, Rutan & Scovel, of Santa Ana, for respondents.

SLOANE, P. J. This appeal, taken to the Second District Court of Appeal from the judgment of the superior court of Orange county, has been transferred to this court for decision, and is submitted, by stipulation of the parties, on the briefs on file.

The appeal is from a judgment for plaintiffs for the recovery from the defendant Southern California Investment Company the sum of $930.63 by way of contribution for appellant's share of a liability claimed under joint and several obligation entered into by plaintiffs and defendant. Shortly prior to July 28, 1924, the plaintiffs and defendant were mutually engaged in subdividing and developing certain contiguous tracts of land in the city of Santa Ana, which they owned in severalty, and, in order to secure certain street extensions deemed desirable for the subdivision, said plaintiffs and defendant, of date July 28, 1924, negotiated and executed with said M. Nisson and Charlotte L. Nisson, his wife, as parties of the first part, and Newton Wray and Isabel Wray, his wife, Walter Fine and Olive Fine, his wife, J. L. Stephenson and Ida E. Stephenson, his wife, and the Southern California Investment Company, a corporation, of which L. H. Chatter-son is president, as party of the second part, a contract in writing, whereby the parties of the first part agreed to grant and convey the parcel of land heretofore referred to, for street extension purposes, for a consideration of $2,500, whereby, in consideration of the granting of the parcel of land referred to by said parties of the first part, the said parties of the second part jointly and severally agreed to pay to the parties of the first part, on or before one year from the date of said agreement, the sum of $2,500, together with interest thereon, at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum, payable semiannually, as set forth in a certain promissory note executed as of even date therewith, and wherein it was further agreed by the parties of the second part, jointly and severally, to cause to be paid all of the expenses of the paving and installing of curb and gutter upon the land so to be conveyed and used for said street extension, and to cause to be installed, prior to the paving of said portion of the street, and in the said portion thereof to be so paved, all sewer lines, gas lines, and water lines, with laterals, so that, after the paving thereof, the cutting of the pavement would not be necessary for said installation; and to pay, or cause to be paid, all of the expense of the installing of said lines, and that said parties of the first part should not be required to pay any of the aforesaid expense of paving, gutter, curb, and pipe lines, in and upon said portion of the street extension, and that the parties of the second part shall cause to be paid all expenses of the aforesaid paving and pipe lines.

There were other conditions attached to this contract, but it is not disputed, and the trial court finds, that all of the conditions of the contract as to the payment for said real property, and of the accruing charges for installing improvements thereon, have been fully met.

The only controversy in the case is as to the liability for and apportionment of these payments between the plaintiffs and the defendant.

It is conceded that as between the parties to this action no liability attached to Walter R. Fine or Olive N. Fine. The responsible parties, then, to this contract are the plaintiffs and the defendant. On the face of the contract, and by its terms, being a joint and several obligation, each of the obligors become liable to contribute his or her proportionate share of the stipulated expenditures, which would be four-fifths for the plaintiffs and one-fifth for the defendant. Nothing appears in the evidence or the findings to indicate any limitation on the contractual liability of the wives of plaintiffs Wray and Stephenson. So far as the record discloses, they were equally bound with their husbands and the defendant corporation under this contract. The proportionate liability of joint and several obligors on a written contract is fixed by section 1432 of the Civil Code.

Plaintiffs rely, however, upon, and claim to base their action upon, a verbal agreement alleged to have been made between the plaintiffs and the defendant shortly prior to the execution of the written contract, and in the course of the negotiations for the Nisson land, whereby Wray and Stephenson were to assume one-half of the expense to be incurred in this deal, and the defendant company was to pay the other half, and that the contract was executed under this agreement.

The trial court, over the objection of defendant, admitted evidence as to this oral agreement, and found that it was binding on the defendant. This is assigned as error, on the ground that all prior oral negotiations are to be deemed merged in the written instrument, and that the implied obligations of the parties under the statute can no more be varied by previous oral agreements than the express terms of the writing.

There is, however, another phase of this case, which, in our view of the law and the evidence, calls for a reversal of the judgment, and renders a discussion of the foregoing point unnecessary. The expenditures, jointly and severally assumed under the written contract by the plaintiffs and defendant, included not only the $1,792.60 chargeable to the parties for installing paving, curbs, gutters, sewer, gas, and water lines, etc., but also the purchase price of $2,500 for the strip of land acquired. This latter fund has been entirely ignored in the findings of the trial court, although the attorney for the defendant asked findings thereon, by proposed amendments of the findings submitted to and adopted by the court, which amendments were denied, and judgment was given in favor of plaintiffs for $896.30, being one-half of the total expenditure for improvements of $1,792.60, without reference to the $2,500 agreed consideration for the parcel of land.

The obligations of the parties to contribute to this payment of $2,500 rests upon precisely the same footing under the written contract as does that of the $1,792.60. Evidence that this $2,500 was paid by the defendant company is clear and explicit and undisputed. Even if it can be held that the oral agreement that each party was to pay one-half of these obligations, which amounted to the total of $4,292.60, is established, it appears that the defendant has contributed more than one-half of that amount, and is thereby absolved from further liability to the plaintiffs.

We think it is clear that the liability for contribution relied on in this action arises on the written agreement of July 28, 1924. This is the only contract by which the parties bound themselves to pay the $2,500 consideration for the land acquired, and the additional $1,792.60 for the improvements, the cost of which they assumed. This written obligation includes both of these items; and even under the oral agreement, as testified to by the plaintiffs, that the plaintiffs were to assume one-half of the liability and the defendant one-half, both the $2,500 and the cost of the improvements were contemplated in such oral agreement. The plaintiff Wray testified that the oral agreement took place shortly before the execution of the written contract, and that the statement of the liability each party was to assume "relates solely to the price and terms and conditions of the contract we drew up afterwards with Mr. Nisson." Plaintiff Stephenson testified that the oral agreement was preliminary to the written contract, and it was to the effect that the oral agreement "related to the matter of deciding how we should prorate the expense of doing this, and that the expense was to be prorated among three of us, half by Mr. Chatterson as I remember, and the other half by Mr. Wray and myself." These oral negotiations seem to relate clearly to the combined purchase price of the Nisson land and the installation cost of the improvements, and, when the defendant corporation paid the $2,500 for the land, it more than met its share of the contribution to the total obligation. Judgment reversed.

PEOPLE v. WYATT. (Cr. 1797.)★

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Oct. 22, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Nov. 6, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Nov. 21, 1929.

1. False pretenses $\Rightarrow$ 51—Defendant was not as matter of law entitled to acquittal of grand theft, where people's evidence showed defendant obtained trust deeds under pretense of procuring loan.

In prosecution for grand theft of notes and trust deeds, in which evidence was conflicting, and people's testimony, adopted by trial court in findings, showed that defendant procured deeds under subterfuge that he was securing loan, and required them as collateral security, whereas in fact he intended to and did sell them, defendant was not as matter of law entitled to acquittal.

2. Witnesses $\Rightarrow$ 219(3)—Conversations between defendant and counsel during negotiations which led to criminal charges held admissible on issue of intent.

In prosecution for grand theft, conversations between defendant and his counsel during negotiations which led to filing of criminal charges, while not binding upon court or jury, could be received for their consideration as rebutting evidence of defendant's criminal intent in connection with the other evidence before the jury.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles W. Fricke, Judge.

Owen E. Wyatt was convicted of grand theft, and he appeals. Reversed.

Henry G. Bodkin, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and James S. Howie, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

CRAIG, J. The determinative question upon this appeal has recently been decided, and we need not here for the purposes of a ruling thereon discuss the facts involved. Appellant was charged by information with grand theft, the pleading consisting of eight counts or separate alleged offenses. His counsel at the opening of the trial announced that "the defendant consents and requests that the case be tried by the court sitting without a jury," to which the district attorney also consented. The defendant did not personally express any consent to a trial by the court or waiver of his right to a jury. The Attorney General confesses error on behalf of the people, and, upon the authority of People v. Garcia (Cal. App.) 277 P. 747, and People v. Spinato (Cal. App.) 280 P. 691, the judgments and order appealed from must be reversed.

[1] It is further contended by the appellant that he was convicted of grand theft upon the theory that he stole the property in controversy, whereas the evidence tended to show that it was obtained by trick and device, and that the judgments should be reversed upon that ground. It is argued that the complainants signed written instruments of conveyance under which they parted with their property, and for which they received certain money as consideration; that, if made under misrepresentation and through fraud practiced by the defendant, the contract was voidable, and that a tender and rescission would be necessary to repossession, or they might affirm the contract and sue for damages, in which event no crime would have been committed, for the reason that title had passed. However, the theory of the prosecution, which there is evidence tending to support, was, as stated by the trial judge, that the signatures and certain notes secured by trust deeds were obtained by false pretenses as to the purposes of the transactions. According to testimony of the people's witnesses and the findings of the court, Wyatt obtained them under the subterfuge that he was securing a loan and required them as collateral security, whereas in fact he intended to and did obtain the notes for the purpose of selling them, and depriving the complainants thereof. Since there was a substantial conflict in this respect, we cannot say as a matter of law that the trial court erred. It is not a question which can be determined upon appeal. If the complaining witnesses were induced to part with their property with the understanding and intention that title thereto should remain contingent upon the repayment of a loan, with the right to repossession, the defendant's undisclosed intention to dispose of the property became felonious when consummated, and his asserted theory of defense would not be conclusive.

[2] Error is assigned to certain rulings of the trial court excluding conversations between the defendant and his counsel during the negotiations which led to the filing of criminal charges, offered for the purpose of rebutting evidence asserted to have shown criminal intent. We think the rule stated in Wood v. Etiwanda Water Co., 147 Cal. 228, 81 P. 512, 514, is here applicable. In that case the appellant complained of a ruling admitting such evidence, and the Supreme Court said: "The communication or advice of an attorney to his client may, however, be given in evidence by the consent of the client." Code Civ. Proc. § 1881, subd. 2. * * * 'Whenever evidence of the motive or intent with which an act was done is relevant, direct testimony is admissible, although, of course, not conclusive evidence of such motive or intent.' Am. & Eng. Encyc. of Law (2d Ed.) vol. 11, p. 507." Under the facts presented by the record in the instant case, while such evidence would not be binding upon the court or jury, it may be received for their consideration in conjunction with all of the other evidence before them.

The judgments and order denying a new trial are reversed.

FINCH, P. J. This is an action for specific performance of a contract for the sale of land. Judgment was entered in favor of the plaintiff and the defendant has appealed.

[1] A careful examination of the record shows that there is no allegation, proof, or finding on the question of the adequacy of the consideration which the plaintiff agreed to pay for the property. The judgment therefore must be reversed. Civ. Code, § 3391; Salisbury v. Yawger, 184 Cal. 783, 795, 195 P. 682; Laguna Land & Water Co. v. Greenwood (Cal. App.) 268 P. 699; Boulenger v. "The accepted rule in this state is that the question of the inadequacy of the consideration relates to the time of the formation of the contract—that is, at the time the contract was made." O'Connell v. Lampe (Cal. Sup.) 274 P. 336, 337.

[2] The court erroneously admitted in evidence a written modification of the contract sought to be enforced, but which was not alleged. The decree was based on the contract as so modified.

The judgment is reversed, and the trial court is directed to grant leave to the plaintiff to amend her complaint.

1. Landlord and tenant ⇨109(4)—There must be acquiescence in abandonment on part of both parties before surrender of leasehold can be accomplished.

Where evidence showed that lessee merely surrendered possession of leased premises, there was no surrender of leasehold, since it is necessary that there be an acquiescence in an abandonment on part of both parties before surrender can be accomplished.

2. Landlord and tenant ⇨202(1)—Where lessee repudiates lease or abandons premises, lessor cannot recover installments to accrue in future.

Repudiation of lease or abandonment of premises by lessee does not operate at once to mature all rent reserved so as to enable lessor to recover not only installments already accrued but also those to accrue in future.

3. Landlord and tenant ⇨49(2)—Where lessor elected to take possession of premises on lessee's default and re-rent them for lessee's benefit, he could not recover damages before end of term.

Where lessor, on default by assignee of lessee in payment of rent, elected to take possession of premises and re-rent them for his benefit, lessor could not recover damages piecemeal or before end of term specified by lease, since before that time it could not be known what credits for rentals must be allowed and amount of damage suffered by lessor could not be accurately computed.

LAMBERSON, Justice pro tem. On February 27, 1925, plaintiff, who is appellant herein, leased to assignors of the defendant and respondent, certain portions of a building in the city of San Jose, known as the Auzerais Building, for the term of ten years, beginning May 1, 1925, for a total rental expressed in the lease, payable in advance in specified monthly instalments. The lease provided in part as follows:

"Said lessees hereby agree that if the rental hereunder reserved be not paid within five (5) days after the same becomes due and payable hereunder, or if default be made in the performance of any of the other covenants on their part herein contained, and shall continue for five (5) days after written notice thereof given to the lessees by the lessor, such default or breach shall, at the option of the lessor, work a termination of this lease to the same extent and with all the legal incidents as if the term hereof had expired by efflux of time, and it shall then be lawful for the said lessor, his agent, or agents, to re-enter the said premises and remove all persons therefrom and to repossess himself of said premises as of his original estate.

"Said lessees further agree that should they vacate or abandon the demised premises prior to the expiration of the term hereunder provided for, or should said lease prior to the said time be determined in any manner in these presents agreed upon, except by reason of the total destruction of the said premises, or by cancellation by agreement in writing, or by the lessees for cause, and the said lessor shall enter in and upon said premises and take possession thereof, notwithstanding the same the said lessees shall not be released from liability for the full rental herein called for, but said lessor may let said premises, in whole or in part, and upon such terms as his judgment may dictate (the lessor, however, agreeing to make diligent effort to realize the best obtainable rent therefor) and the said lessees shall be liable unto the said lessor, for the balance of the full term hereof, for the difference between the said rental procured by said lessor and the rental herein called for.

"The lessor may at any time during the term of this lease terminate and end this lease upon six (6) months' written notice to the lessees, sent by registered mail and addressed to the lessees at the demised premises, etc."

Respondent, as assignee of the lessees, went into possession of the premises on May 1, 1925, and continued in possession until December 31, 1925. The respondent having defaulted in payment of the rent due December 1, 1925, appellant, on December 15th, caused to be served upon the respondent a written notice, stating in substance that respondent was thereby notified to immediately vacate the premises occupied by respondent for its failure to pay the rent as provided in the lease, and in the event of its failure to vacate the premises, it would be necessary for appellant to commence legal proceedings for possession. Demand was made in the notice for the rental then due for the month of December.

Respondent continued in default and vacated the premises on December 31, 1925. Appellant then went into possession and made diligent effort to re-rent the premises, and did re-rent them up to the 1st day of June, 1927.

At some time after December, 1925, the appellant commenced an action against the respondent in the superior court, by which it sought to recover the rent due under the lease for the month of December, 1925, and also such rent as would accrue during the remainder of the term. The trial court, on February 23, 1927, caused judgment to be entered in favor of the plaintiff for the rent due for the month of December, 1925, but as to all other matters found that the action had been prematurely commenced.

On May 12, 1927, the appellant caused written notice to be served upon the respondent, notifying the latter in substance that the lease was thereby canceled and terminated, as of the 1st day of June, 1927, in accordance with the covenants and conditions of the lease, for the reason that respondent had paid no rent since December 31, 1925.

Respondent was further informed by said notice that the lessor had used all due diligence to rent the premises for such rental as could be obtained, and that the greatest amount of rental that had been obtained from January 1, 1925, to date of notice, was the sum of $2,297.50; that the difference between the amount so obtained and the amount due the lessor up to the first day of June, 1927, was $8,002.50, for the payment of which sum demand was made in said notice. On June 11, 1927, appellant filed its complaint in the action now before the court, seeking to recover the said sum of $8,002.50, after alleging that the appellant had rented the said premises for the benefit and on account of said defendant and had collected the sum of $2,297.50 as rentals. The trial court found that the action was prematurely brought, and gave judgment that appellant take nothing as against respondent. From said judgment this appeal has been taken.

It appears from the evidence that respondent gave no notice of abandonment or repudiation of the lease, and the trial court found that the respondent vacated and quit the premises pursuant to the notice from appellant, and not otherwise.

It is apparent that the first notice was given in accordance with the provisions of the lease, and the lessor rented the premises, according to its own statement, in accordance with the provisions of the lease and for the benefit of the respondent. No notice of termination or cancellation of the lease was served upon respondent prior to May 12, 1927. The appellant has sought to justify a recovery of the sum named in the complaint for the period ending June 1, 1927, by serving such notice of cancellation and termination of the lease upon the respondent, and urges that such action on its part had the effect of absolutely canceling the lease and terminating the rights of the parties hereunder.

[1] So far as appears from the records in the case, the respondent voluntarily surrendered possession of the premises in December, 1925, and there was no evidence that it surrendered anything under the lease except the possession of the premises, or expressed in any manner an intention or desire to consider the lease at an end. Under these conditions, it cannot be said that the respondent abandoned or surrendered its leasehold. It was necessary that there be an acquiescence in an abandonment on the part of both parties before a surrender could be accomplished. "A surrender is the yielding up of an estate for life or years to the reversioner or remainderman. Under the statute of frauds, it can be done only by express consent of the parties in writing, or by operation of law, when the parties do something which implies that both have consented." Welcome v. Hess, 90 Cal. 507, 512, 27 P. 369, 370, 25 Am. St. Rep. 145.

As already appears, after December, 1925, the appellant continued to rent the premises for the benefit of the respondent. To change this condition it was necessary that both parties should manifest their intention to consider the lease at an end.

In the case of Welcome v. Hess, supra, 90 Cal. at page 513, 27 P. 371, the court said:

"The term is an estate in lands. The tenant, subject to the covenants of his lease, is the owner for the term. If he leaves the demised premises vacant, and avows his intention not to be bound by his lease, his title still continues, unless the landlord has accepted the offer of surrender. The landlord has no more right to the possession or to lease than a stranger. * * *

"The tenant cannot abandon his title; and notwithstanding he has gone out, unless the surrender is accepted, that continues. It is his right to resume possession at any time during his term."

[2] A repudiation of a lease or an abandonment of the premises by a lessee does not operate at once to mature all the rent reserved so as to enable the lessor to recover, not only instalments already accrued, but also those to accrue in the future. Bradbury v. Higginson, 162 Cal. 602, 123 P. 797; Oliver v. Loydon, 163 Cal. 124, 124 P. 731; Melone Co. v. Acquistapace, 73 Cal. App. 199, 238 P. 734; Syrett v. Strickland, 86 Cal. App. 623, 261 P. 484.

From the opinion in the case of Bradbury v. Higginson, supra, the following language, appearing at page 604 of 162 Cal., 123 P. 798, has been often quoted: "That a landlord may have an action for damages for breach of contract when a tenant abandons his lease is not questioned by any of the authorities. His damages, however, in that event, are to be ascertained in a particular way. Where a lease is repudiated and the premises abandoned, the landlord may pursue one of two courses: He may rest upon his contract and sue his tenant as each installment of rent, or the whole thereof, becomes due; or he may take possession of the premises and recover damages, which damages will be the difference between what he may be able to rent the premises for and the price agreed to be paid under the lease. Where he sues for damages, he cannot in advance recover the full price to be paid for the unexpired term, but the amount of his recovery is limited as just indicated. In re Bell, 85 Cal. 119, 24 Pac. 633; Respini v. Porta, 89 Cal. 464, 26 Pac. 967, 23 Am. St. Rep. 488; Massie v. State Nat. Bank, 11 Tex. Civ. App. 280, 32 S. W. 797;

Jones on Landlord & Tenant, § 140. It is said by Mr. Gear, in his work on Landlord & Tenant: 'If the premises are abandoned without cause, the landlord may elect to leave them vacant and recover rent, or enter and determine the tenancy; but he cannot both enter and treat the contract as subsisting. * * *

Under the Roman Civil Law and in Louisiana, the tenant who abandons during the term may be sued at once for the whole rent of the term.' From the decision in the case of Respini v. Porta, supra [89 Cal. 464, 26 Pac. 967, 23 Am. St. Rep. 488], we quote: 'But we cannot support him in his contention that because the defendant, against his (plaintiff's) wishes and without right, abandoned the property, he is entitled to recover the full amount provided for by the terms of the lease to defendant. Our code provides that "for the breach of an obligation arising from contract, the measure of damages, except where otherwise expressly provided by this Code, is the amount which will compensate the party aggrieved for all the detriment proximately caused thereby, or which in the ordinary course of things would be likely to result therefrom." Civ. Code, § 3300. * * *

In cases of this kind the landlord is not entitled to recover for rent of the premises after the abandonment of them by the defendant, but has compensation for the injury, and his measure of damage is the difference between the rent he was to receive and the rent actually received from the subsequent tenant, provided there has been good faith in the subsequent letting'"—citing cases.

[3] We are of the opinion that the principles above stated are decisive of the instant case. Having elected to take possession of the premises and re-rent them for the benefit of respondent, the appellant must pursue the remedy outlined in the opinion last quoted, and which has been affirmed frequently in more recent decisions.

The amount of damage suffered by appellant cannot be recovered piecemeal, or prior to the end of the term specified by the lease, because until that time arrives, it cannot be known what credits for rentals must be allowed respondent, as lessee, and the amount of damage suffered by the appellant cannot be accurately computed until those credits are known.

We are of the opinion that the judgment should be affirmed. It is so ordered.

A company which ought to have anticipated, in exercise of ordinary care, that its negligent act or omission was likely to result in injury to others, is liable for any injury proximately resulting therefrom, though it might not have foreseen the particular injury which happened.

5. Electricity ⇨19(6)—Negligence in hanging heavy electric transformer from cross-arm of pole held for jury.

Whether electric power company was negligent in hanging 750-pound metal transformer from cross-arm of 40-foot pole but one foot from curb of public street, which was constructed on 7 per cent. grade and generally traveled by automobiles, by means of half-inch hangers extending but 1¼ inches down over cross-arm, held for jury in action for death of automobile driver on whom it fell after car struck pole.

6. Electricity ⇨19(12)—Contributory negligence of automobile driver killed by fall of electric transformer from pole struck by car held for jury.

Contributory negligence of automobile driver, on whom electric transformer suspended from cross-arm of pole near street curbing fell after automobile struck pole, held for jury in action against electric power company for his death.

7. Negligence ⇨122(1)—Contributory negligence is affirmative defense, which defendant must establish by preponderance of evidence.

Contributory negligence is an affirmative defense, the burden of establishing which by a preponderance of the evidence is on defendant.

8. Negligence ⇨136(9)—Negligence is fact question for jury, if reasonable minds might draw different conclusions.

If reasonable minds might draw different conclusions on the question of negligence, such question is one of fact for the jury.

9. Electricity ⇨19(4)—Testimony as to whether expert witness ever heard of electric transformer falling from pole held inadmissible in action for death so caused.

In action for death of automobile driver, on whom electric transformer fell from pole near street curbing after automobile struck pole, testimony of electrical engineer in defendant power company's employ as to whether he had ever known of transformer falling from pole held properly excluded as of no probative value, particularly in absence of showing of similar conditions.

10. Evidence ⇨506—Expert testimony as to whether electric transformer was properly installed held inadmissible.

In action for death of automobile driver, on whom electric transformer fell from pole near street curbing after automobile struck pole, testimony of electrical engineer in defendant power company's employ as to whether transformer in his opinion was installed in proper and prudent manner held properly excluded as calling for opinion on matter for jury to determine from all the evidence.

11. Negligence ⇨141(8)—Instruction that "contributory negligence" is such negligence as, concurring with defendant's negligence, was "the" proximate cause of injury, held not erroneous.

Instruction that contributory negligence is such an act or omission of plaintiff, "amounting to a want of ordinary care as, concurring or co-operating with the negligent act of the defendant, was the proximate cause of the injury complained of," held not erroneous as advising jury that contributory negligence must be "the" proximate cause of injury to bar recovery.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First, Second, and Third Series, Contributory Negligence.]

12. Trial ⇨251(8)—Instruction that independent act, to constitute proximate cause of injury, must be so disconnected as to show plainly that damage was not natural or probable consequence of original negligence, was inapplicable in action against electric power company for death by fall of transformer.

Instruction that, where negligence is continuous at all times up to moment of injury, an independent act, to constitute the proximate cause thereof, must be so disconnected in time and nature as to make it plain that the damage was not a natural or probable consequence of the original wrongful act or omission, held improper as inapplicable in action against electric power company for death of automobile driver, on whom transformer fell from pole near street curbing.

13. Electricity $\S$ 19(13)—Instruction that defendant was bound to exercise ordinary care in "construction" of electric transformer to prevent its escape from pole held not erroneous.

In action against electric power company for death of automobile driver, on whom transformer fell from pole, to which it was alleged to have been insufficiently attached, after automobile struck pole, instruction that defendant was bound to exercise ordinary care in construction and maintenance of transformer to prevent its escape from pole held not erroneous as injecting into case new element of care in construction of transformer.

14. Trial $\S$ 296(4, 5)—Instruction to find for plaintiff if alleged negligence occurred and proximately caused intestate's death held not erroneous as ignoring defense of contributory negligence, in view of other instructions.

Instruction to find for plaintiff in death action, if negligence charged in complaint occurred and was proximate cause of death, held not erroneous as ignoring defense of contributory negligence, in view of other instructions that such negligence, however slight, would bar recovery, if proximately causing or contributing to fatal injuries, and that any negligence of decedent proximately contributing to his injury defeats recovery.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Leon E. Gray, Judge.

Action by Lim Ben, as administrator of the estate of Lim Sing Pong, against the Pacific Gas & Electric Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Thos. J. Straub and Chas. E. Finney, both of San Francisco (Leo H. Susman, of San Francisco, and John J. McDonald, of Oakland, of counsel), for appellant.

Snook, Snook & Chase, of Oakland, for respondent.

LUCAS, Justice pro tem. This action was brought by plaintiff and respondent, Lim Ben, as the administrator of the estate of Lim Sing Pong, deceased, to recover damages for the death of said decedent, due, it is alleged, to the negligence of the defendant corporation, appellant herein. A jury returned a $15,000 verdict for respondent, and, from the judgment thereon, appeal is taken on the following grounds: (1) That the evidence was insufficient to support the implied finding of the jury that there was actionable negligence on the part of appellant; (2) that decedent was guilty of contributory negligence; and (3) that the court committed error (a) in denying appellant's motion for a nonsuit, (b) in denying appellant's motion for a directed verdict, (c) in denying appellant's motion for a judgment notwithstanding the verdict, (d) in refusing to grant a new trial, (e) in sustaining objections to certain questions asked the witness Worthington, and (f) in the giving of certain instructions.

Decedent, who was 27 years old, married, and the father of one child, was engaged in the laundry business and had an earning capacity of about $150 per month. Just prior to the accident which caused his death he was driving a light Ford laundry delivery car easterly along the southerly side of Mather street, between Howe street on the west and Piedmont avenue on the east, in the city of Oakland. Mather street is 44 feet wide from curb to curb, and slopes downward from Howe street to Piedmont avenue on a 7 per cent. grade. The sidewalk on the south side of the street is 18 feet wide, consisting of a 6-foot cement strip in the center, with 6 feet of dirt on either side of the cement. Situate therein, about midway between Howe street and Piedmont avenue, in the dirt portion thereof between the cement strip and the plank curb, stood one of appellant's power line poles. The northerly portion thereof at the bottom was approximately 1 foot south of the said curb and about an equal distance easterly of an open, uncurbed cement driveway leading from the street to a private garage. Suspended on the pole near the top, 36 feet 4 inches above the ground, was a metal transformer 34 inches in height and 21 inches in diameter, weighing 750 pounds. It was neither bolted nor otherwise fastened to the pole, being maintained in place merely by two L-shaped steel hangers one-half inch in thickness bolted to the transformer 10 or 12 inches apart. These hangers were hooked over a 4-inch by 6-inch cross-arm and extended down "a little better than 1¼ inches" on the side of the cross-arm opposite the transformer. The bottom part of the transformer rested against another cross-arm or rest-arm lower down on the pole, so that in place it would maintain an erect position. The cross-arms ran at approximately right angles with the street curb and were attached to the westerly side of the pole.

Decedent's delivery car was proceeding along the southerly side of Mather street from the west at a rate of between 10 and 15 miles an hour. At no time did its speed increase, but before it reached the pole in question it was seen for some distance to swerve from side to side, one witness testifying that it swerved a couple of feet each way, and another that it swerved half the length of the car. Finally, curving toward the south, the front portion of the car struck the pole at an angle, shoved it over 2 inches at the surface of the ground, and splintered a 1½ inch thick hollow wooden moulding which incased a ground wire running down the pole. The Ford was badly damaged. Immediately after the impact the decedent alighted and stood near the pole in the dirt portion of the sidewalk between the paved part and the curb. The transformer was seen to sway back and forth several times in a northerly and southerly direction until it fell, crushing and instantly killing decedent.

The witness Worthington, an electrical engineer in the employ of the appellant, testified that the transformer was hung on the pole in the same manner that is usually and generally employed, not only by appellant, but by other power companies whose lines he had observed, and that he had never seen or heard of a transformer being bolted to a pole or cross-bar.

[1] It is the contention of appellant in support of its first ground of appeal that the transformer, its hangers, and the cross-arms were all in good condition and in proper location, and that, since it was shown that the method employed in hanging the transformer to the pole was the usual method followed by appellant and others in appellant's business, it was established as a matter of law that appellant was in the exercise of due care. Reliance in part is placed upon the opinion of Mr. Justice St. Sure in the case of Webber v. Bank of Tracy, 66 Cal. App. 29, 36, 37, 225 P. 41, 44, wherein the court said: "Negligence is not to be imputed from methods in general use in any business. The standard of ordinary care is established by competent testimony upon the custom and general usages of the business. * * * No man is held by law to a higher degree of care than the fair average of his profession, business, or trade, and the standard of due care is the conduct of the average prudent man. * * * However strongly they may be convinced that there is a better, no jury can be permitted to say that the usual way and ordinary way is a negligent way, for which liability shall be imposed."

It may be conceded that this is a correct statement of a general principle of law, but it is not, in the opinion of this court, controlling herein. While it is true that negligence is not to be imputed from methods in general use in any business, this rule in no wise relieves appellant from its general duty of exercising ordinary care in the construction and maintenance of its power transmission system.

[2-4] "This means such care as a reasonably careful and prudent person, having in view the dangers to be avoided and the likelihood of injury therefrom, would exercise, under the circumstances, in order to prevent injury. Where death may be caused by an agency lawfully in use, ordinary care requires that every means known, or that with reasonable inquiry would be known, must be used to prevent it." * * * "If the negligent act or omission is one which the company ought, in the exercise of ordinary care, to have anticipated was likely to result in injury to others, then it is liable for any injury proximately resulting therefrom, although it might not have foreseen the particular injury which did happen." Carroll v. Central Counties Gas Co., 74 Cal. App. 303, at page 307, 240 P. 53, 54.

[5] Appellant's contention would have more force had the pole in question been located on private property, or away from traffic, or at any point where a reasonably prudent person would have been justified in concluding that no outside agency would disturb it; but we cannot hold as a matter of law that appellant was in the exercise of ordinary care when it hung, by means of one-half inch hangers extending but an inch and a quarter down over a cross-arm, a 750-pound metal weight near the top of a 40-foot pole situate in the sidewalk area of a public street, but 1 foot from the wooden curbing, and equidistant from an uncurbed driveway leading off said street. Particularly is this true when such street, constructed on a 7 per cent. grade, is located in a thickly populated city and is generally traveled by automobiles which might, for any one of many reasons and through no fault of the drivers thereof, come in contact with such pole.

That the pole in question was not sufficiently protected from traffic is established by the evidence that at the time the radiator of decedent's car came in contact with it none of the wheels struck or was stopped by the sidewalk curbing. Considering all these facts we are of the opinion that the question of appellant's negligence was not one of law but one of fact for the jury, and, the jury having by its verdict impliedly found the evidence sufficient to establish negligence on the part of appellant, this finding will not be disturbed.

[6] As to the second point made by appellant, namely, that respondent should not recover because of contributory negligence on the part of the decedent, we are also of the opinion that this question was one of fact for the jury to decide, and that its implied finding against appellant should not be disturbed.

[7] Contributory negligence is an affirmative defense, and the burden of establishing such defense by a preponderance of the evidence was upon appellant. What actually caused decedent's Ford delivery car to come in contact with appellant's pole will probably never be known—at least it has not been proven. It was not for the jury to enter into the field of speculation or conjecture in order to arrive at a conclusion as to what probably happened, but it was for appellant to prove by a preponderance of the evidence exactly what did happen. Having failed to prove as a matter of fact what actually happened, it cannot be heard to complain of the jury's finding.

In support of the contention that the proximate cause of decedent's death was his own, negligent driving, and that the presence of the pole with the transformer hanging to it was but a remote circumstance to be considered, appellant cites the case of Allen v. Atlantic & Pacific Tel. Co., 21 Hun (N. Y.) 22, as squarely applicable to the case at bar, stating the rule of that case to be, if the proximate cause of the breaking of a telegraph pole was collision with a runaway team, and the pole was so placed as to be safe from ordinary danger of collision, a person injured by or because of the breaking of the pole, cannot recover against the telegraph company; and this irrespective of the strength or weakness of the pole.

The weakness of this authority as applied to the facts set forth hereinabove is that it presupposes that the pole was so placed as to be safe from ordinary danger of collision. Here the pole with the dangerous instrumentality hanging to it was not so placed.

[8] Most of the cases cited in support of appellant's contention that deceased was guilty of contributory negligence appear to be cases where the acts of the party killed or injured were either clearly negligent or deliberate. For example, in the case of Hontz v. San Pedro, etc., R. R. Co., 173 Cal. 750, 161 P. 971, 973, Mr. Justice Henshaw found it was "equally clear that deceased's negligence, amounting to recklessness, was a direct and contributing cause to his death"; and in the case of Smith v. Associated Oil Co., 53 Cal. App. 142, 199 P. 879, 880, Mr. Justice Waste laid down the rule that, where "as here [the case he was then considering], the facts are undisputed, and the dictates of common prudence point to only one reasonable conclusion, the question [of contributory negligence] is then one of law for the court." In the case we are now considering, however, while the dictates of common prudence might point to any one of several reasonable conclusions as to the cause of decedent's Ford coming in contact with the power pole of appellant, the evidence that for some distance before the impact his car was zigzagging or swerving from side to side, coupled with the presumption of law that "a person takes ordinary care of his own concerns" (section 1963, Code Civ. Proc., subd. 4), would seem to point to the more reasonable conclusion that the conduct of decedent was the result of some sudden happening and was neither negligent nor deliberate. In any event, we feel the case comes squarely within the rule that, "if reasonable minds might draw different conclusions upon the question of negligence, the question is one of fact for the jury." Reinders v. Olsen, 60 Cal. App. 764, 214 P. 268, 270.

If, as here held, the evidence was and is sufficient to support the implied findings of actionable negligence on the part of appellant and freedom of contributory negligence on the part of the decedent, the trial court properly denied appellant's motions for a directed verdict and for a judgment notwithstanding the verdict, and was guilty of no abuse of discretion in refusing to grant the motion for a new trial.

[9, 10] Of the remaining assignments of error, the one directed to the sustaining of objections to questions asked the witness Worthington we feel to be without merit. The questions put to Mr. Worthington were: "Have you ever in your experience in the city of Oakland, with respect to the maintenance of pole transmission, known of a transformer falling from a pole?" and "In your opinion, Mr. Worthington, was the transformer, as installed on the pole in question at the time in question installed in a proper and prudent manner?"

The answer to the first question would obviously have been of no probative value, particularly in the absence of a showing of conditions existing similar to those in the case at bar; and the answer sought to be elicited by the second question, as to the prudence of the installation, was one to be given by the jury after hearing all of the facts and circumstances, rather than one to be given by an expert witness. The jury heard from this witness all that it was entitled to hear on the subject of proper installation when, after detailing the method of installation, the witness told them this method was the one usually and generally followed, and that he had never heard of or seen a transformer bolted to a pole or cross-bar.

[11] In reference to alleged erroneous instructions, appellant complains of the following instruction given by the court: "Contributory negligence is such an act or omission on the part of a plaintiff, amounting to a want of ordinary care as, concurring or cooperating with the negligent act of the defendant, was the proximate cause of the injury complained of," on the ground that the article "the" before the words "proximate cause" caused the jury to be advised that contributory negligence to bar a recovery must be the proximate cause of the injury. We do not so construe the instruction, for the definition expressly refers to want of ordinary care on the part of the plaintiff concurring or cooperating with the negligent act of the defendant.

[12] The next instruction complained of was an instruction requested by the respondent, reading as follows: "Where negligence is continuous in its nature, existent at all times up to the moment of the injury, an independent act, to constitute the proximate cause by displacing the original proximate cause must be so disconnected in time and nature as to make it plain that the damage occasioned was in no way a natural or probable consequence of the original wrongful act or omission. The original act of negligence, the primary causation, may be in its nature so continuous that the concurrent wrongful act precipitating the disaster will in law be regarded not as an independent, but as conjoining with the original act to create the disastrous result."

This instruction more properly applies to cases where an independent act of a third party is involved and should not have been given in the instant case. In the light of all of the instructions, however, we feel the error was harmless.

[13] A further instruction assigned as error was the instruction that "the defendant was under obligation to exercise ordinary care in the construction and maintenance of its transformer to prevent its escape from the pole upon which it was suspended," it being urged that this instruction injected a new element into the case, namely, care in the construction of the transformer. We see no merit in this contention. While a more appropriate word than the word "construction" might have been used to describe the attaching of the transformer to the pole upon which it was suspended, the words "to prevent its escape from the pole upon which it was suspended" show with sufficient clarity that the obligation of the appellant to exercise ordinary care related not to the physical construction of the transformer itself but to the method by which it was attached to the pole. The same instruction contained the additional language: "Where death may be caused by an agency lawfully in use, ordinary care requires that every means known, or that with reasonable inquiry would be known, must be used to prevent it."

This is a correct statement of the law, as set forth hereinabove in the quotation from the case of Carroll v. Central Counties Gas Co., 74 Cal. App. 303, 240 P. 53, and we believe it to be applicable to the case at bar for the reasons heretofore given.

[14] The final instruction at which criticism is aimed by appellant is the instruction that, "if you find from the evidence that such negligence existed or occurred as charged by the plaintiff's complaint, and that it was the proximate cause of the death of Lim Sing Pong, the plaintiff's intestate, then the plaintiff is entitled to recover such damage as from the evidence and proofs, under all of the circumstances of the case, you may deem to be just."

This instruction is said to be erroneous because it ignores the pleaded defense of contributory negligence. Appellant cites the case of Beyerle v. Clift, 59 Cal. App. 7, 209 P. 1015, among others, in support of this contention. If this instruction were given to or accepted by the jury as a "formula" instruction, and purported to be a complete statement of the law upon which plaintiff below might recover, appellant's position would be correct.

The reasoning in the opinion of Mr. Chief Justice Waste in the case of Douglas v. Southern Pacific Co., 203 Cal. 390, 264 P. 237, 238, wherein the case of Beyerle v. Clift, supra, is commented upon and distinguished, is particularly applicable to the case at bar. In the Douglas Case the following instruction was complained of: "It is admitted by defendant in this case that A. J. Beck, E. L. Carr, C. J. Clouth, D. Frazer, and Leslie Straight were employees of defendant and were acting within the scope of their employment at the time of the accident. If you should find that the injury to one plaintiff and the death of the other were caused by the negligence of these employees, or either of them, while operating defendant's engine and car, at the time of or immediately prior to the accident, your verdict should be for plaintiffs and against the defendant, since an employer is bound by the acts of his employees while acting within the scope of their employment, and their negligence is, in law, deemed to be the employer's negligence."

Concerning it the Chief Justice said: "We are not prepared to say, * * * that said instruction was given to, or accepted by, the jury as a 'formula' instruction. It does not purport to be a complete statement of the law upon which the plaintiffs might recover, but served merely to inform the jury that responsibility attaches to a principal for the negligent acts of his servant committed within the scope of the latter's employment. The concluding language thereof supports this view, for, following the direction that verdicts be brought in for the plaintiffs, if the jury be of the opinion the accident resulted from the negligent operation of the train by defendant's employees, the instruction states: 'Since an employer is bound by the acts of his employees while acting within the scope of their employment, and their negligence is, in law, deemed to be the employer's negligence.' In our opinion, the instruction constitutes nothing more than an expression of the doctrine of respondeat superior. This being so, the instruction need not have set forth all of the elements essential to recovery by the plaintiffs. Our examination of the record discloses that these several elements were fully and properly expressed to the jury in the many other instructions given by the lower court."

Exactly the same situation obtains here. The instruction under consideration headed the instructions given by the court on the subject of damages. Elsewhere in the instructions, both before and after this instruction, the court fully advised the jury as to the rule of contributory negligence, informing them among other things that "such negligence, if any there was, however slight it may have been, on the part of Lim Sing Pong, which proximately caused or contributed to the collision and fatal injuries to him, would bar plaintiff's right to recover," and that, "if decedent was guilty of any negligence which proximately contributed to his injury, * * * the decedent's contributory negligence in such case defeats recovery."

Just as the instruction assigned as error in the Douglas Case was properly held to constitute nothing more than an expression of the doctrine of respondeat superior, so here the alleged erroneous instruction must be held to constitute nothing more than an expression on the subject of measure of damages.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

KIMES v. DAVIDSON INV. CO. et al. *
(Civ. 3897.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Oct. 21, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Nov. 20, 1929.

1. Contracts $\S$ 313(1)—City planning architect, on defendants' repudiation of his contract before completion of work, could sue for reasonable value of services.

Where defendants employed city planning architect to plat and lay out certain tract of land, and repudiated contract notifying architect of their refusal to be bound, before the work was fully completed, architect was entitled to maintain action for reasonable value of services performed.

2. Work and labor $\S$ 27(4)—Where defendants repudiated contract with city planning architect before his work was completed, correspondence tending to prove special contract was admissible in architect's action for reasonable value of services.

In action by city planning architect for reasonable value of services performed at defendants' request in platting and laying out tract of land, correspondence between architect and defendants relative to his employment and amount to be paid him for his work, though tending to prove special contract of employment at agreed price, was admissible where defendants repudiated the contract before the work was completed.

3. Work and labor $\S$ 27(4)—Correspondence indicating agreed price for work held admissible as bearing upon value of services in action on quantum meruit.

In action by city planning architect for reasonable value of services performed for defendants in platting and laying out tract of land, correspondence between plaintiff and defendant tending to show special contract of employment at agreed price was admissible as bearing upon value of services performed and to be performed.

4. Work and labor $\S$ 24(2)—Evidence of damage resulting from delay of city planning architect was properly rejected in architect's action for reasonable value of services, where question was not tendered by pleadings.

In action by city planning architect for reasonable value of services rendered at defendants' request in laying out tract, refusal to permit introduction of evidence by defendants as to effect of plaintiff's delay was proper, where no question of damage by reason of delay was tendered by pleadings.

5. Evidence $\S$ 571(7)—Where facts as to services rendered are in evidence, opinion of expert as to value of services is not binding.

Where facts concerning work performed are shown by evidence, opinion of expert as to value of such services is not binding on court or jury, but court or jury may make its own estimate of value of services rendered.

6. Work and labor $\S$ 29(3)—Evidence in action by city planning architect for reasonable value of services warranted judgment for services for \$3,000.

In action by city planning architect for reasonable value of services performed at defendants' request in platting and laying out certain tract of land, in which correspondence between plaintiff and defendants fixed value of services at $4,000, and $500 had been paid, evidence which showed that work had been almost completed justified trial court in ordering judgment for $3,000.

7. Work and labor $\S$ 29(1)—Interest held not recoverable before judgment in action for reasonable value of services.

In action on quantum meruit for work and labor performed by city planning architect in laying out tract of land at defendants' request, interest held not recoverable before entry of judgment.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; William D. Dehy, Judge.

Action by H. Z. Kimes against the Davidson Investment Company and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Modified and affirmed.

Denio, Hart, Taubman & Simpson, of Long Beach, for appellants.

Avery M. Blount, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

PLUMMER, J. The plaintiff had judgment against the defendants for the principal sum of $3,000 and interest in the sum of $630, upon an action instituted to compel payment of the reasonable value of work and labor performed by the assignor of the plaintiff at the instance and request of the defendants. The complaint is in two counts, but as a nonsuit was granted as to the first count it is only necessary to consider the allegations of the second. The allegations of the second count upon which judgment was rendered read as follows: "That within four years last past, defendants became indebted to Franz Herding upon an open book account for services rendered to defendants at defendants' special instance and request, and for which the defendants promised and agreed to pay the reasonable value thereof; that the reasonable value thereof at all times was and now is the sum of $3500.00." The answer denies the rendering of the services, the value thereof, and then pleads that the services have been fully paid for. The record shows that Franz Herding, the assignor of the plaintiff, was a professional city planning architect; that the defendants owned a certain tract of land which they desired to have platted, laid out, and a country club house erected thereon; that after a number of conversations had been had relative to the contemplated work and the employment of Franz Herding to do the work, it appears that on or about January 3, 1924, Franz Herding wrote a letter to W. G. Hamilton relative to the work to be performed by the defendants, outlining it and explaining it to some extent, and stated in his letter that the fee for such services would be the sum of $4,000. On January 18, 1924, H. C. Davidson, the president of the Davidson Investment Company, wrote to Franz Herding as follows:

"Long Beach, Cal., January 18, 1924.

"Mr. Franz Herding, 2005 Argyle, Hollywood, Calif. Dear Mr. Herding: We are handing you herewith our check for $500.00, which is the first payment on your total fee of $4,000.00, as set forth in your letter of January 3rd, for doing the planning of the Los Serranos property. We are inclined to think that it might be best to have a more formal contract drawn, and the writer will do this as soon as possible and submit it for your approval. In the meantime we hope you will proceed with the work as you now have it in mind and the writer expresses the sincere hope that the relations in connection with this work may continue as happily as they have begun.

Sincerely yours,

"Davidson Investment Company

"By H. C. Davidson, President."

[1-3] In pursuance of this letter, Franz Herding proceeded with the contemplated work and had performed, according to the testimony adduced, most of the contemplated drawings, etc., for the improvement of the property. While not set up in the pleadings, it would appear from the contentions of the appellants that the architectural work not being completed as soon as they had anticipated, the appellants gave notice to Franz Herding to discontinue the work. No payment being made other than the $500 mentioned in the letter bearing date of January 18, 1924, the claim of Franz Herding against the defendants was assigned to the plaintiff, and plaintiff instituted this action. Upon this appeal it is contended that the lower court erred in admitting in evidence the correspondence relative to the employment and work to be done by Franz Herding; that this being an action for the reasonable value of the services performed, such testimony tended to prove a special contract of employment at an agreed price, and therefore was inadmissible and constituted a variance between the allegations and the proof. The point is also made that the lower court erred in refusing the defendants to testify as to the effect upon the business of the Davidson Investment Company of the delay of Franz Herding in completing his work. Objection is also made that in an action upon quantum meruit, interest is not allowable before the entry of judgment. The transcript shows that the defendants refused to be bound by the alleged contract, if any such existed, and notified Franz Herding before the architectural work was fully completed. This presents a case where Franz Herding, by reason of the breach of the contract of the defendants, was entitled to begin an action for the reasonable value of the services performed. Under such circumstances the contention of the appellants is fully answered in the case of Brown v. Crown Gold Milling Co., 150 Cal. 376, 89 P. 86. We quote from the syllabus: "Although proof of a contingent contract would be a fatal variance, where a contract to pay a definite sum absolutely is alleged, yet where the cause of action is upon a quantum meruit, and a contingent contract has been broken, proof of such contingent contract and of its breach without cause, shows no variance justifying a nonsuit, but supports the quantum meruit." And further: "Where an employee is discharged by his employer without cause during the term of his employment, he may regard the contract as rescinded and sue upon a quantum meruit, and recover the reasonable value of his services, as if the special contract of employment had never been made." We do not need to review the authorities cited by the appellants, as this case and the authorities relied upon therein show that the trial court was not in error in denying the appellants' motion for a nonsuit as to the second cause of action. Again, the correspondence was admissible for another purpose, to wit, as bearing upon the value of the services performed and to be performed. In 27 California Jurisprudence, p. 232, § 40, we find the rule of law thus stated: "Evidence of a special contract to pay a sum certain for services is admissible under a common count for work and labor, as tending to show the value of the services, even where performance was prevented by one of the parties, or the terms were varied by agreement. * * * Where services are rendered under a written memorandum of employment, the memorandum is admissible, though not specifying the commission or compensation." The text here set forth is supported by a number of California cases cited in the footnotes.

[4] The contention that the appellants were not allowed to introduce testimony as to the effect upon the business of the Davidson Investment Company, in delays in the work by Franz Herding, is without merit. No question of any damage by reason of delay is tendered by the pleadings. No such issues were raised by the answers of any of the defendants, and therefore the ruling of the court was and is correct.

[5, 6] It is further contended that there is no testimony as to the reasonable value of the services performed. Upon this point the appellants set forth the following questions and answers:

"Q. Up to the time when you had ceased work what portion of the work to be done had been completed, and based upon your experience in this line of business, what was the reasonable value of the service to that date? A. I would say all the creative work had been done. The last to be done yet was simply to get it in shape for reproduction and could use it in a report, and this is entirely a mechanical piece of work which draftsmen to a large extent can do, and a photographer, and it involves some cash expenses, and I did not get to finish this work because I did not get the payments.

"Q. What would it cost to do that mechanical work that you spoke of, according to the agreement? A. I would say it would be an outlay of $500.00."

This statement, however, is not correct. At considerable length respondent in his reply brief sets forth the testimony of the architect, showing the work performed by him and how nearly the same was completed, and just what remained to be done at the time the contract was rescinded by the defendants. In the case of Nylund v. Madsen, 271 P. 374, this court had occasion to set forth, at considerable length, the authorities in relation to the testimony necessary to sustain a judgment based upon quantum meruit for work and labor performed. In addition to the facts, as we have just shown, the correspondence between Franz Herding and the president of the Davidson Investment Company, showing the value of the contemplated work to be $4,000, and that about $500 more of work would have to be performed, the testimony introduced goes to some length in explaining just what work had been performed by the architect. It is true he did not answer specifically that the value of the work performed by him was worth, in his opinion, a certain sum. This is identical with the circumstances presented in the case of Nylund v. Madsen, supra. This court there held that where the work was explained, the court or jury was authorized to fix the value thereof. Here, as in the Nylund Case, no question is made that the sum fixed as the value of the work was excessive. In the case at bar, just as in the Nylund Case, the facts constituting the service were placed before the court and furnished the basis for fixing the value of the work already done. While it might have been inquired into more particularly by counsel for the appellants as well as by counsel for the respondent, it nevertheless, according to the rule announced in the cases cited in the case of Nylund v. Madsen, furnished a sufficient basis for the court finding the value of the services performed.

When the facts are placed before the court, the opinion of an expert as to the value of the services is not binding upon the court. While, as we have said in the case of Nylund v. Madsen, such testimony is admissible, it yet remains for the court or jury to make its own estimate of the value of the services. The correspondence to which we have referred fixed the value of the services at $4,000; $500 was paid. The evidence shows that there is approximately $500 worth of work yet to be performed. This, with the other testimony, justified the court in ordering judgment in the sum of $3,000.

[7] That the court was in error in allowing interest before the entry of judgment in an action of quantum meruit, for work and labor performed, appears to be the settled law of this state. While other cases might be cited, one is sufficient. See American-Hawaiian, etc., Co. v. Butler, 17 Cal. App. 764, 121 P. 709. While this case is sufficient, two recent cases announcing the same rule may be cited. Grass v. Rindge Co., 84 Cal. App. 750, 258 P. 673; Clark v. Conley School District, 86 Cal. App. 523, 261 P. 721.

It follows from what has been said that the judgment of the trial court awarding the plaintiff the sum of $3,000 should be and the same is hereby affirmed, while that portion of the judgment awarding the plaintiff interest in the sum of $630 should be and the same is hereby stricken therefrom. The appellants are awarded their costs on appeal.

GREVE v. TAFT REALTY CO. et al. ★
(Civ. 3902.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Oct. 19, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Nov. 18, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Dec. 16, 1929.

1. Corporations §452—Official character of officers affixing signature of corporation to commission agreement need not be set forth in connection with their names.

Official character of officers affixing signature of corporation to agreement to pay broker commission need not be set forth in connection with their names, to make agreement valid.

2. Corporations §407(5)—General manager held authorized to bind corporation to commission agreement by fixing its signature thereto.

General manager of corporation held authorized as such to sign agreement for payment of commissions to broker, and to bind corporation by affixing its signature thereto.

3. Corporations ~~519~~(3)—Testimony of officers signing agreement that they did not read it, and did not intend to bind corporation, held not to relieve corporation.

Testimony of two of officers affixing signature to agreement to pay commissions to broker that they did not read the agreement, and did not intend to bind the corporation, held insufficient to prevent the corporation from being bound by the agreement.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; William C. Doran, Judge.

Action by Frank H. Greve against the Taft Realty Company and others. From the judgment, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Miller & Ellis, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Farrand & Slosson and L. J. Faust, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

PLUMMER, J. The plaintiff began this action to recover of and from the defendants, and especially from the Taft Realty Company, the sum of $6,266.50, based upon an instrument in writing which is in the words and figures following, to wit:

"Hollywood, Calif. 6/6/23

"It is understood and agreed that Frank H. Greve is to receive 2% of the gross sales made by us in the Greve Tract at the S. W. intersection of Pico Blvd. and Preuss Road, known as Tract No. 6800, in consideration of his getting this tract for us to handle.

"We also agree that he shall be paid 2% gross on sales from any other acceptable tract he secures for us to handle, or any other person bringing us an acceptable tract shall be paid the same amount.

"Taft Realty Co.

"By B. Y. Taft

"Mildred Taft Tinkham

"George W. Zent

"Chester A. Taft."

The defendants had judgment, and the plaintiff appeals.

The complaint alleges that the writing just referred to was made and executed on the 6th day of June, 1923, whereby it was agreed to pay the plaintiff commissions as provided in said writing as a consideration to the plaintiff for procuring and delivering to the Taft Realty Company an agreement covering a tract known as the "Greve Tract," at the southwest intersection of Pico boulevard and Preuss road, designated as "Tract No. 6800," by the terms of which it was agreed and provided that the Taft Realty Company should subdivide and sell said tract for an agreed compensation of 15 per cent. of the amount of all sales made in said tract; that under said agreement the Taft Realty Company had proceeded to sell lots in the tract referred to, to the value of $328,765, upon which it had received commissions in the sum of 15 per cent.

It further alleged that the company had not paid to the plaintiff the amount specified in the contract, and judgment was asked to the amount of 2 per cent., as specified in the writing set forth herein. The record shows that on or about the 14th day of June, 1923, an agreement relating to the tract referred to was entered into between Marie E. Greve, Rudolph E. Greve, Mamie Greve, George C. Greve, Frank H. Greve, and Margarita M. Greve, as parties of the first part, and Taft Realty Company, as party of the second part, by A. Z. Taft, Jr., first vice president, and B. Y. Taft, second vice president, whereby it was agreed that the party of the second part should proceed with the subdivision and sale of approximately 34 acres of the tract herein named, according to the terms and conditions set forth in the agreement, and to receive as compensation therefor 15 per cent. of the selling price in and to all lots sold. The record further shows that, under the terms of the agreement just referred to, the Taft Realty Company proceeded to sell all of the lots included in said tract for the sum of money herein stated.

The court found, among other things, that the Taft Realty Company did not, on the 6th day of June, 1923, or at any other time, execute the 2 per cent. agreement hereinbefore referred to. It further found that the Taft Realty Company did not receive or retain 15 per cent. of the gross sales of said property under or by virtue of any contract for the sale thereof procured by plaintiff in performance of the alleged agreement set forth in said complaint. It may be here stated in this connection that the court did not find that the plaintiff did not procure the agreement for the subdivision and sale of the lots referred to by the Taft Realty Company, but only that it was not in pursuance of the 2 per cent. commission agreement. The court further found that "B. Y. Taft did not, in the capacity of acting executive officer or second vice president of said corporation, Taft Realty Company, sign his name to or execute said contract, and said B. Y. Taft did not intend to obligate, and did not obligate said corporation to perform said alleged agreement, nor was he, by said corporation, authorized to execute the same." The same finding was made by the court as to the signing of the 2 per cent. agreement by Mildred Taft Tinkham, George W. Zent, and Chester A. Taft, save that Mildred Taft Tinkham was described as the secretary and treasurer, George W. Zent as the general manager, and Chester A. Taft as the junior vice president. In other words, that none of the parties signed the 2 per cent. agreement as officers of said corporation, and did not intend to obligate the defendant corporation to comply with the terms of the agreement. Based upon these findings, the court concluded that the plaintiff was not entitled to judgment as prayed for.

The answer of the defendants does not deny the signatures to the 2 per cent. agreement, or that the name of the Taft Realty Company was affixed to the 2 per cent. agreement, and the names of the persons signed thereto, just as appears in the copy which we have hereinbefore set forth, but does deny that, at the time of the execution of said alleged contract, the persons whose names are signed thereto were authorized by the defendant realty company to execute said agreement in its behalf. It also denies that the parties who signed the name of the Taft Realty Company and their own names to the agreement intended to bind the Taft Realty Company thereby. The answer admits the official character in the corporation of the persons whose names are affixed to the 2 per cent. agreement, and also that George W. Zent was the manager of said corporation. So far as the answers of the defendants are concerned, there is nothing set forth to indicate that the parties signing the same did not know the contents thereof. There is testimony set forth in the record to the effect that the parties did not read the paper. The pleadings are absolutely silent as to the question of knowledge. Nor is there anything in the pleadings indicating any fraud, duress, or mistake; nor is there anything in the testimony indicating fraud, duress, or mistake. The testimony, as we have said, is simply to the effect, by the witnesses Taft, that the agreement was not read, and its contents unknown.

That George W. Zent was the general manager of the Taft Realty Company during all of the time involved in the transactions considered upon this appeal is an admitted fact. It appears that he became such manager sometime during the year 1920. By resolution of the board of directors of the company, adopted on September 1, 1921, certain powers to sign papers were conferred upon the officers of the company. The resolution conferring the powers reads as follows, to wit: "It was decided that all checks, deeds or notes or obligations of any kind incurring liability against the company should be signed by the president, the first vice president or the second vice president and the first vice president or second vice president and the secretary or the assistant secretary, and that official documents should be signed by both vice presidents or by a vice president and the secretary or assistant secretary." The record also shows that an executive committee, composed of A. Z. Taft, Jr., George W. Zent, and B. Y. Taft was empowered to transact the business of the corporation. This executive committee passed upon matters concerning the corporation, though the record fails to show in what manner this committee transacted its business, or passed upon matters pertaining to the corporation, other than as appears by the signatures of members of the committee to the exhibits set out in the transcript.

No question is raised as to the authority of the two members of the executive committee who signed the agreement with the six members of the Greve family by which the Taft Realty Company took upon itself the subdivision and sale of the 34 acres referred to in this opinion, but the minutes of the corporation are absolutely silent as to any resolution or the adoption of any motion authorizing the entering into the agreement for the subdivision and sale of said lands, or anything in relation thereto. The same is true as to the 2 per cent. commission contract. The same is true as to agreements set forth in the transcript as "Exhibits 3 and 4." In other words, it appears that four instruments of writing, set forth in the transcript as "Exhibits 1, 2, 3, and 4," were signed by officers of the corporation with the name of the corporation attached, and all, with the exception of the 2 per cent. agreement, related either to the expenditures of money on tracts to be divided, or to the subdividing and sale of tracts, and acted upon by the corporation through its officers, without any resolution of the board of directors of any kind, or any mention in the minutes of such transactions being considered by the board of directors. From which only one inference can be drawn, and that is that the executive committee or persons signing the agreements transacted the business of the corporation with the knowledge and consent of the corporation, and this inference is strengthened by the fact that for the Greve tract alone, to say nothing of the others, the corporation received $328,765, and retained the agreed commission of 15 per cent. on the selling price thereof.

Just how much money was spent on the other tracts and how much money was received, the record does not disclose. It may be here stated that we find nothing in the record indicating that the corporation did not know of the agreements for the subdivision and sale, or the expenditure of money upon the tracts involved, nor is the contention made that the signature of the corporation to any of those agreements was attached by officers unauthorized so to do, or not possessing the authority to attach the name of the corporation. In other words, so far as the record discloses, the board of directors took no action whatever in relation to the contracts mentioned in this proceeding relative to the subdivision and sale of lands; the whole matter appears to have been left to the executive committee, consisting of three members, as heretofore stated. The record also discloses that there were two corporations, one called the Taft Realty Company, and the other the Taft Land & Development Company. The officers of both corporations were the same. The executive committee of one corporation was the executive committee of the other, and George W. Zent was the manager of both corporations. In this particular it may be stated that the record shows the signature of the corporation to the agreement called "Exhibit 1," being the agreement covering the subdivision and sale of the 34-acre tract known as the "Greve Tract," was affixed by A. Z. Taft, Jr., first vice president, and B. Y. Taft, second vice president; that the signature of the Taft Land & Development Company to the agreement known as "Exhibit 3," providing for the improvement of the 34-acre tract, was affixed by George W. Zent, and to the agreement known as "Exhibit 4," covering a tract of 31.52 acres owned by one Ella H. Somers, the signature of the Taft Realty Company was affixed by George W. Zent. In the agreements known as "Exhibits 3 and 4," the official character of George W. Zent is not set forth. In the 2 per cent. commission agreement, known as "Plaintiff's Exhibit 2," the signature of the Taft Realty Company appears to have been affixed by B. Y. Taft, Mildred Taft Tinkham, George W. Zent, and Chester A. Taft, without any designation as to their official characters. The record, however, shows B. Y. Taft to be second vice president, Mildred Taft Tinkham secretary and treasurer, Chester A. Taft, Jr., vice president, and George W. Zent manager. B. Y. Taft and George W. Zent were also two of the three members of the executive committee.

In consideration of the foregoing premises, is the testimony of B. Y. Taft and Chester A. Taft that the commission agreement was signed by them without having read its contents, and that they did not intend to bind the corporation to the agreement, sufficient to support the finding of the court that the corporation is not bound by the terms and conditions of the 2 per cent. commission agreement. The contention is also made that the affixing of the name of the corporation to the commission agreement by the officers without setting forth their official designation is insufficient to constitute the agreement an obligation of the corporation.

The insufficiency of the testimony to support the findings of the court, as alleged by the appellant, can be determined by a consideration of the following propositions and authorities:

[1] First. Was the commission agreement signed in such a manner as to bind the corporation; that is, was it, or is it, necessary that the official character of the officers affixing the signature of the corporation be set forth in connection with their names? In the case of Armour v. Rosenberg & Sons, 36 Cal. App. 773, 173 P. 404, 405, we find a case directly in point showing that the setting forth of the official character of the officers signing the corporation's name is unnecessary. There the instrument and signature was as follows: "We herein guarantee payment of 40 barrels of salad oil to be delivered to the American Packing Company. Very truly yours, Rosenberg & Sons Co., by J. R." The person signing the name of the corporation was shown by parol testimony to be the manager. In the case of Baden Brick Co. v. Chubbuck, 7 Cal. App. 725, 95 P. 905, the signature held to bind the company was in the following words: "The Baden Brick Company, per Thos. Butler." In the case of Rauer v. Nelson & Sons, 53 Cal. App. 695, 200 P. 809, an instrument was held to be the agreement of the corporation, although it did not appear upon its face to be signed by its president in his official capacity. These cases sufficiently establish the law that, when the name of a corporation is attached to an agreement by its proper officers, it is unnecessary to attach to the names of the persons executing the agreement for the corporation the official designation of the one who signs his name, but that such official designation may be otherwise established. The 2 per cent. agreement contains the names of two of the three members of the executive committee of the corporation, which, as we have shown, conducted the business of the corporation.

[2] Second. George W. Zent, as the general manager of the corporation, had authority as such to sign the 2 per cent. agreement and bind the corporation by affixing its signature thereto. Before citing any authorities, it may be stated that the record shows other agreements involving much money, signed simply by the general manager, notably Exhibits 3 and 4. In 6 Cal. Juris, p. 1109, § 481, the powers of a manager are thus stated: "In the case of a corporation organized for commercial purposes, its general manager, or whoever may be given immediate direction or control of its affairs, is its agent, empowered, unless expressly restricted to the performance of certain specified acts, to do, in respect to the management of the ordinary and usual affairs of the corporation, what the corporation itself could do within the scope of its authority. * * * Therefore, a general manager may perform such acts as the following: Making contracts for the corporation in the ordinary conduct of its affairs, including contracts of hire, or of employment, or of agency for the sale of land, or of lease of premises for the use of the corporation; the execution of notes, and the endorsement and transfer of commercial paper belonging to the corporation," etc. In the case of Hoffman v. Guy M. Rush Co., 27 Cal. App. 167, 149 P. 177, 178, in relation to the power of the manager, who, in that case was also president, we find the following in the opinion: "It is conceded law that in order to bind a corporation by his acts it is not necessary that any resolution should be passed appointing a general manager. It will be sufficient if it be shown that he was manager de facto."

In the case at bar it is admitted that

George W. Zent was appointed general manager. That case then goes on to hold as follows: "While the president of a corporation, if he is only that and nothing more, has no authority to bind the corporation by contract employing another to perform services for it, yet if he is also a general manager of the corporation, he is acting within his scope and authority in employing an agent for the purpose of making sales, and also to sign an agreement for the corporation providing for the payment of the services so performed." Other authorities might be cited but these are sufficient to show the authority of a general manager to bind the corporation by agreements such as we are considering in this case.

[3] The third proposition which we have to consider is whether the testimony of two of the officers, that they did not read the agreement and did not intend to bind the corporation, can be given any legal effect. The authorities all seem to be in the negative, a few of which we will cite:

In Silva v. Silva, 32 Cal. App. 115, 162 P. 142, the law in such cases is thus stated: "A separation agreement, in the absence of a claim that the signature of either party was obtained by fraud, duress, or undue influence, and no reformation being sought for mutual mistake, is binding, although one of the parties claims that she did not intend to sign a contract of separation, and did not understand its terms when she executed it, * * * and therefore there was no meeting of minds."

In Knox v. Modern Garage, etc., Shop, 68 Cal. App. 583, 229 P. 880, 881, it is said in the opinion, where the action was upon a contract: "In such an action a party cannot be heard to say that he had not read the same and did not know the contents thereof. Where a party to a written contract wishes to avoid liability thereon on the ground that he did not know its contents, the question, in the absence of misrepresentation, fraud, undue influence, and the like, turns on whether he was guilty of negligence in signing without such knowledge. When he is negligent in not informing himself of the contents, and signs or accepts the agreement with full opportunity of knowing the true facts, he cannot avoid liability on the ground that he was mistaken concerning such terms in the absence of fraud or misrepresentation."

In Floyd v. Tierra Grande Dev. Co., 51 Cal. App. 654, 197 P. 684, 687, where the same question was presented in a slightly different form, the court held, quoting from the syllabus: "The force of a resolution passed by the directors of a corporation ratifying a contract for the exchange of real properties cannot be avoided on the ground that all the parties present were ignorant of the contents of the agreement which they assembled to ratify. * * * A corporation is bound by the same rules of law that govern individuals and no concealed resolution, however artfully worded, may give a corporation an advantage that does not belong to an individual."

In Hawkins v. Hawkins, 50 Cal. 558, the law in relation to signing agreements without reading them is thus stated: "If a person enters into a contract with another, between whom and himself no relation of especial trust or confidence exists, and it is reduced to writing by such other person, and the means of a knowledge of the terms of the writing are equally open to both, and he signs it without reading, or having it read by someone for him, he cannot avoid a liability created by the writing," etc.

To the same effect is the recent case of Gridley v. Tilson, 202 Cal. 748, 262 P. 322, where it is said: "A party signing a contract to purchase corporation stock cannot excuse himself and escape its effects by testifying that he did not have his glasses with him at the time he signed the contract and gave promissory notes for the purchase price, and therefore did not read the contract or a provision thereof limiting the representations of the seller to those contained in the contract, in the absence of a showing that he was prevented by the agent from reading the limiting clause or was otherwise tricked into signing the document without reading it, and he made no request to have the contract read to him."

To the same effect is the case of Placer County Bank v. Freeman, 126 Cal. 90, 58 P. 388, where it is said, that in the absence of any allegation of fraud or undue influence, a party cannot rely upon his own negligence in failing to read the instrument signed by him.

These cases and others which might be cited clearly establish the law that the testimony of the witnesses Taft that they did not read the commission agreement is wholly insufficient to support the finding of the court that the corporation was not bound by the agreement. As we have shown, the signature of the general manager would be sufficient, without the signature of any other officers of the corporation.

In view of what we have stated, we do not need to discuss the claim of the appellant that commissions were paid for bringing in other tracts and charged as overhead expenses, nor do we need to give any consideration to the minutes of the corporation, relied upon by the respondents, relative to the proposed payment to the plaintiff of the sum of $4,500 as commissions in the event he brought in a certain other tract of land for subdivision and sale, as being the only one ever considered by the corporation. Whether these minutes had any proper place in the proceedings need not be determined. They do show, however, that the corporation was willing to pay commissions for the bringing in of tracts of land to be subdivided and sold.

The case of Howard v. Winton Co., 199 Cal. 374, 249 P. 511, 47 A. L. R. 1012, is inapplicable here. The questions there considered are readily distinguishable from anything involved in this action. There the agreement purported to give the employee or agent an interest in the net profits of the concern, as his compensation. No net profits are involved in this action. The record shows that the tract which was subdivided and sold, and for which the plaintiff claims commissions in the sum of 2 per cent., was brought in for subdivision and sale by the plaintiff, and placed in the hands and under the control of the Taft Realty Company for subdivision and sale. Whether the two agreements constituted one transaction, or are two separate and distinct instruments, appears to us to be wholly immaterial. We think that both agreements are the agreements of the Taft Realty Company, and that what we have said clearly establishes that the findings of the court are not sustained by the testimony.

The judgment is reversed.

BROWN et al. v. ST. PAUL CONSOL. OIL CO. et al. (Civ. 6878.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Oct. 17, 1929.

1. Corporations $\S$ 189(12)—Testimony of president and secretary relative to board's action in levying assessment on stock was admissible to establish regularity of resolution (Civ. Code, $\S\S$ 331, 334).

In stockholders' action seeking an adjudication that assessment levied on stock and subsequent sale of such stock for nonpayment of assessment were void, testimony of president and secretary of corporation as to what actually occurred at meeting relative to board's action in levying assessment was properly admitted, for purpose of showing regularity of resolution in accordance with requirements of Civ. Code, $\S\S$ 331, 334.

2. Corporations $\S$ 189(12)—Evidence held insufficient to sustain finding that order levying assessment on stock complied with statute (Civ. Code, $\S$ 334).

Evidence in stockholders' action for adjudication that assessment levied on stock and subsequent sale of such stock for nonpayment of assessment were void held insufficient to support finding that order levying assessment was in compliance with requirements of Civ. Code, $\S$ 334.

3. Corporations $\S$ 189(1)—Stockholders in case of invalid assessment were not required to pay or tender assessment before suing to set aside sale for nonpayment of assessment (Civ. Code, $\S$ 347).

Where assessment on stock was invalid, and not merely irregular, stockholders, seeking adjudication that assessment and subsequent sale of stock for nonpayment thereof were void, were not required to comply with Civ. Code, $\S$ 347, requiring a payment or tender of sum for which stock was sold as condition precedent to maintenance of action.

4. Corporations $\S$ 189(1)—Failure to publish notice of assessment on stock was defect, within law requiring payment or tender before suing to recover stock (Civ. Code, $\S\S$ 335, 347).

Failure to publish notice of assessment on corporate stock, in accordance with requirement of Civ. Code, $\S$ 335, was merely a defect or irregularity of sale, within provision of section 347, requiring payment or tender of assessment as condition precedent to action to recover stock.

5. Corporations $\S$ 189(1)—Secretary's failure to publish notice of delinquency 15 days prior to sale of stock was irregularity, within law requiring payment or tender of assessment (Civ. Code, $\S\S$ 339, 347).

Failure of secretary of corporation to publish notice of delinquency as to stock assessment 15 days prior to sale, as required, by Civ. Code, $\S$ 339, was merely an irregularity or defect, within section 347, requiring payment or tender of assessment as condition precedent to action for recovery of stock.

6. Corporations $\S$ 189(1)—That void assessment was to pay corporate debts, and was mostly paid, was immaterial as respected stockholders' right to recover stock sold for nonpayment of assessment (Civ. Code, $\S$ 334).

The fact that assessment on stock was levied to pay corporation's debts, and that most of stockholders had paid their assessments and moneys so realized expended, was immaterial as respected right of stockholders to adjudication that assessment and subsequent sale of stock for nonpayment of assessment were void, because of failure of order levying assessment to comply with Civ. Code, $\S$ 334.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; C. E. Beaumont, Judge.

Action by F. H. Brown and others against the St. Paul Consolidated Oil Company and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiffs appeal. Reversed.

John W. Woten, of San Francisco, and Cosgrave & Barstow, of Fresno, for appellants. Milton M. Dearing, of Fresno, for respondents.

GRAY, Justice pro tem. Plaintiffs, as stockholders of the defendant corporation, sought an adjudication that an assessment levied upon their stock and a subsequent sale of such stock for nonpayment of that assessment were void. The court found that the assessment was valid; that, while there were irregularities in the proceedings leading up to the sale, yet plaintiffs were not entitled to relief, because of noncompliance with the provisions of section 347 of the Civil Code; and that plaintiffs' laches barred their recovery. Upon this appeal from the judgment based on those findings, plaintiffs urge that certain findings are not only not supported by the evidence, but are contrary thereto, and that other findings, not only do not support the judgment, but require a different judgment favorable to their prayer.

Firstly, the court found that at a meeting of the board of directors, all being present, legally convened on July 16, 1925, "said board * * * made an order levying an assessment on the subscribed capital stock of said St. Paul Consolidated Oil Company in the sum of ten cents (10¢) a share, payable on or before the 17th day of August, 1925, to Louis Doerr, president of said corporation, at 94 South First street, San José, California, and fixed August 17, 1925, as the date on which unpaid assessments would be delinquent, and September 3, 1925, as the date for the sale of delinquent stock." "The directors of any corporation * * * may * * * levy and collect assessments upon the subscribed capital stock thereof, in the manner and form and to the extent provided herein." Civ. Code, § 331. "Every order levying an assessment must specify (1) the amount thereof; (2) when, (3) to whom, and (4) where payable; (5) fix a day * * * on which the unpaid assessments shall be delinquent, * * * and (6) a day for the sale of delinquent stock. * * *" Civ. Code, § 334. (The numerals have been inserted for clarity.)

Appellants urge that the evidence clearly shows a failure of the directors to make an order containing all of six matters to be specified, and that, therefore, the above finding is unsupported and contrary to the evidence. The pertinent part of the resolution of July 16th (being the only one on that date bearing upon the matter) reads as follows: "President Doerr then called the directors' attention to the previous directors' meetings, at which time the importance of making an assessment was gone into and at the meeting of June 29th, 1925, it was unanimously decided by a full board to make an assessment, but discovering the importance of having a stockholders' meeting and the possibility of a new board being elected, Acting President Doerr thought that it was advisable to defer said assessment until the views of the new board had been heard and upon hearing all the facts and viewing the situation as presented, concurred with the previous board action in ordering the assessment be made on the same base as has been decided, viz. 10¢ per share of all stock of record." Did the new board concur with the previous board action? Grammatically it would seem to mean that "Acting President Doerr thought that it was advisable to defer said assessment until the views of the new board * * * concurred with the previous board action. * * *" Thus construed, it is an opinion of what was to be done in the future, not an act then done by the board. Even assuming that it is intended to show action by the board, yet as an order levying an assessment, it contains only the amount of the assessment and is silent as to when, to whom, and where the assessment was payable, and the dates of delinquency and sale.

[1] Realizing the deficiencies in the resolution, respondents offered the testimony of the president and secretary as to what actually occurred at the meeting of July 16th, relative to the board's action in levying the assessment. Over appellant's objection, the court properly admitted this testimony. Lawrence v. Premier Indem. Assur. Co., 180 Cal. 688, 182 P. 431; Citizens' Securities Co. v. Hammel, 14 Cal. App. 564, 112 P. 731, 732; Bank of Napa v. Ferguson Burns Estate, 48 Cal. App. 319, 192 P. 66.

[2] All of the testimony of Secretary Barnhisel, here material, after the elimination of unnecessary matter, but without changing the sense, is as follows:

"Q. This resolution in the minutes of the directors' meeting of July 16 relative to the assessment is the only order authorizing the levying of the assessment? A. Yes.

"Q. Those minutes were prepared by you? A. Yes.

"Q. At the meeting of July 16, 1925, was the time when this assessment would become delinquent and the time of delinquency discussed? A. Yes.

"Q. Was there any discussion about who the assessment was to be paid to? A. Yes; Mr. Doerr. I showed them one of the forms I had drawn up, and I was instructed to go ahead and proceed with the assessment.

"Q. According to the time of payment and delinquency as set forth in these forms? A. Yes. They said: 'We will approve what the other board did by authorizing you to go ahead and make the assessment, and then Mr. Doerr told me to go ahead and do it.'

"Q. What was said regarding when the stock would be delinquent for this assessment and to whom the assessment would be paid and when the sale would take place? Were those matters discussed? A. Yes. I had that form made, and I says, 'We will use that form.'

"Q. The form you referred to is this form of assessment notice introduced? A. Yes.

"Q. There was a general discussion. A. Among the directors.

"Q. As I understand it, no formal resolution; is that correct? A. Only that I was directed by the president to go ahead.

"Q. There wasn't any formal resolution, and the president instructed you to go ahead. A. Certainly."

The gist of President Doerr's testimony, after the elimination of unessential words, is as follows:

"Q. What was said regarding this assessment? A. We debated the necessity for getting some money very quickly.

"Q. State what the discussion was regarding the assessment and why it was necessary. A. There was a discussion about that.

"Q. Did all the directors take part in the discussion? A. Yes.

"Q. Was there any discussion about the time when the assessment was to be levied, and when it had to be paid and to whom, and when it would be delinquent? A. Yes; all those things entered into the discussion.

"Q. State what happened about those matters. A. We asked Mr. Barnhisel if he could give us the date when this thing would become operative and when delinquent, which he did and furnished us with the dates; one of the board made a motion that we assess each member for each share of stock 10 cents and gave Mr. Barnhisel authority to publish the same in a newspaper in the county of Fresno.

"Q. Can you fix what dates Mr. Barnhisel furnished? A. It was from the latter part of August until some time the middle of September. We figured out the time.

"Q. Was there any discussion about whom the assessment should be paid to? A. It was decided it should be made payable to me.

"Q. Was there any discussion about where the assessment would be paid? A. I couldn't say as to any discussion, although it seemed to be the consensus of opinion that it should be paid to me personally in San José."

Viewed as favorably as possible in support of the finding, the secretary's testimony merely discloses that he furnished the board with a written notice of assessment, containing the matters missing from the resolution (i. e., when, to whom, and where the assessment was payable, the date of delinquency, and the date of sale), and that the board discussed these matters. It utterly fails to show any agreement or action by a majority of the board relative thereto. He does state that the board instructed him to make the assessment; but, obviously, it could not delegate to him its discretionary power to determine these matters. The president's testimony shows the same discussion as to the amount of the assessment, with possibly a decision as to where and to whom the assessment was payable. It does not disclose any action fixing the dates of payment, delinquency, and sale. The testimony of neither officer measures up to that held sufficient to establish the passage of a resolution in Bank of Napa v. Ferguson Burns Estate, supra, but is more analogous to that held insufficient in Citizens' Securities Co. v. Hammel, supra, where the following language, here pertinent, was used:

"It does appear, however, that after the seven members of the board had assembled a conversation took place between four of the members, during which 'it seemed the sense of the three or four talking about it was that the company (meaning plaintiff) should have the furniture as security for the rent.'"

* * * We are of the opinion that some action in the nature of a resolution would be necessary in order to warrant an officer of the corporation in thus pledging corporate property. The resolution need not necessarily be spread upon the minutes, if actually passed, but a conversation simply between four members—the other three present not being shown to have participated therein, nor in fact to have been aware of such conversation—is far from showing any resolution or authority upon the part of the board."

Appellant's contention that the evidence does not support the finding is well taken. We are satisfied that the evidence discloses that no order, meeting the requirements of said section 334 was made and that therefore the assessment was not valid. Ruck v. Caledonia Silver Min. Co., 6 Cal. App. 356, 92 P. 194.

Respondents pleaded, appellants admitted at the trial, and the court found that appellants had not met the requirements of section 347 of the Civil Code. This section provides that "no action must be sustained to recover stock sold for delinquent assessments, upon the ground of irregularity in the assessment, irregularity or defect of the notice of sale, or defect or irregularity in the sale, unless the party seeking to maintain such action first pays or tenders to the corporation, * * * the sum for which the same was sold; * * * and no such action must be sustained unless the same is commenced * * * within six months after such sale was made." Respondents earnestly urge that the assessment was irregular only and that therefore this last finding compels affirmance of the judgment. The effect of the omission from the order levying the assessment of the matters required by said section 334 is well stated in the following excerpt from Ruck v. Caledonia Silver Min. Co., supra, 6 Cal. App. at page 358, 92 P. 195:

"The above-quoted section states in positive terms what must be specified in the order levying the assessment. It is there stated that the order must specify where the assessment is payable. We look in vain for any such specification in the order. It states the assessment is payable to the secretary, but his residence, office, or place of business is not mentioned. He may, for aught that appears, have been absent from the state. We cannot speculate as to whether or not the plaintiff could have been injured by the omission in the order. The proceedings by which the property of a stockholder is declared forfeited without suit, or personal notice of any kind, must be strictly construed. All the conditions precedent to such forfeiture must exist. Courts have not the power to dispense with any one of such conditions. The Legislature has said that the order must specify where the assessment is payable, and it is not for us to eliminate the provision for any reasons which might appeal to us. It is said that that the stockholder could easily have ascertained the business office of the secretary, or the place where the assessment was payable. If the order had omitted the amount of the assessment, or the person to whom it was payable, or any other matter required, it might with equal force be urged that the stockholder could have ascertained by inquiry the amount of the assessment, the person to whom it was payable, and any other omitted matter.

"Such construction would leave the law as to the validity of an assessment in a sea of uncertainty. No lawyer could advise his client as to whether or not an assessment is valid, because he could not by any possible means guess what omission the court would say was harmless. To require the order levying the assessment to comply with the statute in its essentials is to leave the rule plain so that everyone may understand it. We do not mean that an assessment would be declared void if it did not literally follow the language of the Code, but it must contain the substance of every requirement therein. It is the rule, well established by the authorities, that proceedings in regard to the levy of an assessment and sale of the stock of a shareholder of a corporation for a delinquent assessment are in invitum. The right must come from the law or the charter, and can only be legally exercised in the manner provided by the law, or by the charter. The reason for a strict construction in such case is that the sale, if regular and founded upon a valid assessment, forfeits the stock, and equity has no power to relieve from such forfeiture."

The court in Cheney v. Canfield, 158 Cal. 342, 111 P. 92, 32 L. R. A. (N. S.) 16, in holding that said section 347 does not apply to sale under a void assessment used the following pertinent language:

"It is insisted by appellant that the levy of this assessment was void for several reasons, but principally on the ground that the board of directors, he asserts, had no authority to levy it because the meeting at which they did so was neither a regular meeting of the board nor a special meeting regularly called.

"It is the settled law that an assessment can be legally levied upon the capital stock of a corporation by the board of directors only at a regular meeting of the board or at a special meeting thereof regularly called. Harding v. Vandewater, 40 Cal. 78; Thompson v. Williams, 76 Cal. 155, 18 P. 153, 9 Am. St. Rep. 187.

"As all proceedings whereby an assessment is levied upon the stock of a corporation, and under which a forfeiture of the stock of the stockholders may be had are in invitum, it is elementary law that they must be strictly followed. The levy of such an assessment can only be accomplished legally by a strict compliance with the statutory provisions relative thereto, or with the provisions of the charter of the corporation upon the subject. Herbert Kraft Co. Bank v. Orland, 133 Cal. 64, 65 P. 143; Ruck v. Caledonia Silver Mining Co., 6 Cal. App. 356, 92 P. 194. * * *

"The court found that the plaintiff was guilty of laches in bringing his action, and also that his right of action was barred by section 347 of the Civil Code and section 341 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Both these Code sections referred to make the same provision, namely, that 'no action must be sustained to recover stock sold for delinquent assessment upon the ground of irregularity of the assessment, * * *' unless the tender of the amount for which the stock was sold at said time, and unless such action is commenced within six months after the sale of the stock. The sale of the stock in question here was made December 20, 1904. This action was commenced January 4, 1906.

"The sections referred to only apply where there has been some irregularity in the assessment or irregularity or defect in the notice of sale or the sale itself. The assessment in question here, as we have seen, was not merely an irregular assessment. It was absolutely void. Herbert Kraft Co. Bank v. Orland, 133 Cal. 64, 66, 65 P. 143. Hence these sections have no application."

[3] The assessment being invalid, not merely irregular, appellants were not required to comply with the provisions of said section 347. Richman v. Bank of Perris, 73 Cal. App. 321, 238 P. 754.

[4] Secondly, the court found "that * * * notice of assessment was not published in any newspaper but that notice of assessment was mailed in the form and manner required by law to each and all the stockholders * * * including plaintiffs. * * *" Section 335 of the Civil Code requires the secretary to publish a notice of assessment in the form therein specified. Appellants contend that this finding compels a judgment in their favor, because the failure to publish invalidated the sale. Respondents reply that this is a mere irregularity within the provisions of said section 347. Section 346 of the same Code in providing that this failure to publish invalidates all proceedings for the collection of the assessment, but not the assessment itself, and that, in such event, all notices shall be republished, clearly shows the legislative intent that this publication forms part of the proceedings for collection rather than for the creation of the assessment. The case of Smith v. Gate City Oil Co., 160 Cal. 446, 117 P. 525, decides that a failure to publish notice of sale would invalidate a sale on the date fixed in the resolution levying the assessment, but not the assessment, and a valid sale could be had, if a resolution fixing new dates of maturity, delinquency, and sale were passed and all proceedings subsequent to order levying the assessment were repeated. Inferentially the court must have considered the publication of the notice of assessment as part of the proceedings leading up to sale, or otherwise it would not have required a publication of a new notice. Also it is apparent that the court considered that any defect in one step in those proceedings required a repetition of the entire proceedings. In Shannon v. Tooker, 167 Cal. 484, 140 P. 10, the publication of notice of delinquency was defective, and, after publication of a proper notice, but without a republication of the notice of assessment, a sale was made. It was held a stockholder to recover stock so sold must comply with said section 347. The court, impliedly, held that the failure to republish was a mere irregularity or defect in the sale. The mere fact that the publication there discussed was in the second set of proceedings would lead to no different conclusion than if the court were concerned with the original proceedings, because under Smith v. Gate City Oil Co., supra, each proceeding must be complete in itself. It is interesting to note, in view of the fact that appellants received the mailed notice, that in Stephens v. Lemoore Canal & Irr. Co., 22 Cal. App. 579, 135 P. 707, the court found it unnecessary to pass upon the sufficiency of the publication of the notice of assessment, when the evidence disclosed that the stockholder received the notice mailed to her. We are satisfied that the failure to publish was a defect or irregularity in the sale, within the purview of said section 347.

[5] Thirdly, the court found that the secretary published on August 21 and 28, 1925, a notice of delinquency, stating that the sale would be on September 3, 1925, and that, on said last day, he sold plaintiff's stock to the defendant corporation. No criticism is made as to the form of the notice, and both parties admit that the first publication was not "at least fifteen days prior to the day of sale," as required by section 339 of the Civil Code. Appellants claim that this failure invalidated the sale and that this finding compels a reversal. Respondents claim that this failure is an irregularity or defect, specifically provided for in said section 347, and that, because of appellant's noncompliance with this section, judgment was properly rendered against them. Were the corporation, as the moving party, seeking to collect the assessment by a personal judgment against the stockholder, this failure would be fatal (San Bernardino I. Co. v. Merrill, 108 Cal. 490, 41 P. 487); but where, as here, the stockholder asks relief from the forfeiture because of this failure, he must comply with this section, as a condition precedent to recovery (Burham v. S. F. Fuse Mfg. Co., 76 Cal. 26, 17 P. 939; Shannon v. Tooker, supra; American Well, etc., Co. v. Blakemore, 184 Cal. 343, 193 P. 779, 19 A. L. R. 1087).

[6] Lastly, the court found that the assessment was levied to pay the corporation's debts; that most of the stockholders paid their assessments; that the moneys so realized have been expended; that if the assessment is declared void, and the corporation forced to pay its debts out of its assets, a substantial loss of investment would result; that as a result of the payment of the debts and a reorganization the net assets have considerably increased, and that it would be unjust and inequitable to the other stockholders, who paid, to permit appellants to recover their stock without payment of their assessment. Appellants challenge respondent's claim that this finding requires affirmance of the judgment. This finding is no more than a statement of reasons which would serve as an argument for the enactment of said section 347, and does not state any facts warranting the application of any other principle of law than is stated in said section. At least the facts found do not curtail appellant's right to recover, further than is already done by that section. Newhall v. Hunsaker, 38 Cal. App. 399, 176 P. 380. In fact, as is well stated in Glenn v. California Trona Co., 38 Cal. App. 601, 177 P. 178, the section is but declaratory of the maxim of equity—that he who seeks equity, must do equity. In Richman v. Bank of Perris, supra, it was held that the fact that certain stockholders in good faith paid a void assessment and performed a public service in rehabilitating an insolvent bank will not justify the court in relaxing the safeguards placed by corporate by-laws upon the actions of directors. What has been heretofore said as to effect of noncompliance with section 347 is here equally applicable, and needs no further amplification.

Being satisfied that, under the evidence, the assessment is void, and that section 347 of the Civil Code has no application where the assessment is void, the judgment is reversed.

We concur: KNIGHT, Acting P. J.; CASHIN, J.

101 Cal. App. 251

Ex parte McBRIDE. (Cr. 4.)

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California. Oct. 16, 1929.

1. Criminal law ☞1001—Parole confers no right other than conditional suspension of sentence or execution of judgment during good behavior, and may be terminated upon breach of conditions.

Parole of one sentenced to prison confers no right other than conditional suspension of sentence or execution of judgment during good behavior, and privilege is subject to termination immediately upon breach of its conditions.

2. Extradition ☞30—Person committing, while on parole, same offense for which he was sentenced, became fugitive from justice in state of conviction upon revocation of parole.

Since parole is subject to termination immediately upon breach of its conditions, one who had been sentenced to imprisonment in Oregon for larceny and grand larceny, committing same offense while on parole granted to him under Or. L. § 1586, was subject to rearrest and became fugitive from justice in state of conviction immediately upon revocation of parole, as provided for by Or. L. § 1589.

3. Extradition ☞31—Person committing offense while on parole from another state which revoked parole therefor became subject to extradition (Const. U. S. art. 4, § 2; Pen. Code, §§ 1203, 1548).

Where person on parole from Oregon committed within state like offense for which he was sentenced, he became subject to extradition when state of Oregon revoked parole, making him fugitive from justice, under Const. U. S. art. 4, § 2, relating to extradition, Pen. Code, § 1548, dealing therewith, and section 1203, relating to revocation of probation, and under Or. L. §§ 1586, 1589, providing for parole and revocation of parole.

Application by William McBride for a writ of habeas corpus against the Sheriff of Imperial County to prevent petitioner's extradition to the state of Oregon. Writ discharged, and petitioner remanded for extradition.

Utley & Nuffer, of El Centro, for petitioner.

Elmer W. Heald, Dist. Atty., and C. B. Smith, Deputy Dist. Atty., both of El Centro, for respondent.

SLOANE, P. J. The petitioner, William McBride, was convicted in the circuit court of the state of Oregon, for Washington county, under four indictments charging him with larceny and grand larceny, after pleading guilty to the charges, and was on the 9th day of June, 1928, sentenced to be imprisoned in the state penitentiary of the state of Oregon for indeterminate periods, not to exceed five years each, upon each count. At the time of imposing sentence, it was further ordered, in consideration of the fact that defendant had made full restitution to those injured of all moneys taken, and payment of costs incurred by the county in the prosecution of the case, that defendant be paroled, on condition that said defendant report to the court and to the said parole board of the state of Oregon promptly, giving his place of residence, post office address, and occupation, and it was further ordered that, if defendant violates any laws or the terms of his parole, said parole will be revoked, and said defendant will be required to suffer the penalties herein imposed upon him. It further appears that the petitioner was given permission by the court, during the continuance of his parole, to return to the state of California, his former home.

Petitioner returned to California in pursuance of this permit, and thereafter was arrested in the county of Imperial, Cal., for an offense similar to that for which he was under sentence in Oregon, and was in the superior court of the state of California, in and for the county of Imperial, on March 6, 1929, found guilty as charged, and sentenced to serve a term of 180 days in the Imperial county jail. Thereafter proof of the petitioner's offense in California and conviction thereon having been brought to the attention of the Oregon court in which he had been first convicted and sentenced, an order of that court was made revoking the probation. This order recites that, "it appearing to the court that the above-named defendant was paroled upon his promise to refrain from other similar acts in the future, and to conduct himself as a law-abiding citizen, and it appearing that he has since been convicted in the state of California of a crime committed in the same manner, and under the same circumstances as the crime heretofore committed in the state of Oregon, and that the defendant has violated the terms of his parole; it is therefore ordered and adjudged that the parole of the above-named defendant be and hereby is revoked, and that a warrant issue directing the sheriff of said Washington county, Oregon, to arrest the above-named William McBride, wherever he may be found." Pending and prior to the expiration of said jail sentence in Imperial county, Cal., and after revocation of petitioner's parole in Oregon, extradition proceedings were instituted from the state of Oregon, and C. L. Gillett, sheriff of the county of Imperial, was served with a warrant based thereon, bearing the seal of the state of California, and signed by the Governor of the state, directing the delivery of the petitioner into the custody of an officer of the state of Oregon authorized to receive him into his custody and return him to the state of Oregon.

This proceeding under writ of habeas corpus, was instituted to release petitioner from custody on the ground that he was, under the circumstances of the case, not a fugitive from justice in the state of California and was being illegally held.

The question presented under this state of facts is as to whether or not petitioner is a fugitive from justice from the state of Oregon and subject to extradition.

It is contended on the part of the petitioner that the Oregon court, having granted him probation, and having permitted him to come into the state of California, voluntarily waived any further jurisdiction over said person, and lost jurisdiction to revoke said parole order, and regain the custody of said petitioner, unless and until such time as petitioner might have returned to the state of Oregon voluntarily.

The provision of the Federal Constitution (art. 4, § 2) relating to extradition is as follows: "A person charged in any state with treason, felony, or other crime, who shall flee from justice, and be found in another state, shall, on demand of the executive authority of the state from which he fled, be delivered up, to be removed to the state having jurisdiction of the crime."

Section 1548 of the Penal Code of California is as follows: "A person charged in any state of the United States with treason, felony, or other crime, who flees from justice and is found in this state, must, on demand of the executive authority of the state from which he fled, be delivered up by the governor of this state, to be removed to the state having jurisdiction of the crime."

It is apparent that one, to be subject to the extradition laws, must be shown to be a fugitive from justice from the state seeking his return. It may be conceded that the petitioner here was not a fugitive from justice within the state of California, so long as he was here by virtue of the conditions of his parole. If he is subject to extradition, it is by virtue of the fact that the revocation of his parole at once deprived him of his right to liberty, and subjected him to the execution of the sentence pronounced by the Oregon court.

Section 1586 of the laws of Oregon makes the following provision for the parole of one sentenced in that state on conviction of a felony:

"Parole, in What Cases Granted—Under What Supervision."

"When any person who has not previously been convicted of a felony shall have been convicted in the circuit court of this state of any felony or misdemeanor, and sentenced not to exceed ten years' imprisonment in the penitentiary, with or without fine, and sentence shall have been pronounced, the court before which the conviction shall have been had, if satisfied that such person, if permitted to go at large, would not again violate the law, may, in its discretion, by order of record, parole such person and permit him or her to go and remain at large under the supervision of the court, or under the supervision of any prisoners' aid society now organized or hereafter to be organized under the laws of the state of Oregon, subject always, however, to the order of such court as such court may deem best until such parole shall be terminated as hereinafter provided, but such court shall have no power to parole any person after he or she has been delivered to the warden of the penitentiary, or where it shall be made to appear to said court before such parole shall have been granted that such person shall have been before convicted of a felony." L. 1905, c. 177, p. 306; L. 1909, c. 153, p. 222; L. 1911, c. 108.

And it is provided by section 1589 of the Oregon law, as follows:

"Revocation of Parole, Proceedings on."

"If any prisoner when required shall fail to give such bail, bond, or security, or shall fail to observe all and every of the conditions and requirements of said parole and order of said court, or shall be again convicted of a felony, then said parole shall be by order of said court revoked with or without notice to such prisoner, and said prisoner shall be committed to the penitentiary to serve out the original sentence imposed in the same manner as though said parole had not been granted. The clerk shall deliver to the sheriff a certified copy of the sentence, together with a certificate that such person had been paroled and his parole has been terminated, and the sheriff shall, upon the receipt of such certified copy of sentence, immediately arrest such person and transport and deliver him or her to the warden of the penitentiary, and the time such person shall have been at large upon parole shall not be counted as part of the sentence, but the time of sentence shall be counted from the day of delivery to the warden of the penitentiary." L. 1905, c. 177, p. 306, § 5.

Under the authority of the foregoing provision for revoking parole, it is expressly provided that such revocation may be made upon satisfactory evidence to the court granting the same, that the conditions of the parole have been violated, and such order may be made without notice to or the presence in court of the prisoner. The same rule is held to obtain in the state of California, under the provisions of section 1203 of the Penal Code relating to probation. The Second District Court of Appeal, in the case of People v. O'Donnell, 37 Cal. App. 192, 174 P. 102, 104, says that it is clearly deducible from the language of said section 1203:

"That the court may, whether the defendant be present in or absent from court at the time, revoke the order suspending the imposition of sentence or the execution thereof and admitting him to probation, upon a sufficient showing that he has violated any of the terms and conditions upon which such order was made."

[1] Our attention has been called to no restriction on the summary authority of the court under such a statute to revoke the parole or probation of a defendant without notice, and without his presence in court, upon proof of violation of the terms on which he has been set at liberty. Such parole confers no right, other than a conditional suspension of sentence or execution of the judgment, during good behavior, and the privilege is subject to termination immediately upon a breach of its conditions.

[2] It is apparent, then, that the petitioner was subject to rearrest, and became a fugitive from justice in the state of Oregon immediately upon the revocation of his parole. Is there anything, then, in the fact that he had departed from the state of Oregon and was in the state of California, by permission of the Oregon court when he committed the act which forfeited his parole, that prevents his extradition as a fugitive from justice?

The matter of In re Whittington, 34 Cal. App. 344, 187 P. 404, is cited as authority for the contention that the state of Oregon has lost its right to follow this petitioner into the state of California. In that case the defendant, who was under arrest in the state of Texas for a felony committed in that state, and while so held in custody, a requisition issued by the Governor of California was honored by the Governor of the state of Texas, upon a showing that petitioner had theretofore committed the crime of murder in the state of California, and was thereupon surrendered to and brought into the state of California under extradition proceedings. The case against him in California was subsequently dismissed, and a requisition was made by the state of Texas for his return to that state for trial, under the charges pending against him there. Extradition was denied on the ground that one who has been brought by legal force from the state having original jurisdiction of his person cannot be held to become by reason of that fact a fugitive. It is argued by petitioner's counsel, with some force of reason, that one who has voluntarily come into the foreign state, with the consent of the state seeking his extradition, cannot be held in any worse plight than one who is brought into the foreign state by legal compulsion. There is this difference, however. In the Whittington Case, the state of Texas released the prisoner from its jurisdiction and turned him over to the state of California without any qualifications; whereas, in the instant case, the state of Oregon did not waive its jurisdiction over the defendant but expressly set him at liberty, subject to the right to again take him into custody and enforce the judgment of the court against him at any time upon his violation of the conditions of his parole. In Ex parte Nabors, under a decision of the Supreme Court of New Mexico, reported in 267 P. 58, 60, another case involving extradition proceedings instituted by the state of California, it was held that the defendant was a fugitive from justice from the state of California under a state of facts almost identical with those here presented. Upon the petition of William J. Nabors, a writ of habeas corpus was issued in New Mexico to test the legality of his restraint under an extradition warrant issued by the Governor of New Mexico upon a requisition of the Governor of California, said warrant reciting that petitioner stands charged with the crime of assault with intent to commit murder, committed in the county of Los Angeles, Cal., in the year 1923, and that said William Nabors is a fugitive from justice, and has taken refuge in New Mexico.

It appears that petitioner had been convicted in California upon his plea of guilty of the crime mentioned in the warrant. After serving some time in the penitentiary, he had been granted a parole, by the terms of which, accepted by him in writing, he was to proceed directly to his place of employment in San Ysidro, N. Mex., and thereafter to remain until he might receive permission to go elsewhere; that, while on parole, and until the expiration of his sentence, he should continue to be in the legal custody and control of the board of prison directors, and, if he should fail to live up to the requirements of his parole, he should be returned to prison. After some time the California prison board saw fit to revoke his parole; the assigned causes being that, without permission of the board, the petitioner had left his employment and had gone to another place in New Mexico, and that he had had certain firearms in his possession in New Mexico, which, while not contrary to any express provision of his parole, was contrary to a statute of California. Commenting upon the facts as set forth, the opinion of the Supreme Court of New Mexico continues:

"Petitioner's contentions are that all charges upon which the state of California now seeks to deal with him relate to his conduct and acts in New Mexico, and that, even if such charges render him amenable to any punishment in California, or to the revocation of his parole, the admitted facts that they were not committed in that state, and that he did not leave that state after their commission, are conclusive against the contention that he is a fugitive from the justice of California. * * *

"In determining the two questions before us, it is important to avoid confusion as to the crime charged against petitioner for which California desires to exact punishment. Petitioner contends as if the charged offenses were the matters stated as the occasion and reason for the revocation of his parole. If we regard the accusation as involving merely the leaving of Sandoval county, or the having of firearms in his possession, it would be difficult to hold, either that there was a substantial charge of any offense under the law of California, or that petitioner is a fugitive from the justice of that state. Such is not, however, the correct view to take of the charge. The accusation is founded upon the felony of which he stands convicted. For this his punishment is not complete. For this California demands his extradition. There is abundant and well-reasoned authority that this is the correct view in a case where one whose parole has been revoked contends that he is not a fugitive. Perhaps the leading case is Drinkall v. Spiegel, 68 Conn. 441, 36 A. 830, 36 L. R. A. 486, where the doctrine is developed that one who is allowed to go at large upon a parole becomes, upon the revocation of his ticket of leave, in legal effect, an escaped convict, and may, if found outside of the state, be extradited, not necessarily for the escape, nor for the violation of parole, but for the original crime which he has not fully expiated. See, also, In re Gertz, 21 Hawaii, 526; Albright v. Clinger, 290 Mo. 83, 234 S. W. 57; Hughes v. Pfanz (C. C. A.) 138 F. 980; Ex parte Carroll, 86 Tex. Cr. R. 301, 217 S. W. 382, 8 A. L. R. 901; * * *

"Under this doctrine we are clearly required to hold that the Governor had before him a substantial charge of crime committed in the state of California. The doctrine serves, also, to narrow the question whether petitioner is a fugitive to this single point: Does the fact that petitioner left California, not in violation of, but pursuant to, his parole, defeat California's right to his rendition as a fugitive? * * *

"Under some of the earlier decisions, the words of the Constitution, 'flee from justice,' were thought to carry an implication of a voluntary and conscious attempt by leaving the state to escape an apprehended prosecution; but such is no longer the accepted doctrine.

"In Ex parte Reggel, 114 U. S. 642, 5 S. Ct. 1148, 29 L. Ed. 250, it was held that, if the person demanded had committed a crime in the demanding state, and when sought to answer for it had left that state and was found in another, he was a fugitive.

"In Appleyard v. Mass., 203 U. S. 222, 27 S. Ct. 122, 51 L. Ed. 161, 7 Ann. Cas. 1073, it was said that one was a fugitive who left the state after commission of a crime, 'no matter for what purpose or with what motive, nor under what belief.' * * *

"In Von Walden v. Geddes, 105 Conn. 374, 135 A. 396, it was held that one who was in Connecticut pursuant to parole from confinement in California should be surrendered on the requisition of Michigan, though the latter state had knowledge of and consented to the purpose of California so to parole him."

After reviewing at some length other decisions bearing on the facts as recited, the court concludes: "It is our conclusion, therefore, that the writ must be discharged, and the petitioner remanded to the sheriff of Valencia county for delivery to the agent of the state of California for return to that state pursuant to the warrant of the Governor of this State."

In Ex parte Williams, Criminal Court of Appeals of Oklahoma, 10 Okl. Cr. 344, 136 P. 597, 51 L. R. A. (N. S.) 668, it appears that the petitioner, under writ of habeas corpus, had been legally charged by indictment, and was tried and convicted of the crime of grand larceny in the state of Indiana and was sentenced to imprisonment in the penitentiary of that state; that, before the expiration of said sentence, petitioner was paroled by the board of commissioners of the Indiana state prison and removed from the state of Indiana to the state of Oklahoma; that thereafter petitioner was declared a delinquent and his parole revoked. On this state of facts, the Governor of Indiana presented requisition papers for the said Williams to the Governor of Oklahoma, which were honored by the Governor of that state, and his warrant issued for the arrest of petitioner, to be returned to the state of Indiana as requested by the Governor of that state. It is held by the decision of the Oklahoma court that to be a fugitive from justice under the act of congress it is not necessary that the person charged with having left the state in which the crime was alleged to have been committed did so for the purpose of avoiding a prosecution anticipated or begun, but simply that, having within a state committed a crime against the laws thereof, he leaves such state, and, when he is sought to be subjected to its criminal process to answer for his offense, he is found in the territory of another state.

Another Oklahoma case, Ex parte Hamilton (Cr. App.) reported in 273 P. 286, in which it was held that the extradited prisoner was a fugitive from justice, is stated in the syllabus as follows:

"Where a convicted prisoner in another state is there paroled and voluntarily comes into this state, and thereafter his parole is revoked by the proper authorities of the former state, the prisoner then has the status of an escaped convict, and is a fugitive from justice from the former state, and if apprehended in this state he may upon requisition be rendered to that state. His status is not changed by the fact that he came into this state after being paroled with the consent of the authorities of the former state."

"Under the conditions named in the preceding syllabus, the legality of the revocation of the parole of the prisoner is a question for the courts of that state, since they alone have the right to construe the Constitution and laws of that state."

People v. Mallen, 126 Misc. Rep. 591, 214 N. Y. S. 211, 214, is another case in which the petitioner was discharged from custody after a warrant of extradition. Ostensibly the discharge was granted on the ground that the petitioner was in the foreign state by compulsion of the state demanding extradition, and purports to follow the rule laid down in the California case, In re Whittington, supra. The petitioner, Malon, had been convicted of a felony in the state of California, and committed under a sentence to a term in the penitentiary, and, after serving 2½ years of his sentence, was paroled and directed by the prison board to go to New York to accept employment with the American Press Association. In pursuance of this requirement, the petitioner took up his residence in New York. His parole was thereafter revoked by the California authorities on the ground that, instead of taking employment with the American Press Association, he was acting in the capacity of private secretary of the president of that association. On requisition from the Governor of California, a warrant of extradition was granted by the Governor of New York. The New York decision in the habeas corpus proceeding comments as follows:

"The chief executive of this state evidently acted upon the theory that, when the authorities of California revoked the parole, the relator became ipso facto a fugitive from justice, regardless of the motives or justice of the revocation, and despite the fact that the person wanted was here, not only by the prior consent, but by the very direction, of the demanding state.

"Ordinarily the question of whether the individual sought is actually a fugitive is one of fact, which the Governor of the state upon whom the demand is made must decide upon such evidence as he may deem satisfactory. * * * How far his determination may be reviewed judicially in habeas corpus proceedings has not been satisfactorily and adequately determined by the courts. But there can be no doubt that, if the Governor's finding of fact is the result of an erroneous application of the law, it is positively reviewable."

Citing the Bassing Case, 208 U. S. 386, 28 S. Ct. 392, 52 L. Ed. 540, 13 Ann. Cas. 905, the decision continues:

"It is unnecessary to decide whether the Bassing Case would authorize extradition of a person who had been released on parole, without any direction to depart to another state, and whose parole had been revoked while in the latter state. On the other hand, it can not be construed to establish the proposition that a departure from the state, under the circumstances occurring in the instance of this relator, necessarily constitutes him a fugitive from justice. What it does determine in this respect is that, although a person leaves a given state with its tacit consent or acquiescence, he may nevertheless be a fugitive and subject to extradition upon a subsequent demand.

"This situation, evidently, is quite different from the instant case, where the person requisitioned came to New York at the express direction of the state of California. His departure from that state was not his voluntary act. He was constructively just as much under the escort of California when leaving as was the prisoner in the Whittington Case, supra, who left in the physical custody of an officer of the law."

"Notwithstanding that the decision in the above matter apparently rests on the proposition that the petitioner was in the state of New York by compulsion, and that the state of California had thereby waived any right to extradition, it is apparent that the court took into account the further circumstance of the frivolous grounds upon which the California authorities had revoked the petitioner's parole. In any event, this case is clearly distinguishable from the case at bar.

[3] None of the other decisions which have been called to our attention is sufficiently in point to affect our decision in this matter. The weight of authority and the requirements of effective law enforcement sustain the proposition that one convicted of a crime in a foreign state and removing to another jurisdiction under parole, whether with or without the consent of the paroling authorities, and whose parole is subsequently revoked for a violation of its terms in the foreign jurisdiction, is subject to extradition.

The petition for discharge is denied, and the petitioners remanded to the custody of C. C. Folette, Jr., deputy sheriff of the county of Washington, state of Oregon, to be returned to the state of Oregon.

LATTA v. DA ROZA et ux. (Civ. 3694.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Oct. 17, 1929.

1. Husband and wife ⇨23¾, 25(6)—Authority to act for spouse may be established by circumstances, and less evidence is required to establish agency than is ordinarily required.

Authority of one spouse to act for another may be established by circumstances, and, as between husband and wife, much less evidence is required to establish agency than is ordinarily required.

2. Appeal and error ⇨719(6)—Appellants cannot question insufficiency of evidence to support judgment, where appeal is presented by bill of exceptions containing no specifications of error (Code Civ. Proc. § 648).

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 648, appellants may not question insufficiency of evidence to support judgment, where appeal is presented by means of bill of exceptions, which contains no specifications of error.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; Peter J. Shields, Judge.

On petition for rehearing. Petition denied. For former opinion, see 280 P. 711.

Walter F. Lynch and Ernest Spagnoli, both of San Francisco, for appellants.

Bradford, Cross & Prior, of Sacramento, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. [1] The petition for rehearing is denied. The evidence of the agency of the defendant Edw. L. da Roza is sufficient to bind his wife, Roma V. da Roza. The complaint was for a joint obligation against Edw. L. da Roza and Roma V. da Roza, his wife. Both defendants appeared jointly by general demurrer only and by an answer containing only a general denial. Neither the answer nor the evidence at the trial raises the question of agency, joint ownership of the real property, or the marriage relation existing between the defendants at the time of the execution of the contract. The liability of the wife was directly involved. The authority of one spouse to act for another may be established by circumstances, and as between husband and wife requires much less evidence to establish agency than is ordinarily required. 13 Cal. Jur. 844, § 43. In the absence of a special plea in behalf of the wife, in view of the entire state of the record which contains no intimation to the contrary, reason prompts us to assume that the defendant Edw. L. da Roza intended to admit his agency and his marriage at the time of the execution of the contract when he testified without explanation or modification: "My wife's name is Roma V. da Roza. She and I own the ranch upon which the work was done. I have charge of the operation of the ranch."

[2] Moreover, the appellants may not question the insufficiency of the evidence to support the judgment, for the appeal is presented by means of a bill of exceptions, which contains no specifications of error. Section 648, Code Civ. Proc.; 2 Cal. Jur. 708, § 407; Akley v. Bassett, 189 Cal. 625, 639, 209 P. 576; Winterburn v. Chambers, 91 Cal. 170, 27 P. 658; Weissband v. Petaluma, 37 Cal. App. 296, 303, 174 P. 955.

The petition for a rehearing is denied.

GREY v. MILLIGAN et al. (Civ. 6247.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Oct. 18, 1929.

1. Judgment ☞139—Trial court must exercise sound judicial discretion upon motion to vacate default judgment.

Trial court, upon motion to vacate default judgment, is vested with power and duty to exercise sound judicial discretion.

2. Judgment ☞146, 153(1)—Refusal to vacate default entered in replevin against one served as "John Doe" held not abuse of discretion, in view of delay in application and delivery to defendant of property claimed.

Refusal of trial court to set aside default judgment in replevin suit as against one served as "John Doe" held not abuse of discretion, where it appeared that defendant's father, to whom defendant delivered the summons and complaint, and who formerly had possession of the property, had delivered it to defendant and 3½ months had expired since entry of judgment.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Ira F. Thompson, Judge.

Action by Lina Elise Grey against Edwin S. Milligan and others. From an order denying the application of defendant named to set aside a default judgment, he appeals. Affirmed.

E. P. Peers and Alfred Kehde, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Rupert B. Turnbull, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CRAIG, J. The plaintiff and respondent in the instant case filed a suit in replevin against J. T. Milligan, also including several fictitious names, and praying that upon discovery of the true names of other defendants they be substituted therefor. J. T. Milligan and the appellant Edwin S. Milligan were both served, the return of the sheriff showing that he had served John Doe, whose true name was Edwin S. Milligan. Upon his failure to make an appearance, default was entered against the latter, and upon the trial it appearing that he had previously acquired possession of the property in controversy, the plaintiff dismissed as to J. T. Milligan, and received a judgment against the appellant.

Twenty days after the trial, appellant moved to set aside the judgment and for leave to answer, which was denied. It was recited in affidavits accompanying the motion that, being served as "John Doe," he had no means of knowing that he had been made a party defendant, and that since his father, J. T. Milligan, had been interested in the subject-matter of the action, he immediately delivered the summons and complaint to him. It appears from the evidence, however, that one A. O. Eckman, claiming to be the owner of certain real property and the live stock and accessories thereon, which was conducted as a poultry ranch in which he had invested about $20,000, sold and agreed to deliver to the plaintiff an undivided one-half interest therein. Oral and written demand were made upon J. T. Milligan for possession. As testified by one witness, there were "many heated words," and he was ordered off the premises by the defendant last mentioned; that a representative of the plaintiff then said to him: "Now, you know, Milligan, that we bought this property, and that we have bought Eckman's interest in it, and we have got an order to get these chickens and the equipment, and we want you to deliver it." It appears that this defendant's son, E. S. Milligan, was present on May 29, 1926, when the foregoing demand was made, but said nothing. On June 4, 1926, when suit was filed, or less than a week later, his father did not have possession of the property here in dispute, but had delivered it to said son, who, as already observed, was properly served with a copy of the complaint, which he gave to the former and permitted a default to be entered as to himself.

[1, 2] A casual perusal of the complaint discloses that all of the property for which appellant heard demand made was described in detail therein. A trial court upon motion to vacate a default judgment is vested with the power and duty to exercise sound judicial discretion, and it may well have occurred to the court in this instance that under the existing circumstances the exchange of property and pleadings between father and son within a few days did not under such rule justify the vacation of judgment after the expiration of three and one-half months. Authorities cited by appellant are not in point, since good faith and the right of plaintiff to join defendants by fictitious names are the sole defects in the proceedings, according to his argument. In the respect last mentioned, it appears that appellant was not served until the day following the first visit of the process server, which may have been the first time that it became necessary to join him. We cannot say as a matter of law that the trial court abused its discretion in denying the motion.

The order denying the motion is affirmed.

PEOPLE v. SLEPNIKOFF. (Cr. 1537.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Oct. 16, 1929.

1. Burglary §41(1)—Evidence in burglary trial held to show night watchman's presence in building, and defendant's possession of deadly weapon, at time of entry.

Evidence held sufficient to sustain conviction of first degree burglary, as against contention that it did not show that night watchman was in building when defendant entered it or that defendant was armed with a deadly weapon at such time.

2. Burglary §46(5)—Instruction defining first degree burglary held not erroneous because omitting words "inhabited dwelling house."

In trial for burglary, alleged to have been perpetrated in furniture company building, instruction defining first degree burglary held not erroneous because omitting words "an inhabited dwelling house," especially in view of evidence that building was inhabited and that defendant was armed with a deadly weapon.

3. Criminal law §404(4)—Sledge-hammer, which defendant carried on entering building and threw away when discovered, held admissible in burglary trial, though not recovered until four days later.

In burglary trial, evidence that defendant carried a sledge-hammer on entering building and threw it in water tank when discovered held to warrant admission of such hammer in evidence, though it was not recovered until four days later.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Walter Perry Johnson, Judge.

Mike Slepnikoff was convicted of burglary, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Raine Ewell, of San Francisco, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Lionel Browne, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

TYLER, P. J. Appellant, together with two codefendants, Nick Boreoff and William Durakoff, were charged in a joint information with the commission of the crime of burglary. The offense was alleged to have been perpetrated in a building located at 1161 Mission street, San Francisco, commonly known as the Beecher Furniture Company. Appellant, together with the other defendants, pleaded not guilty. After trial, the jury returned a verdict of guilty as to all the defendants. Appellant made a motion for a new trial, which was denied. The appeal is from the judgment and order.

It appeared in evidence that about 8:30 o'clock in the evening of December 9, 1928, a watchman employed in the building heard a sound, and upon investigation saw three persons, one of whom was appellant, make their way to the office where a vault and safe were located. He immediately left the establishment and telephoned the police. Two officers responded to his call. They examined the vault and noticed that the combination had been knocked off and the safe broken open. A noise was heard on the stairway leading to the roof. The police were again phoned to for assistance and other officers arrived and the building was surrounded. All three defendants were found hiding on the top of a water tank above the roof. A police officer asked appellant where the money was, and was informed by him that everything was on the top of the tank. An empty revolver was taken from appellant and another loaded revolver was found on the tank, together with a steel rod or driftpin used to drive back the combination of the vault. A bag containing the sum of $284.54, which had been taken from the safe, was also found, and appellant informed the officers that a sledge-hammer had been thrown into the tank, where it was discovered some four days later.

[1] As grounds for reversal, it is claimed the evidence is insufficient to sustain the conviction of first degree burglary, as it does not show that the night watchman was in the building at the time appellant entered the same, or that he entered armed with a deadly weapon, or that any revolver was taken into the building.

[2, 3] The testimony of defendant himself shows that he entered the building after 7:30 o'clock in the evening and the watchman entered the premises previously, at 5:30 o'clock, and had remained on duty until the following morning. That appellant entered the building armed with a deadly weapon, there can be no question, for he directed the officers to the place where he had left the loaded revolver, together with the implements used to commit the crime. Nor is there any merit in the further claim that the court erroneously instructed the jury as to what constituted first degree burglary, for the reason that it omitted the words "an inhabited dwelling house." The facts as narrated show the building was inhabited. A dwelling house inhabited or uninhabited was not involved in the case, and an instruction upon this subject was unnecessary. Moreover, the facts also show that appellant was armed with a deadly weapon. Equally without merit is the claim that the sledge-hammer was improperly admitted in evidence. There was evidence to show that appellant on entering the building had carried the hammer in his trousers, and had thrown the same in the tank at the time he and his codefendants were discovered. The fact that the hammer was not recovered until four days later is of no consequence.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

PENDELL v. WARREN. (Civ. 8.)

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California. Oct. 22, 1929.

1. Sales $\Leftrightarrow$ 481—Purchaser of automobile under conditional contract on rescinding was entitled to relief only on offering to restore to seller automobile and everything of value received from it (Civ. Code, § 3408).

Under Civ. Code, § 3408, purchaser of automobile under conditional contract on rescission was entitled to relief from his contract only by offering to restore to seller the automobile and to account for everything of value he had received from it.

2. Sales $\Leftrightarrow$ 481—In determining amount purchaser should restore to seller on rescission of conditional contract, court could consider circumstances under which truck was used, cost of operation, etc.

On purchaser's rescission of contract for conditional sale of automobile truck, before determining amount purchaser should restore, court could take into account the customary rental charges for use of trucks of similar character, and the circumstances under which it was used, cost of operation, repairs, etc., in estimating the net value accruing to purchaser from such use.

3. Sales $\Leftrightarrow$ 481—Finding fixing value of use of truck to purchaser rescinding conditional contract at \$100 held justified.

On purchaser's rescission of conditional contract for sale of truck, evidence held to justify trial court's finding in fixing the value of the use of the truck to purchaser at $100, which purchaser was required to restore.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Bernardino County; Charles L. Allison, Judge.

Action by H. G. Pendell against Edwin M. Warren. From the judgment, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

William Ellis Lady, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Swing & Wilson, of San Bernardino, for respondent.

SLOANE, P. J. The only issue on this, a second appeal from a judgment had in the superior court of the county of San Bernardino, is as to the amount, if any, the appellant is entitled to recover, on a rescission by the defendant, the vendee under a conditional contract of purchase and sale of an automobile truck, for benefits received by the vendee from use of the truck while in his possession.

The action was brought by the vendor, as the plaintiff, to recover from vendee, as defendant, the unpaid balance of the agreed purchase price. The defendant, after notice of rescission, sought by cross-complaint a rescission of the contract and recovery of installments paid thereunder. Plaintiff, by way of answer to the cross-complaint, pleaded, as set-off to any recovery that might be had by the defendant, the value to vendee of the use of the truck.

Judgment was for defendant on the cross-complaint, granting rescission, and recovery of installments paid, and for costs, but no finding was made on the issue raised for a set-off in favor of plaintiff, for vendee's use of the truck.

On appeal by plaintiff to the Second District Court of Appeal, the judgment was reversed for failure of the trial court to find on the demand of a credit for benefits defendant had received from use of the truck. The language of the judgment of reversal (76 Cal. App. 33, 243 P. 707, 709) is as follows:

"Judgment reversed, with directions to the trial court to retry only the issues as to the reasonable rental value of the truck, and as to whether the defendant used it while it was in his possession; to determine and adjudge what, if any, amount plaintiff shall recover under those issues; and, if it shall be determined that plaintiff should recover thereunder, to reframe its entire judgment accordingly."

A retrial was had in the San Bernardino superior court upon the question of rental value under the pleadings as originally framed, and the court found for the plaintiff and cross-defendant on that issue in the sum of $100; the conclusion of law being:

"That plaintiff is entitled to judgment of rescission and cancellation of the said contract referred to in plaintiff's complaint herein, and that said contract be rescinded, canceled and annulled;

"That defendant is entitled to have and recover from plaintiff the sum of $385.00 less the sum of $100.00, on account of the reasonable rental value of the truck during the time it was in possession of defendant, and less the further sum of $144.10 on the judgment for costs heretofore awarded plaintiff on said appeal."

Judgment was given and entered accordingly, and the pending appeal was taken by the plaintiff from such judgment to the Second District Court of Appeal, and has been transferred to this court for decision.

The record before us does not contain the pleadings or any part of the record on the former appeal, but, as no question is raised as to the sufficiency of the pleadings to present the question to be decided here as to the value and extent of the use of the truck by defendant while it was in his possession, we cannot see that this omission prevents a decision of the issue on its merits.

The evidence adduced on the second trial is directed to the period and extent of the use made by defendant of the truck while it was in his possession after the purchase and before rescission, and as to the value of that use.

As to the grounds of rescission and the sufficiency of the notice thereof we are not here concerned; these matters having been concluded on the former appeal. All that now is involved in this case is the right of the plaintiff to a credit on the judgment against him in any amount in excess of the $100 allowed by the trial court for defendant's use of the truck.

[1] It does not appear from the record before us what sum the plaintiff was demanding under the pleadings as the reasonable value of such use. His appeal rests on the contention that the undisputed evidence shows a rental value of $5 per day for such time as the truck was used by the defendant. This may be conceded as established by the evidence, from the standpoint of a rental of the truck by the defendant from the plaintiff;

but such is not the situation of the parties. The defendant, as the rescinding party, was entitled to relief from his contract only on an offer to restore to the plaintiff the machine in question, and to account for everything of value he had received from it. As provided by section 3408 of the Civil Code:

"On adjudging the rescission of a contract, the court may require the party to whom such relief is granted to make any compensation to the other which justice may require."

We are disposed to agree with the rule as stated by the respondent in his brief that "the amount to be credited to the guilty vendor is not, strictly speaking, rental, for obviously there is no contractual relation which imposes on the vendee the obligation to reimburse the vendor for rent; it is only to the extent that the vendee has profited by the undertaking that he is required in good conscience to restore to the vendor."

The rule is correctly stated in the quotation from Black on Rescission, § 634:

"With regard to personal property, where the purchaser rescinds the contract for fraud or other cause, he should tender a reasonable payment for any beneficial use to which he may have put the property while in his possession, beyond such use as was necessary to test and try it."

To a similar effect is the decision of Bray v. Lowery, 163 Cal. 256, 124 P. 1004.

[2] While the court had a right in this case to take into account the customary rental charges for the use of trucks of this character, it also properly could consider the circumstances under which it was used, the cost of operation, repairs, etc., in order to reach a just estimate of the net value accruing to the vendee from such use.

[3] If plaintiff's right of recovery was a straight rental at $5 per day, this would amount to approximately $200. But, while the time period is an element in fixing the amount of defendant's liability for benefits derived, it is not the only one. He testified that he calculated that he made a profit on each trip of about $10, and he also testified to various expenses incurred for repairs, labor, etc., including $5 a day for a man to operate the truck. In any event, it does not appear that the profit of $10 a trip is to be wholly credited to the use of the truck. There was no evidence produced as to the benefits to the defendant, excepting his own testimony, and we are of the opinion that from such evidence as appears in the record the trial court was justified in fixing the value of the use of the truck to defendant at $100.

101 Cal. App. 202

PEOPLE v. SEAMAN et al. (Cr. 1550.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Oct. 18, 1929.

1. Statutes ☞206—Some force and effect must be given to every word when construing statute.

In construing statute, some force and effect must be given to every word.

2. Robbery ☞11—Whether weapon is a dangerous one within statute defining robbery in first degree does not depend on how particular weapon is used (Pen. Code, § 211a).

Whether certain weapon is dangerous weapon under Pen. Code, § 211a, providing that all robbery which is perpetrated by person being armed with a dangerous or deadly weapon is robbery in first degree, does not depend on how particular weapon is used.

3. Robbery ☞1—Taking of personal property in possession of another from his person or immediate presence by force or fear is gravamen of "robbery."

Gravamen of an alleged "robbery" is the taking by means of force or fear of personal property in possession of another from his person or immediate presence.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First, Second, and Third Series, Robbery.]

4. Robbery ☞11—Person going empty-handed and robbing another is guilty of robbery in second degree.

If person about to commit robbery goes empty-handed and succeeds in committing offense, he is guilty of robbery in the second degree.

5. Robbery ☞26—Whether person armed with dangerous or deadly weapon while committing robbery is guilty of first or second degree robbery held for jury (Pen. Code, § 211a).

Whether one committing robbery and using a gun or other weapon mentioned in Pen. Code, § 211a, defining robbery in first degree, is guilty of first or second degree robbery, held for jury.

6. Criminal law ☞829(21)—Refusing instruction to find defendants guilty of robbery in second degree if jury had reasonable doubt of degree of crime held not error, where court had fully instructed on reasonable doubt.

In prosecution for robbery, refusing requested instruction to find defendants guilty of robbery in second degree if there is any reasonable doubt as to degree of crime held not error, where court had fully instructed on reasonable doubt and one of defendants had admitted committing robbery.

7. Criminal law ☞791—Refusing defendants' requested instruction in robbery prosecution, consisting of portion of concurring opinion in another case, held not error under circumstances.

In prosecution for robbery, refusing requested instruction consisting of portion of con-ccurring opinion in another case held not error, especially where instruction was highly argumentative and contained, in short, a speech on subject of whether pistol used in robbery was loaded or unloaded.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Lile T. Jacks, Judge.

Harold Seaman and two others were convicted of robbery in the first degree, and they appeal. Affirmed.

Milton T. U'Ren and Thomas M. Foley, both of San Francisco, for appellants.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Waldemar Augustine, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

STURTEVANT, J. The district attorney filed an information against the defendants charging them with robbery. The defendants appeared, and each pleaded not guilty. They were tried together before the trial court sitting with a jury. It returned separate verdicts finding each defendant guilty of robbery in the first degree. The defendants made a motion for a new trial. The motion was denied. From a judgment entered on the verdicts and from the order denying a new trial, the defendants have appealed.

The defendants contend that the evidence does not justify a judgment greater than that of second degree robbery. They call to our attention that the defendant John Nissrod was the active operator; that on the 9th day of March, 1929, he entered Compton's restaurant at No. 8 Kearny street, San Francisco, and went to the mezzanine floor where Edward Lessner was making up the cash. Nissrod entered the room where Lessner was, and, holding a pistol in one hand, he pointed it at Lessner and called upon him to throw up his hands, which Lessner did. Nissrod then approached Lessner, still holding the pistol pointed at him, and took out of Lessner's pocket Lessner's key. Lessner testified that he threw up his hands out of fear, and that the money, which approximated $1,000, was taken against his will and without his consent. A pistol was produced which Nissrod admitted was the weapon which he had used. When the pistol was produced in the courtroom, it was unloaded, and Nissrod testified that it was not loaded when he committed the robbery. There was no evidence Nissrod shot the pistol, and there was no evidence that he used it as a club with which to hammer or beat Lessner.

[1-5] Under this condition of the record, the defendants contend that the pistol was neither a "deadly weapon" nor a "dangerous weapon." They cite and rely on People v. Sylva, 143 Cal. 62, 76 P. 814; People v. Wells, 145 Cal. 138, 78 P. 470; People v. Bennett, 37 Cal. App. 324, 173 P. 1004; People v. Montgomery, 15 Cal. App. 315, 114 P. 792. Those authorities are not necessarily in point. Each Involved a consideration of the statute defining an assault with a deadly weapon. In the cases relied upon, the question arose as to whether the offense charged had been committed. In the instant case the commission of an offense is not even denied. The sole question is the degree. The contention made by the defendants cannot be sustained for several reasons. The statute (Pen. Code, § 245) defining an assault with a deadly weapon is worded as follows: "Every person who commits an assault upon the person of another with a deadly weapon or instrument, or by any means or force likely to produce great bodily injury, is punishable," etc. It will be noted that the statute does not even mention a dangerous weapon; whereas section 211a of the Penal Code is as follows: "All robbery which is perpetrated * * * by a person being armed with a dangerous or deadly weapon is robbery in the first degree." If we adopt the contention of the defendants, we give no force or effect to the word "dangerous." However, it is a fundamental rule that, in construing a statute, some force and effect must be given to every word. The defendants contend that whether a certain weapon is dangerous depends upon how it is used, not how it might have been used. C. J. 737. Conceding that to be the rule in assault cases, the same rule is not true, since the amendment of our statute as to robbery cases. The gravamen of an alleged assault is the attack. The authorities cited and relied on by the defendants are to the effect that in assault cases, if a pistol is not loaded and it is used merely as a firearm, there is wanting "a present ability" and therefore no attack. The gravamen of an alleged robbery is the taking, by means of force or fear, of personal property in the possession of another from his person or immediate presence. The taking and the appearances created by the perpetrator both being admitted, the offense is complete. If a person is about to commit a robbery, there are several courses open to him. If he goes empty-handed he may succeed or he may fail, and, in addition thereto, he may be killed. If he succeeds in committing the offense and is thereafter tried, he will have the benefit of claiming robbery in the second degree. On the other hand, if he uses a gun or other weapon mentioned in the statute and succeeds in committing the robbery and is put on trial, then it will be a question for the jury to decide whether the crime was first degree or second degree. The mere fact that on the trial the defendant testified that his gun was not loaded does not require the jury to believe such testimony. People v. Hall, 87 Cal. App. 634, 635, 262 P. 50.

[6] Still presenting the same theory, the defendants complain because the trial court refused to give an instruction worded as follows: "In this connection the court instructs you that if you have any reasonable doubt as to the degree of the crime then it is your duty to find that the robbery was robbery in the second degree." The court did not err. Speaking of the case generally, the court had fully instructed on reasonable doubt. It was not called upon to repeat itself nor to address a specific instruction to the specific item of evidence, "was the pistol loaded or unloaded." Moreover, as the defendant Nissrod had taken the stand and had admitted having committed robbery in the manner hereinabove delineated, there was no reasonable ground of doubt that the offense was perpetrated " * * * with a dangerous or deadly weapon."

[7] From People v. Seawright, 72 Cal. App. 414, 237 P. 796, the defendants copied from page 420, 237 P. 798, a part of the last paragraph on that page, and which is a portion of a concurring opinion only. Thereupon they presented the copy in the form of an instruction, which was refused, and at this time they complain of the refusal. The trial court did not err. It has frequently been said that instructions may not be made in that manner. The instant case is a striking illustration. The proposed instruction was highly argumentative. It was, in short, a speech on the subject of whether the pistol was loaded or unloaded. The trial court was not called upon to pick out that specific portion of the record and address an instruction thereto. If it had done so, its act would have been accepted by the jury as indicating how the evidence impressed the mind of the trial judge.

We find no error in the record. The judgment and order are affirmed.

EASTERN HOTEL CO. v. MILLER BROS.
101 RANCH WILD SHOW et al.*
(Civ. 7056.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Oct. 16, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Nov. 14, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Dec. 9, 1929.

1. Principal and agent §22(1)—In action against principal, based on declarations of alleged agent, agency could not be proven by extrajudicial statement of alleged agent.

In action against circus for reasonable value of building for displaying circus bills, evidence that alleged manager admitted he was manager of defendant circus, and that defendant caused circus bills to be posted in plaintiff's building, held properly excluded, since agency could not be proven by extrajudicial statement of agent.

2. Evidence §317(12)—In action against principal and agent, agent's statements, showing agency, would not be hearsay as to agent.

In action against principal and agent for reasonable value of building for displaying circus bills in building without permission, letter of party, declaring that he was manager of defendant circus and that defendant had caused such bills to be posted in building, would not be hearsay as to agent, although there was no preliminary proof of agency.

3. Use and occupation *§*11—In action for reasonable value of building for displaying circus bills, nonsuit held proper, in absence of evidence of reasonable value of use and possession of building.

In action for reasonable value of building for displaying circus bills without permission, motion for nonsuit held properly granted, where there was no evidence of reasonable value of use and possession of building.

4. Appeal and error *§*194(1)—Where trial proceeded on theory that certain issue had been made, defect in answer could not be raised for first time on appeal.

Appellant could not be permitted to take advantage of defect in answer in failing to make certain issue raised for first time on appeal, where trial proceeded on theory that such issue had been made.

5. Pleading *§*236(3)—Discretion in denying motion, made during trial, to add prayer for exemplary damages, held not abused.

Court's discretion in denying motion, made during trial, for permission to amend complaint to ask for exemplary damages, in action for reasonable value of building used for displaying circus bills, held not abused.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Franklin A. Griffin, Judge.

Action by the Eastern Hotel Company against the Miller Bros. 101 Ranch Wild West Show and others. From a judgment of nonsuit, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Robert P. Troy, of San Francisco, for appellant.

R. F. Mogan, Leo A. Murasky, and E. R. Hoerchner, all of San Francisco, for respondents.

KOFORD, P. J. This is an appeal by plaintiff from a judgment of nonsuit. The complaint alleged that defendants took possession of certain vacant store buildings on Third street, of which plaintiff was lessee, and posted upon and inside of said stores and buildings circus bills, posters, and advertisements. It alleged that such possession and use was fraudulent and forcible; that it injured and disfigured the buildings; that it turned away prospective subtenants; and "that the reasonable value of the premises for said use and occupation thereof is $3,000." The prayer of the complaint was for $3,000. A writ of attachment was issued and levied in the case.

The complaint is so worded that despite the wide range and variety of its statements, it cannot be said to be anything else than an action for the reasonable value of the use and occupation of the buildings for the purposes of publicity. At the conclusion of plaintiff's testimony, the court granted defendants' motion for a nonsuit upon the grounds, first, that there was no evidence that the defendants in person or by agent entered into or posted any signs upon or in the said buildings; and, second, that there was no evidence of the reasonable value of such use and possession.

[1] The evidence introduced by plaintiff showed that circus bills and signs advertising the "101 Ranch" show or circus were displayed upon the inside of the said buildings without permission, but there was no evidence to show that the defendant corporations put the signs there. Plaintiff offered evidence of a conversation of its counsel with H. W. Seymour, and also offered a letter written by said Seymour, containing declarations by said Seymour that he was the manager of the defendant Wild West Show, and declarations that said defendant had caused the said bills and signs to be posted on the said buildings. Objection was made to this evidence as hearsay, and upon the ground that there had been no preliminary proof that said Seymour was the manager or an agent of the said defendants. This objection to the evidence was sustained. The ruling was correct. The agency could not be proven by the extrajudicial statement of the agent. 1 Cal. Jur. 698. There was no competent evidence, therefore, tending to prove that the said signs and bills had been posted by the defendant corporations. The motion for nonsuit was properly granted on that ground as to those defendants.

[2] It is contended by appellant that the testimony so stricken out as hearsay contained an admission of Seymour that he had caused the signs to be put up in plaintiff's buildings. This testimony would not be hearsay as to Seymour individually, because of the fact that Seymour was individually a defendant in the case. This point evidently did not occur to counsel for either party or to the court at the time of the trial. In fact, defendant Seymour had not then been formally made a party defendant in name, in place of a fictitious defendant. This was done at the end of the case. All seemed to regard the case as proceeding against the corporation defendants only, and this point is raised on appeal for the first time.

[3] But, if this ground of nonsuit was not well taken with respect to the defendant Seymour, the other ground of the motion is good as to him, as well as the corporation defendants. The evidence fails to show the reasonable value of the premises in which the signs were posted. Counsel for plaintiff attempted, without success, to qualify himself as an expert upon the reasonable value of the property, and upon the reasonable value of the use and occupation of the property, "produced through force and fraud." This was not done until after the motion for nonsuit was made. Upon being informed that his qualification of himself as an expert was insufficient, he submitted the motion without further testimony. The nonsuit was therefore properly granted upon the second ground named as to all the defendants.

[4] The plaintiff, as appellant here, now contends for the first time that, owing to certain defective denials of the answer, the defendants admitted having taken possession and posted the bills and signs. Paragraph II of the answer makes a full and complete denial with respect to 604 and 606 Third street. The same paragraph undertakes to deny the same allegation with respect to 610-610a Third street, but is defective in failing to repeat "or at any other time" in the expression "deny that on the 28th of August, 1926, defendants took possession," etc. This point was not raised at the trial. The cause proceeded upon the theory that this was an issue, and the appellant is, therefore, not permitted to take advantage of this defect at this time. Etienne v. Kendall, 202 Cal. 251, 257, 259 P. 752.

[5] During the course of the trial, the court denied the appellant's motion for permission to amend the complaint in order to ask for exemplary damages. This was a matter within the discretion of the court, and it in no manner appears that such discretion was not soundly exercised in denying permission to add a prayer for exemplary damages.

The judgment is affirmed.

STATE CREDIT CORPORATION v. RANGER et al. (Civ. 5574.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Oct. 18, 1929.

1. Estoppel §110—Facts giving rise to estoppel in pais must be pleaded to rely thereon.

A party who desires to rely upon an estoppel in pais must plead the facts giving rise thereto.

2. Estoppel §110, 120—Admission of evidence and instruction on theory of estoppel was erroneous, in absence of pleading setting up defense.

Where defendant failed to plead defense of estoppel, evidence of facts tending to substantiate it was not within the issues, and admission thereof, together with instructions on such theory, was erroneous.

Appeal from Superior Court, Ventura County; G. R. Freeman, Judge.

Action by the State Credit Corporation against P. M. Ranger, H. E. Frost, and others, wherein all defendants except defendant Frost defaulted. From a judgment for defendant Frost, plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded, with directions.

Harry D. Parker, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Hollingsworth & Henderson, of Ventura, for respondent.

BURNELL, Justice pro tem. Plaintiff corporation, the appellant here, brought this action in claim and delivery to recover an automobile. The complaint alleges that plaintiff and the defendants, other than defendant respondent Frost, had, on January 27, 1926, entered into a written agreement for the purchase by said defendants from plaintiff of a Jordan sedan for the agreed price of $1,723.70, payable in cash on January 27, 1926, and that possession of the car was thereafter delivered to said defendants, who were doing business under the firm name Ventura Jordan Company. The contract, attached to the complaint as an exhibit and by reference made a part thereof, appears to be in the usual form of conditional sale contracts for the purchase of automobiles on the basis of installment payments, although it is to be observed that the blanks in the clause providing for amount and due date of installments are not filled in, but, on the contrary, the whole purchase price is made payable upon the very day of the execution of the contract. There are the usual provisions for interest "on deferred payments," payment of taxes by the purchaser, keeping up insurance, repairs, etc., and an agreement on the part of the purchaser that he will not permit the car to be removed from his possession nor "sell, attempt to sell, lease, mortgage, hypothecate or otherwise dispose of said personal property. * * *" It is further stipulated that: "In the event the purchaser fails or neglects to comply with any of the terms, covenants or conditions of the contract, or to make any of the several payments provided for herein, when due, * * * the seller, at his option, and without notice to the purchaser, may elect to declare the whole purchase price immediately due and payable, or the seller may, without notice to the purchaser, declare all the rights of the purchaser under this contract terminated, and without demand first made, and with or without legal process, immediately take possession of said personal property. * * *" The contract provides that: "Until the purchaser has fully complied with all the terms, covenants and conditions of this contract, and made all the payments as herein provided, said personal property * * * shall belong to, and the title of said personal property shall remain in the seller," and that "possession of said personal property shall give the purchaser no title or interest therein and no rights except as herein provided."

The complaint alleges that about February 12, 1926, the Ventura Jordan Company "attempted to sell," and "actually did transfer possession" of, the Jordan sedan in question to defendant Frost, "who now has the possession thereof and claims to be the owner." There are the usual allegations of demand for delivery, refusal to deliver, ownership and right of possession in plaintiff, value of property, etc., to be found in complaints in this type of action.

All defendants except Frost defaulted. The latter filed an answer which was merely a specific denial of the allegations of the complaint, and which set up no new matter. The trial was by jury, resulting in a verdict and judgment against plaintiff and in favor of defendant Frost as to ownership of the car. From this judgment plaintiff has appealed.

Respondent's theory of the case was and is that the automobile in question, together with other cars of the same make, was delivered to the Ventura Jordan Company, sales and service agents for Jordan cars at Santa Paula, for sale, and that the appellant corporation, which was financing the Ventura Jordan Company in the matter of acquiring cars from the Southern California distributors, caused the contract set forth in the complaint to be executed merely for its protection and under a verbal agreement whereby, upon a sale being made by the Ventura Jordan Company, that portion of the retail selling price of the car sold which represented the wholesale or dealer's price specified in the written contract was to be paid by the Ventura Jordan Company to appellant finance company, which would then deliver the "pink slip" indicative of legal ownership to the purchaser, and that both parties to the written contract understood and agreed that the car was to be offered for sale to the public, and that, in so delivering the car to the Ventura Jordan Company, appellant constituted the latter its agent or factor, clothed with ostensible authority to sell the car, and in the case of an innocent purchaser thereof was estopped to deny the fact of such authority; hence that respondent, purchasing the car from a Jordan dealer in the usual course of business, acquired a good title thereto.

In advancing this theory, respondent relies upon the principle laid down in such cases as Carter v. Rowley, 59 Cal. App. 486, 211 P. 267, Chucovich v. San Francisco Securities Co., 60 Cal. App. 700, 214 P. 263, Parke v. Franciscus, 194 Cal. 284, 228 P. 435, and Kenny v. Christianson, 200 Cal. 419, 253 P. 715, 716, 50 A. L. R. 1297, to the effect that, when the legal owner of an automobile delivers it to a dealer for the purpose of sale he thereby clothes the latter with ostensible authority to sell the car, and is estopped to deny the validity of the title thereto acquired by an innocent purchaser in due course of business.

Appellant, on the other hand, strenuously and, we feel constrained to say, somewhat intemperately contends that the question of the Ventura Jordan Company's agency was "falsely and illegally raised," and that the court in instructing the jury upon the issue of agency "illegally and wrongfully injected (that issue) into the trial of said cause without a proper plea of acts and facts constituting a waiver or raising an estoppel," and also that "the court illegally and wrongfully, in violation of well-known and well-established rules of pleading and procedure, (1) permitted defendant-respondent, over timely objection, to introduce evidence of facts, circumstances and matters claimed to be a waiver of rights and to raise an estoppel in pais against the plaintiff-appellant, notwithstanding the fact the same was not duly and regularly and fully pleaded specifically, as required by law to make those facts, circumstances and matters available at any stage in the trial of the cause."

Appellant urges other grounds for a reversal of the judgment, but we do not find it necessary to go into them, since the determination of this appeal must of necessity rest upon that of the question of whether or not the matters of ostensible agency and estoppel were property before the court and jury.

Upon the trial in the court below, the plaintiff vainly objected to all testimony tending to show the existence of "another agreement or understanding entirely collateral to and outside of the scope of this particular contract," as well as to all testimony tending to show that the Ventura Jordan Company was an agent of plaintiff corporation or was authorized by it to sell the car. One of the grounds stated for these objections was that the matters sought to be established were not within the issues involved in the case. At the close of the trial, counsel for plaintiff moved the court to strike out all of this testimony, basing his motion upon the same grounds. This motion was denied.

Respondent's contention that, notwithstanding appellant corporation's admitted, so far as the evidence was concerned, legal ownership of the car, he obtained good title from the Ventura Jordan Company, is and can be based upon the theory of estoppel only, the theory, as stated in Stoner v. Security Trust Co., 47 Cal. App. 216, 190 P. 500, 502, that the general rule that one in possession of personal property can transfer to another no greater interest in the property than he himself is subject to the exception that "where the owner of the property clothes another with the apparent title to, or power of disposition over, it, and an innocent third party has thereby been induced to deal with the apparent owner in reference thereto; the true owner being in such case held estopped from afterward asserting his title."

[1] It is the firmly established rule in California that a party who desires to rely upon an estoppel in pais must plead the facts giving rise thereto. A few of the many cases in which this rule has been laid down, reiterated and followed are Clarke v. Huber, 25 Cal. 594; Chapman v. Hughes, 134 Cal. 641, 58 P. 298, 60 P. 974, 66 P. 982; Fair Oaks Bank v. Johnson, 198 Cal. 196, 244 P. 335; Producer's Holding Co. v. Hill, 201 Cal. 204, 256 P. 207; Frank v. Crescent Wharf, etc., Co., 50 Cal. App. 272, 195 P. 79; and see long list of cases in 10 Cal. Jur. 654. As said in Davis v. Davis, 26 Cal. 23, 85 Am. Dec. 157: "Equitable estoppels in pais, generally, if not universally, are applied to prevent injury which would ensue to one from the acts or declarations of another, were he permitted to gain-say the truth of such acts and declarations. The principle is invoked and applied for the prevention of fraud, or that which is tantamount thereto, on the one side, and injury on the other; and it is but just and is in accordance with the rules of pleading in equity cases, that the party relying upon an equitable estoppel in pais should inform the adverse party of the nature of the cause of action or defense which he will be obliged to meet. To do this he must plead it with the same fullness and particularity as is required in cases involving like subjects of inquiry, in suits of equity."

This principle is as applicable to actions in claim and delivery as to those of other character; thus in Chowchilla National Bank v. Nilmeier, 83 Cal. App. 18, 256 P. 298, 299, an action to recover possession of certain cows which had been mortgaged to the plaintiff bank by one C. H. Nilmeier, his widow had filed a cross-complaint alleging that the animals were her separate property and on this cross-complaint had been awarded judgment for their recovery or their value, together with damages for their detention. Appealing from this judgment, the bank contended that, by signing a prior mortgage of the same cows to another bank jointly with her husband, "and by making the affidavit jointly with him that the 'said mortgagor owns the absolute title' to the mortgaged property," Mrs. Nilmeier was "estopped to deny that her husband owned the cows, or to deny that he was authorized to later mortgage them to plaintiff." It was held that the plaintiff not having pleaded the alleged estoppel in its answer to the cross-complaint, the issue was not properly before the court. The court said: "In the first place, the issue of estoppel is not raised by the pleadings. Where the cause of action or defense of a party depends upon estoppel he must plead it." Again, in Lathrop v. Title Insurance & Trust Co., 73 Cal. App. 147, 238 P. 748, which was an action to recover certain bonds, a defense based upon estop-pel in pais was held to be unavailable because not pleaded.

Examination of the records in the cases relied on by respondent discloses that, in Carter v. Rowley, supra, and Parke v. Franciscus, supra, the facts claimed to give rise to the estoppel were pleaded, while in Chucovich v. San Francisco Securities Corporation, supra, the question of pleading was not raised.

Respondent places great reliance upon Kenny v. Christianson, supra, as holding that a defendant who bases his defense and claim of right of possession upon an estoppel on the part of the plaintiff is not required to plead the same. The decision in that case does not so hold. There the action was in claim, and delivery for an automobile purchased by the defendant from a used car dealer with whom it had been placed for sale by the plaintiff. The dealer had embezzled the proceeds of the sale. In his answer the defendant, unlike the respondent in this case, had affirmatively "alleged that from a time prior to the commencement of the action and ever since said time he had been and continued to be the owner of and entitled to the possession" of the car. In its statement that the defendant was not required to plead estoppel, the court was not discussing the question of the necessity of pleading facts showing that plaintiff had, by delivering the car for sale to a dealer, clothed the latter with ostensible authority to dispose of it and was therefore estopped to deny his right to do so. The point under discussion was the plaintiff-appellant's contention that the defendant was not entitled to assert his ownership because there had never been issued to him the certificate of registration and ownership provided for by the Motor Vehicle Act of 1925 (St. 1925, p. 398), and his further contention "that defendant's claim that the plaintiff is not entitled to rely upon the afore-said provisions of the Motor Vehicle Act to defeat the defendant's claim is a defense based upon estoppel, and that the defendant was not entitled to the benefit of such defense because of his failure to plead such estoppel." It was in answer to this contention that the court said: "In making this contention plaintiff relies upon the familiar rule that the defense of an equitable estoppel is one which must be pleaded. This rule, however, has only application to cases wherein the plaintiff bases his sole reliance for his recovery in said action upon a claim of title which he is estopped to urge. Where, however, a plaintiff, as in this case, bases her alleged right to recovery in the first instance upon the original claim of ownership of the property in question and upon her contention that the person through whom the defendant acquired title to said property had no authority from her to dispose of the same, the defendant is not required in his pleadings to anticipate such other contentions as the plaintiff may seek to rely upon when her main reliance for her right of recovery has failed her, and which do not appear, upon the face of her complaint. In such cases the defendant may await the assertion by the plaintiff in her proof of such additional foundation for her right of recovery and may then oppose the same with his evidence of an equitable estoppel."

We find nothing in this statement, or elsewhere in the opinion, to warrant the assumption that the Supreme Court intended to overrule an unbroken line of its own decisions, commencing with Lestrade v. Barth, 19 Cal. 660, decided in 1862, and continuing on to the present day, to the effect that an estoppel must be affirmatively plead.

[2] We hold, therefore, that the respondent, not having set up such a defense, evidence of the facts tending to substantiate it was not within the issues, and should not have been admitted, and that the learned trial court erred in instructing the jury upon the theory of agency. For these reasons the judgment must be reversed and the cause remanded. In taking this action, we feel constrained to observe that there seems to be sufficient evidence in the record before us to have brought the case within the doctrine of Carter v. Rowley, Chucovich v. San Francisco Securities Co., Parke v. Francisco, and Kenny v. Christianson, supra, had estoppel been pleaded, and that on a retrial of the case respondent should be permitted to amend his answer so as to raise the issue of estoppel if he desires to do so.

Judgment reversed, and cause remanded, with directions to the trial court to permit respondent to amend his answer so as to allege an estoppel, if respondent shall request leave so to amend.

PEOPLE v. HEWITT. (Cr. 1860.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Oct. 18, 1929.

1. Rape §54(1)—Conviction for rape may be had upon uncorroborated testimony of prosecutrix.

One may be convicted of rape even upon the uncorroborated testimony of prosecutrix, if the jury believes her testimony.

2. Criminal law §1159(2)—Where testimony of prosecutrix in prosecution for statutory rape was corroborated in some particulars, judgment of conviction must be affirmed.

Judgment of conviction for statutory rape must be affirmed, where prosecutrix was corroborated in some particulars, since there was substantial evidence to support conviction.

3. Criminal law §341—Defendant's attempt to show feelings of certain people towards him, who were not witnesses, to show that charge of prosecutrix in rape prosecution was a concocted story, held properly denied.

In prosecution for statutory rape, defendant's attempt to inject into case, during examination of witness, feelings of certain parties with reference to defendant, who were not witnesses, for the purpose of showing that prosecutrix's charge was a concocted story, held properly denied.

4. Criminal law §938(1)—Denying new trial for newly discovered cumulative and impeaching evidence held not error.

In prosecution for statutory rape, denying new trial for newly discovered evidence which was cumulative and of an impeaching character held not error.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles W. Fricke, Judge.

Claude N. Hewitt was convicted of statutory rape, and he appeals. Affirmed.

A. Perry Harris, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and James S. Howie, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

CRAIG, J. The appellant was charged by information filed by the district attorney of Los Angeles county with statutory rape, alleged to have been committed upon a female person of the age of 15 years, on or about December 1, 1928, December 15, 1928, and March 30, 1929. Having been convicted upon all three counts, a motion for a new trial was presented, which was denied, and the defendant appeals from the judgments and from the order last mentioned.

The principal ground assigned for reversal arises from conflicting evidence which appellant attempts to construe as rendering the evidence offered by the people so inconsistent and improbable as to have resulted in a miscarriage of justice. An exhaustive résumé of the details is not necessary. The prosecutrix testified that appellant, who is her father, had so conducted himself toward her that she feared him, and that on the first occasion he accomplished the act charged when she was about to take a bath; that he cautioned her to be quiet; that his revolver hung on the bedpost; and that she made no outcry. The second offense, according to her testimony, occurred as she lay on her bed, reading, when her mother had gone to the store; that she fought with her hands and made an outcry. She swore that upon the third occasion the defendant threatened her with a wrench while repairing his automobile, and said that should she refuse to comply with his demands when made he would kill her, and that she should not inform her mother; that she accompanied him in the machine to a secluded place in a vacant street or alley, where he repeated the sexual offense charged in the information. The child further testified that during this latter debauchery appellant had his gun with him, and that he also told her to make no complaint lest there might be people around; that she pleaded with him, finally becoming hysterical. It appears from the testimony of the prosecutrix that upon her return home on March 30th other members of the family were preparing for a picnic luncheon on the following day, Easter Sunday, and that on the following Friday she related her experiences to an aunt, who, with the defendant's mother, accompanied her to the offices of the juvenile department. A county physician testified to the physical evidences tending to corroborate the fact of recent penetration.

The conflict in the evidence, if it was worthy of consideration by the jury, consisted merely of denials by certain witnesses as to minor details. The prosecutrix stated upon the stand that the defendant had not treated her with the respect and kindness due to a child until she began to grow older; that he prevented her from going out alone, but that he would take her to picture shows and call for her later. The defendant and his witnesses testified in part that he had not objected to the girl leaving home with others, whereas her sister swore that the prosecutrix and the defendant did disagree over the fact that she wished to remain out with boys after picture shows were attended by her. While the defendant's grandmother testified that there had been no preparation for a picnic, as related by the prosecutrix, her sister in turn stated that such preparations were in progress at the time mentioned. Appellant testified that the girl had threatened to leave home unless permitted to associate with boys, which testimony was denied by the prosecutrix, as well as testimony of another witness that she had been riding with boys, contrary to appellant's wishes.

[1. 2] It is admitted in the briefs of appellant that the evidence was carefully and exhaustively discussed in the trial court upon the motion for a new trial. The evidence adduced by the prosecution was not, because of any of the specified contradictions, so inherently improbable as to require or justify a different view upon appeal from that taken below. The appearance of the witnesses, their demeanor upon the stand, and the manner in which they testified, together with other considerations of which only the court and jury might avail themselves during the trial, though discussed here in the briefs, cannot be disregarded or construed in favor of the appellant. Family associations and resentment of the prosecutrix because of alleged social restraints, although possible causes of retaliation in seeking a shield for favorites, cannot as a mere theory be said to overcome positive evidence, and particularly so after having been twice reviewed in the tribunal of first instance. People v. Kruvosky, 53 Cal. App. 744, 200 P. 831; People v. Price, 26 Cal. App. 544, 147 P. 591. One may be convicted of rape even upon the uncorroborated testimony of the prosecutrix, if the jury believe her testimony. People v. Wademan, 38 Cal. App. 116, 175 P. 791; People v. Jones, 76 Cal. App. 144, 244 P. 101. It appears, as already noted, however, that the prosecutrix was corroborated, in some particulars, and the case is governed by the rule that her testimony must be accorded full credit, and the judgments be affirmed in this respect, since there is substantial evidence tending to support them. People v. Tom Woo, 181 Cal. 315, 184 P. 389; People v. Porter, 48 Cal. App. 237, 191 P. 951.

[3] The defendant attempted to inject into the case during direct examination of his mother "the feeling of Mrs. Anderson and Mrs. Hewitt and Mrs. Armstrong with reference to this defendant," who were not witnesses, for the purpose of showing that the charge of the prosecutrix was a "concocted story." It is contended that animosity had prompted threats to send the appellant to the penitentiary, but there is no evidence of such nature in the record, and the objection to the question embracing the language above quoted was properly sustained.

[4] Finally, it is insisted that the trial court erred in denying a new trial upon the presentation of an affidavit given by the sister of the prosecutrix wherein it was averred that the latter during confinement at juvenile hall, and after the trial, had stated that the defendant was not guilty, and that she had testified falsely against him. Her mother also gave an affidavit to the effect that she did not testify upon the trial, and was not called, but that she had been at home during all of the times alleged in the information and knew that the immoral acts charged by her daughter did not and could not have occurred. The purported evidence presented to the court in this manner was properly for the jury, and was cumulative and of an impeaching character which under previous rulings has been held not requiring a new trial. People v. Tallmadge, 114 Cal. 427, 46 P. 282; People v. Brittan, 118 Cal. 409, 50 P. 664; People v. Van Perhacs, 20 Cal. App. 48, 127 P. 1048; People v. Garvey (Cal. App.) 269 P. 702.

The judgments and order denying a new trial are affirmed.

ROBBINS v. MULCREVY, County Clerk.★
(Civ. 7179.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Oct. 18, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Nov. 15, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Dec. 16, 1929.

1. Mandamus ⇨4(3)—Mandamus requiring clerk to expunge from record order requiring petitioner to pay alimony and attorney's fees held properly denied, since order constituted final judgment from which an appeal would lie.

Mandamus to require clerk to expunge order from judgment book, requiring petitioner to pay alimony pendente lite and attorneys' fees, held properly denied, since a decree for temporary alimony as to all matters upon which it takes effect constitutes a final judgment from which a direct appeal may be taken before determination of the issues in the action.

2. Mandamus ⇨14(1)—Application to expunge order from judgment book should be first made to trial court.

Application to expunge from judgment book order requiring petitioner for mandamus to pay wife, in action for divorce, alimony pendente lite and attorneys' fees, should have been made to trial court in the first instance.

Application for writ of mandate by Julius Robbins against H. I. Mulcrevy, County Clerk of the City and County of San Francisco. Writ denied.

Max Schleimer, of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

TYLER, P. J. Mandamus to compel respondent to expunge the entry of an order with reference to the payment of alimony pendente lite from the "Judgment Docket Book."

[1, 2] The facts show that on November 16, 1922, petitioner filed a complaint in an action for divorce; on February 14, 1923, defendant therein filed a demurrer to the complaint. On November 1, 1923, the court made an order directing petitioner to pay his wife $75 per month alimony pendente lite, and $150 attorney fees. Thereafter the attorney for defendant caused said order to be entered in the "Judgment Book" and in the "Judgment Docket Book." On October 3, 1929, petitioner dismissed his action without prejudice to the bringing of a new one. Thereafter he demanded that the clerk expunge the entries from the books referred to, on the ground that he transcended his authority in making the entries, as the order for the payment of alimony and attorney's fees was not a judgment, and had no place therein. Upon refusal of the clerk to comply with the request, this proceeding was instituted.

The petition is without merit. A decree for temporary alimony in a matrimonial cause is, to all legal intents and purposes, a judgment, and not only a judgment, but, as to all matters upon which it takes effect, a final judgment. Clopton v. Clopton, 161 Cal. 481, 119 P. 651; 1 Cal. Jur. p. 960. Although such an application is not a separate suit, it is a proceeding for separate judgment, independent of the final judgment in the action. The application is heard and determined upon a record of its own, and the decision thereon may be made and may be the subject of a direct appeal before the determination of the issues in the action. Estate of Smith, 122 Cal. 462, 55 P. 249; Hite v. Hite, 124 Cal. 389, 398, 57 P. 227, 45 L. R. A. 793, 71 Am. St. Rep. 82; 1 Cal. Jur. p. 966. Moreover, the application should have been made in the court below, in the first instance.

The application for the writ is denied.

WITHEROW v. UNITED AMERICAN INS. CO. OF PENNSYLVANIA. (Civ. 7.)★

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California. Oct. 18, 1929.

As Modified on Denial of Rehearing, Nov. 13, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Dec. 16, 1929.

1. Insurance ⇨646(2)—Insurer has burden of proving facts showing alleged breach of condition in fire policy by preponderance of evidence.

Burden is on fire insurance company, seeking to avoid payment of loss because of breach of proviso or condition in policy, such as provision requiring mortgagee to disclose to insurer any change in ownership coming to his knowledge, to prove facts necessary to bring case within terms thereof by preponderance of evidence.

2. Insurance ⇨665(3)—Evidence held to support court's finding that mortgagee did not know of transfers of title to insured property.

In action on fire insurance policy containing mortgage clause requiring mortgagee to disclose to insurer any change of ownership "which shall come to the knowledge of said mortgagee," evidence held sufficient to support trial court's finding that mortgagee did not have knowledge of transfers of title subsequent to his transfer thereof and execution of trust deed by transferee.

3. Insurance ⇨146(3)—Forfeiture provisions must be strictly construed against insurer and interpretation most favorable to insured or other claimant adopted in case of ambiguity.

Conditions of insurance policy, providing for forfeiture of interest of insured or others claiming thereunder, are to be strictly construed against insurer, and, if there is any ambiguity, which may reasonably be solved by either of two constructions, the interpretation most favorable to insured or other claimant must be adopted.

4. Insurance $\Rightarrow$ 311(3)—Mortgage clause requiring mortgagee to disclose any change of ownership coming to his "knowledge" did not require him to seek information.

Mortgage clause, imposing on mortgagee duty to disclose to insurer any change of ownership, "which shall come to the knowledge of said mortgagee," did not require him to seek after information, but only to give such information as came to his knowledge; "knowledge" meaning actual knowledge of fact as distinguished from constructive knowledge or notice (citing Words and Phrases; "Knowledge").

5. Insurance $\Rightarrow$ 311(3)—Insured may lose right to recover on policy without affecting mortgagee's rights under mortgage clause.

Where clause providing for payment of loss to mortgagee as his interest may appear is attached to insurance policy, there are, in effect, two separate contracts, and insured may lose his right to recover on policy without affecting mortgagee's rights thereunder.

Appeal from Superior Court, Orange County; H. G. Ames, Judge.

Action by Roland S. Witherow, as administrator of the estate of W. L. Witherow, deceased, against the United American Insurance Company of Pennsylvania, a corporation. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Harold C. Morton, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Charles D. Swanner, of Santa Ana, for respondent.

MARKS, J. This action was brought by plaintiff against defendant to recover the sum of $800, on an insurance policy written by defendant on the property described therein. Plaintiff recovered judgment for $746.91, and defendant appealed.

It appears from the record before us that on April 11, 1923, appellant issued its policy of insurance in the sum of $800 on the building involved, for the term of three years in favor of F. S. McClain, the then owner. The title to the property passed by various conveyances to Carl Marr. It bears the usual endorsements carrying the consent of appellant to these changes of ownership and a mortgage clause dated December 20, 1923, in favor of W. L. Witherow, plaintiff's decedent. On March 13, 1924, Marr conveyed the property to L. A. McCain and W. B. Scott. On June 21, 1924, McCain and Scott conveyed the property to Oscar Cochems and wife. On September 24, 1924, Cochems and wife conveyed the property to G. W. Purkey and wife. On March 20, 1925, Purkey and wife conveyed the property to H. L. Clark, where title remained until November 25, 1925, when the buildings were destroyed by fire. At the time there was $1,336.44 unpaid on decedent's note, which was secured by a deed of trust on the insured premises. Appellant did not consent to any change of ownership after title vested in Marr and the mortgage clause attached to the policy. W. L. Witherow died June 10, 1928, and plaintiff was appointed as administrator of his estate.

Appellant's answer interposed several defenses, which were all abandoned at the trial except one, which asserted the avoidance of the policy by the changes of ownership by Marr and by his successors in interest without the knowledge and consent of the insurance carrier. This is the sole question presented on appeal, as all other facts, including the amount of the loss in the sum of $746.91, were stipulated by the parties at the time of trial.

The trial court found: "That the said W. L. Witherow did not have knowledge of the transfer of said real property subsequent to the transfer from W. L. Witherow to Carl Marr and the execution of said trust deed by Carl Marr in favor of W. L. Witherow." Appellant contends that this finding is unsupported by the evidence and is contrary to the evidence, and therefore that the judgment must be reversed.

[1] The rule governing the burden of proof in cases of this kind has been laid down by the Supreme Court, as follows: That where the plaintiff proves the existence of a contract of insurance, a fire which results in a loss to the insured with due notice or proof of loss, where necessary, to the insurer, and the insurance company seeks to avoid payment by reason of the breach of a proviso or condition contained in the policy, the burden rests upon the insurance company to prove, by a preponderance of the evidence, the facts necessary to bring the case within the terms of the proviso or condition under which it seeks to escape liability. Rossini v. Saint Paul Fire & Marine Insurance Co., 182 Cal. 415, 188 P. 564; Mah See v. North American Accident Insurance Co., 190 Cal. 421, 213 P. 42, 26 A. L. R. 123; Postler v. Travelers' Insurance Co., 173 Cal. 1, 158 P. 1022.

[2] Four witnesses were produced by the insurance company in its effort to prove that W. L. Witherow had knowledge of the transfers of title subsequent to ownership by Marr. They were G. W. Purkey and Oscar Cochems, two of the later owners, Dean Collier, collection teller of the Farmers' & Merchants' Savings Bank of Santa Ana, and Frank L. Weaver, an insurance adjuster who acted for appellant in investigating the loss. F. D. Drake, at one time local agent for appellant, was called, but was not able to remember any facts material to either side. The record shows that L. A. McCain, one of the owners subsequent to Marr, was present in court, but was not called as a witness.

G. W. Purkey testified that he was the owner of the property, having purchased it from Cochems; that he knew Witherow, but did not remember discussing the property, or its ownership with him; that he made his payments to the bank and supposed Witherow knew he (Purkey) owned the property, because he so made the payments.

Oscar Cochems testified that he knew Witherow; that he owned the property; that he never at any time discussed the property with Witherow and did not remember making any payments to the bank.

Dean Collver's testimony, viewed from the point of view most favorable to appellant, may be summarized as follows: That he was collection teller of the Farmers' & Merchants' Savings Bank of Santa Ana; that he knew W. L. Witherow very well during his lifetime; that Witherow was a customer of the bank; that he left the note with Collver as an employee of the bank for collection with instructions to collect the installments of $15 per month and deposit them to Witherow's account; that Collver personally made all but a very few of the collections and indorsed the payments on the back of the note when received by him; that the payments were made by different persons from time to time; that he believed that different people owned the property and that his recollection was that Mr. Witherow told him of a Mr. Purkey owning it; that he had difficulty in making the collections at times and sometimes would go to W. L. Witherow and sometimes to others to ascertain who owned the property; that when payments would become delinquent witness would send a notice to the last party he had knowledge of holding it and sometimes would get a notice turned back with the statement, "I don't own that property now. I just sold it to somebody else"; that there was a memorandum written on the envelope containing the note, "Musselman Lumber Company, G. W. Purkey and H. L. Clark", which was a memorandum of names of persons "who were said to own the property at the time; a memorandum of different people we tried to get money out of as the owner of the property"; that those names were furnished as the names of the supposed owners of the property; that on two or three occasions an agent handling the property for Mr. Witherow might have brought the payments in; that it was witness' impression that Mr. Purkey, a real estate agent who handled some of the transfers of the property, often brought in the money; that it was witness' impression that Purkey owned the property at one time; that when a payment was made it was deposited to the account of W. L. Witherow and a duplicate deposit slip mailed him with the name of the depositor written thereon; that witness could not give the names of any of the depositors which were written upon the slips; that it was the custom of the bank to write the name of the depositor on the duplicate slip mailed to the customer; and that he believed the custom had been followed in this case.

Frank L. Weaver testified that he was a fire insurance adjuster and investigated this loss for appellant; that on December 5, 1925, he talked with W. L. Witherow and that Witherow told him that the property had been transferred twice or more after the policy had been written and the mortgage clause attached.

In addition to certified copies of the four deeds effecting the change of title, hereinbefore referred to, we believe that the foregoing presents a fair summary of the testimony offered by appellant upon which it must rely to maintain its contention that the finding of the trial court to the effect that W. L. Witherow had no knowledge of the transfers of the property subsequent to the date of the mortgage clause in his favor was not supported by the evidence and was contrary to the evidence.

It is to be noted that Weaver's conversation with Witherow occurred on December 5th, 10 days after the fire. All that Weaver attempted to state in his testimony was Witherow's admission of knowledge of the transfers of title upon that date. He did not attempt to state when Witherow gained that information. From the testimony of this witness there is nothing to prevent the trial court from concluding that Witherow had first learned of the transfers on the day of his conversation with Weaver.

From the testimony of Collver it is clear that he entertained the fixed opinion that the title to the property had changed several times during the interval between the date of the mortgage clause and the fire, and while he was making the collections for Witherow, and that he believed Witherow had the same information. Many of the questions put to Collver by counsel for appellant put the desired answer in his mouth, and many more called for his opinions and conclusions, which he gave. It is also clear that part of his testimony was based on a custom of the bank rather than a recollection of the particular transaction. He was not once asked for the substance of any conversation he might have had with Witherow concerning the change of ownership of the property.

[3] The mortgage clause imposed upon Witherow the duty of disclosing to appellant "any change of ownership * * * which shall come to the knowledge of said mortgagee," if any duty was imposed upon him. We are considering an instrument which we are justified in assuming was prepared by the insurance carrier and under which it is attempting to escape liability under its insurance policy and work a forfeiture of the same. "It is well established that conditions which provide for a forfeiture of the interest of the assured, or those claiming under the policy, are to be strictly construed against the insurance company, and, if there is any ambiguity in a policy which may reasonably be solved by either one of two constructions, the interpretation shall be adopted which is the most favorable to the assured, or, in this particular case, to the beneficiary in the deed of trust." Welch v. British American Assurance Co., 148 Cal. 223, 82 P. 964, 965, 113 Am. St. Rep. 223, 7 Ann. Cas. 396. In the case before us the court is not required to give any more liberal interpretation to the language of the mortgage clause than its strict construction requires.

[4] Witherow did not have to be a seeker after information. He was required to give such information as came to his knowledge. In cases of this kind, knowledge has been held to be actual information of a fact, and not mere speculation or opinion or constructive notice. "Webster's Dictionary defines 'knowledge' as: 'The act or state of knowing; clear perception of fact, truth, or duty.' In the Century Dictionary we find this definition: 'The state of being or having become aware of fact or truth; intellectual recognition of or acquaintance with fact or truth.' Knowledge, then, is information. * * * as to a fact. Viewing the word 'knowledge' in the clause in the insurance policy in question in light of these definitions, the clause applies where the insured has actual knowledge of the foreclosure proceedings having been commenced, or notice given of the sale of the property insured under a deed of trust." Brown v. Connecticut Fire Ins. Co., 197 Mo. App. 317, 195 S. W. 62, 65. "It will be noted that the provision of the policy relied upon is that it shall be void in the event that foreclosure proceedings are commenced, or notice of sale given, with the knowledge of the insured. * * * Defendant, having prepared this policy and these conditions upon which a right to forfeiture is predicated, must be held to have chosen the words advisedly, and must be held to have used the word 'knowledge,' as distinguished from constructive notice, advisedly, with the intent to limit the right of forfeiture to those cases in which the insured had knowledge of the commencement of the foreclosure proceedings, or what has been sometimes held equivalent, actual notice. That the word 'knowledge,' as used in the contract, means actual knowledge, as distinguished from constructive knowledge, or constructive notice, see Fidelity & Casualty Co. v. Gate Nat. Bank, 97 Ga. 634, 25 S. E. 392, 33 L. R. A. 821, 54 Am. St. Rep. 440. That knowledge and notice are not synonymous or interchangeable, see Words and Phrases, vol. 5, page 3941." Funk v. Anchor Fire Ins. Co., 171 Iowa, 331, 153 N. W. 1048, 1052.

[5] Where an insurance policy is written in favor of an insured and has attached to it a mortgage clause providing that the loss be payable to the mortgagee as his interest may appear, there are, in effect, two separate contracts, one between the insurer and the mortgagor or owner of the property, and the other between the insurer and the mortgagee. The mortgagor may lose his right of recovery on the policy without affecting the mortgagee's rights. Secombe v. Glens Falls Insurance Co., 45 Cal. App. 611, 188 P. 305; Welch v. British American Assurance Co., supra.

In the instant case the court must look to the contract between the insurer and the mortgagee to determine their mutual rights, duties, obligations, and liabilities.

In the first paragraph of the mortgage clause it is provided that the interest of the mortgagee "shall not be invalidated by any act or neglect of the mortgagor or owners * * * nor by any change in the title or ownership of the property, nor by the occupation of the premises for purposes more hazardous than are permitted by this policy." It will be noted that in the foregoing the insurance carrier agreed with the mortgagee that change of ownership would not bar the right of the mortgagee to recover in case of loss.

In the third paragraph of the mortgage clause denominated therein as "Condition Two," we find the following: "The mortgagee (or trustee) shall notify this company of any change of ownership or occupancy or increase of hazard which shall come to the knowledge of said mortgagee (or trustee), and unless permitted by this policy, it shall be noted thereon and the mortgagee (or trustee) shall, on demand, pay the premium for such increased hazard for the term of the use thereof; otherwise this policy shall be null and void."

We assume that this paragraph seems to place on the mortgagee the duty of reporting a change of ownership coming to his knowledge. There follows the phrase, "and unless permitted by this policy it shall be noted thereon," which evidently refers to a change of ownership coming to the knowledge of the mortgagee or trustee. Then follows a provision requiring the mortgagee or trustee to pay the premium for such increased hazard, followed by the words of forfeiture. As we have seen, paragraph 1 of the mortgage clause directly provides that a change of title or ownership shall not affect the right of the mortgagee to recover in case of loss. While we do not find it necessary to so hold, it might be urged with considerable force that, in so far as the mortgagee is concerned, the covenant in paragraph 1 of the mortgage clause against forfeiture in the event of change of title or ownership is controlling over the rather ambiguous language in "Condition Two" under the terms of which the forfeiture is urged in this case, especially in view of the well-settled rule that all ambiguities in a policy must be resolved in favor of the insured and against the insurer.

We have now to determine what reasonable deductions the trial court could make from the evidence before it upon the question of whether or not W. L. Witherow had knowledge of the change of title of the insured property after his mortgage clause was issued by the insurance company. Dean Collver was collection teller of the bank with which the note was left for collection. If support of appellant's contention is found, it must be in the testimony of this witness. The trial was had two years and two months after the date of the fire and about four years after the note was first left with the bank for collection. While the witness was evidently doing his best to recall the incidents of the transaction, his memory was not very clear on many of its phases. The custom of the bank was relied upon by him to supplement his memory in at least part of his testimony. Collver's primary duty was to receive payments on the note, credit them on the back thereof, and deposit the money to Witherow's account. The trial court evidently concluded that the witness confused the making of payments by different persons with the matter of ownership of the property. He testified that the Musselman Lumber Company was said to own the property at one time and that he tried to get money out of it as an owner, while the record shows that it was not one of the owners. In the absence of any direct evidence of actual knowledge on the part of either Collver or Witherow of change of title, we cannot say that the conclusion of the trial court was contrary to the evidence or not supported by the evidence, as the burden of proving this actual knowledge by a preponderance of the evidence was on appellant.

The Supreme Court in the case of Mah See v. North American Accident Ins. Co., 190 Cal. 421, 213 P. 42, 44, 26 A. L. R. 123, in discussing the weight to be given the findings of the trial court, held as follows: "This court has frequently held that, even though all the facts are admitted or uncontradicted, nevertheless, if it appears that either one of two inferences may fairly and reasonably be deducted from those facts there still remains in the case a question of fact to be determined by the jury (or by the trial judge where the case is tried without a jury), and that the verdict of the jury or the finding of the trial judge thereon cannot be set aside by this court on the ground that it is not sustained by the evidence. (Anderson v. L. A. Transfer Co., 170 Cal. 66 [148 P. 212]). In so far as the evidence is subject to opposing inference, it must upon review thereof, be regarded in the light most favorable to the support of the judgment (Woodward [Woodard] v. Glenwood Lumber Co., 171 Cal. 513, 519, 520 [153 P. 951]; Hassell v. Bunge, 167 Cal. 365, 367, 139 P. 800.) 'In reviewing a question of this kind, all the inferences reasonably possible from the evidence favorable to the plaintiff [the prevailing party] must be indulged by this court.'"

Judgment affirmed.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Oct. 23, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Nov. 22, 1929.

1. Justices of the peace ⇨160(1)—Service of notice of appeal from justice's court on adverse party is jurisdictional.

Compliance with statute requiring service of notice of appeal from justice's court on adverse party, is necessary to jurisdiction of appellate court, except in certain special cases.

2. Justices of the peace ⇨160(4)—"Adverse party," to be served with notice of appeal from justice's court, is party to record, whose interest will be affected by reversal or modification of judgment.

An "adverse party," within statute requiring service of notice of appeal from justice's court on such party, is party to record, whose interest in subject-matter of appeal is adverse to, or will be affected by, reversal or modification of judgment or order appealed from, whether he appears on face of record as plaintiff, defendant, or intervenor.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First, Second, and Third Series, Adverse Party.]

3. Justices of the peace ⇨160(4)—Nonappealing coparty of appellant is adverse party, to be served with notice of appeal from justice's court, if his interest may be affected by reversal or modification of judgment.

A nonappealing coparty of one appealing from judgment of justice's court is an adverse party, on whom notice of appeal must be served, under the statute, if his interest may be affected by reversal or modification of judgment.

4. Justices of the peace ⇨160(4)—Successful defendants in justice's court held adverse parties, to be served with notice of appeal from judgment against codefendant.

Defendants, in whose favor judgment was rendered in justice's court, held adverse parties, on whom notice of appeal from judgment against codefendant must be served, under the statute since perfection of appeal would require them to appear and prepare defense in superior court, and might result in entirely different judgment.

Certiorari to Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Edward P. Shortall, Judge.

Application by F. L. W. MacDonald for a writ of certiorari to review an order of the Superior Court in and for the City and County of San Francisco, dismissing an appeal from a judgment of the justice's court. Writ denied.

Raymond Perry, of San Francisco, for petitioner.

J. A. Mueller, of San Francisco, for respondents.

TYLER, P. J. Certiorari to review the action of the superior court in dismissing an appeal taken from a judgment rendered in the justice's court.

In substance the petition recites that on the 28th day of July, 1928, the Golden West Credit & Adjustment Company, a corporation, commenced an action in the justice's court of the city and county of San Francisco, against J. D. Small and F. L. W. MacDonald, individually and as copartners doing business under the firm name of MacDonald & Co., and Arthur A. Goepp and F. J. Fuller, individually and as copartners doing business under the name of Fuller & Goepp. Defendants Small, MacDonald, and Goepp appeared separately in propria persona and filed their respective denials. Trial was had, and judgment was rendered against MacDonald, in favor of plaintiff and all other defendants. MacDonald filed his notice of appeal from the judgment, and served the same upon the attorney for plaintiff. Motion to dismiss the appeal was filed, upon the ground that the court had no jurisdiction to hear and determine the same, for the reason that no notice of the appeal was ever served upon the defendants in whose favor judgment was rendered; it being claimed that they were adverse parties by reason of the character of the judgment rendered, and should therefore have been served.

[1-4] The statute requires that notice of appeal must be served upon the adverse party, and compliance therewith is necessary to the jurisdiction of the appellate court, except in certain special cases, of which this is not one. Broadly stated, an "adverse party," within the meaning of the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure, is defined to be a party to the record whose interest in the subject-matter of an appeal is adverse to or will be affected by the reversal or modification of the judgment or order from which the appeal has been taken, and this, irrespective of the question of whether he appears upon the face of the record in the attitude of plaintiff, or defendant, or intervener. Fearon v. Fodera, 169 Cal. 370, 148 P. 200,

Ann. Cas. 1916D, 312; Bowering v. Adams, 126 Cal. 653, 59 P. 134; 2 Cal. Jur., p. 334. He is one whose interest in relation to the subject of the appeal is in conflict with a reversal of the order or decree appealed from, or a modification thereof. Mannix v. Tryon, 152 Cal. 31, 91 P. 994.

The question is whether the judgment gives a party something which will be taken away by a reversal. If it does so, he is an adverse party. Johnson v. Phenix Insurance Co., 146 Cal. 571, 80 P. 719. A nonappealing coparty is an adverse party, if his interest may be affected by a reversal or modification of the judgment appealed from. So here the codefendants are adverse parties for the reasons given. They were successful in the justice's court, and a different judgment might take away the fruits of their judgment. If the appeal were properly perfected, they would be required to appear and prepare their defense, as the hearing in the superior court would be a trial de novo, and might result in an entirely different judgment. Terry v. Superior Court, 110 Cal. 85, 42 P. 464; Ford & Sanborn Co. v. Braslan Seed Growers' Co., 10 Cal. App. 762, 103 P. 946.

Counsel for petitioner has cited us to Jackson v. Brown, 82 Cal. 275, 23 P. 142, Randall v. Hunter, 69 Cal. 82, 10 P. 130, and other cases, as opposing this rule. An examination of these cases will show that the codefendants had defaulted, or consented to the judgment rendered against them, or the action as to them had been dismissed. Under such circumstances they were not adverse parties, as they could not possibly be affected by a reversal of the judgment. A defendant against whom a default is entered is not an adverse party to an appeal from a judgment against other defendants, which cannot affect his interests. Fearon v. Fodera, 169 Cal. 370, 148 P. 200, Ann. Cas. 1916D, 312. A default suffered on the part of a defendant is an admission, and a reversal would not do away with such default, and as long as it stands any judgment rendered on appeal would not affect the judgment against such defaulting defendant. Randall v. Hunter, 69 Cal. 80, 10 P. 130. Section 650 of the Code of Civil Procedure in express terms provides that no notice of appeal need be served upon any party whose default has been duly entered, or who has not appeared in the action or proceeding.

Petitioners, codefendants having an interest in relation to the subject of the appeal, should have been served with notice of the appeal. Not having been served, the superior court was without jurisdiction to hear the appeal.

The writ is denied.

SWENSON v. SWENSON. (Civ. 5896.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Oct. 25, 1929.

- 1. Divorce $\hookrightarrow$ 296, 312—Trial court has wide discretion in determining custody of children, and reviewing court is powerless to interfere except in clear cases of abuse of discretion.

In dealing with questions relating to care, custody, and education of minor children of discordant parents, trial court has wide discretion with view to serving the best interests of the children, and reviewing court cannot interfere except in clearest cases of abuse of discretion.

- 2. Divorce $\hookrightarrow$ 303(1)—Court may modify divorce decree as to children's custody.

Trial court retains full jurisdiction to modify its decree of divorce as to custody of children when such modification is rendered expedient because of subsequent circumstances vitally affecting children's welfare.

- 3. Divorce $\hookrightarrow$ 303(1)—That children are first awarded mother by divorce decree does not prevent court from afterwards awarding them to father.

Fact that children are first awarded to mother by divorce decree does not preclude court from afterwards awarding them to father upon a proper showing being made, though naturally and presumptively mother is entitled to custody of children of tender years.

- 4. Divorce $\hookrightarrow$ 303(3)—Modification of divorce decree by awarding father custody of children, after mother contrived to prevent father from visiting children and attempted to ruin father's character, held not abuse of discretion.

Where original divorce decree awarded custody of minor children to mother subject to right of father, who was a lieutenant in the navy, to see and have possession of them when present, and where it appeared that mother had contrived to prevent father from seeing the children in the manner provided and was promoting charges to ruin father's character and thus destroy love and affection of children for him, trial court's modification of decree to award custody of children to father was not an abuse of discretion.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Pat R. Parker, Judge.

Milo Abercrombie Swenson recovered a decree of divorce against Lyman K. Swenson, and from an order granting defendant's petition for modification of the decree as regards the custody and maintenance of the minor children, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

C. D. Dudley, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Kenneth C. Gillis and Gillis & Edwards, all of Oakland, and Letitia R. Farber, of San Francisco, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This is an appeal by plaintiff from an order modifying a final decree of divorce in so far as its provisions relate to the custody and maintenance of two minor children, a girl and a boy, aged 6½ and 4 years, respectively, at the time the order in question was made.

The interlocutory decree was granted to appellant in May, 1925, upon the ground of extreme cruelty, and in accordance with the terms of a written stipulation theretofore entered into between the parties the decree awarded the custody of the children to appellant subject to the conditions hereinafter mentioned, and provided for the payment by respondent of a monthly allowance for their maintenance and education. Respondent is a lieutenant in the United States Navy, and at all the times herein mentioned was assigned to duty on one of the battleships attached to the Pacific fleet; and in accordance with said stipulation the provision in the decree awarding appellant the custody of the children was made subject to the condition that respondent "have the right to see and have the possession and custody of both of said minor children whenever he shall be present in the port of San Francisco, providing always that said children, and each of them, be returned to the care and custody of the plaintiff at night." In January, 1926, respondent complained in a petition filed with the court that appellant was denying him the right to see the children at the times and in the manner provided in the decree, and he therefore asked to have a provision inserted in the decree requiring appellant "to keep her attorney informed at all times where she lives in order that defendant may know where to secure the custody of the children upon his visits to San Francisco," or in default of her doing so that the custody of the children be awarded to him. Said petition was not brought on for hearing, however, owing to the fact that respondent's ship was at sea continuously for a long period following the filing of the petition. In September, 1926, the final decree of divorce was entered. It contained all of the provisions embodied in the interlocutory decree, and in November, 1926, respondent again petitioned for a modification of the provisions relating to the custody and maintenance of the children, this time asking that the same be vacated and that their sole custody be awarded to him. The application was based upon the same acts and omissions charged in the first petition, and in addition thereto it was alleged that on various occasions since the filing of the former petition he had been "frustrated in his efforts to see said minor children because of the efforts of the plaintiff above named and her mother." Furthermore it was alleged in substance that appellant was instilling into the minds of the children a feeling of unfriendliness and resentment toward him; that she had "made charges and statements against (him) of a serious and derogatory nature, all of which were untrue and made without any foundation and for no cause whatsoever"; and in this connection it was averred that if the children were allowed to remain with appellant she would continue to educate them to the end that eventually they would be completely estranged from him. For the reasons stated, respondent alleged, appellant was no longer a fit custodian of the children. Answering the petition, appellant denied its essential allegations and filed a counter petition asking that the decree be modified so as to award her the sole custody of the children "without right whatsoever in the defendant either to visit or see the children." Her petition was based upon the general allegation that respondent "is such an unfit and improper person as should be excluded from the right of visiting and seeing said children." The petitions were heard together and on the afternoon on which the hearing concluded, and before the court announced its decision on the merits of either petition, the court directed that respondent be allowed to see the children the following day; but, in disobedience of the court's direction, appellant fled to Oregon, taking the children with her; whereupon, and on January 6, 1927, the court made its order granting respondent's petition, and on the following day adjudged appellant guilty of contempt of court and issued a bench warrant directing that appellant and the children be brought forthwith before the court. On January 17, 1927, appellant took this appeal, and on April 6, 1927, an order was made staying the service of the bench warrant.

[1] It has been uniformly held that in dealing with questions relating to the care, custody, and education of minor children of discordant parents there is confided to the trial court a very extensive discretion in adapting its orders to varying circumstances and conditions with the view always to conserving the highest and best interests of the children; and that a reviewing court has not the power to interfere with the exercise of such discretion except in the clearest instance of its manifest abuse. Bancroft v. Bancroft, 178 Cal. 352, 173 P. 582; Simmons v. Simmons, 22 Cal. App. 448, 134 P. 791; Jones v. Jones, 49 Cal. App. 165, 192 P. 867; Black v. Black, 149 Cal. 224, 86 P. 505; Van Der Vliet v. Van Der Vliet, 200 Cal. 721, 254 P. 945. Appellant frankly concedes the existence of the foregoing legal principles, but she contends that in the present situation there was a total absence of evidence to show that the modification of the decree was made necessary by any change of circumstances of the parties, or that the best interests of the children would be subserved thereby, or that for any reason she had become unfit to continue as their custodian; and she argues, therefore, that in granting such modification the trial court contravened well-established legal rules governing matters of this kind.

A very broad field of investigation was opened by the numerous accusations made by the respective parties against each other, much evidence being introduced on both sides. After having examined the entire record carefully and given full consideration to all of the points urged by appellant for reversal, we are convinced that the evidence adduced in support of respondent's demand for a change in the custody of the children is legally sufficient to sustain the order made in that behalf. True, as appellant contends, no charges were made or proved reflecting upon her personal conduct, nor was any proof introduced to show that she had been neglectful of the physical well-being of the children; but evidence was adduced which tended strongly to prove that owing to a feeling of intense bitterness appellant entertained toward respondent, which antedated the granting of the interlocutory decree, she studiously and repeatedly violated the plain terms of her stipulation and the provisions of the decree, by resorting to various excuses and subterfuges in order to prevent respondent from seeing or having the children at the times and in the manner therein provided; and that eventually, in furtherance of a manifest determination to prevent him from ever seeing the children again, under any circumstances, she was instrumental in inspiring and promoting a scheme directly involving one of the children which had for its obvious purpose the ruination of respondent's character as a man, the bringing about of his complete disgrace as a naval officer, and the destruction of the love and affection which his children had theretofore manifested toward him. As stated by the trial court preliminary to the reception of the testimony, it was certain that if the charges made against respondent were true, they "would show absolute and positive unfitness of the father" to see the children at all, and if the charges were found to be false, such fact "would disclose the unfitness of the mother" to continue as the custodian. The circumstances under which these charges originated and the manner in which appellant exploited them are fully described in the record, and are of such a nature that we can conceive of no good or useful purpose in elaborating upon them here or in reviewing the testimony bearing upon the same. Suffice it to say that the trial court in unmistakable language declared the charges to be utterly groundless, and a careful analysis of the testimony has convinced us that no fair-minded person could have reached a conclusion any different. In this respect the trial court stated: " * * * I was satisfied yesterday afternoon and I am satisfied today that wherever it may be, some pernicious influence has been at work on the child. I feel without hesitation as a man and a member of a decent civilized society very little hesitation in saying to the husband that I don't think there is a particle of truth in these charges."

As to appellant's activities in exploiting said charges, evidence was introduced to show that shortly after respondent had departed upon the high seas and while he was thus absent appellant laid the charges before a bureau of the department of justice, the federal district attorney's office, and the official head of the naval district, and that after investigations were made, no action was taken, by any of these governmental agencies. She also brought them to the attention of a lawyer, a doctor, and the editor of a San Francisco daily newspaper; and finally she laid them before the judge of the superior court whose jurisdiction respondent had previously invoked in his attempt to compel appellant to comply with the terms of said decree, and upon the strength of such charges sought to have the judge enter an order depriving respondent of any further right to see the children. She was advised that such an order could be made only after a hearing in court, based upon a petition alleging the facts, but she took no steps toward that end until after respondent had instituted the present proceeding to vindicate his good name and secure the custody of the children.

[2, 3] There is no disputing the soundness of appellant's contention that naturally and presumptively the mother is entitled to the care and custody of children of tender years, but it is also the law that the trial court retains full jurisdiction to modify its decree when, as here, such modification is rendered expedient because of circumstances arising since the rendition of the decree, which vitally affect the welfare of the children. Crater v. Crater, 135 Cal. 633, 67 P. 1049; Bancroft v. Bancroft, supra. And it is also held that the fact that the children were first awarded to the mother does not preclude the trial court from afterwards awarding them to the father upon a proper showing being made. Crater v. Crater, supra.

[4] In the present case the record further discloses that the trial court's findings that said charges were wholly without foundation, and that under existing circumstances it would be detrimental to the best interests of the children to allow them to remain in appellant's custody, were based not alone upon the testimony appearing in the transcript, but also upon private interviews in chambers with one of the children in the presence and with the consent of the parties. The trial court had abundant opportunity, therefore, to observe the character and qualities of the respective parties in determining the fitness of each to have the custody of their offspring and to pass upon the other matters relating to the welfare of the children; and we have been unable to find any substantial ground upon which it could be fairly held that the wide discretion invested in the trial court has been abused in awarding the custody of the children to respondent or that any error was committed in so doing. Its order made in that behalf is therefore affirmed.

PIERCE et al. v. HILL et al. (Civ. 6756.)★

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Oct. 29, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Nov. 14, 1929.

Mandamus $\Rightarrow$ 187(6)—Petition for supersedeas to prevent enforcement of writ of mandate pending appeal, held insufficient as not stating facts showing intent to injure.

Petition for supersedeas to prevent enforcement of writ of mandate pending appeal held insufficient, where no facts were set forth to show intent to injure; nothing but conclusions having been set forth.

Petition for writ of mandate by Charles C. Pierce and others against Frank C. Hill and another. The writ was issued as prayed for, and defendants appealed, and a petition for a writ of supersedeas was filed prayed to be directed to the superior court of Los Angeles county, Leon Yankwich, judge, to prevent enforcement of the writ of mandate pending appeal. Writ of supersedeas denied.

Lillick, Olson & Graham, Frank C. Hill, and George S. Hupp, all of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Sawyer & Cluff and Wilbur Bassett, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

YORK, J. This matter comes up on a petition by appellants for a writ of supersedeas. The matter before the court was originally initiated in the superior court on petition for a writ of mandate. The writ of mandate was issued as prayed for in the said petition, and an appeal was taken from the judgment to the Supreme Court. Thereafter a petition for a writ of supersedeas was filed in the Supreme Court, but that court transferred the cause to this court. The object of the petition is to prevent the superior court from enforcing, pending appeal, its writ of mandate commanding the defendants, as president and secretary, respectively, of the California & Eastern Steamship Company, to permit the plaintiffs, by their accountants and attorneys, to inspect and examine all the books and accounts of the said California & Eastern Steamship Company.

An objection to the petition for the writ of supersedeas is filed herein on several counts; the first being that the petition does not set forth facts sufficient to entitle petitioners to the writ of supersedeas.

There are no facts set forth in the petition to show that the stockholders seek such inspection with intent to use it to the injury of the corporation; nothing but conclusions having been set forth in the petition for supersedeas in reference to such matters.

The objections to the sufficiency of the petition for the writ of supersedeas are therefore well taken, and the petition is denied.

SWEATMAN et al. v. LOS ANGELES GAS & ELECTRIC CORPORATION.
(Civ. 6241.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Oct. 18, 1929.

1. Electricity ☞16(7)—Death of workman on fifth floor of building under construction, when rod pushed through window touched electric wire, held not consequence of position of wire or lack of insulation.

In action for death of workman on fifth floor of building under construction, caused by his moving metal rod out of window, bringing it into contact with uninsulated high-voltage electric wire, workman's death held not natural consequence of position of wire or its lack of insulation.

2. Electricity ☞14(1)—Reasonable care is measure of liability of one maintaining highly charged electric wire.

Law does not require one who maintains even so dangerous an instrumentality as highly charged electric wire to anticipate at his peril every possible circumstance under which some person might make contact with such wire resulting in injury or death; reasonable care, not insurance against every possible accident, being measure of liability.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Ira F. Thompson, Judge.

Action by Charline Sweatman and another, by Georgia Sweatman, their guardian ad litem, and said Georgia Sweatman personally, against the Los Angeles Gas & Electric Corporation. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Afue McDowell, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

S. W. Guthrie, Samuel Poorman, Jr., Paul Overton, and Douglas Van Dyke, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

BURNELL, Justice pro tem. Plaintiffs, who are the surviving widow and minor children of one Robert Fulton Sweatman, appeal from a judgment rendered in favor of respondent corporation upon the sustaining of its demurrer to the second amended complaint without leave to amend. Respondent was the sole defendant upon whom process was served. The action was to recover damages for the death of Sweatman resulting from an electric shock received by him from respondent's high-voltage wires. The facts set forth in the pleading under discussion, so far as they appear material to the points involved on this appeal, are as follows:

On the 10th of October, 1923, a five-story reinforced concrete building was under construction at the southwest corner of East Eighth and Santee streets, in the city of Los Angeles. Construction of this building had been begun about July 25th of the same year. Sweatman, on the day he met his death, was working on the fifth floor of this structure, and, while moving a metal rod "into and out of" one of the windows, brought it into contact with an uninsulated high-voltage wire "then being, by defendants, placed, maintained, and operated, above a public sidewalk, and about seven feet away from the north side of said building." The complaint further alleges that the work being done by Sweatman and other laborers employed in and about the building was of a character similar to that usually performed by workmen in the construction of buildings in the vicinity "where defendants maintained similarly charged wires at like distances from other concrete buildings," and that "the probability and danger of electrical contact between such workmen and such uninsulated high-voltage electric wires were then and long before then well known to defendants, and unknown to said decedent."

Urging that, contrary to the opinion of the learned court below as expressed by its ruling on the demurrer, the complaint set up a cause of action as against respondent, appellants make the following points: First, that respondent was obliged so to arrange its wires as to safeguard the workmen employed in the erection of adjacent buildings under the circumstances presented in the complaint; second, that, under such circumstances, the wire in question constituted a dangerous instrumentality which was operated at the risk of respondent; and, third, that respondent had no exclusive use of the space above the sidewalk, and hence cannot avoid liability on the theory that Sweatman "should not have gone there or placed the rod there."

To these contentions the respondent replies: First, that there is no duty devolving upon an electric company to insulate electric wires suspended from poles in a public street in such a position that it could not reasonably be anticipated that persons would come in contact with them; and, second, that it appears from the pleading itself that any danger from the location or uninsulated condition of respondent's wire was patent to Sweatman, and that therefore his heedlessness in making contact therewith by means of an electrical conductor constituted contributory negligence.

The question, therefore, which we are called upon to determine on this appeal, has to do with the duty of one maintaining high-voltage electric wires along and over a public highway. That duty is thus defined in Fairbairn v. American River Electric Co., 170 Cal. 115, 148 P. 788, 789: "Owing to the highly destructive power of electricity when carried in quantities sufficient for power purposes, and to the fact that it is not visible to the eye or apparent to the other senses, a person or company maintaining an electric power transmission line along or over a public or private road is required to exercise a high degree of care in placing the wires so as not to interfere with traffic on the ordinary highway and so as to avoid contact with and injury to any person or object which may reasonably be expected to pass under the wires. Giraudi v. Electric I. Co., 107 Cal. 124, 40 P. 108, 28 L. R. A. 596, 48 Am. St. Rep. 114; Perham v. Portland E. Co., 33 Or. 478, 53 P. 14, 24, 40 L. R. A. 799, 72 Am. St. Rep. 730; Fitzgerald v. Edison, etc., Co., 200 Pa. 543, 50 A. 161, 86 Am. St. Rep. 732; Crosswell on Electricity, § 234. 'The companies are not insurers of the safety of the public against all dangers arising from the lawful placing in the street of appliances pertaining to the business carried on by them, but they are bound to know the danger which may naturally be caused by such use of the streets, and to guard against them by the exercise of all the foresight and caution which can be reasonably expected of prudent men, under the circumstances.' 1 Joyce on Electricity, § 438; Denver v. Sherret, 88 F. 233, 31 C. C. A. 499. 'The degree of care required of such companies, under the rule that they must exercise reasonable care, varies according to the facts and circumstances of the case, having in view the serious results which may ensue as a consequence of negligence.' 1 Joyce on Electricity, § 438a. The standard to be attained is that of ordinary and reasonable care, and this means such care as a reasonably careful and prudent person, having in view the dangers to be avoided and the likelihood of injury therefrom, would exercise, under the circumstances, in order to prevent injury. Where death may be caused by an agency lawfully in use, ordinary care requires that every means known, or that with reasonable inquiry would be known, must be used to prevent it."

In the Fairbairn Case, again quoting from the opinion, "the alleged negligence of the defendant was the maintaining of a power line carrying a heavy current of electricity along a public road with the wires too close to the surface of the ground, and without covering the wires with insulating material, in consequence whereof the boom of a hay derrick, which the plaintiffs and others were passing under said wires to enter said road from a lane leading into it, came into close proximity to the wires and electricity therefrom passed down the boom cable into the body of the plaintiff, causing the injuries complained of." Reversing a judgment for the plaintiff, the Supreme Court noted that "the wires were in plain sight, the plaintiff and those with him at the time saw them, guessed at their height above ground, and were endeavoring to bring the top of the derrick boom under the wires without coming in contact with them." The lowest of these wires was 27 feet 8 $\frac{3}{4}$ inches above the surface of the ground. The court said that the defendant could not be charged with negligence unless, under the circumstances, the placing or maintaining of its wires at that height was negligence, and that it was apparent from all the facts in the case that the defendant had no reasonable cause to apprehend that the objects passing along, into, or crossing the road would be high enough to come into dangerous proximity to its wires.

[1] The complaint in the instant case does not disclose the height above the street of the wire, contact with which caused the untimely death of Sweatman, but it may be fairly assumed, from the fact that he was working on the fifth story at the time of the fatal accident and that the wire is alleged to have been "about seven feet away from the north side of said building, and within such short distance from herein mentioned windows then in said building that said wire obstructed the moving into and out of said building and windows, of metal rods," etc.; that the wire was a considerable distance from the surface of the street, so far above it, in fact, that no danger was to be apprehended by reason of "contact with and injury to any person or object which (might) reasonably be expected to pass under the wire." The law does not require one who maintains even so dangerous an instrumentality as a highly charged electric wire to anticipate, at his peril, every possible fortuitous circumstance under which some person might make a contact with such wire, resulting in injury or even death. Reasonable care, not insurance against every possible accident, is the measure of his liability. Thus, in Minter v. San Diego Consolidated Gas, etc., Co., 180 Cal. 723, 182 P. 749, 750, it is said: "If, guided by those considerations which ordinarily regulate the conduct of human affairs, an ordinarily prudent person would have had reasonable ground to suspect that the wires so placed would cause injury, the plaintiff can be said to have proved a breach of duty." We do not think that the respondent here can be said to have had reasonable ground to suspect that some one would be apt to make contact with its wire by means of a metal bar extended from a fifth-story window of a neighboring building. To employ the language used by the court in the case last cited: "We are of the opinion, * * * that it could not be fairly and reasonably found that an ordinarily prudent person would have considered additional precautions necessary under the circumstances."

The facts in the Minter Case bear some analogy to those set forth in the complaint here. The deceased, a boy 16 years of age, was killed by coming in contact with the defendant's wires while climbing a tree growing on the highway immediately in front of his father's premises. His death was alleged to have been caused by the negligence of the defendant in maintaining imperfectly protected wires at a improper distance from the tree. This tree was a eucalyptus, about 2½ feet in diameter near the ground and about 10 inches in diameter at a height of 35 feet. The defendant maintained power wires strung on wooden poles set along the highway on the plaintiff's side of the road. One of these wires, carrying 2,300 volts, was strung at a height of about 27 feet above the ground and at a distance from the tree of from 14 to 16 inches. It was insulated, but the insulation did not make it safe to touch, "and was particularly inefficacious when it was wet." Another wire was strung 6 or 8 feet higher and at a distance of about 3 feet from the tree. This wire carried 11,000 volts, and was not insulated. There was a crotch in the tree between the two sets of wires. Reversing a judgment in the plaintiff's favor, the court referred with approval to the rule laid down in Fairbairn v. American River Electric Co., supra, and said: "The plaintiff appears to maintain the proposition that, because a person might climb the tree without committing a trespass, it was incumbent upon the defendant to assume the burden of keeping its wires so protected that a climber would not be subjected to risk. That, however, is not the test. The question is, not what a person might lawfully do, but what the defendant was bound, in the exercise of reasonable prudence, to assume that a person would be likely to do."

In Curtis on Electricity, § 510, it is said: "* * * It is not necessary to insulate wires which are so placed that no one could reasonably be expected to come in proximity to them. * * * Insufficient or worn insulation is worse than none, for sometimes it gives the appearance of security, when, in fact, it is as dangerous as a bare wire." And the same author, in section 511, says: "It is to be noted that the duty of insulation is not absolute under all circumstances. The imposition of the duty as to places where it reasonably may be anticipated that persons will come in contact with the deadly wire naturally implies that there is no such duty of insulation at other places. Thus it follows that the obligation of the electric company is alternative in its nature. Either the wire must be insulated, or it must be so located as to be, comparatively speaking, harmless."

In Wetherby v. Twin State Gas & Electric Co., 83 Vt. 189, 75 A. 8, 10, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1220, 21 Ann. Cas. 1092, the decedent met his death as the result of coming in contact with a high-voltage electric wire maintained by defendant across a bridge 2 feet 3 inches out and away from any part of the bridge structure, and a little further than that from the outside of the bridge trusses which extended up and constituted a side of the bridge. Decedent, a boy of 13, was sitting upon a guard rail 8 inches in width that ran along the bridge just inside the trusses opposite a cross-arm carrying electric wires, which guard rail rested on the railroad ties of the bridge and constituted the footwalk thereon. Decedent, in changing his position, in some way came in contact with the nearest wire. In holding that plaintiff could not recover, the court ruled that the "duty of providing insulation, where it exists, is limited to the insulation of wires at points where there is reason to apprehend that a person may come in contact with the wires, and the place of contact under consideration was not such a point."

In New Omaha, etc., Electric Light Co. v. Anderson, 73 Neb. 84, 102 N. W. 89, 96, 9 Am. Elec. Cas. 306, action was brought for damages for the death of a fireman as the result of an electric shock which he received while lowering a ladder in a public alley at the scene of a fire, by reason of such ladder coming in contact with defendant's electric wires. In reversing judgment in plaintiff's favor, the court said: "If the injury to this fireman had arisen when he was engaged merely in working upon the surface of the street, instead of raising a ladder in the air to touch these wires, another question would be presented. The defendant was only authorized to make such use of the alley as would not interfere with its use as a highway. It must put no dangerous constructions near enough to the highway to imperil those rightfully passing. Danger to firemen pushing a metallic bound ladder against the wires, it had no duty to provide for, except by furnishing a lineman to disconnect them if deemed necessary by those in charge of the fire extinguishing operations."

In Geroski v. Allegheny County Light Co., 247 Pa. 304, 93 A. 333, 339, L. R. A. 1915D, 560, action was brought by a widow to recover damages for the death of her husband, the janitor of a hall. The hall fronted on a public street, and upon the front of its roof there was a flagpole. Defendant's 10,000-volt electric wires were strung upon poles along the side of the street in front of the hall, 12 or 13 feet horizontally from the building and about 29 feet above the ground. The flagpole extended 8 or 10 feet higher than the wires. There was a narrow board walk in front of the hall, and defendant's poles were placed between it and the roadway. The decedent was about to raise the flag on the pole. A rope had previously been used for that purpose, but decedent attempted to remove it and replace it with a piece of copperplated wire. He attached an end of the wire to the rope and began to pull it up. When the wire reached the top of the pole it became entangled, and in trying to loosen it decedent stepped backward from the porch of the hall, where he had been standing, to the board walk and thence into the roadway, pulling and shaking the wire and rope. While so engaged, he received the fatal shock as a result of the wire which he was hoisting coming in contact with defendant's electric wires, which, it was alleged, were not properly insulated. In reversing the judgment in favor of plaintiff, the court said in part: "Can it be said in the present case that appellant ought to have reasonably anticipated that any person upon the ground would come in contact with its electric wires carried at a height of 29 feet in the air, and 12 feet distant from the building? * * * If not, then it follows, under what may properly be regarded as the well-settled doctrine of our cases, that there can be no recovery by plaintiff, and that judgment should have been entered for the defendant. Thus in Trout v. Electric Co., 236 Pa. 506, 509, 84 A. 967, 968 (42 I. R. A. [N. S.] 713), it appeared that a 13 year old boy was endeavoring to detach a kite from an electric wire on which it had been caught, when he received a shock which resulted in his death. The wire was stretched upon poles, at a distance of about 4 feet 6 inches from the outside edge of the cornice of the house. The boy lay down on the cornice and threw a corn cob tied to the end of a string over the electric wire and pulled it toward him. When the wire came within reach he touched it, and immediately received the electric shock. This court, speaking through Mr. Justice Moschzisker, said [p. 509 of 236 Pa., 84 A. 968]: 'The act of the boy in getting hold of the wire was wholly unrelated to any act of the defendant in connection therewith. Had the wire been so close to the house that the boy might naturally have come in contact with it while playing about the roof, it might be contended that its condition was the proximate cause of his death. But such was not the case; all of the defendant's wires were so far out from the house that they could not possibly have been reached by a full-grown man, much less a boy of 13. The boy could have run and played all over the roof without the possibility of his coming in contact with these wires. It was an original independent act of the deceased which could not reasonably have been anticipated that brought about this most sad accident, and this act was not induced by, or did not follow as a natural sequence to, any negligence of the defendant in connection with its wires. Under such circumstances there could be no recovery, and the defendant was entitled to binding instructions, as requested.'"

[2] It cannot be said that the death of Sweatman was the natural consequence of the position of respondent's wire with respect either to the surface of the street or the building under process of erection, or to its lack of insulation. Obviously, he could not have touched the wire with his hand while standing on the fifth floor of the building. In other words, the position of the wire rendered it safe in its uninsulated condition under all ordinary circumstances. It was only when decedent interposed a new, independent cause, by swinging out from the wall of the building a metal rod which he was handling therein or drawing in through the window, that he was able to make contact with defendant's electric wire. The interposition of this new and independent cause could not have been anticipated by defendant. It does not occur, in the natural order of things, that workmen engaged in building operations in cities, adjacent to electric wires maintained in the streets by public service companies, are electrocuted by coming in contact therewith. The complaint sets forth that it is the usual thing for such building operations to be conducted in Los Angeles in like proximity to similarly charged electric wires in the streets, but there is no allegation that any similar injury has ever resulted therefrom, and therefore no such injury was reasonably to be anticipated. As said in Oakland Bank of Savings v. Murfey, 68 Cal. 455, 9 P. 843, 847: "If the wrong and resulting damages are not known by common experience to be usually and naturally in sequence, and the damage does not, according to the ordinary course of events, follow from the wrong, then the wrong and the damage are not sufficiently conjoined or concatenated, as cause and effect, to support the action." And as stated in Polloni v. Ryland, 28 Cal. App. 51, 151 P. 296, 298: "'An injury that is not the natural consequence of the negligence complained of, and that would not have resulted from it, but for the interposition of some new, independent cause that could not have been anticipated,' is not actionable."

We have carefully examined the authorities cited and relied on by appellants; they are all distinguishable from the case at bar, and none of them is in conflict with the principles hereinabove discussed. Thus in Wales v. Pacific Electric Motor Co., 130 Cal. 521, 62 P. 932, 1120, the wire which caused the injury was being maintained in violation of an ordinance; in Citizens' Electric, etc., Co. v. Bell, 70 Ohio St. 482, 72 N. E. 1155, a broken feed wire, connected at one end with the defendant's main wire, had been negligently left hanging down a pole with its exposed end lying in the grass of the parking in the sidewalk, where a 7-year old child came in contact with it; in Giraudi v. Electric Imp. Co., 107 Cal. 120, 40 P. 108, 28 L. R. A. 596, 48 Am. St. Rep. 114, the fatal wire was, at the point where the accident occurred, but 2 feet above the roof of a hotel building, where the plaintiff came in contact with it while securing his employer's signs at night and during a heavy storm; and in Commonwealth Electric Co. v. Rose, 114 Ill. App. 181, affirmed in 214 Ill. 545, 73 N. E. 780, electric light wires were maintained in a manner contrary to an ordinance of the city, resulting in the death of a telephone lineman by reason of the telephone wire on which he was working coming in contact therewith. While all of these cases are decided, at least in part, upon the theory that it is the duty of one maintaining electric wires to insulate or otherwise protect them from contact at places where others may reasonably be expected to go, none of them enunciates a rule that such duty extends to an insurance against all risk, whether reasonably to be expected or not.

The learned trial court did not err in its ruling on the demurrer, and the judgment must be affirmed.

Judgment affirmed.

HOFFMAN v. SOUTHERN PAC. CO. et al.*
(Civ. 3815.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Oct. 15, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Nov. 14, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Dec. 9, 1929.

1. Railroads $\S$ 327(7)—Vehicle driver need not actually stop under any and all circumstances before crossing railway track.

Driver of vehicle is not required under any and all circumstances to actually stop before crossing railway track.

2. Railroads $\S$ 333(1)—Whether one crossing railroad track ahead of approaching train is contributorily negligent depends on whether under circumstances reasonably prudent person would have done so.

Test to determine contributory negligence of one attempting to cross railroad track ahead of approaching train is question whether under such circumstances a reasonably prudent person would have undertaken to do so.

3. Railroads $\S$ 350(30)—Contributory negligence of person attempting to cross railroad track ahead of approaching train, where different conclusions may reasonably be drawn from circumstances, held for jury.

Where circumstances of particular case are of such a nature that different conclusions may reasonably be drawn as to prudence of person in attempting to cross railroad track, question of contributory negligence is for determination of jury.

4. Railroads $\S$ 327(7)—Vehicle driver, where nothing obstructs view at railroad crossing for distance amply sufficient to allow time to cross, held not required to stop before crossing.

Where there is nothing to obstruct one's view of railroad track for distance from proposed crossing amply sufficient to preclude possibility of train arriving before one could cross track with reasonable safety, driver of vehicle need not stop machine before crossing track.

5. Railroads $\S$ 328(8)—Greater caution should be observed in crossing railway track when dense fog obscures view.

When dense fog obscures view, greater caution should be observed in crossing railway track than might suffice at time atmosphere is clear.

6. Railroads $\S$ 350(26)—Contributory negligence of automobile driver in failing to stop machine or engine before crossing railroad track in fog held for jury.

Where, on morning that train and automobile collided at crossing, dense fog prevailed and train was late and driver of automobile had knowledge of customary time that train approached crossing, contributory negligence of driver in failing to stop automobile or engine before attempting to cross track held for jury.

7. Railroads $\S$ 327(7)—That stopping automobile before reaching crossing would have prevented collision with train held not conclusive of driver's negligence.

Fact that, if automobile had been stopped just before reaching railroad crossing, collision with train would not have occurred, held in itself not conclusive of automobile driver's negligence.

8. Railroads $\S$ 348(4)—Evidence held to sustain implied finding that train did not give statutory signals before collision with plaintiff's automobile at crossing (Civ. Code, $\S$ 486).

In action to recover for injuries sustained when plaintiff's automobile was struck by train at crossing, evidence held sufficient to support implied finding of failure to blow whistle or ring bell of train before accident, as required by Civ. Code, $\S$ 486.

9. Pleading $\S$ 245(3)—Permitting trial amendment of complaint to include demand for damages for necessary medical aid held not error, where original complaint alleged severe, permanent injuries.

Permitting amendment to complaint during process of trial, in action for injury sustained when train collided with plaintiff's automobile at crossing, so as to include demand for damages for medical aid in performance of a necessary surgical operation resulting from injury sustained, held not abuse of discretion, since under original complaint alleging plaintiff was severely and permanently injured evidence of permanent injuries was admissible.

10. Damages $\S$ 160—Amendment to complaint for injuries sustained when plaintiff's automobile was struck by train held sufficient to admit testimony regarding necessary cost of future medical services (Civ. Code, $\S$ 3283).

Amendment to complaint, in action for injuries sustained when train struck plaintiff's automobile at crossing, demanding damages for medical aid in performance of necessary surgical operation resulting from injury sustained, held sufficient upon which to admit testimony regarding necessary cost of future medical services, in view of Civ. Code, $\S$ 3283, authorizing recovery of damages reasonably certain to occur in future.

11. Damages ⚡191—Evidence held to support judgment for necessary future expenses reasonably certain to accrue as result of injuries sustained when train struck automobile at crossing.

In action for injuries resulting when train struck plaintiff's automobile at railroad crossing, evidence held to support judgment with respect to necessary future expense reasonably certain to accrue as result of accident.

12. Appeal and error ⚡1048(3)—Permitting physician to testify that plaintiff's condition resulted from accident held not erroneous under circumstances, though hypothetical question did not fully state facts.

Permitting physician to testify, in response to hypothetical question, that plaintiff's present condition and injuries resulted from accident, though hypothetical question did not fully state facts involved upon which opinion was necessarily based, where all remaining necessary facts had been previously testified to by witness and it was apparent that opinion was based also upon physician's personal examination, treatment, and knowledge of patient's condition, held not erroneous.

13. Appeal and error ⚡662(1)—Court minutes control controversy regarding demand for jury on certain date.

Court minutes must control where there is controversy regarding demand for jury on certain date.

14. Jury ⚡25(9)—Jury having been properly demanded for first trial, demand was not required to be renewed at subsequent trial (Code Civ. Proc. § 631).

Where proper demand for jury was made at first trial of action for personal injuries, it was not necessary to repeat demand at time case was finally set for trial, since original demand was continuing in effect, and Code Civ. Proc. § 631, providing that constitutional right to jury trial is waived where proper demand is not made at time cause is first set upon trial calendar, was inapplicable.

15. Jury ⚡70(2)—It is preferable to order trial jury drawn from regular panel.

It is sound and preferable practice to order trial jury to be drawn from regular panel.

16. Appeal and error ⚡922—Absent formal showing that special venire was not necessarily drawn, it must be assumed trial court correctly denied defendant's motion for jury from regular panel (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 214, 226).

In absence of formal showing that special venire was not necessarily drawn pursuant to specific authorization of Code Civ. Proc. § 226, it must be assumed trial court did not abuse discretion in ordering special venire instead of jury from regular panel pursuant to section 214, and that denial of defendant's motion for jury drawn from general panel was not prejudicial or erroneous.

17. Jury ⚡85—Refusing to discharge juror shown to be aunt of clerk employed by plaintiff's counsel held not error, where no prejudice was shown and juror was qualified on voir dire.

Refusing to discharge juror on motion to that effect after jury had been impaneled and trial commenced, on ground juror was aunt of clerk employed in office of one of plaintiff's attorneys, where jury had been qualified on voir dire and no prejudice was shown, held not abuse of discretion.

18. Jury ⚡97(2)—Presumption of bias and prejudice as matter of law does not arise from fact juror's niece is employed by litigant's counsel.

Merely because juror's niece is employed in office of litigant's counsel does not raise presumption as matter of law that juror is biased and prejudiced in favor of such litigant.

19. Appeal and error ⚡207—Defendants failing to request instruction to disregard alleged misconduct of plaintiff's counsel could not complain of such misconduct on appeal.

Where defendants in action for injuries failed to request court to instruct jury to disregard expositions of counsel for plaintiff consisting of interruptions on cross-examination and court instructed that judgment must be rendered solely upon evidence at trial, defendants on appeal could not complain of counsel's misconduct.

20. Appeal and error ⚡1050(1)—Permitting witness to say that, if headlight of locomotive during fog had cast rays along track, witness could have seen it, held not prejudicial error.

In action for injuries sustained when plaintiff's automobile was struck by train at railroad crossing on foggy morning, permitting witness to say that, if headlight of engine had cast rays of light along track in front of automobile, he could have seen it, though possibly stating a conclusion, held not prejudicial error.

21. Damages ⚡166(1)—Evidence showing nature of soil at crossing where train struck automobile held admissible, where gravel and dirt found in plaintiff's wounds tended to show seriousness of injuries.

Permitting plaintiff, in action for injuries sustained when automobile was struck by train at crossing, to show nature of soil at crossing, held not error, since gravel and dirt found in plaintiff's wounds tended to show seriousness of injuries.

22. Damages ⚡172(1)—Nature of plaintiff's employment and cost of hiring substitute during incapacity held admissible as tending to establish measure of damages.

In action for injuries sustained when train struck plaintiff's automobile at crossing, evidence showing nature of plaintiff's employment as well digger and cost of hiring man to take his place while incapacitated from injuries held admissible as tending to establish measure of damages.

23. Appeal and error ⚡1050(1)—Evidence of subsequent injury from blow on head where plaintiff sustained fractured skull in railroad crossing accident, though incompetent, held not prejudicial.

In action for injuries sustained when automobile was struck by train at crossing, evidence of plaintiff's subsequent injury from blow on head, though it may not have been competent unless tending to show plaintiff was more susceptible to injury on account of sensitive condition of head owing to fracture of skull, held not prejudicial error.

24. Appeal and error ⇨1050(1)—Permitting witness to describe position and condition of automobile in ditch 24 hours after collision with train held not prejudicial error under circumstances.

In action to recover for injury sustained when plaintiff's automobile was struck by train at crossing, permitting witness to describe position and condition of automobile as it lay in ditch at crossing 24 hours after accident, without showing that no substantial change occurred in the meantime, though erroneous, held not prejudicial error, where automobile was completely demolished by collision and reasonable value was stipulated.

25. Railroads ⇨348(1)—Testimony showing automobile after collision with train was in second gearing held properly admitted as corroborating driver's statement that he so shifted before collision.

In action for injuries sustained when automobile was struck by train at crossing, testimony that machine after accident was found to be in second gear held competent as tending to corroborate plaintiff's statement that he shifted to that gearing immediately before collision.

26. Railroads ⇨351(2)—Instruction in effect telling jury judgment for plaintiff might be based alone upon finding of excessive speed of train colliding with automobile held error under circumstances.

In action for injuries sustained when automobile was struck by train at railroad crossing, instruction in effect telling jury that judgment for plaintiff might be based alone upon finding that train was running at excessive rate of speed at time of accident, even though jury determined that whistle was blown or bell rung as required by law, where there were no facts or circumstances warranting finding of negligence in running at excessive rate of speed, held prejudicial error.

27. Railroads ⇨327(2)—Careless inattention of automobile driver approaching railroad crossing held not legal excuse for failure to hear statutory signals.

Fact that occupants of automobile struck by train at railroad crossing were carelessly inattentive held no legal excuse for not hearing whistle or bell of train before approaching crossing.

28. Railroads ⇨328(2)—Driver of automobile making noise sufficient to impair hearing of statutory signals at railroad crossing held required to stop machine and engine to purge himself of contributory negligence.

If noise of automobile approaching railroad crossing impaired hearing of driver or occupants so that they could not hear statutory signals required to be given by train when approaching crossing, driver would be required to stop automobile and engine before crossing track to purge himself of charge of contributory negligence.

29. Railroads ⇨312(3)—Statute requiring giving of signals by locomotive when approaching railroad crossing held not to require both blowing of whistle and ringing of bell (Civ. Code, § 486).

Civ. Code, § 486, requiring locomotives to be equipped with bell and whistle and requiring such bell or whistle to be sounded when locomotive approaches within certain distance of crossing, held not to require both blowing of whistle and ringing of bell.

30. Railroads ⇨316(3)—Mere rapid speed of train traveling through open country unobstructed by physical objects notwithstanding fog held not negligence.

In absence of ordinance or statute to contrary, and physical objects obstructing hearing or crowd of people or thickly populated portion of city, mere rapid speed of train traveling through open country unobstructed by physical objects regardless of presence of fog held not negligence.

31. Railroads ⇨316(2)—Railroad company held not required to slacken speed of trains at country crossings.

Railroad company held under no legal obligation to slacken speed of its trains at country crossings.

32. Railroads ⇨316(3)—Train held not required to stop or slacken speed at country crossing merely because of presence of fog.

Though presence of fog or unusual climatic conditions which obscure view or impede hearing make it more important that locomotive approaching crossing blow whistle or ring bell as warning, such warning signals are ordinarily deemed adequate notice, and train is not required to stop or slacken speed at country crossings merely because of presence of fog.

Appeal from Superior Court, Merced County; E. N. Rector, Judge.

Action by R. A. Hoffman against the Southern Pacific Company and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Reversed.

Hearing denied by Supreme Court; LANGDON, J., voting for a transfer.

Superseding opinion in 279 P. 474.

Levinsky & Jones, of Stockton, and Devlin & Devlin and A. I. Diepenbrock, all of Sacramento, for appellants.

W. R. Dunn, of Sacramento, amicus curiæ. F. M. Ostrander, Philip M. Carey, and W. F. Ostrander, all of Oakland, for respondent.

ROLFE L. THOMPSON, J. This is a rehearing from an opinion (279 P. 474) rendered in an appeal from a judgment for damages for injuries which were sustained in a railroad crossing casualty. The facts are related in greater detail in the opinion which was rendered in an appeal from a former judgment in the same case reported in 84 Cal. App. 337, 258 P. 397.

The defendant Southern Pacific Company's Oakdale branch of its railway system extends from Merced to Stockton through an open flat country. According to schedule the regular passenger train left Merced daily at 7 o'clock a. m., but on the morning of the accident this train was about 25 minutes late in leaving Merced. The plaintiff resided on the Cox Ferry highway, three miles from Merced, for more than a year prior to the accident and was therefore familiar with the train schedule. In the locality of plaintiff's home this highway paralleled the railway track at a distance of 50 feet therefrom. On the morning of the accident a dense fog prevailed, obscuring the landscape so that it was difficult to discern an object more than a hundred feet distant. At 7:30 o'clock the plaintiff in his Buick automobile accompanied by a companion by the name of Hawkins, who sat upon the front seat by his side, left home and drove along the Cox Ferry road at a speed of 25 or 30 miles an hour, to a cross-road about a mile distant, where he turned abruptly to his left up a slight ascent and across the railroad track. The automobile was an open car. The train was approaching from their rear. Neither of the occupants of the machine heard a crossing whistle or bell or the rumbling of the train. They were not expecting it at that time. Both of them, however, claim to have carefully listened for a train as they approached the track, and assert that they looked down the track in the direction of Merced and saw no train. Except for the dense fog there was no obstacle to obscure a clear view of the track for the distance of more than a mile. Before reaching the track the speed of the automobile was reduced to six or eight miles an hour. When the front wheels of the machine reached a point five or six feet from the nearest rail, suddenly the headlight of the approaching engine appeared through the fog about 100 feet away. The train was rapidly bearing down upon them. At about the same time both occupants of the machine saw this light and had a glimpse of the engine upon their left. Both exclaimed with surprise. Doubtful of his ability to stop the machine in time to avoid a collision, and fearing that an attempt to increase the speed of the car would kill the engine, in the emergency, the plaintiff promptly shifted the clutch into the intermediate gearing and accelerated his speed. At the same time Hawkins opened the door at his right and jumped from the machine. As the car crossed the track, the pilot of the engine struck the rear end of the automobile and hurled it into the ditch. The plaintiff was seriously injured. Chief among his injuries was a triangular fracture of the frontal bone of the skull penetrating to the brain, exposing the cerebrum, and requiring the trephining of the skull. Upon the trial the jury rendered judgment for the plaintiff.

The appellant seriously contends that the record will not support the implied finding of the jury to the effect that the defendant was guilty of negligence in failing to ring a bell or blow a whistle as required by section 486 of the Civil Code. It is also contended that the court erred in permitting the amendment of the complaint; in issuing a special venire for trial jurors; in admission of evidence, and in giving, refusing to give, and modifying instructions. The chief contention and the serious question is whether the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence in failing to stop his machine before attempting to cross the railroad track in a dense fog.

[1] The law does not require the driver of a vehicle to actually stop under any and all circumstances, before crossing a railway track. There is no absolute duty on the part of one to first stop before he attempts to cross the track. In 33 Cyc. 1010 it is said: "By the weight of authority it is not necessarily negligence on the part of one about to cross a railroad track to fail to stop in addition to looking and listening for trains, unless under the existing circumstances he cannot listen without stopping; but whether such a traveler must stop in addition to looking and listening depends upon the facts and circumstances of each particular case and so is usually a question for the jury. So it is held that a person need not stop before going on the track if he can look and listen effectively without doing so."

[2-6] The test as to the existence of contributory negligence on the part of one who attempts to cross a railroad track ahead of an approaching train is the question as to whether under such circumstances a reasonably prudent person would have undertaken to do so. When the circumstances of a particular case are of such a nature that different conclusions may reasonably be drawn as to the prudence of a person in attempting to cross a railroad track, the question of contributory negligence becomes one for the determination of the jury. Murray v. So. Pac. Co., 177 Cal. 1, 169 P. 675; Whitney v. N. W. Pac. Ry. Co., 39 Cal. App. 139, 178 P. 326; Firth v. So. Pac. Co., 44 Cal. App. 511, 186 P. 815; 41 A. L. R. 420, 424 [note]; 22 R. C. L. 1034, § 267; 3 Elliott on Railroads, 358, § 1167. Where there is nothing to obstruct one's view of a railroad track for a distance from a proposed crossing amply sufficient to preclude the possibility of a train arriving before one could cross the track with reasonable safety, there is no reason for the driver of a vehicle to stop the machine before crossing the track. 22 R. C. L. 1034, supra. But when one's view is obstructed by buildings or other obstacles, or one's hearing is impaired by the noise of the operating of the machine which is being driven, it may be negligence for the driver not to stop so as to enable him to secure reasonably safe vision and hearing of an approaching train. Barnett v. A., T. & S. F. Ry. (Cal. App.) 278 P. 443; Stephenson v. N. W. Pac. Ry. (Cal. App.) 278 P. 263; 22 R. C. L. 1030, § 262; 3 Elliott on Railroads, 358, § 1167; 33 Cyc. 1019; Koster v.

So. Pac. Co. (Cal. Sup.) 279 P. 788. When a dense fog obscures one's view, greater caution should be observed in crossing a railway track than might suffice at a time when the atmosphere is clear. Hoffman v. Southern Pac. Ry. Co., 84 Cal. App. 337, 258 P. 397; 19 A. L. R. 872, note. Under the circumstances of the present case, however, we are inclined to think it may not be said as a matter of law that the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence in failing to stop his machine or his engine before attempting to cross the track. In other words, this case appears to present a situation which properly requires the question of contributory negligence to be presented to the jury for its determination. It is self-evident that the plaintiff's vision down the track would be neither improved nor impaired by the mere stopping of his machine. His vision could penetrate the fog no farther from a stationary machine than from one which was in motion.

The case of Koster v. So. Pac. Co. (Cal. Sup.) 279 P. 788, determined that the driver of an automobile who lost his life in a railroad crossing collision was guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law. The facts of that case may, however, be distinguished from those of the present case. The accident occurred in the city of San Jose. The deceased had made daily trips in his automobile over this crossing and was familiar with its dangers as well as the train schedule. The four corners of the street which was intersected by the track at this point were occupied by factory buildings, two of which were in active operation at that time and were creating considerable noise by the running of the machinery and the exhausting of steam. There was evidence that the noise from these factories was so great as to prevent one who was riding in a closed car at this crossing from hearing the sound of the whistle or the bell. The approach to the crossing from the direction in which the deceased was driving was hidden by a building and a high board fence for the distance of a full block. There were three parallel tracks at this crossing, on one of which a box car was stationed. From a point 243 feet north of the crossing, a view of the track in the direction from which the train was approaching was obstructed until a machine reached a point some 12 to 20 feet from the track. In violation of an ordinance limiting the speed of a motor vehicle to 15 miles an hour at crossings within the city, the deceased was said to have driven his car on to the track ahead of the approaching train at from 30 to 40 miles an hour, without attempting to stop. With knowledge of the presence of these obstructions to both the sight and the sound of an approaching train and that a train was then about due to arrive, it was clearly contributory negligence on the part of the deceased to have attempted to cross the track without stopping. No such condition of obstruction to sound, at least, existed in the present case.

[7] In this case while it might be a question ordinarily open to doubt, there is substantial evidence upon which the jury was warranted in concluding the plaintiff's engine made less noise while the automobile was running than it would have made while merely idling with the machine stationary. We are of the opinion that the evidence may be said to reasonably support the implied conclusion of the jury that the engine of the automobile while it was in motion was so noiseless as to impair the hearing of its occupants only slightly, and to therefore make it unreasonable to hold as a matter of law that it was negligence not to have actually shut off the gas and stopped the engine entirely before attempting to cross the track. The appellant argues that if the machine had been stopped just before reaching the crossing, the accident would not have occurred. But this is not conclusive of negligence. It is equally true that if the train had been on time the morning of the accident, or ten seconds later than it was, the accident would not have occurred. The real question to determine is whether the plaintiff could have seen or heard the approaching train to better advantage if he had stopped his machine; and whether a reasonably prudent person would under such circumstances have stopped his engine or his machine before attempting to cross the track. We are inclined to think that reasonable minds might differ as to whether one should or should not have stopped the machine under such circumstances and that the question of contributory negligence was therefore a question for the jury.

[8] The chief element of negligence on the part of the defendant railroad company which is relied upon is the charge that the whistle was not blown and the bell was not rung before reaching the crossing. There was a serious conflict on this subject. The plaintiff testified that up to the time of the crash "there was no whistle blown or bell rang." He claimed to have been carefully watching and listening for the train; that before reaching the crossing he looked "back down the track towards Merced to see if the train was coming."

"Q. Did you see any? A. No, sir. * * *

"Q. State what observation you made in going up the grade? * * * A. I was looking for the train all the time.

"Q. When for the first time did you see any train, if you did see any? A. Not until I got on the track, or almost on it.

"Q. Then to your best knowledge, where was the train? A. About 80 or 100 feet down the track. * * * I saw the headlight, is the first thing I saw. * * * I shifted the gears to second as soon as I saw the headlight. * * * I stepped on the gas with my foot, just as quick as I shifted. * * * I turned the wheel as far as I could * * * to the right."

The plaintiff testified that if he had suddenly stepped on the accelerator while the machine was slowly going up grade it would have killed the engine. Mr. Hawkins, the companion of plaintiff, testified that both he and the plaintiff looked and listened for the train, and although the machine made no unusual noise, he heard no whistle or bell until immediately preceding the crash. Mr. Walker lived 200 yards from the crossing, and at the time of the accident was preparing to drive his own car out of his yard on his way to work. He was listening for the train and said he heard "a very indistinct whistle which I presume was about the cement plant," one mile distant. He had driven out toward the crossing, but did not see the train until it was about 80 feet away. In response to the question, "Why didn't you see it before?" he replied, "Because it was too foggy." He also testified that except for the faint sound of the whistle at the cement plant one mile away, he heard no other whistle or bell until just at the time of the crash. Both Ernest and John Campodonica, father and son, who lived only 25 or 30 yards from the scene of the accident, the father being engaged in the yard, and the son looking out of the window toward the crossing, heard neither whistle nor bell until immediately prior to the accident. Arthur, the son of plaintiff, and his wife, Josie, who were at their home, half a mile from the crossing and within 100 feet of the track where the train passed, testified that while they usually heard the morning train, they heard no whistle or bell on this occasion. Mr. Dysart, who also lived in the same vicinity, was working about his stable 200 feet from the track at the time the train passed, and testified to substantially the same thing. Since the fog was so dense on the morning of the accident, the jury may have assumed the engineer did not see the whistling post, and therefore may have omitted to give the usual crossing warnings. The foregoing testimony furnishes sufficient evidence to support the implied finding of a failure to blow the whistle or ring the bell.

[9-11] During the process of the trial, on motion, the plaintiff was permitted to amend his complaint to include a demand for damages in the sum of $1,500 for medical aid in the performance of a necessary surgical operation resulting from the injuries sustained. The original complaint alleged that the plaintiff was "severely and permanently injured." There was no abuse of discretion in permitting this amendment. The language of the original complaint was adequate upon which to admit evidence of permanent injuries. 7 Thompson's Comm. on Neg. 1009, § 7602. The amendment was sufficient upon which to admit testimony to include the necessary cost of future medical services. 8 Thompson's Comm. on Neg. 956, § 7327. In 3 Sutherland on Damages, 2781, § 944, it is said: "In estimating the pecuniary loss in such cases all the consequences of the injury, future as well as past, are to be taken into consideration. * * * These are presumed to embrace indemnity for actual nursing and medical expenses." Section 3283 of the Civil Code authorizes the recovery of damages which are reasonably "certain to result in the future." 8 Cal. Jur. 754, § 22. Dr. Parker testified that the fracture of the plaintiff's skull required the operation of trephining. He said this operation left a "depressed area in his skull and * * * a hard scar tissue formation there, which is deep in, and it has been producing a pressure on his cerebrum," together with frequent severe shooting pains in the head, and that epilepsy would probably result unless another operation were performed to relieve the pressure on the brain; that this operation would reasonably cost about $1,500. The evidence amply supports the judgment with respect to the injuries and the necessary future expense which would be reasonably certain to accrue as a result of the accident.

[12] Over the objection of defendants, Dr. Parker, who treated the plaintiff for his injuries, and who subsequently examined him a short time before the last trial to ascertain his physical condition, was permitted to testify in response to a hypothetical question that the plaintiff's present condition as above stated was the result of the injuries sustained in the railroad crossing accident. The hypothetical question did not fully state the facts involved upon which his opinion was necessarily based. But the ruling was not erroneous, since all of the remaining necessary facts had been previously testified to by this witness, and it is apparent that his opinion was based not only upon the hypothetical question which was propounded, but also upon his personal examination, treatment and knowledge of the patient's condition.

[13, 14] October 24, 1927, this case was set for trial, at which time the plaintiff demanded a jury, according to the amended court minutes as shown under the date of the court proceedings of March 12, 1928. There is some controversy regarding the demand for a jury on this date. The court minutes, however, must control in this regard. But the case was formerly tried before a jury and reversed on appeal. It seems to be conceded a proper demand for a jury was made for the first trial. It was not necessary to repeat the demand for a jury at the time the case was finally set for trial. The original demand was continuing in its effect. Section 631 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that the constitutional right to a trial by jury is waived under such circumstances as are here involved "by failing to announce that a jury is required, at the *time the cause is first set upon the trial calendar. * *  In the case of Wendling Lumber Co. v. Glenwood Lumber Co., 19 Cal. App. 1, 6, 124 P. 734, 735, it is said: "It was not necessary to formally renew them (the demand for a jury and payment of fees), since it appears that plaintiff was still relying upon them. The demand must be considered as a continuous refusal to waive the right to a jury. It was not necessary to repeat the demand."

[15, 16] However, the demand for a jury appears to have been formally repeated on October 24, 1927, when the case was reset for trial. Instead of ordering a jury from the regular panel pursuant to section 214 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the court ordered a special venire under section 226 of the same Code. At the time of trial the defendants informally objected to the special venire and requested the court to draw a jury from the general panel, which was denied. The record contains no showing as to the existence or absence of names in the trial jury box, except that in the colloquy between counsel and the court, it was stated that it was the custom of the court to issue a special venire. The panel was not formally challenged. No evidence was adduced in support of defendants' objections to the special venire. There is no attempt to show that the defendants were prejudiced by the trial by jurors drawn by means of a special venire. It is the custom and preferable practice to order a trial jury to be drawn from the regular panel. Amos v. Superior Court, 196 Cal. 677, 682, 239 P. 317. In the absence of a formal showing that a special venire was not necessarily drawn pursuant to the specific authorization of section 226 of the Code of Civil Procedure, it must be assumed there was no abuse of discretion on the part of the court and that the denial of defendants' motion was not prejudicial or erroneous. Estate of Wall, 187 Cal. 50, 54, 200 P. 929.

[17, 18] After the jury had been impaneled and during the process of the trial, the defendants moved the court to discharge one juror by the name of Mary Hayes on the sole ground that she was the aunt of a clerk who was employed in the office of one of the attorneys for plaintiff. This juror was qualified on the voir dire. There is no abuse of discretion on the part of the court in refusing to discharge a juror in the midst of a trial where no prejudice is shown on the part of the juror. It cannot be presumed as a matter of law that a juror is biased and prejudiced in favor of a plaintiff merely because her niece is employed in the office of the litigant's counsel.

The appellants have cited 53 assignments of alleged misconduct of counsel for plaintiff in the process of trial. Most of them consist of interruptions of counsel on cross-examination with the evident purpose of correcting what was assumed to have been misstatements or misinterpretations of the evidence of a witness; some of them do contain suggestions as to the answers of witnesses under examination. It must be conceded some of these assignments of misconduct do illustrate the prevailing practice of interrupting the orderly trial of a case, frequently resulting in distracting contests of wits or zeal between counsel and an ignoring of the authority of the trial judge, to whom all such conflicts should be addressed. Probably the most flagrant transgression occurred in the examination of prospective jurors on the voir dire. Several jurors were asked if they would become prejudiced if it should appear that a verdict was secured by the plaintiff on a previous trial, and that the judgment was reversed on appeal. The purpose of these questions is apparent. It is a common fault to permit counsel in the examination of jurors to resort to argument, prejudicial inferences, and theoretical application of the law. However, the jury were subsequently furnished complete knowledge of the previous trial by the abundant use of the transcript of the former trial, on the part of respective counsel, for impeachment purposes. Moreover, upon objection, the court instructed the jury as follows: "The jury are here for the purpose of trying this case right now, the same as if it never had been tried at all, that is their province and their duty to regard it in that way, and you are to act upon the evidence as it comes in here."

[19] Also, in the court's charge to the jury, they were instructed to the effect that the judgment must be rendered solely upon the evidence adduced at the trial. Finally, the defendants failed to request the court to instruct the jury to disregard these expositions of counsel, and may ordinarily, therefore, not complain. Scott v. Times-Mirror Co., 181 Cal. 345, 368, 184 P. 672, 12 A. L. R. 1007; People v. Simon, 80 Cal. App. 675, 678, 252 P. 758.

[20-25] The appellant has assigned some 65 specifications of alleged errors in the course of the trial, most of which are addressed to the admission of evidence. After an examination of the record as to each assignment, while it appears that liberal latitude was allowed the plaintiff in examination of witnesses and some technical errors in ruling exist, we are of the opinion there is nothing so prejudicial as to require a reversal of the judgment on this ground. Regarding the second assignment, it may have been a conclusion for Hawkins to say that if the headlight of the engine had cast rays of light along the track in front of the automobile, he could have seen them. There was no harm in permitting the answer. At most, it was only a question of how far the rays from the headlight of an engine would act as a warning in a dense fog. This would depend on the intensity of the light and the density of the fog. The common judgment of jurors must make allowance for such uncertainties in view of the physical conditions which appear to exist under the circumstances. There was no error in permitting the plaintiff to show the nature of the soil at the crossing. Since gravel and dirt were found in his wounds, it tended to show the seriousness of his injuries. The nature of plaintiff's employment as a well digger, and the cost of hiring a man to take his place while he was incapacitated from his injuries, tended to establish the measure of his damages. The evidence of plaintiff's subsequent injury from a blow on the head was not competent, unless it may have tended to show he was more susceptible to injury on account of the sensitive condition of his head owing to the fracture of his skull. It was, however, not prejudicial. Before permitting a witness to describe the position and condition of the automobile as it lay in the ditch at the crossing 24 hours after the accident, it should have been shown that no substantial change occurred in the meantime. But the machine was completely demolished by the collision. There was no contention to the contrary. It was stipulated that the reasonable value of the machine was $200. There was therefore no prejudicial error in this ruling. The fact that the machine was found after the accident to be in the second gearing merely tended to corroborate the plaintiff's statement that he shifted to that gearing immediately before the collision. This ruling was harmless. No substantial error exists in these rulings of the court.

The defendants have challenged the giving, refusing and modifying of numerous instructions. To review each of these instructions would extend this opinion to unwarranted length. The objections to several of these instructions are covered by the principles of law heretofore announced.

We find no prejudicial error in the charge to the jury, with the exception of one instruction which was given at the request of the plaintiff, as follows: "It is not necessary that plaintiff prove all the allegations of negligence set forth in his complaint in order to recover. The proof of any one is sufficient. Therefore, even if you may find that the whistle was blown or the bell rung, as required by law, still, if you find that the train was being operated at a dangerous and excessive rate of speed, and that by reason thereof the accident occurred, and that the injuries of the plaintiff were the proximate result thereof, such proof is sufficient to entitle plaintiff to recover damages in this action, providing that the plaintiff himself did not proximately cause or contribute to said injuries by any negligent act of his own."

[26-31] We are convinced that the giving of this instruction constituted prejudicial error which requires the reversal of the judgment. The chief assignment of negligence, and the only one that finds support in the record sufficient upon which to uphold the judgment even upon the principle governing the existence of a conflict of evidence, is the claim that the whistle was not blown and the bell was not rung as required by law when the train was approaching the crossing. By means of the foregoing instruction the jury was charged that a judgment for plaintiff might be based alone upon a finding that the train was running at an excessive rate of speed at the time of the accident, even though the jury determined that the whistle was blown or the bell rung as required by law. There are no facts or circumstances in the present case which will warrant this finding of negligence, unless it may be said that the operator of a passenger train running over a country crossing on a straight track across a level country at a speed not to exceed 40 miles an hour, with no artificial or natural physical obstructions to sight or sound, is guilty of negligence for failure to slacken its speed on account of the presence of a dense fog which obscures the view and confines the vision of the engineer to the radius of his headlight a distance of only 80 to 120 feet ahead of the tender. The fact that the train was 25 minutes late in leaving Merced and that it rolled 500 feet after the emergency brakes had been applied before it was brought to a stop only tend to show a rapid rate of speed rather than an excessive velocity. Considering the facts in this case in the light of the above challenged instruction, and assuming that the whistle was blown as required by law, at intervals for a distance of 80 rods before reaching the crossing, or that the bell was rung constantly while the train was covering that interval of space, there is no rational way of accounting for a failure to hear the approaching train, unless the occupants of the automobile were deaf or carelessly inattentive or the noise of their machine impaired their hearing. The first is not claimed to have been true, the second is no legal excuse, and the third would require the stopping of their machine and engine to purge them of the charge of contributory negligence. The statute does not require both the blowing of the whistle and the ringing of the bell. Either is deemed to be a sufficient warning under ordinary circumstances. It is true that a dense fog would obstruct the view, but not the hearing. Where physical objects like buildings, embankments, or dense growth of trees, or when the din and commotion of a storm prevent one from hearing to good advantage the approach of a train, these may be taken into account, together with the rapid speed of the train, in determining whether it was negligently traveling at an excessive rate of speed under the circumstances. So also excessive speed of a train traveling through a crowd of people or in a thickly populated portion of a city may constitute negligence. Under such circumstances, it becomes a question for the jury to determine whether the operation of the train under such condition and circumstances amounts to negligence. Bilton v. So. Pac. Co., 148 Cal. 443, 447, 83 P. 440; Tousley

v. Pac. Elec. Ry. Co., 166 Cal. 457, 137 P. 31; Badostain v. Pac. Elec. Ry. Co., 83 Cal. App. 290, 295, 256 P. 576; 3 Elliott on Railroads, 337, § 1160; 22 R. C. L. 1011, § 242; 33 Cyc. 791. No such conditions, however, existed in the present case. In the absence of an ordinance or statute to the contrary and in the absence of such conditions or circumstances, the mere rapid speed of a train traveling through an open country unobstructed by physical objects, regardless of the presence of fog, will not amount to negligence. There is no legal obligation on the part of a railroad company to slacken the speed of its trains at country crossings. Larrabee v. Western Pac. Ry. Co., 173 Cal. 743, 161 P. 750; 3 Elliott on Railroads (2d Ed.) 337, § 1160; 22 R. C. L. 1011, § 242; 33 Cyc. 791. Dense fogs frequently prevail on the coast and in the tule lands of California. To require a railroad train to retard its speed and abandon its time schedule traveling through an open country merely because of the presence of fog would be destructive of the efficiency of this necessary means of transportation.

In the case of Henry v. Boston & Maine R. R. Co., 125 Me. 366, 134 A. 193, it was held that a passenger train which was running at a speed of 40 miles an hour on a foggy day, and sounding the statutory signals at a crossing in a country district, was not guilty of negligence for failure to slacken its speed. In that opinion it was said: "The railroad is chartered to carry passengers at a high rate of speed. Unless it did so carry them, it probably would not carry them at all." It is further said the presence of fog "should admonish the traveler upon the highway to exercise greater vigilance and caution in approaching a railway crossing."

[32] It is true that the presence of fog or unusual climatic conditions which obscure the view or impede the hearing makes it more important to blow the whistle or ring the bell of an engine as a warning upon approaching a country crossing. Such warning signals are ordinarily deemed to be adequate notice, and a train is not required to stop or slacken its speed, at country crossings merely because of the presence of fog.

In the case of Pennsylvania Ry. Co. v. Stegman (C. C. A.) 22 F.(2d) 69, 70, it was also said that when statutory signals were given at country crossings the operator of a railway train is not guilty of negligence for running at its usual rate of speed notwithstanding the presence of fog. It was said: "As there are road crossings in the country every few miles, it is inconsistent with proper speed of transportation that trains should slack up for such crossings. Safety is secured to persons at such crossings by the observance of the statutory signals, * * * The impairing of visibility by fog or snow is a common condition. * * * If it were in the discretion of a jury to say that it is negligence to maintain regular ordinary speed, within any reasonable limits, through the open country in a fog, it would be necessary, under such a condition, to abandon all time schedules."

There are a few cases reported in the southern states wherein it has been held that the speed of a railway train must be so regulated when traveling in a fog as to enable it to be stopped within the radius of its headlight. These cases are usually accompanied by facts indicating that the location of the crossings where the accidents occurred were particularly dangerous on account of heavy traffic, dense population, or the presence of physical obstructions to sight or sound. Except for such modifying dangerous conditions, we would not be able to subscribe to such a doctrine. It would seem absurd and destructive of the usefulness of railroads as common carriers to hold that trains must poke along in an open unobstructed country through a fog or snow-storm at a rate of speed which would permit the stopping of a heavy passenger train within the distance that the rays of its headlight were projected. This would often be a physical impossibility, as is demonstrated by the evidence in the present case. The plaintiff said he first saw the headlight when the train was but 80 to 100 feet away. The engineer admitted that his headlight disclosed a view of the track only 120 feet ahead of the tender. The emergency brakes were immediately applied and the train rolled 500 feet before it was brought to a stop.

While it is true that facts and conditions may exist which will warrant the submission to the jury of the question of negligence which is associated with excessive speed regardless of the sounding of the whistle or bell, no such circumstances appear in the present case. Since the jury were told that their verdict might be based upon a theory of excessive speed alone, we are unable to say their verdict was not the result of this erroneous instruction, and it therefore becomes necessary to reverse the judgment.

Accordingly, the judgment is reversed.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; PLUMMER, J.

101 Cal. App. 388

LAMBERT v. KAMP et al. (Civ. 6947.)★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Oct. 22, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Nov. 21, 1929.

1. Appeal and error ⇨870(6)—Propriety of action in refusing new trial is reviewable on appeal from judgment (Code Civ. Proc. § 956).

Where appellant applied for new trial below, propriety of trial court's action in refusing new trial is properly reviewable on appeal from the judgment under Code Civ. Proc. § 956.

2. New trial ⇨75(1), 77(4)—Inadequate verdict may be set aside on ground evidence does not justify verdict, but not on ground of jury's prejudice.

There is no justification in law for disturbing a verdict or finding because of passion or prejudice of jury in giving inadequate or insufficient damages, but inadequate recovery may be set aside and new trial granted on ground that evidence does not justify verdict.

3. Appeal and error ⇨979(1)—Order granting or refusing new trial, sought for insufficiency of evidence, will not be disturbed on appeal except for abuse of discretion.

Insufficiency of evidence to justify verdict is a ground for new trial appealing peculiarly to the discretion of trial court, and its order granting or refusing new trial sought on that ground will not be disturbed on appeal in absence of abuse of discretion.

4. New trial ⇨159—Trial court on plaintiff's motion for new trial to set aside verdict as inadequate should first determine whether plaintiff was entitled to any recovery.

In action for death, in which plaintiff after recovering verdict, which he thought inadequate, moved for new trial on ground of insufficiency of evidence, trial court in considering the merits of the motion should first determine from examination of evidence whether plaintiff was entitled to recover anything at all.

5. New trial ⇨140(3)—Undisputed evidence of deceased child's having run across street into truck warranted trial court in denying plaintiff's motion for new trial sought on ground of inadequacy of verdict for death.

In action for death of boy shown by undisputed evidence to have run across street and into fender of Ford truck driven by defendant, trial court was warranted, on plaintiff's motion for new trial on ground of inadequacy of verdict and insufficiency of evidence to sustain it, in holding that defendant was free from negligence, and refusal of plaintiff's motion for new trial was therefore not abuse of discretion.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Daniel C. Deasy, Judge.

Action by W. H. Lambert against C. M. Kamp, Sr., doing business under the firm name of C. M. Kamp Coal & Express, and another. From a judgment for plaintiff claimed to be insufficient, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Robert E. Hatch, of San Francisco, and Lynch & Morrissey, for appellant.

Daniel W. Burbank and Cyril Appel, both of San Francisco, for respondents.

LUCAS, Justice pro tem. Appellant, who as plaintiff in the court below recovered judgment on a verdict for $300 as damages for the death of a son eight years and eight months old, appeals from said judgment on the sole ground that the recovery is inadequate. It is contended that, since the special damages for hospital, medical, and funeral expenses total $235, the balance of the judgment, or $65, as general damages for the deprivation of the society, comfort, and protection of the minor is so palpably inadequate as to render the verdict grossly absurd.

Appellant asks that the case be remanded for a new trial on the issue of damages alone, if that be held proper, and, if not, then on all of the issues. It is earnestly urged, however, that the issues of negligence on respondents' part and of contributory negligence on the part of appellant were effectually and finally removed from consideration by reason of the jury's verdict for appellant and the implied findings on those issues in his favor.

[1] This is not the first time since the rendition of the verdict and the entry of judgment that a request for a new trial has been made. The question of appellant's right to a new trial was passed upon by the lower court, and the propriety of that court's action in refusing a new trial is properly reviewable herein. Section 956, Code Civ. Proc.; Wilcox v. Hardisty, 177 Cal. 752, 171 P. 947; Hughes v. De Mund, 195 Cal. 242, 233 P. 94.

The question before this court, therefore, is not whether the judgment is so inadequate as to warrant this court in sending the cause back for a new trial, but, rather, did the trial court err in denying appellant's motion for a new trial?

[2] In his notice of intention to move for a new trial appellant specified all of the grounds permitted by the statute, but, since only the amount of the judgment is under attack, it will be necessary to refer to but two of them, namely, "excessive damages appearing to have been given under the influence of passion or prejudice," and "insufficiency of the evidence to justify the verdict." The latter ground is really the only one to which serious consideration need be given, for, while a new trial may be granted in the case of excessive damages appearing to have been given under the influence of passion or prejudice, there is no justification in law for disturbing a verdict or finding because of passion or prejudice of a jury in giving insufficient or inadequate damages. 8 Cal. Jur. 833; Benjamin v. Stewart, 61 Cal. 605. On the other hand, it is well settled that an inadequate recovery may be set aside and a new trial granted on the ground that the evidence does not justify the verdict. (See 8 Cal. Jur. 833, and supporting authorities.)

An examination of the record shows the following facts to be undisputed: On the afternoon the accident occurred Douglas Lambert, appellant's son, and another small boy were riding on and operating vehicles known as "home made box scooters" and were proceeding in a northerly direction along Third avenue in San Francisco, Cal., north of Anza street. The scooter operated by Douglas Lambert was traveling approximately along the center of the street, and the one used and operated by the other boy was traveling parallel with it between the center of the street and the east curb thereof. At the same time defendant and respondent Carl Kamp, Jr., was driving a Ford truck in the same direction along Third avenue, in the same block, behind the scooters operated by the two boys. The district was a residential district, and at no time or place was the said respondent exceeding the 20-mile speed limit. At a considerable distance behind the boys said respondent sounded his horn and continued to sound it until and including the time he attempted to pass the Lambert boy.

In addition to the foregoing undisputed facts, the following facts may fairly be said to have been established by a great preponderance of the evidence: When at a point between 20 and 25 feet behind the Lambert boy, Kamp, Jr., turned to the left and attempted to pass, at the same time slowing down to a speed variously estimated to be from 10 to 15 miles per hour. When he reached a point just abreast of the Lambert boy and 4 or 5 feet westerly of him, the Lambert boy jumped off his scooter and ran directly across the street and into the right fender of the Ford truck driven by said respondent, receiving the injuries from which he subsequently died. The said Kamp made a quick turn to the left and stopped his truck.

Appellant's sole eyewitness to the accident gave testimony somewhat contradictory of the above, stating, among other things, that at the time the Lambert boy jumped off his scooter and started to run the Ford truck was directly behind him.

Such, in brief, were the facts and the evidence presented to the jury and to the trial judge who heard the case and to whom appellant presented his motion for a new trial.

[3] As to the law, it is well established that insufficiency of the evidence to justify the verdict, is a ground for a new trial appealing peculiarly to the discretion of the trial court, and its order either granting or refusing a new trial will not be disturbed on appeal, in the absence of a showing of abuse of discretion. 2 Cal. Jur. 908; Donnatin v. Union Hardware & Metal Co., 38 Cal. App. 8, 175 P. 26, 27, 177 P. 845.

With the foregoing facts and the above-mentioned rule of law in mind, can it be said that the court abused its discretion in refusing to grant a new trial? We think not.

[4] Appellant's right to recover anything at all from respondents depended primarily upon his being able to prove by a preponderance of the evidence that respondent Carl Kamp, Jr., was guilty of some negligent act or omission proximately causing or contributing to the injury complained of. The amount of damages resulting from the injury is a secondary matter and need not be considered at all unless negligence be proven. Therefore, in considering the merits of a motion for a new trial based upon insufficiency of the evidence, in order to determine whether or not the moving party has just cause to complain of having received too little at the hands of a jury, the trial court should first determine from an examination of the evidence whether the complaining party was entitled to recover anything at all.

[5] If the record is such, and we believe it to be so here, as to justify the trial court in concluding that the party asking for a new trial had totally failed in his primary proof of negligence and was therefore entitled to nothing, clearly there could be no abuse of discretion should the court deny such party a second attempt to recover something to which he was not entitled.

The real aggrieved party in such a case is the party against whom the verdict, even though small, was rendered. If he makes no complaint, certainly the prevailing party cannot be heard to complain.

As was said by Mr. Justice Shaw in the case of Donnatin v. Union Hardware & Metal Co., supra: "Every intendment must be indulged in support of the ruling made by the trial court. If in its opinion the evidence, considered as a whole, was of a character to clearly establish the fact that defendant was not guilty of negligence, and hence not liable for any damage (and in the absence from the record of all evidence touching the question of defendant's negligence, we must so assume), then it constituted no abuse of discretion for the court to deny plaintiff's motion for a new trial, made upon the ground of inadequacy of the amount awarded."

That was a case where the jury rendered a verdict of $1 for the plaintiff in a personal injury suit, and judgment was entered accordingly. Plaintiff moved to vacate that part of the verdict only wherein the jury fixed the amount of damage at $1, and asked for a new trial on the issue of damages alone. For that reason the evidence on the question of negligence was omitted from the record. The motion was denied, and on appeal the action of the trial court was upheld. Here all of the evidence touching upon appellant's negligence is before the court, and since we feel from an examination thereof, as heretofore pointed out, that the evidence was such as to warrant the trial court in holding respondent Kamp, Jr., free from negligence, it constituted no abuse of discretion for the court to deny the motion for a new trial. The motion for a new trial being properly denied, the question of the right to a new trial on one issue alone becomes immaterial.

Judgment affirmed.

MORGANTHALER v. KRIEG et al.
(Civ. 3900.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Oct. 24, 1929.

1. Contracts §250—Plaintiff could cancel contract only at expiration of 3 months under provision for cancellation at such time.

Under clause of contract permitting cancellation at expiration of 3 months, with further provision that failure to cancel then reverts to original term, plaintiff could cancel contract only at expiration of 3 months, and, if not canceled at that time, contract would continue in force for full term.

2. Appeal and error §1071(1)—Erroneous findings as to cancellation of contract after 3 months held harmless, where another finding showed cancellation within prescribed time.

Findings regarding termination of contract after expiration of 3 months, erroneous because under contract there could be no cancellation except at expiration of 3 months, held harmless, where prior finding was to effect that contract was in fact canceled at expiration of three months.

3. Contracts §217—Notice of cancellation given prior to date of cancellation held sufficient under contract providing for cancellation at end of 3 months.

Where defendants commenced to perform advertising contract during first week of June, plaintiff's notice about July 10th that "advertising service would not be wanted after the period of 3 months from the commencement of the advertising" constituted due notice of cancellation at expiration of 3-month term, as required by contract, since notice was not ineffective because actually given prior to date of cancellation.

4. Appeal and error §931(1)—Conflict in evidence must be resolved in favor of judgment.

Where evidence was controverted, such conflict must be resolved in favor of judgment.

5. Contracts §217—Payment of fourth month's advertising service held not waiver of notice to cancel contract at end of 3 months.

Where notice was given to defendant of cancellation of advertising contract at termination of 3 months, payment for fourth month's service did not constitute waiver of notice of cancellation.

6. Trial §395(3)—Findings of cancellation of contract and that plaintiff was not indebted to defendants held sufficiently specific to refute defendants' allegations of plaintiff's failure to pay installments.

Finding that plaintiff was not indebted to defendants in any sum whatever, and finding of cancellation of contract, held sufficient to refute affirmative allegations of defendants' cross-complaint charging breach of contract by failure to pay installments, and more specific findings relative thereto were not required.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; F. M. Jamison, Judge.

Action for declaratory relief and for the reformation of a contract by Albert M. Morgenthaler, doing business under the fictitious firm name of the Pioneer Wall Paper Company, against E. T. Krieg and another, in which defendants filed a cross-complaint. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Emmet H. Wilson, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

John C. Miles, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

THOMPSON, J. This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of plaintiff in an action for declaratory relief and for the reformation of a contract.

The plaintiff was engaged in business at Los Angeles under the firm name of Pioneer Wall Paper Company. The defendants were conducting an advertising business by means of the use of an automatic electric picture projecting machine. May 14, 1924, the respective parties executed a written contract by the terms of which the defendants agreed to advertise plaintiff's business for a term of 3 years for a consideration of $6.25 a week, payable on the 10th day of each month. The agreement provided that "this contract shall be irrevocable," and that: "After a payment is thirty days over due, all subsequent payments hereto shall and thereby do become due and payable hereunder." The following condition was, however, annexed thereto: "It is mutually agreed that in the event advertiser wishes to cancel contract * * * he may do so at any time after the expiration of three months. Failure to cancel at that time reverts to the original term as specified in said contract."

The complaint alleges that this last-mentioned clause was inadvertently signed through the mutual mistake of the parties; that it was specifically agreed, and by the terms of said clause it was mutually intended that said contract for advertising might be canceled by the plaintiff "at any time after the expiration of three months" from the inception thereof. The answer acknowledged the execution of the contract in the form alleged, but denied that the clause last mentioned was signed by mistake or that it was intended thereby to permit the cancellation of the document "at any time," or later than three months from the execution thereof. A cross-complaint was filed setting up the contract and the performance of its covenants on the part of the defendants. A breach of the contract by the plaintiff was also charged, consisting of his failure to pay installments which were deferred for more than 30 days. Pursuant to the terms of the contract, the defendants thereupon declared the entire consideration to be due, and alleged that no part of this sum had been paid, except the first 4 monthly installments. The cross-complaint then prayed for judgment for the sum of $868.75, together with costs and counsel fees.

The court found that the defendants commenced to perform under the contract during the first week in June, 1924, and that the plaintiff notified defendants about the 10th day of July, 1924, "that their advertising service would not be wanted after the period of three months from the commencement of the advertisement"; that the contract was duly canceled; and that the plaintiff was not indebted to the defendants in any sum.

[1] The clause of the contract with respect to its cancellation seems too clear to leave room for controversy. It is provided that the advertiser (plaintiff) may cancel it "at the expiration of three months." This language may not be construed to permit its cancellation at a later date. To preclude the possibility of a misunderstanding in this regard, the contract further provided "failure to cancel at that time (the expiration of three months) reverts to the original term" (of 36 months). The meaning of this clause is that the defendants were to be assured of at least a three-month contract, at which time it might be terminated at the option of the plaintiff, but, if not so canceled at that time, it would continue in force for the full term of 36 months.

[2, 3] The court not only found that the plaintiff notified the defendants on July 10th to cancel the contract and discontinue the service at the expiration of 3 months, but it also found that it was the understanding of the parties that the contract could be terminated at any time; that it was subject to cancellation on October 2d, at which time notice of cancellation was also given. These latter findings regarding the termination of the contract subsequent to 3 months from its inception were erroneous, but harmless, for the reason that the prior finding that it was in fact canceled at the expiration of 3 months according to the undisputed authorization of the contract is amply supported by the record in spite of the existence of a conflict of evidence in that regard. To hold that the contract could be canceled at any time would necessitate a reformation of this clause on the ground of fraud or mutual mistake. Fraud was not charged, and the record contains no evidence of mutual mistake. The finding that the plaintiff notified the defendants about July 10, 1924, that "the advertising service would not be wanted after the period of three months from the commencement of the advertising" constituted due notice of the cancellation of the contract at the expiration of the 3-month term. The fact that the notice was actually given prior to the date of cancellation made it none the less effective.

[4, 5] It is true that the plaintiff paid for 4 months' service. This was explained by Mrs. Morgenthaler, who said they were not aware of the fact that the defendants failed to discontinue the advertising as requested at the end of the 3 months' service; that, when they were sent a bill on October 1st for services for the month of September, she called up the defendant Schultz, who explained that the service had been continued through the mistake of their bookkeeper, but that they would discontinue it at once; that Mr. Morgenthaler, had said with reference to this bill "he didn't want anything for nothing—if they ran it (the advertising) and would discontinue it, we would send them a check"; that therefore upon defendants' promise to promptly discontinue the service they forwarded a check in payment of this bill for September service. This evidence was controverted. The conflict, however, must be resolved in favor of the judgment. This payment did not constitute a waiver of the former notice of cancellation.

[6] The finding that the plaintiff was not indebted to the defendants in any sum whatever, together with the further finding of a cancellation of the contract at the end of 3 months, was sufficient to refute the affirmative allegations of the cross-complaint, and more specific findings with relation thereto were not required.

The judgment is affirmed.

BLODGETT v. GREENFIELD. (Civ. 3894.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Oct. 22, 1929.

1. Libel and slander ☞72—Cause of action for libel does not survive death of party charged, and action abates on death of either party.

Cause of action for libel or slander does not survive death of party charged therewith, but abates in case of death of either party before judgment becomes final, and may not be continued against deceased's representative.

2. Libel and slander ☞72—Any party to action for libel may suggest death of party at any stage, and court must thereupon dismiss action.

When death of party to action for libel or slander occurs pending litigation, death may be suggested to court by any party at any stage of the proceeding by means of affidavit or verified pleading, and thereupon court should dismiss action, when death is not controverted.

3. Abatement and revival ☞83, 84—Plea in abatement on account of death of party charged with tort against complainant's person is not waived by demurrer or answer.

Plea in abatement on account of death of party charged with tort against person of complainant is not a dilatory plea but a plea in bar, and is not waived by demurrer or answer.

4. Libel and slander ☞72—Appearance of defendant's executrix by demurrer and supplemental answer, after death of defendant in action for libel, held not waiver of right to plead in abatement.

Right of executrix of defendant in libel action to plead in abatement on account of defendant's death held not waived by voluntary appearance by means of supplemental answer and filing of demurrer to complaint on ground of misjoinder, since executrix could not bind estate by inadvertent answer to charge against deceased which did not survive.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Barbara County; T. A. Norton, Judge.

Action by D. T. Blodgett against George H. Greenfield. On death of defendant, Eva K. Greenfield, executrix of the estate of George H. Greenfield, was substituted as party defendant. From a judgment of dismissal, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

D. T. Blodgett, in pro. per.

W. C. Gammill and Atwell Westwick, both of Santa Barbara, for respondent.

ROLFE L. THOMPSON, J. This is an appeal from a judgment of dismissal of an action for libel, which was rendered upon motion at the death of the accused.

The appellant commenced an action for libel against George H. Greenfield. His answer was filed controverting the essential allegations of the complaint. The defendant then died. Upon proceedings duly had, his widow, Eva K. Greenfield, was appointed and qualified as executrix of his estate. Subsequently, on June 27, 1927, on ex parte motion of the plaintiff, upon suggestion to the court of the death of the defendant the executrix in her representative capacity was substituted as a party defendant. July 7th the respondent filed a supplemental answer setting up only the death of her husband, her appointment as executrix of his estate, and the substitution as defendant, praying for the abatement of the action. At the same time she filed a demurrer on the ground of her misjoinder as a party defendant, together with a formal written motion for dismissal of the action with costs, supported by an adequate affidavit of the death of her husband. Notice of this motion was duly served, and upon hearing thereof on July 13th, despite the opposition of plaintiff, the demurrer was sustained without leave to amend and the action was dismissed on the ground that the cause failed to survive the death of the alleged tort-feasor. No order was made with respect to costs. From this judgment the plaintiff has appealed.

It is contended that the cause did not abate at the death of the defendant charged with the libel, and that the respondent waived her right to a plea in abatement by voluntarily appearing and filing a demurrer and supplemental answer. There is no merit in these contentions.

[1] A cause of action for libel or slander does not survive the death of the party charged therewith. An action of this nature which is pending, abates when the death of either party occurs before the judgment becomes final. 18 Standard Enc. of Proc. p. 891; 1 R. C. L. 48, § 47; Newell on Slander and Libel (2d Ed.) p. 375, § 30; 1 Cal. Jur. 71, § 41; De La Torre v. Johnson, 200 Cal. 754, 757, 254 P. 1105. Such an action may not be continued against the representative of the deceased.

[2] When the death of a party to an action occurs pending the litigation, the death may be suggested to the court by any party to the action, at any stage of the proceeding, by means of an affidavit or verified pleading. Upon such notice when the death is not controverted it becomes the duty of the court to dismiss the action and to proceed no further against the deceased. Judson v. Love, 35 Cal. 463, 469; Munchiando v. Bach, 203 Cal. 457, 264 P. 762.

[3, 4] It is true that pleas in abatement which are merely dilatory in their nature are not favored in law (1 Cal. Jur. 80, § 49), and may be waived by pleading to the merits of a cause. A plea in abatement on account of the death of a party charged with a tort against the person of the complainant is, however, not a dilatory plea, but rather it is a plea in bar, and is therefore not waived by demurring or answering. An executrix in her representative capacity could not bind the estate which she represents by inadvertently answering to a charge against the deceased which does not survive and which is barred by the event of his death. In the present case the demurrer became functus officio upon the filing of the motion to dismiss the action. The ruling upon this demurrer was harmless and useless. The appearance of the executrix of the estate by means of a supplemental answer may have been unnecessary, since the death of the defendant had been called to the attention of the court by the plaintiff and the court then had no authority to proceed further against the deceased. Except for this fact, however, neither the executrix nor the attorneys for the deceased, whose authority ceased at the death of their client, had any standing to move for a dismissal of the action. The filing of the supplemental answer was not a waiver of the plea in abatement. It was an appropriate means of securing legal standing upon which to move the court for a dismissal of the action.

The judgment is affirmed.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District,
California. Oct. 17, 1929.

- 1. Appeal and error $\S$ 1011(1)—Judgment for plaintiff will not be reversed, on ground that he violated agreement, where evidence was conflicting.

Judgment for amount paid defendants by plaintiff to become manager of their branch store, less amounts held by plaintiff, will not be reversed on ground that he violated agreement faithfully to manage business, by failing to notify defendants of impending tax sale, at which fixtures were sold for less than their value, where the evidence on such point was conflicting.

- 2. Principal and agent $\S$ 77½—Judgment for amount paid to become manager of defendant's store held not subject to reversal on ground that plaintiff took stock to cover amount before accounting.

Judgment for plaintiff in action to recover amount paid defendants for privilege of becoming manager of their branch store will not be reversed, on ground that he violated agreement by taking and removing stock before accounting, where contract gave him a lien on all goods in store pending accounting, if such amount were not paid, and he continued to sell goods with defendants' approval after giving required notice of termination of contract; right given to take sufficient stock to cover such amount after accounting being additional right by way of security, which was not acted on.

A pledgee may recover the amount of his debt without foreclosing the pledge.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Bernardino County; Benjamin F. Warmer, Judge.

Action by George F. Klever against C. M. Hewins and another, a copartnership doing business under the firm name and style of the Hewins Rubber Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Grant Holcomb, of San Bernardino, for appellants.

E. G. Wenzlaff, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

BARNARD, J. Defendants were engaged in manufacturing, rebuilding, and retreading automobile tires at Colton, Cal., with various branch stores. The plaintiff paid to the defendants $1,500 in cash for the privilege of becoming the manager of their branch store at Santa Ana, Cal. He entered upon his duties as such branch manager, under a written agreement which provided, among other things, that defendants would furnish and pay the rental for a storeroom, and maintain a stock of goods, and that, for a fixed salary, plaintiff would faithfully manage said store and account to defendants, at any time, for all money or property then in his possession. The agreement also contained the following:

"(b) Said second party shall have the right to terminate this agreement by giving unto the said first parties a ninety-days notice of intention to cancel said agreement and upon the expiration of said ninety days, the said first parties, the said Hewins Rubber Company, shall pay to the second party the sum of fifteen hundred ($1,500.00) dollars without interest, less, however, any money due or owing from the second party to the first parties, and thereupon said agreement shall finally cease and determine, and be of no force and effect; provided, however, that if the said Hewins Rubber Company shall not upon the expiration of said ninety days notice so given by the second party pay said sum of fifteen hundred ($1,500.00) dollars as herein in paragraph lettered (b) provided, then the said second party shall have a lien upon any and all goods and equipment then in said branch store which lien shall exist until an accounting shall have been had between the parties hereto, and the exact amount due the second party shall have been determined or agreed upon, and thereupon said second party shall have the right to take equivalent in value from said stock or equipment so found to be due, provided said first party shall not theretofore pay such amount found due. The right to take and remove said goods and equipment hereinabove provided for in this paragraph shall not accrue, however, until said account has been settled either by agreement or proper action of a proper court."

On March 22, 1926, plaintiff gave to defendants a 90-day notice of intention to terminate said contract, as therein provided. The evidence shows that after the expiration of the 90 days, and while waiting for an accounting which was promised from time to time by the defendants, the plaintiff continued to sell goods, and all proceeds were deposited in the bank to the account of the defendants until July 6, 1926. On July 1, 1926, defendants wired to plaintiff: "You are hereby authorized to take ownership of Santa Ana store subject to selling franchise agreement." On the same day they wrote their landlord at Santa Ana that they had sold the store to plaintiff and would no longer be responsible for rent, but that they would pay the back rent in a few days. At this time the rent was two months in arrears. The court found, upon sufficient evidence, that the plaintiff at no time became the owner of the store.

Plaintiff had received written instructions to return to defendants all tires in stock not fit for sale, and on July 1, 1926, he returned 52 tires which he considered unfit for sale. On July 9, 1926, he sold and delivered the entire remaining stock of tires and tubes to one man, receiving for them $797.25, which amount he retained. These goods were sold at the regular wholesale prices, for which he was authorized to sell. On July 12, 1926, the landlord, because of the nonpayment of the rent, locked the doors and took possession of the store; and on the same date a deputy assessor posted a notice of sale for personal property taxes, by virtue of which the remaining equipment of the store was later sold for taxes.

Plaintiff brought this action for the balance of the $1,500 above mentioned, less the amounts already held by him. In addition to the denials in their answer, defendants set up the affirmative defense that the stock of goods and fixtures in plaintiff's possession were worth more than $1,500, and that plaintiff, in violation of the agreement, "took and removed" the same, and that he had failed to account for the proceeds of sales of merchandise, and an accounting was prayed for. The trial court proceeded on the theory that the action included an accounting, and this appeal is from a judgment in favor of the plaintiff for $682.15.

[1] It is first urged, as a ground for reversal, that respondent violated his agreement to faithfully manage the business, by failing to notify appellants of the impending tax sale, and thus caused the fixtures to be sold for less than their value. Assuming that respondent owed such a duty under the circumstances outlined, no more than a conflict in the evidence is raised by this point. Respondent testified that he did notify appellants;

a tax official testified that at least three notices had been sent to them; and appellants' bookkeeper admitted he had received a tax statement prior to July 1.

[2, 3] As a second ground for reversal, it is contended that under section (b) of the contract, as above quoted, respondent's only remedy was "to take equivalent in value from said stock and equipment," which right could only be exercised after an accounting had been had and that it was therefore not in the power of the court to enter a money judgment. In this connection it is urged that, at the expiration of the 90-day period, respondent had sufficient goods on hand to more than compensate himself, but that he violated the agreement by prematurely taking and removing the stock before an accounting was had, and by returning a portion of the stock to appellants.

Examining the portion of the contract involved, it is clear that appellants agreed, after notice given, to repay to respondent the sum of $1,500 less any existing offset. It is provided that in the event the amount due is not paid as agreed, then respondent shall have, pending an accounting, a lien on all goods in the store. It is further agreed that, after such accounting, whether by agreement or by court action, the respondent shall have the right to take and remove sufficient of the stock to cover the amount due.

It will be noted that the primary agreement and obligation was to pay a sum of money, less existing offsets. The further lien and right to take specific goods was an additional right, by way of security, under certain circumstances. Meanwhile this lien constituted no more than a pledge. Even a pledgee may recover the amount of his debt without foreclosing the pledge. Commercial Savings Bank v. Hornberger, 140 Cal. 16, 73 P. 625. Respondent was not limited to proceeding against the property on which he had a lien; and the evidence does not show that he acted on his additional right to take specific goods. It does show that, after the expiration of the required notice, respondent, while attempting to get an accounting with appellants, continued to sell goods, with their approval; that all receipts until the last sale were deposited to their account in the bank; that certain of the tires were returned in accordance with written instructions; and that the final sale of tires was made at prices fixed by appellants, and at which respondent was authorized to sell. No goods were taken or removed in pursuance of the lien right given, either prematurely, as argued by appellants, or at all. The only departure from the usual procedure was that the last payment for tires was retained by respondent. This was not an attempt to exercise the lien right, but was simply an item for which he must and did account. The trial court has ascertained the amount due, upon sufficient evidence, and the agreement of the parties and the facts amply support the judgment.

The judgment is therefore affirmed.

Criminal law ⇨1070—Prosecution will be abated, where defendant dies pending appeal from conviction (St. 1917, p. 673, as amended).

Where defendant dies pending appeal from conviction of violating Corporate Securities Act (St. 1917, p. 673, as amended), proceeding will be abated.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and John L. Flynn, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

IRA F. THOMPSON, J. Since the appeal from the judgment and an order denying defendant's motion for a new trial was perfected, the appellant has died. The question now under consideration is: What is or should be the effect of his death upon the proceedings? Counsel for appellant argues that this court should proceed to a determination of the merits of the appeal in order that the reputation of the deceased may not be wrongfully assailed, assuming, of course, as he does, that such a consideration would result in a reversal. The argument we think proceeds from a wrong premise. What difference can it possibly make whether the proceeding be abated at this stage, or, assuming the event of a reversal, when it shall have reached the trial court? At the present time there is no final judgment, and, if the action abate, there never will be. It is not now determined that the defendant was guilty, and, in the event of an abatement, never will be so determined. In fact, the presumption of innocence, which follows the accused until final judgment is entered, would seem to conclusively refute counsel's argument. If we should remand the case for a new trial, it would then necessarily have to be abated without a determination of the guilt or innocence of the accused. Therefore the result would be substantially the same in either event.

Aside from what has been said from the standpoint of principle and logic, however, the question is disposed of by precedent. In People v. St. Maurice, 166 Cal. 201, 135 P. 952, the appellant, who had been found guilty and ordered to pay a fine by the trial court, died pending the appeal. Some doubt was cast upon the question of abatement by reason of the provisions of the Penal Code that, where the judgment is a fine, execution may be issued thereon as on a judgment in a civil action. Nevertheless the court held that the proceeding abated by the death, expressing itself upon the problem in this language: "There can be but one answer to the question, and that is that, in the absence of a statute expressing the contrary, all proceedings in the matter incurably abate. We need not amplify this plain proposition. It will be found fully supported by the following authorities, * * * identical with those of the case at bar: U. S. v. Dunne, 173 Fed. 254, 97 C. C. A. 420, 19 Ann. Cas. 1145; U. S. v. Pomeroy (C. C.) 152 Fed. 279; U. S. v. Mitchell (C. C.) 163 Fed. 1014; Town of Carrollton v. Rhomberg, 78 Mo. 547; Willis v. Byrne, Adm'r, 106 Ala. 425, 17 South. 332; March v. State, 5 Tex. App. 450; Overland, etc., Co. v. People, 32 Colo. 263, 75 Pac. 924, 105 Am. St. Rep. 74; Boyd v. State, 3 Okl. Cr. 684, 108 Pac. 431."

That counsel misconceives the reason for the doubt in cases where the judgment is a fine is made clear by a short quotation from U. S. v. Pomeroy, supra, which reads: "It is well settled that all prosecutions for crimes before judgment are abated by the death of the party charged. When the punishment for a crime is imprisonment, the death of the convict, of course, puts an end to the punishment; but, upon the question whether a judgment in a criminal prosecution imposing a fine as a punishment is abrogated by the defendant's death, there appears to be very little authority." We entertain no doubt but that the proceeding is abated.

It is therefore adjudged that all proceedings in the above-entitled cause have permanently abated, and that the trial court enter its appropriate order to that effect.

CROZIER et ux. v. SOQUEL. (Civ. 3905.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Oct. 22, 1929.

1. Trusts ⇨89(1)—Evidence supported findings that defendant held lands purchased in trust for plaintiffs.

Evidence held to support findings that defendant acted as agent for plaintiffs in purchasing land and that defendant held lands purchased in trust for plaintiffs, and that reasonable value of land, which defendant sold to third party, was $1,200.

2. Trusts ⇨371(2)—Complaint to compel defendant to convey property or for reasonable value of property which defendant agreed to purchase for plaintiffs held one to enforce trust.

Complaint alleging that defendant agreed to purchase for plaintiffs certain land and pay purchase price for plaintiffs, that defendant did purchase property and obtained without plaintiffs' consent deed granting property to herself, and seeking judgment compelling defendant to convey property to plaintiffs or for reasonable value thereof, held one to enforce trust and not one for specific performance of contract.

3. Trusts ⇨365(4)—Plaintiffs held not guilty of laches in suing May 1, 1925, to enforce trust in land purchased by defendant, where defendant wrongfully sold land May 7, 1923.

Where defendant, who had agreed to purchase property for plaintiffs, purchased it, and property was conveyed to defendant on March 30, 1923, and sold by her on May 7, 1923, to another, plaintiffs were not guilty of laches in commencing action May 1, 1925, to compel conveyance to plaintiffs or for reasonable value, where it did not appear delay resulted in injury or prejudice to defendant.

4. Trusts ⇨339—Defendant wrongfully selling property purchased for plaintiffs held liable for value thereof.

Defendant wrongfully selling property a few weeks after it was conveyed to her, where she had agreed to purchase it for plaintiffs, held liable for value thereof.

5. Trusts ⇨361—Defendant selling land purchased for plaintiffs became liable for money demand, making unnecessary plaintiffs' tender of amount expended for title in order to enforce trust.

Defendant, by wrongfully selling property which she had agreed to purchase for plaintiffs became liable for mere money demand as difference between value of property and amount expended by her, so that plaintiffs were not required to tender amount expended by defendant in obtaining title in order to enforce trust.

6. Trusts ⇨359(3), 372(1)—Plaintiffs suing to compel defendant to convey land or for reasonable value need not show adequacy of consideration or inadequate remedy at law.

It was not necessary for plaintiffs suing to compel defendant to convey property to them which she had agreed to purchase for plaintiffs or for reasonable value of property to show adequacy of consideration or inadequacy of remedy at law.

7. Trusts ⇨361—Demand by plaintiffs for property purchased by defendant for plaintiffs was unnecessary, where defendant would not have complied.

Where defendant's answer and her testimony showed that she would not have complied with demand of plaintiffs to convey property to them which she had agreed to purchase for plaintiffs, no demand by plaintiffs was required.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; E. C. Robinson, Judge.

Action by W. H. Crozier and wife against Flora Soquel. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

D. Joseph Coyne, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Morfoot & White, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

FINCH, P. J. The complaint alleges that, for a valuable consideration, the defendant agreed to purchase for the plaintiffs the land described in the complaint and to pay the purchase price thereof "for and on behalf of said plaintiffs"; that thereafter, "without the knowledge or consent of said plaintiffs, the said defendant did procure and purchase said property and * * * obtained, without the knowledge or consent of said plaintiffs, or without at any time informing said plaintiffs of said procurement, a deed, * * * granting and conveying all right, title and interest in and to said property to herself, said defendant"; and "that said property is now of the value of $3,000." The prayer is for a judgment compelling the defendant to convey the property to the plaintiffs, "or in lieu thereof give plaintiffs judgment for the reasonable value of said property."

The defendant did not demur to the complaint, but answered, denying that she agreed to purchase the property for the plaintiffs, alleging that she purchased it for herself, and admitting that it is of the reasonable value of $1,200.

The court found the foregoing allegations of the complaint, except as to value, to be true; that the plaintiffs agreed to pay and the defendant to accept $50 for her services in the transaction; that the defendant had sold the land "to innocent third parties for the sum of $1,000, and thereby placed it out of her power to convey to plaintiffs said lands"; that the reasonable value of the land is $1,200; and "that said defendant in said transactions was acting as the agent for plaintiffs, and that defendant became and was a resulting trustee or trustee by operation of law, holding said lands in trust for plaintiffs." Judgment was entered in favor of the plaintiffs for the difference between the reasonable value of the land, as found by the court, and the amount which the defendant had expended in the purchase thereof. The defendant has appealed from the judgment.

[1] The findings of the court are amply supported by the evidence. Both of the plaintiffs testified that the defendant had agreed to purchase the property for them, and their testimony was corroborated by that of several other witnesses. The defendant's testimony to the contrary is not corroborated. The testimony in support of the findings is too long to be given in detail, but the parts thereof hereinafter quoted show the nature of the transactions between the parties.

Mrs. Crozier testified: "My husband came home and he said, 'I see the lot back of us is for sale.' Mrs. Soquel was at my house at the time, and we walked down and talked about it. I says, 'Mrs. Soquel, do you want this lot?' She says, 'No, you couldn't give me any more.' * * * I says, 'I think I will buy this lot. * * * I will go to Mr. Jones and borrow the money.' She says 'No, Mrs. Crozier, let me let you have the money, and I will let you have it for $50.' I says, 'All right, Mrs. Soquel' * * * (The next day) I talked to Mr. Reynolds (an agent authorized to sell the lot) and told him she was coming down with the money and I would take the lot, and as I came out the door I met Mrs. Ballinger. * * * Mrs. Ballinger and I went up to Mrs. Soquel's house. * * * Mrs. Ballinger said, 'Mrs. Soquel, Mrs. Crozier can have that lot for $450 and why should you pay Mr. Reynolds $500?' * * * Mrs. Soquel said, 'I will go down and see Mr. Reynolds, and see if he will agree to take the $450, the same as the other agent,' and she went down. * * * After she came out of Mr. Reynolds' office, * * * Mrs. Soquel stated that Mr. Reynolds wanted $500. * * * Mrs. Ballinger said, 'Well, we will go in and see Mr. Phelps' (another agent), and they went in to see Phelps. He wanted so much money and she purchased the lot." The witness further testified that the original agreement was that the defendant would "loan me the money to buy the lot." The court asked her, "Was there any understanding that she would go down and buy it for you?" The witness answered, "There was later when she started as my agent to town." This answer evidently relates to the time when the defendant, according to the testimony of the witness, said, "I will go down and see Mr. Reynolds and see if he will take the $450."

Mr. Crozier testified: "My wife and I both agreed that we would give her (defendant) $50 for the use of that money until such time as this deed passed through escrow. As soon as the title had been cleared up by the title company, then we could go to Mr. Jones and present this deed and also our other lot and be ample security to get a loan. * * * After Mrs. Ballinger and her had been to the city, * * * (the latter) told my wife, 'Well, you got the lot.'"

There is other testimony to the effect that the defendant stated that she had purchased the property for the plaintiffs and that she was to receive $50 for the use of her money "until the papers came through escrow." William Jones testified that, prior to the transactions stated, he had promised Mrs. Crozier to loan her the money to buy the lot in question, that "sometime later * * * she came in and she said that she had got the money from Mrs. Soquel, and I told her whenever their escrow was finished * * * I would give them the money. * * * Mrs. Crozier and Mrs. Soquel came in some time later and I told them that when they were ready to make their deed, bring it up to the office and I would pay them $500.00." The defendant testified that the property "was worth $1,200 when I bought it."

The facts proved and found are such as clearly to show a resulting trust. The following language of a recent decision is particularly applicable to such facts: "Testing the sufficiency of the transaction as one creating a resulting trust and, therefore, one which need not be in writing, we are able to appeal to a long line of decisions in this state to the effect that a transaction such as the one here under consideration will be properly denominated a loan by defendant to plaintiff, and a taking by defendant of the legal title to the property in controversy as security for repayment thereof, and the repudiation of this relation by the defendant a legal fraud giving rise to a resulting trust in the property." Webb v. Vercoe, 201 Cal. 754, 760, 258 P. 1099, 1101, 54 A. L. R. 1200; O'Rourke v. Skellenger, 169 Cal. 270, 146 P. 633; Brown v. Spencer, 163 Cal. 589, 126 P. 493.

[2] Much of appellant's argument is built upon the theory that this is an action for specific performance of a contract to sell real estate. It seems clear, however, that the action is one to enforce a trust. 25 Cal. Jur. 234; Bacon v. Grosse, 165 Cal. 481, 492, 132 P. 1027. It is contended that the complaint does not state a cause of action, that the plaintiffs were guilty of laches, and that the defendant's promise was not in writing and is therefore invalid. The contention last mentioned and the further one that the evidence is insufficient to warrant the findings and judgment are disposed of by what has already been said. As said by the trial court, "the complaint is inartificially drawn, but there is sufficient stated therein to apprise the defendant of the nature of the action." 25 Cal. Jur. 232 and 242. It not only appears that there has not been a miscarriage of justice (Const. art. 6, § 4½), but that the judgment rendered does exact justice between the parties.

[3, 4] It appears that the property was conveyed to the defendant about March 30, 1923. She sold it on May 7, 1923, for $1,000. This action was commenced May 1, 1925. It does not appear that the delay of the plaintiffs in bringing suit has in any manner resulted in injury or prejudice to the defendant. She wrongfully sold the property in a few weeks after it was conveyed to her, and the court properly held her liable for the value thereof admitted by the answer and which the defendant testified was its value when it was conveyed to her. Price v. Reeves, 38 Cal. 457, 461; Clapp v. Vatcher, 9 Cal. App. 462, 467, 99 P. 549. "There is no basis for a contention that the plaintiff has been guilty of laches where the rights of third persons are not involved, and the situation of the defendant has not been materially changed by reason of the plaintiff's delay in asserting his rights." 25 Cal. Jur. 264.

[5-7] Since the defendant had put it beyond her power to convey the legal title to the plaintiffs, it would have been an idle act for them to have tendered the amount expended by the defendant in obtaining such title. By her wrongful act, she became liable for a mere money demand, the difference between the value of the property and the amount expended by her. It was not necessary for the plaintiffs to show adequacy of consideration or the inadequacy of a remedy at law. 25 Cal. Jur. 229. Neither was it necessary to prove a demand before suit. The defendant's answer and her testimony given at the trial show that she would not have complied with such a demand. Under such circumstances no demand is required. 25 Cal. Jur. 229. The other contentions of the appellant are not deemed to have sufficient merit to warrant a discussion thereof.

The judgment is affirmed.

PEOPLE v. WILSON. (Cr. 1856.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Oct. 21, 1929.

1. Criminal law ⇨977(3)—Time in which sentence must be pronounced starts to run with return of verdict (Pen. Code, § 1191).

Requirements of Pen. Code, § 1191, that, after verdict, court must appoint time for pronouncing judgment being mandatory, time in which sentence must be pronounced starts to run with return by jury of verdict.

2. Criminal law ⇨977(3)—Pronouncement of sentence within 20 days of verdict allowed for considering question of probation held timely, although court was considering such question of its own motion (Pen. Code, §§ 1191, 1202, 1203).

Pronouncement of sentence within 20 days of verdict, under Pen. Code, § 1191, where court was considering question of probation of defendant convicted of violating State Poison Act (St. 1907, p. 124, as amended), held timely, although court was considering such question on its own motion as permitted by Pen. Code, § 1203, and section 1202 provides that court should grant new trial in case of failure to comply with direction of section 1191, that, after verdict, court should appoint time for pronouncing judgment, which must not be more than 5 days after verdict.

3. Criminal law ⇨1177—Procedural error in failing to sentence defendant within statutory period does not require reversal, where such failure, does not result in miscarriage of justice (Pen. Code, § 1191).

Failure to impose sentence within period provided by Pen. Code, § 1191, being error of procedure only, does not require reversal of order denying motion for new trial based on such error where such error does not result in miscarriage of justice.

4. Constitutional law ⇨203—Criminal law ⇨1201—Statute providing for amendment of information to charge prior convictions held not ex post facto (Pen. Code, § 969a, as added by St. 1927, p. 1064).

Pen. Code, § 969a, as added by St. 1927, p. 1064, providing that, if pending information does not charge prior convictions, such information should be amended to charge such prior convictions, held not ex post facto legislation.

5. Criminal law ⇨162—Statute providing for amending information to charge prior convictions held not invalid as creating double jeopardy (Pen. Code, § 969a, as added by St. 1927, p. 1064).

Pen. Code, § 969a, as added by St. 1927, p. 1064, providing that, if pending information does not charge prior convictions, such information should be amended to charge such prior convictions, held not unconstitutional on ground that such statute puts defendant twice in jeopardy.

6. Constitutional law ⇨265—Statute providing that information should be amended to charge prior convictions held not to deny due process (Pen. Code, § 969a, as added by St. 1927, p. 1064).

Pen. Code, § 969a, as added by St. 1927, p. 1064, providing that, if pending information does not charge prior convictions, such information should be amended to charge such prior convictions, held not in violation of due process, as such statute provides for supplemental pleading, plea thereto, and trial by jury of issue made thereby.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles W. Fricke, Judge.

George M. Wilson was convicted of violating the State Poison Act, with a charge of prior convictions, and he appeals. Affirmed.

John F. Groene, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., John L. Flynn, Deputy Atty. Gen., and Friedlander, Morfoot & Gray and John L. Van Buskirk, all of Los Angeles, for the People.

IRA F. THOMPSON, J. Two informations, both of them charging the offense of violating the State Poison Act (St. 1907, p. 124, as amended), were filed against the defendant. One of them alleged the crime to have been committed on March 24, 1929, and the other on March 25. The cases were consolidated, and he was found guilty of both offenses. This was on May 20, 1929. Time for sentence was fixed by the court for May 23. On this latter day the court denied defendant's motion for a new trial and at the same time permitted the district attorney to file two amended and supplemental informations charging the defendant with a prior conviction, in the District Court of the United States, of the offense of violating the Harrison Narcotic Act (26 USCA §§ 211, 691-707) and Jones-Miller Act (21 USCA §§ 171-177, 180, 182, 184, 185). Upon the denial by the defendant of the prior conviction, the trial judge refused to pronounce sentence, set the trial upon the issues presented by the supplemental informations for May 31, and continued the time for sentence to the same date. Just before the defendant denied the prior conviction, his counsel moved for a new trial on the ground that the filing of the supplemental informations necessitated a retrial of the entire action. He also made a motion to dismiss the supplemental informations on the ground that they came too late and for the further reason that section 969a of the Penal Code, which purports to authorize such procedure, is unconstitutional. The motion was denied. Although the record does not disclose that any application for probation was made, the transcript shows that, when the cause was continued to May 31, the trial judge said, in defining the purposes of the continuance, "and also for considering whether or not probation should be granted." The jury returned verdicts of guilty of prior convictions charged in both of the supplemental informations, and the cause was continued until June 3. The defendant again moved for a new trial, which motion was denied, and sentences were pronounced. A second supplemental information was then filed, alleging another prior conviction, but the trial thereon resulted in a verdict of not guilty, and for that reason it is not involved herein. The defendant has appealed from the judgments, from the order denying his motion for a new trial, made and entered May 23, 1929, from a similar order on May 31, 1929, from the order denying his motion for a new trial upon the issue of a prior conviction, made and entered June 3, 1929, from the order denying his motion for a new trial on the ground that he was not sentenced within the required time, and from the order denying his motion to dismiss the supplemental informations. He also says that he appeals from the verdicts of the jury, both upon the original as well as the supplemental informations. But it is apparent that they are not appealable.

The first and most insistent claim of appellant is that the trial court was bound to grant him a new trial when it failed to sentence him within the five-day period provided by section 1191 of the Penal Code. The material portion of the cited section is as follows: "After a plea or verdict of guilty, or after a verdict against the defendant on a plea of a former conviction or acquittal, or once in jeopardy, the court must appoint a time for pronouncing judgment, which must not be less than two, nor more than five days after the verdict or plea of guilty; provided, however, that the court may extend the time not more than ten days for the purpose of hearing or determining any motion for a new trial, or arrest of judgment; and provided, further, that the court may extend the time not more than twenty days in any case where the question of probation is considered in accordance with section 1203 of this code; provided, however, that upon the request of the defendant such time may be further extended not more than ninety days additional." Section 1202 of the same Code provides that the court shall grant a new trial in the case of failure to comply with the directions of the statute just quoted.

In 1927 (St. 1927, p. 1064), a new section, numbered 969a, of the Penal Code, was adopted, reading as follows: "Whenever it shall be discovered that a pending indictment or information does not charge all prior felonies of which the defendant has been convicted either in this state or elsewhere, said indictment or information shall be forthwith amended to charge such prior conviction or convictions, and such amendment may and shall be made upon order of the court, and no action of the grand jury (in the case of an indictment) shall be necessary. Defendant shall promptly be arraigned on such information or indictment as amended and be required to plead thereto. Whenever after sentence, and before the sentence has expired, it shall be discovered that the indictment or information on which defendant was convicted did not charge all felonies of which defendant had theretofore been convicted, either in this state or elsewhere, it shall be the duty of the district attorney of the county wherein defendant was sentenced to cause to be filed a supplemental information setting up such prior conviction or convictions. Said supplemental information may be filed either in the county from which defendant was sentenced or in the county in which he is then confined. Defendant shall thereupon be arraigned upon such supplemental information and be required to plead thereto. In whichever county the supplemental information is filed, the district attorney of the county from which defendant was sentenced shall sign the same and prosecute the proceedings. If defendant admit the prior conviction or convictions charged, the court shall resentence him to the sentence which would have been legal if such prior conviction or convictions had been admitted at the time of defendant's conviction, and such resentence shall operate as of the date of the original sentence. If defendant deny the prior conviction or convictions so charged, the issue shall be tried by a jury, or by the court if a jury be waived. If the issue be found in defendant's favor, such supplemental information shall be dismissed. If the issue be found against defendant, the court shall resentence defendant to the sentence which would have been legal if such prior conviction or convictions had been admitted at the time of defendant's conviction, and such resentence shall operate as of the date of the original sentence." (Italics ours.)

[1, 2] Obviously the Legislature intended, as is manifest from a reading of the statute, that an amended or supplemental information might be filed at any time prior to the expiration of the sentence of the convict. Undoubtedly the requirements of section 1191 are mandatory, and the time for sentence started to run with the return by the jury of the verdicts. People v. Gilbreth, 33 Cal. App. 23, 164 P. 18; In re Todd, 44 Cal. App. 496, 186 P. 790; Rankin v. Superior Court, 157 Cal. 189, 106 P. 718. However, the order of continuance recites that it was for the additional purpose of considering the question of probation. We cannot assume that, merely because counsel did not make application for the lenient consideration of his client, the trial judge was not actually contemplating its advisability in face of the order in the record. In fact, section 1203 of the Penal Code recites that the court "upon its own motion * * * at a time fixed may hear and determine in the presence of the defendant the matter of probation of the defendant and the conditions of such probation, if granted." Subsequent orders of the court indicate that the matter of probation was still in the mind of the court, at least until after the return of the verdicts upon the supplemental informations. The sentence was pronounced within the twenty-day period which the court is entitled to take when considering that question.

[3] In addition to what has already been said upon the subject, we may add that the law is now well settled that the failure to impose sentence within the statutory period is an error of procedure only, not requiring a reversal of the order denying the motion for a new trial, where it does not result in a miscarriage of justice. People v. Zuvella, 191 Cal. 223, 215 P. 907; People v. Powell, 83 Cal. App. 62, 256 P. 561. To make apparent the fact that no prejudice could have been suffered in this cause by the delay, let us remark that, if sentence had been pronounced within five days, the supplemental informations then filed and verdicts thereon returned and the appellant resentenced, he would be in no different position from the one he now occupies.

[4-6] Counsel also asserts that section 969a, to which reference has already been made, is unconstitutional, and that the court erred in permitting the supplemental informations to be filed. His contention in this regard is somewhat vague. He says, first, that a defendant is thus twice put in jeopardy; that the law violates the ex post facto as well as the due process provisions of the State and Federal Constitutions, and provides for cruel and unusual punishment. That there is little merit in any of these assertions is apparent from their face as well as from the concession of counsel in a subsequent portion of his brief when he employs the following language: "While in a strict sense, it cannot be claimed that he is 'twice put in jeopardy,' or that the act is an 'ex post facto' law, still it partakes somewhat of both. But, in a broad construction of the section, accused is 'deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law.'" We can hardly be expected to take time from other pending causes when counsel, with all of their enthusiasm for the case in hand, confesses his inability to find a provision of the fundamental law to which the section of the Code actually does violence. We think the argument that the law is unconstitutional because it is ex post facto legislation is completely answered by Ex parte Gutierrez, 45 Cal. 429, and, on the ground that it put the defendant twice in jeopardy and provides cruel and unusual punishment, by People v. Stanley, 47 Cal. 113, 17 Am. Rep. 401, and in re Finley, 1 Cal. App. 198, 81 P. 1041. That it does not violate a proper conception of the due process provisions is patent from the fact that it provides for the supplemental pleading, the plea thereto, and a trial by jury of the issue. The defendant is fully protected in his right to his day in court.

The next attack of appellant is to the effect that the prior conviction must be alleged in the information or indictment, and cannot be added by the supplemental pleading. This is but a restatement of the former argument that the section under discussion is unconstitutional, because there can be no doubt that it authorizes the procedure here employed and made use of also in the case of People v. Wilson (Cal. App.) 280 P. 137.

The remaining points deal solely with the sufficiency of the evidence. It was sufficient in all respects to support the jury in its deductions, and, of course, we are bound thereby.

WOOD v. NELLIS-RYUS. (Civ. 7098).

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Oct. 25, 1929.

1. Perpetuities ⚡6(1)—Covenant prohibiting sale of any lot with less than specified frontage held inapplicable to lot having less than specified frontage at time of agreement.

Covenant between landowners prohibiting sale of lots so that street frontage of any portion of any lot sold shall be less than 60 feet held inapplicable to prevent transfer of lot which had less than that frontage at time of agreement, and which was then held in private ownership, since to hold otherwise would render agreement unreasonable and unenforceable as perpetual restraint against alienation.

2. Covenants ⚡79(1)—Covenant declaring reversion to original grantor for breach of any conditions held not to confer right of action on grantee.

Covenant in deed providing that breach of any of foregoing conditions shall cause premises to revert to grantor, its successors and assigns, with right of immediate entry in event of breach, held not to confer right of action on grantee for breach of any of conditions.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; F. M. Jamison, Judge.

Action by Frank Linley Wood against Celeste Nellis-Ryus. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Porter & Sutton, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Erwin P. Werner, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

NOURSE, J. Plaintiff sued for damages, claiming breaches of several covenants relating to real property. Defendant had judgment, and the plaintiff has appealed on a bill of exceptions.

Plaintiff is the owner of lot 6 and of a portion of lot 8 in what is known as Laughlin Park in the city of Los Angeles. Defendant is the owner of a portion of lot 9 of the same tract. The Laughlin Park Company, a corporation, in 1913 subdivided and platted the tract in which the properties are located, and issued deeds which uniformly contained restrictions and covenants relating to the use and occupation of the lots by the grantees and their successors in interest. These deeds provided that "the breach of any of the foregoing conditions shall cause said premises to revert to the said grantors, its successors and assigns, each of whom respectively shall have the right of immediate re-entry upon said premises in the event of any such breach."

The portion of lot 9 owned by the defendant fronted on the De Mille road, and sloped down to the rear at a steep pitch. The plaintiff, feeling aggrieved because the defendant had constructed a residence upon her lot with a garage in front at the street level, instituted this proceeding on the theory that the defendant had breached some of the covenants and conditions contained in the original grant of the park company. The cause was fairly tried before the court sitting without a jury, and the court found in each instance claimed that there had been no breach.

On this appeal the appellant merely asserts in a general way that these findings are not supported by the evidence, but he does not cite any evidence which would require a different finding. On the other hand, the respondent cites evidence supporting each finding under attack, and this should be sufficient to support the judgment if it were not that the finding covering the restrictions contained in the lot owners' agreement partakes of the nature of a conclusion of law. Thus the finding that it was untrue that the defendant had violated the restrictions by building a home on the premises which had only 40 feet frontage on the street carries an interpretation of the meaning and effect of this restriction. The facts are that in May, 1921, the lot owners, including plaintiff and the predecessor of the defendant, executed and caused to be recorded an agreement placing additional restrictions upon the use of the lots located in the tract. One of these restrictions was "that no sale of said lands shall be made so that the street frontage of any portion of any lot so sold shall be less than sixty feet."

[1] The predecessor of defendant who signed this agreement had purchased from the park company a portion of lot 9—the southerly boundary of which was described as running "along the arc of a curve concave to the south, with a radius of 67 feet, along the southerly line of said lot 9, 40 feet to a point." The same lot with the same description was conveyed to defendant's husband, who conveyed it to the defendant by deed of gift. The suit being against the present owner of the property and the restriction being one against the sale of the lands only, the defendant cannot be charged with a breach of this restriction on the sale of the property, nor can she be charged with the breach of any unwritten implied covenant or condition because she uses the land which she thus acquired. The restriction upon the sale of lots, which was contained in the agreement, but not in the original deeds, cannot have any other meaning than that the owner of lands in the tract should not be permitted to so subdivide his holdings as to transfer any portion of his property having less than a 60-foot frontage. To apply the restriction to prevent the transfer of a lot which had less than that frontage at the time of the agreement, and which was then held in private ownership, would render the agreement unreasonable and unenforceable as a perpetual restraint against alienation of property.

[2] As to the restrictions contained in the deeds, the express language which we have quoted herein declares the original grantor to be the reversioneer, and there is nothing in the deeds to indicate an intention to carry this right on to the grantees. Such being the case, the appellant herein has no right of action. Werner v. Graham, 181 Cal. 174, 179, 183 P. 945; McBride v. Freeman, 191 Cal. 152, 154, 215 P. 678.

WELCH v. GUNN. (Civ. 5578.) ★

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Oct. 21, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Nov. 1, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Dec. 19, 1929.

1. Work and labor ⇨7(6)—Person living with stepsister agreeing to furnish permanent home until stepsister's conduct prevented continuance could recover in quantum meruit for services.

Where person, on being solicited, left position in another state for purpose of residing with stepsister, who was to furnish her permanent home, and stepsister with whom she was to live by conduct made continuance of arrangement impossible, one solicited could recover in quantum meruit action for services.

2. Work and labor ⇨14(1)—Plaintiff, solicited to make "permanent home" with stepsister, could treat contract as rescinded, where stepsister's conduct prevented fulfillment of contract, and recover reasonable value of services.

Where plaintiff was solicited by stepsister to give up position in another state, and come and make permanent home with her, and, after time, stepsister's conduct prevented continuance of arrangement, term "permanent home" being interpreted to mean home until either one deceased, plaintiff solicited to enter into arrangement could consider contract rescinded and recover for reasonable value of services rendered.

3. Work and labor ⇨29(3)—$1,000 for services rendered by plaintiff to stepsister for eight months held not excessive.

$1,000 as value of services of plaintiff living with stepsister, who solicited plaintiff to make permanent home with her, held not excessive, where stepsister prevented continuance of arrangement after about eight months by her unjustifiable acts and conduct.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Hartley Shaw, Judge.

Action by Ethel Welch against Hettie Reese, in which L. O. Gunn, as executor of the last will and testament of Hettie Reese, deceased, was substituted as defendant. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

S. C. Schaefer, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

James, Pace, Smith & Younkin, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

HAHN, Justice pro tem. The action which gives rise to this appeal was brought in the municipal court of the city of Los Angeles for the purpose of recovering judgment for $1,000, the complaint being drawn in the form of a common count, alleging the rendering of services by the plaintiff to the defendant, Hettie Reese, at her instance and request, and the reasonable value thereof. From a judgment rendered in favor of the plaintiff for the sum of $1,000, the defendant, Hettie Reese, appealed to the superior court in and for the county of Los Angeles, which court in due course affirmed the judgment of the lower court.

The case comes here upon appeal taken by defendant, Hettie Reese, during her lifetime. Pending appeal, the defendant, Hettie Reese, deceased, and L. O. Gunn, the duly appointed and qualified executor of the last will and testament of Hettie Reese, deceased, was substituted as defendant and appellant by order duly made.

Appellant argues at length that the superior court erred in refusing to grant her motion for a new trial and her motion to vacate the judgment of the municipal court. The reasons urged are: (1) That the evidence is insufficient to support the findings; (2) that, upon the findings, the conclusions of law should have been in favor of defendant and judgment rendered thereon for the defendant; (3) that the judgment is excessive.

A brief résumé of the evidence is necessary to a discussion of the points raised.

Plaintiff and defendant were stepsisters, the former residing in New York and the latter in Los Angeles. Each was advancing in years and living alone without a family. Plaintiff was employed at a salary that provided her with a comfortable living, while defendant was possessed of a home and independent means, but in poor health, and requiring the companionship of some one in the home with her. Through correspondence the defendant suggested to the plaintiff that, if she would come and make her permanent home with her, she (the defendant) would pay the expenses of maintaining the home. Without going into the details of the testimony with regard to the arrangement, it may be fairly inferred that it was the understanding of both parties that the arrangement contemplated a permanent home for the plaintiff as long as either of the sisters lived. Pursuant to the invitation to the plaintiff from the defendant, plaintiff gave up her position in New York and came to Los Angeles, making her home with the defendant for a period of about eight months, when, by reason of the conduct of the defendant and her treatment of the plaintiff, she (the plaintiff) was compelled to leave the home and return to New York. Following this breaking up of the arrangement, plaintiff brought this action in the municipal court of the city of Los Angeles to recover a judgment for the sum of $1,000 as compensation for the services rendered by her to the defendant during said period of eight months.

[1] Appellant urges at length in her brief that the plaintiff had no cause of action on a quantum meruit; that, if she had any cause of action, it was for damages for breach of contract. There is no merit in this contention. It is so well settled in California that citations seem unnecessary that under certain types of contracts, particularly those providing for the rendering of personal services, where the employer without legal cause prevents the completion of the contract, the other party may recover in a quantum meruit action. The rule is set forth in the case of Brown v. Crown Gold Milling Co., 150 Cal. 376, 89 P. 86, 90, as follows:

"It is the general rule that where an employé is without cause discharged by his employer during the term of his employment, he may regard the contract as rescinded, and sue upon a quantum meruit, and recover the reasonable value of his services, as if the special contract of employment had never been made."

[2] Appellant dwells at length on the meaning of the term "permanent home," which the court found was the term which was used between the parties in their contract in relation to the consideration that should flow to the plaintiff for coming out and caring for her sister. Whatever may be the various interpretations placed upon that term depending upon the circumstances under which it is used, in view of the circumstances involved in the instant case, and particularly in view of the fact that the plaintiff gave up a position in New York to come to California to be with her sister, it is reasonable to conclude that the term "permanent home" was understood between the parties to mean a home until either one deceased. With that interpretation of the term, and the plaintiff being deprived of that "permanent home" by the unjustifiable acts and conduct of the defendant, plaintiff comes well within the rule that permits an employee to consider the contract as rescinded and recover for the reasonable value of the services rendered.

[3] We are satisfied that there is sufficient evidence to support the findings and that the conclusions of law and judgment properly flow from the findings of fact. Nor do we feel that there is any merit in the contention that the judgment is excessive. The character of the services rendered by the plaintiff, as well as the testimony as to the reasonable value of such services, fully warrant the amount of the judgment.

Other questions are touched upon in the briefs, but we do not deem it necessary to consider them in detail.

We are of the opinion that the judgment of the superior court sustaining the judgment of the lower court was proper. The judgment is affirmed.

CORNELIUS v. CORNELIUS. (Civ. 3903.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Oct. 19, 1929.

1. Divorce $\S$ 108—In husband's divorce action, variance held to exist between allegations of complaint that property settlement was procured by duress and proof thereon.

In husband's divorce action, where husband alleged wife procured property settlement by threatening criminal prosecution, and wife testified that, after signing of contract, she wadded up contract and threw it away, that husband picked it up and begged her to take it, and that she had never urged signing of contract by threatening criminal prosecution, variance held to exist between allegations of complaint and proof thereon.

2. Divorce $\S$ 253—In divorce action, evidence held to support finding upholding validity of property settlement which husband claimed had been procured by duress.

In husband's divorce action, where husband alleged wife procured property settlement by threatening criminal prosecution, and wife testified that, after signing of contract, she wadded up contract and threw it away, that husband picked it up and begged her to take it, and that she had never urged signing of contract by threatening criminal prosecution, evidence held to support finding upholding validity of property settlement contract.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; J. Walter Hanby, Judge.

Action by Charles E. Cornelius against May E. Cornelius. From a judgment for the defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Homer C. Mills, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

A. P. G. Steffes and Frank T. Hennessey, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

THOMPSON, J. This is an appeal from a judgment of divorce which was awarded the defendant upon her cross-complaint and confirming a previous agreement settling the property rights of the spouses. The sole question is the validity of this contract.

The plaintiff filed an action for divorce against the defendant on the ground of extreme cruelty. The complaint alleged that she was possessed of certain community property which she was holding by virtue of a previous written agreement purporting to settle all property rights between them, but which contract was procured by means of duress on the part of the defendant consisting of threats to prosecute the plaintiff on a charge of adultery, and that this contract was subsequently canceled by the resumption of matrimonial relations and by mutual consent of the parties. The complaint prayed for a decree of divorce and the cancellation of the property settlement contract, together with an award of a share of the community property.

The answer denied seriatim the charges of cruelty, the existence of any community property, the exercise of duress or threats in procuring the execution of the agreement, and the cancellation by a resumption of marital relations or by mutual consent. The affirmative defense of res judicata was asserted with respect to the attack upon the validity of this agreement. In a cross-complaint the defendant charged the plaintiff with adultery, and prayed for a divorce on that ground.

Upon the trial the court adopted specific findings against the plaintiff on each of the material issues, and awarded the defendant a decree of divorce upon her cross-complaint. The validity of the property settlement agreement was upheld.

The appellant does not attack that part of the judgment which grants the defendant a divorce, but contends that the findings upholding the property settlement agreement are unsupported by the evidence. Much of his brief is devoted to an attack upon the jurisdiction of the municipal court of Los Angeles, which passed upon the validity of that contract.

The findings and judgment are amply supported by substantial evidence upon every essential issue.

The parties to this action were married in 1908, and lived in harmony for several years. The appellant was a linotype operator, and for some time was engaged with the Los Angeles Examiner at a salary of about $50 a week. The respondent testified that at the time of their marriage the appellant was without means, and subsequently acquired none, his wages having been expended for their maintenance; that, upon the contrary, she owned the Byron Hotel when they were married, which she afterwards sold leaving her a net balance of $2,500; that she engaged in the apartment house business during their married life, investing her separate funds in one apartment house after another, each of which was sold at a substantial profit, until in 1921 she had accumulated a fund of some $8,700, which she kept in a bank in her own name, and in which fund the appellant had no interest. At the time of the trial of this case it appears that there was but about $1,- 600 of this fund remaining. Dissensions arose between the spouses. During respondent's illness in May, 1922, the appellant fraudulently procured and cashed a check on her account for $4,500. Upon discovering this fraud, she threatened to prosecute him, and he returned nearly all of this money. Subsequently the appellant was arrested and convicted of battery upon his wife. He appropriated her automobile and forged her name to obtain a transfer of the license to his name. He consorted with another woman whom he accompanied upon an extended automobile trip, and confessed to his wife his illicit intercourse with this woman. The spouses were separated in January, 1924. For a period of time he occupied an apartment with communicating bedrooms, in one which this woman slept. They shared the use of the dining room and kitchen together. The evidence is convincing that during this time and upon other occasions he was guilty of adultery with this woman. Indeed, this fact is not controverted on appeal. Near midnight on March 21, 1924, the respondent, in company with two officers, visited her husband's apartment, where they found him with his paramour under circumstances which led to his arrest on a charge of adultery. This charge was subsequently dismissed for lack of prosecution on the part of the respondent. February 16, 1924, the following letter was sent to the appellant:

"Los Angeles, Cal. Feb. 16, 1924

"Mr. C. E. Cornelius: With the persuasion of my friends and to spare myself and family the disgrace of making you answer to the charge of forgery and paying the penalty for same you go to my attorney and sign an affidavit that he will prepared for you that must be done by Monday evening Feb. 18th, 1924, and then you can go your way as long as you conduct yourself so as not to disgrace me with the woman that has caused you your trouble. Your wife, Mrs. C. E. Cornelius."

April 2, 1924, the parties to this action went together to the office of E. M. Schwartz, who was acting as attorney for the respondent in the negotiations preliminary to the contemplated divorce proceedings. Without controversy, this property settlement agreement was then signed by the respective parties. It recited that the parties were then separated, and that a suit for divorce had been dismissed; that during the time the parties remained separated the appellant would pay his wife the sum of $15 a week as maintenance; that all property then in the possession of the respective spouses, together with all property which might be acquired by either party in the future, should remain the separate property of such party. It was then provided that, in the event the parties should become reconciled and resume matrimonial relations, this contract should thereupon become void. The parties were not thereafter reconciled, and respondent testified that they never again resumed matrimonial relations. Payments were made by the appellant on this contract for the period of about a year, and then he ceased to comply with its terms. In August, 1925, suit was commenced by this respondent against her husband in the justice's court of Los Angeles county to recover the deferred payments upon this contract. The appellant answered, setting up the defense that the contract had been annulled by the reconciliation of the parties and their resumption of marital relations, but neglected to claim that the agreement was procured by duress or threatened prosecution of a crime. A trial ensued. All the issues were decided against this appellant, and a judgment was duly entered, in effect upholding the validity of the contract. From this judgment no appeal was perfected, and it became final.

[1, 2] This suit was subsequently instituted. The appellant's effort to prove that this contract settling property rights was procured by duress utterly failed. There was a clear variance between the allegations of his complaint and the proof thereof. The complaint charged the respondent with procuring the signature of the appellant by threatening to prosecute him for adultery. The letter which was offered in proof of the charge of duress read in part, " * * * to spare myself * * * the disgrace of making you answer to the charge of forgery and paying the penalty for same you go to my attorney and sign an affidavit. * * *" It does not appear what the "affidavit" had to do with the property contract. Certainly it had no reference to the alleged threat to prosecute the appellant for adultery. The letter was written before the discovery of the offense of adultery. The appellant testified that, immediately after signing the document, he sat down and said: "I had to sign that contract to keep out of the penitentiary." Mrs. Cornelius testified regarding this transaction: "After the contract was signed he passed some insulting remark, I don't just recall what he said, and I wadded up the contract and threw it out. I said 'If that's the way you feel about it we will just let the courts settle this' (adjustment of property rights). He picked it up and begged me to take it." This seems to refute the theory of coercion. Moreover, the respondent further testified that she never urged the signing of the contract by threatening a prosecution of any sort, but, upon the contrary, that the appellant voluntarily offered to do so. On cross-examination she said: "He came to me and offered to do that voluntarily. * * * Q. Now you never used any threats at all to get him to sign that contract, did you? A. Absolutely not." She further testified that at no time since the execution of the contract had they ever lived together or resumed matrimonial relations. This was a sufficient showing in spite of the conflict of evidence upon which to support the findings and judgment upholding the binding validity of the contract. In truth, the record may well be deemed to be sufficient upon which to support a finding that all the property possessed by the respondent at the time of the divorce proceeding was her separate property, independent of the provisions of the contract in question.

Surely the merits of this cause are favorable to the respondent. Her domestic happiness was destroyed by the conduct of the appellant. There are ample grounds upon which to sustain all the relief which she secured.

With this view of the record it becomes unnecessary to consider the further contention of the appellant that the municipal court was without jurisdiction to pass upon the validity of the contract, or the respondent's claim that the present controversy over its validity is res judicata.

The judgment is affirmed.

MILLS v. MILLS. (Civ. 5.)

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California. Oct. 16, 1929.

1. Divorce  161—Husband held not entitled to have default divorce judgment set aside on ground of inadvertence and excusable mistake.

In action for divorce, where trial was not had until approximately 3½ months after service on husband of original summons and complaint, 2½ months after his being notified by letter that plaintiff was preparing to proceed with her action, and over 1½ months after second service of process on husband, husband held not entitled to have default divorce judgment set aside on ground of inadvertence and excusable mistake.

2. Divorce  161—Court's discretion in denying application to set aside default divorce judgment will not be disturbed in absence of abuse.

Application to set aside default judgment of divorce being addressed to discretion of court, its action in denying or granting such application will not be disturbed on appeal unless clear abuse of such discretion is shown.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Bernardino County; Charles L. Allison, Judge.

Action by Ardys M. Mills against Marshal C. Mills. From an order denying defendant's motion to set aside a default judgment and interlocutory decree of divorce, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

A. L. Seville and Bruce G. Seville, both of Brawley, for appellant.

Leland S. Davidson, of Ontario, for respondent.

MARKS, J. This action was brought by plaintiff against defendant for divorce and to secure the custody of and support for Marcelle Mills, the daughter of the parties, of the age of 3 years. The plaintiff was given an interlocutory decree of divorce, with the custody of the child and $20 a month for the support of the minor.

The complaint was filed by plaintiff in the superior court of San Bernardino county on or about April 1, 1926, and the summons served on defendant personally in the county of Imperial, on or about April 19, 1926. An amended complaint was filed June 16, 1926, and personal service of the summons was had on the same day in the county of San Bernardino. The default of the defendant was entered on July 1, 1926. The trial was had on August 5, 1926, and the interlocutory decree of divorce signed on that day.

On October 30, 1926, the defendant appeared and filed a notice of motion to set aside and vacate the interlocutory decree of divorce. An answer and cross-complaint and a motion in the form of an affidavit by defendant was filed at the same time. This motion was heard and denied on November 22, 1926.

[1] Defendant's motion was made under the provisions of section 473, Code of Civil Procedure, on the grounds of inadvertence, mistake, and excusable neglect on his part, and also upon the grounds of fraud and subterfuge on the part of the plaintiff.

The inadvertence, mistake, and excusable neglect on the part of defendant is set forth in his affidavit substantially as follows: That, upon learning of the divorce proceedings, he became ill, worried, and grief-stricken to such an extent that he became temporarily mentally incapacitated and incapable of properly protecting his interests in the divorce action.

The fraud and subterfuge on the part of plaintiff, as alleged by defendant grew out of purported statements made by plaintiff to defendant at various times, after the filing of both the original and amended complaints, to the effect that she would dismiss her complaint or that they would live together again, and that "if things went to suit plaintiff she would not procure the permanent decree."

Plaintiff filed her own and three other affidavits which were before the court on the hearing of the motion. These affidavits controvert all of the allegations of defendant as to his mental incapacity and as to any fraud or subterfuge on the part of the plaintiff. It will be noted that, during the entire period of defendant's alleged "temporary mental incapacity," it appears from his affidavit that he had sufficient mind and memory to remember all of the various alleged conversations with and conduct of plaintiff upon which he bases his charges of fraud and subterfuge.

Instead of showing any inadvertence, mistake, or excusable neglect on the part of defendant or fraud or subterfuge on the part of plaintiff, the record before this court shows that the defendant knew and understood the nature of the proceedings against him and that plaintiff and her attorney were fair in all their dealings with him. On May 18, 1926, plaintiff's attorney wrote the defendant as follows: "I am writing you in regard to the matter of the suit for divorce your wife has started against you. You will recall I promised not to take advantage of you in the matter of entering a default against you and promised you I would notify you and give you a chance to put in an answer. She has instructed me to go ahead with the divorce and I am giving you the chance to put in an answer. I shall wait one week to have default entered, and if you do not enter your answer by that time I shall have the default entered." It will be noted that the amended complaint was not filed until June 16, upon which day defendant was again served, and that his default was not entered until July 1. The hearing was had and the interlocutory decree of divorce signed August 5, 1926.

We are aware of the well-established rule that the courts are very zealous in giving litigants their day in court in domestic relations cases. We believe that where, as in this case, the defendant was served with process not only once, but twice, where the trial was not had until approximately 3½ months after the service upon him of the original summons and complaint, 2½ months after his being notified by letter that plaintiff was preparing to proceed with her action, and over 1½ months after the second service of process upon him, he cannot be heard to say that his neglect to appear and defend the action was excusable.

[2] "An application of this kind is addressed to the sound legal discretion of the court, and its action in granting or denying the prayer of the petitioner will not be disturbed on appeal, unless a clear abuse of such discretion is shown." McDonald v. McDonald, 173 Cal. 175, 159 P. 426, 427.

In this case the appellant failed to show any abuse of discretion on the part of the trial court, and the order denying his motion is therefore affirmed.

SECURITY INVESTORS' REALTY CO. v. SUPERIOR COURT IN AND FOR LOS ANGELES COUNTY et al. (Civ. 6715.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Oct. 25, 1929.

1. Corporations Ⓒ292—Resignation was complete where corporation's secretary and director mailed resignation, notwithstanding by-laws regarding terms of officers, etc.

Where secretary and director of corporation deposited resignation in writing in mail, directed to corporation and president thereof, resignation was complete and effective, notwithstanding by-laws to effect that each director should serve term for which elected and until successor should qualify, and that officers should be elected annually and hold office until successors were appointed.

2. Corporations Ⓒ507(10)—Service of summons and complaint on former secretary of corporation, who had resigned, was same as if made on stranger.

Service of summons and complaint on former secretary and director of corporation, who had resigned, was the same as if made upon a stranger.

Application by Security Investors' Realty Company for writ of prohibition to be directed to the Superior Court in and for Los Angeles County, and others, to prevent further action in a certain proceeding. Writ issued.

Ward Chapman and William Ellis Lady, both of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

Pacht, Pelton & Warne and William W. Leavitt, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

YORK, J. Service of summons in an action was attempted to be made upon Security Investors' Realty Company by delivery of copies of summons and complaint to Shirley E. Meserve, secretary of said company, more than a year after he had tendered his resignation in writing as secretary and director of said company, which resignation was deposited in the United States mail, directed to the Security Investors' Realty Company and J. Meyer, president thereof.

Upon the entry of a default in such action against the said company, petitioner served upon plaintiffs' counsel a notice of motion and special appearance requesting the court to quash the purported service of summons upon petitioner herein as a defendant in such action by such service had upon said Shirley E. Meserve. This notice of motion was made without making an appearance for any other purpose; said motion being supported by affidavits showing that Shirley E. Meserve, before the said service upon him as secretary of the said corporation, had resigned both as secretary and as director thereof. Upon a hearing of said matter, the court, on or about the 10th day of June, 1929, did make and enter an order denying said motion. Thereafter petitioner here petitioned this court for both a writ of review and a writ of prohibition, and this court issued an alternative writ of prohibition, only.

The whole question to be determined in this matter is whether or not the said Meserve was, at the time of the service of the said summons and complaint, secretary of or a director of said corporation.

[1, 2] Some point is made of the fact that in the by-laws of said corporation it is provided that "each director shall serve for the term for which he shall have been elected and until his successor shall have been duly elected and have qualified * * *", and also "the executive officers of the company shall be a president, vice-president, secretary and treasurer. The president, vice-president, secretary and treasurer shall be elected annually by the board, and shall hold office until their successors are appointed."

Quoting from 7 Ruling Case Law, p. 427, § 416: "Resignation: An officer of a corporation may terminate his office by resignation, if the statutes, charter and by-laws impose no limitation thereon, and, in doing so, he need give no notice to the public nor to persons dealing with the corporation."—citing Zeltner v. Henry Zeltner Brewing Co., 174 N. Y. 247, 66 N. E. 810, 812, 95 Am. St. Rep. 574, and note therein. "The fact that a statute requires directors, unless removed, to continue in office until their successors are appointed, does not prevent a director from resigning at any time" citing Briggs v. Spaulding, 141 U. S. 132, 11 S. Ct. 924, 931, 35 L. Ed. 662. "Since an officer may resign, as a rule, at pleasure, no action on the part of the corporation is essential to make his resignation effectual. Acceptance thereof by the directors or governing body is not required. When he tenders his resignation to the proper corporate authorities, to take effect immediately, the resignation is complete, although it is not acted on by the corporation or entered in its books. * * *"

It was said in the cited case of Zeltner v. Henry Zeltner Brewing Co., supra: "When we come to consider the general right of officers and directors of corporations to resign, we are at once reminded of the limitations of the question certified to us. We may admit, for the purposes of this discussion, that, as a general rule, such officers may resign at will, and that the validity of such resignations does not depend upon their formal acceptance."

Quoting from Briggs v. Spaulding, supra: "The resignation was orally tendered to the president, and manifestly accepted by him, since the sale of the stock was made at the same time, and the president informed the cashier of the fact a few days afterwards. Putting a resignation in writing is the more orderly and proper mode of procedure; but if the fact exists, and is adequately proven, the result is necessarily the same, as applied to this case. We do not understand that because section 5145, Rev. St. [12 USCA § 71] provides that directors shall hold office for one year and until their successors have been elected and have qualified, this prohibits resignations during the year; and while the banking law is silent as to the time when and the method by which the office of director may be resigned, we think that leaves it as at common law, and that this resignation was effective."

It would therefore follow that the resignation of Shirley E. Meserve as secretary and as director was complete and effective, and therefore that service in this case had upon him as an officer of the corporation was the same as if made upon a stranger.

Let the peremptory writ issue.

BILTMORE DRUGSTORE v. SUPERIOR COURT IN AND FOR LOS ANGELES COUNTY et al. (Civ. 6992.)★

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Oct. 21, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Nov. 1, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Dec. 16, 1929.

1. Divorce ~~§~~264—One to whom alimony was ordered payable held entitled, notwithstanding dismissal of divorce action, to maintain supplementary proceedings in aid of execution to enforce alimony order (Code Civ. Proc. § 717; Civ. Code, §§ 137, 140).

Where alimony under order in divorce action accrued before dismissal of action, party to whom alimony was payable held entitled under Code Civ. Proc. § 717, to maintain supplementary proceedings in aid of execution to enforce payment of alimony, notwithstanding dismissal of action, in view of Civ. Code, §§ 137, 140, authorizing execution and enforcement of order for alimony by any remedy applicable to case.

2. Divorce ~~§~~264—Order for payment of alimony pendente lite in divorce action held judgment within statute authorizing supplementary proceedings (Code Civ. Proc. § 717).

Order for payment of alimony pendente lite in divorce action held a judgment within Code Civ. Proc. § 717, relating to examination on supplementary proceedings of debtors of judgment debtor or those having property belonging to him.

Application by the Biltmore Drugstore for writ of prohibition prayed to be directed to the Superior Court in and for Los Angeles County, Harry R. Archbald, Judge, and another, to prevent enforcement of an order in a supplementary proceeding in aid of execution issued pursuant to an order for payment of alimony. Writ denied.

Max Schleimer, of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

CONREY, P. J. In this proceeding petitioner seeks to prevent the enforcement of an order made by the superior court in a supplementary proceeding brought under section 717 of the Code of Civil Procedure, in aid of an execution issued pursuant to an order for the payment of alimony in a certain divorce action commenced by Julius Robbins, plaintiff, against Pauline Robbins, defendant. After the supplementary proceeding had been commenced the plaintiff filed a dismissal of his action.

[1, 2] It is contended that the order for payment of alimony and attorney's fees pendente lite became inoperative upon dismissal of the action, and therefore that petitioner cannot be examined under the order in supplementary proceedings. Petitioner contends also that supplementary proceedings can be based only upon a judgment, and that an order for the payment of alimony and attorney's fees pendente lite is not a judgment. In our opinion these contentions of petitioner are without merit. We do not doubt that upon the dismissal of the action further payments under the order would no longer accrue; but we think that payments which already had accrued and were due and payable remain so due and payable, notwithstanding dismissal of the action. In section 137 of the Civil Code, where the allowance of money necessary for the prosecution or defense of the action and for support and maintenance is authorized, it is provided that "execution may issue therefor in the discretion of the court." Section 140, contained in the same article and same chapter, authorizes the court to require reasonable security for providing maintenance, etc., and "may enforce the same by the appointment of a receiver, or by any other remedy applicable to the case." Section 717 of the Code of Civil Procedure is the section which relates to the examination on supplemental proceedings of debtors of a judgment debtor or of those having property belonging to him. It provides that "after the issuing or return of an execution against property of the judgment debtor," etc., these third parties above mentioned may be required to appear for examination. The claim that an order for the payment of alimony pendente lite is not a judgment within the meaning of this statute ignores the fact that such order is in its essence, if not in name, a judgment. It has been so treated in the decisions. "The application for alimony, though it cannot be considered a separate suit, is a proceeding for a separate judgment, which, when granted, has nothing to do with the final judgment in the case, and will not be affected by it. It is a final judgment from which an appeal may be taken." Hite v. Hite, 124 Cal. 389, 393, 57 P. 227, 45 L. R. A. 793,

Young 184 acre allotment and the Northeast corner of the lands allotted to Andreas Machado and brothers, thence South 65° 03' East 1870.48 feet to a point, thence South 50° 07' East 2562.69 feet, more or less, to the Easterly boundary of the said 184 acre allotment to John D. Young, said line being a line drawn through a point 20 feet South-west of the North-west corner of Schaefer's Barn, and a point in the center of the lane as marked at present by fence at angle point, thence following the center of said lane as marked by fences and continued in a straight line to intersection with said Easterly line of said John D. Young 184 acre allotment."

The defendant Marcus Land & Investment Company has acquired title to the adjacent lands which Schaefer owned at the time of the execution of his deed to Squire. The plaintiff, as one of Squire's successors in title, has acquired a lot fronting on Washington boulevard adjoining the company's land and having a depth of 256.41 feet, measured along the common boundary line. The controversy is over the location of the line described in Schaefer's deed to Squire.

The Schaefer barn referred to in the deed is located 262.8 feet southeasterly from the southeasterly boundary line of Washington boulevard. Several witnesses testified that this barn was erected shortly before the execution of the deed, and that the location thereof has not been changed. The court found that prior to and at all times since the execution of the deed there existed a fence marking the boundary line between the lands retained by Schaefer and those conveyed by him to Squire; that "a line drawn through a point 20 feet southwest of the northwest corner of Schaefer's barn and a point in the center of the lane * * * at angle point," as described in the deed, "followed and exactly corresponded with said fence from said southwesterly line of said Washington boulevard for a distance of about 865.70 feet"; and that such line intersects the "southeasterly line of said Washington boulevard at approximately right angles thereto" at a point "549.48 feet from a large sandstone, * * * marking the northwest corner of said John D. Young 184 acre allotment." There is ample evidence to support these findings.

The course of the boundary line as described in the deed is a continuous straight line for a distance of 1,870.48 feet from Washington boulevard. It is first described as beginning at a point 560.98 feet from the northwest corner of the "Young 184 acre allotment." It is again described as running "through a point 20 feet southwest of the northwest corner of Schaefer's barn and a point in the center of the lane as marked at present by fence at angle point"; the latter point being the terminus of the straight line of 1,870.48 feet. The line, according to this latter description, intersects Washington boulevard at a point only 549.48 feet from the northwest corner of the 184-acre tract. It thus appears that there is an inconsistency in the description. Section 2077 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides:

"The following are the rules for construing the descriptive part of a conveyance of real property, when the construction is doubtful and there are no other sufficient circumstances to determine it: * * *

"2. When permanent and visible or ascertained boundaries or monuments are inconsistent with the measurement, either of lines, angles, or surfaces, the boundaries or monuments are paramount.

"3. Between different measurements which are inconsistent with each other, that of angles is paramount to that of surfaces, and that of lines paramount to both."

If there were no evidence in the record other than the description in the deed and the location of the three monuments to which reference has been made, it might be necessary, under the provisions of section 2077, to locate the line as beginning at a point 560.98 feet from the sandstone monument, running thence to a point 20 feet southwest of Schaefer's barn, and thence to a point in the center of the lane at angle point, but there are other circumstances supporting the determination of the trial court as to the true boundary line. At the time the Schaefer deed was executed there was a substantial fence along such line. A fence has been maintained along that line continuously since the execution of that deed, and the company and its predecessors in title, during all that time, have held exclusive possession up to the fence. In Miller v. Grunsky, 141 Cal. 441, 450, 66 P. 858, 75 P. 48, 51, referring to the provisions of section 2077, it is said:

"It is provided in subdivision 2 that when permanent and visible or ascertained boundaries or monuments are inconsistent with the measurement either of lines, angles, or surfaces, the boundaries or monuments are paramount, but this, like every other rule embraced in the section, is subject to the qualification contained in the first clause, that they control only when there are no other sufficient circumstances to determine a doubtful construction, * * * Appellant cites a number of cases to the proposition that when a boundary line is called for it means the true boundary of the tract, and not what the parties may have supposed the lines to be. In every one of these cases the boundary line was the only call; there was no conflicting call corresponding to what the parties supposed to be the true boundary; * * * no reference to any line marked by a fence or other visible monument."

In the concurring opinion in the same case it is said that "parties to a conveyance are supposed to be on the land or acquainted with the land conveyed, and to have noticed permanent objects constituting the boundary referred to in the description of the property conveyed." The determination of the boundary line by the trial court appears to be fully sustained by the facts proved and found.

The court further found in favor of the company on its claim of an agreed boundary line and on its alleged defense of estoppel. It is unnecessary to consider whether such findings are justified, because the findings already discussed are decisive of the case.

The judgment is affirmed.

KNIGHT v. CARLIN. (Civ. 6242.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Oct. 25, 1929.

1. Trial $\S$ 165—On motion for nonsuit, conflicting evidence must be disregarded and inferences therefrom must be viewed in light most favorable to plaintiff.

In entertaining motion for nonsuit, conflicting evidence must be disregarded and every inference that may be fairly drawn from all evidence must be viewed in light most favorable to plaintiff's claim.

2. Attorney and client $\S$ 167(2)—Nonsuit at close of plaintiff's case in action by attorney for legal services performed under contract held erroneous under evidence.

In action by attorney for legal services performed under contract in connection with proposed construction of apartment house, granting nonsuit at close of plaintiff's case held error under evidence.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Harry R. Archbald, Judge.

Action by F. A. Knight against D. B. Carlin. From a judgment of nonsuit, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

P. H. Goddard, of Long Beach, for appellant.

Harry L. Cohn, of Long Beach, for respondent.

CRAIG, J. The parties to this action agreed in writing on April 11, 1923, that the appellant should perform the necessary legal work for respondent in connection with the proposed construction of an apartment house, for a fee of $7,500. Respondent agreed to pay one-third thereof "when the main contract for the construction of the building is let," one-third "when the building is half completed," and the balance upon completion, and delivery of ownership certificates to individual buyers of respective apartments, "this fee to be purely contingent and nothing to be paid for legal services unless the proposition goes." It was provided that the services should consist of "all legal proceedings, giving advice to Mr. Carlin and to his selling agency, and drawing all necessary legal documents until the enterprise is completed and certificates of ownership delivered to purchasers." On January 22, 1926, appellant filed suit for the full amount specified, alleging that the contract was let, that the building was half completed on August 15, 1925, and that it was completed on September 15, 1925; that he performed all services required, but that the certificates of ownership were not delivered because of the interference of the defendant and the latter's refusal to comply or to permit compliance with their agreement in this respect. The defendant answered, admitting the execution of the contract of employment, but denying the performance of the legal services in accordance therewith. It was also alleged that the defendant did not agree to pay any portion of the fee unless the apartments were successfully launched, that it was wholly contingent upon the creation of a bonded indebtedness and the sale of bonds, and that there should be ready for the buyers of apartments a completed, finished, and working apartment house building; that it became necessary to employ other counsel at a cost of $2,500 to prepare the trust deed and bonds; that the bonds were not sold, the project did not "go," and the contingency upon which the plaintiff's fee depended had never accrued. Damages in the sum of $2,500 were demanded by a cross-complaint. Upon conclusion of the plaintiff's evidence, a motion for nonsuit was interposed, which was granted, and he appeals.

[1] It has uniformly been held that in entertaining such a motion conflicting evidence must be disregarded, and every inference that may be fairly drawn from all of the evidence must be viewed in the light most favorable to the plaintiff's claim. Anderson v. Wickliffe, 178 Cal. 120, 172 P. 381; Carter v. Canty, 181 Cal. 749, 186 P. 346.

[2] Applying this rule, we think the nonsuit was improperly ordered. It is true that it was developed during the trial, and is argued in the respondent's briefs, that there was some affirmative evidence tending to support the latter's theory that the project was ultimately worked out differently from that which he at first had in mind. He was called as a witness for the plaintiff, and testified that the completed structure and system of financing were entirely different from those specified in the original agreement, and that the plaintiff did not consummate the original scheme of creating a bonded indebtedness and disposing of the securities. The motion did not specify, however, as a ground for nonsuit, nor can it truthfully be said, that there was no substantial evidence adduced by the plaintiff in support of his allegations which rendered all of the evidence susceptible of two constructions. It was testified by the plaintiff, and admitted by the defendant, that Knight had for some years specialized in the promotion of structures like that involved in the instant case, known as "own-your-own" apartment houses, and that he was employed upon this occasion for the promotion of an enterprise of that character. The defendant and other witnesses testified that he was the owner of three lots at the corner of First street and Alboni place, in the city of Long Beach, that the new building was originally intended to be erected upon said corner, and that he in fact did place it upon the basement which the plaintiff caused to be excavated, on the third lot from the corner, and that he built a croquet court and provided a driveway or "runway" upon the others, for the use of tenants. Appellant testified that he had under way a system of financing conforming to the original plan, but that the plaintiff ignored him and incorporated, and the defendant admitted that he had financed the project by selling stock in the corporation to purchasers or occupants of certain apartments, who were charged a nominal rental to defray incidental expenses. One of the stockholders occupying a double apartment paid but $25 per month. Carlin admitted that he advertised in various newspapers: "Ambassador Apartments, East First Street and Alboni Place—Just Off Ocean Boulevard, now ready for occupancy, Own your own home in this fireproof building. Single, double and four-room apartments can be bought on very easy terms." Appellant also testified: "I know it is a go; the building is there." There is other evidence of a like tenor which, as contended by the appellant, tended to establish the fact that upon a discovery of a more advantageous method of financing, the respondent secretly dealt with others, completed the apartment house in substantially the manner first contemplated, and declined to compensate him for his services. The superintendent who initiated the work under Knight testified that he continued until the structure was about 90 per cent. complete and one suite was then ready for occupancy.

The order and judgment appealed from are reversed.

Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 594, providing that, before any trial may be had in absence of party to suit, proof must be made that such party had five days' notice of trial, held inapplicable to case where both parties were represented by counsel when case was called for trial.

2. Trial $\S$ 6(1)—Statute requiring five days' notice before trial to absent party held inapplicable, where attorneys having knowledge of trial date failed to give clients timely notice (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 594).

Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 594, providing that, before any trial may be had in absence of party to suit, proof must be made that such party has had five days' notice of trial, held inapplicable, where attorneys having knowledge of trial date failed to give timely notice to their clients.

3. Continuance $\S$ 1—Courts are disposed to show great liberality in granting continuances in civil cases, when it fairly appears that to do otherwise would deny applicant his day in court.

Where it is fairly apparent that to deny continuances in civil cases will have effect of denying applicant right to his day in court, courts are disposed to show great liberality in granting application.

4. Continuance $\S$ 44—Application for continuance should be supported by affidavits or other proof showing good grounds therefor.

Application for continuance should be supported by affidavits or other proof showing good grounds for exercise of court's discretion.

5. Continuance $\S$ 46(10)—To warrant continuance for absence of party, there should be showing that presence of such party is necessary.

On application for continuance because of absence of party to suit, there should be a showing that presence of such party is necessary.

6. Continuance $\S$ 46(10)—If presence of defendant was necessary to advise and assist attorney, such facts should be shown on application for continuance (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 595).

On application for continuance because of absence of defendant, if presence of defendant was necessary, that he might advise and assist his attorney, it should be shown that attorney was not in possession of all facts, names of witnesses, or for some other reason was not as well prepared to try case without him as with him, in view of Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 595, providing that motion for continuance on ground of absence of evidence must be made on affidavit showing materiality of evidence expected to be obtained and diligence in procuring it.

7. Continuance $\S$ 46(10)—On application for continuance because of absent party, there must be some showing that, if continuance be granted, absent party will appear within reasonable time.

On application for continuance because of absence of party to action, there should be some showing that absent party may be expected to appear within reasonable time, if continuance be granted.

8. Continuance $\S$ 46(5)—To warrant continuance because of absence of party, there should be showing of diligence.

On application for continuance because of absence of party, there should be a showing of diligence to warrant granting of application.

9. Continuance $\S$ 46(10)—Application for continuance for absence of defendant, not showing necessity of defendant's presence, or when he might be expected to appear, or what would be proved, held properly denied.

In action to recover balance of purchase price of hogs, wherein defendant counterclaimed for damages because hogs sold were infected with cholera, where only proof in support of application for continuance because of defendant's absence was verbal statement of counsel that defendant could not be present because of wife's illness, without showing necessity of defendant's presence, or when he might be expected to appear, or diligence in procuring attendance, or what was expected to be proved by defendant, denying application was not abuse of discretion, since denying application for continuance, when no legal showing in support thereof is made, is not an abuse of discretion.

10. Continuance $\S$ 45—To warrant continuance as matter of right, reasonable showing must be made.

In order to make continuance practically a matter of right, a reasonable showing must be made.

11. Appeal and error $\S$ 966(1)—Continuance $\S$ 7—Granting continuance being discretionary, trial court's ruling will not be disturbed on appeal, except for clear abuse.

Application for continuance is addressed to sound discretion of trial court, and its ruling will not be disturbed on appeal, unless discretion has been clearly abused.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Bernardino County; Charles L. Allison, Judge.

Action by W. T. Ross and another against A. F. Thirlwall, in which defendant filed a cross-complaint against plaintiffs and another. From a judgment for plaintiffs, and from orders denying motions to vacate judgment and for a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

A. S. Maloney, of San Bernardino, for appellant.

Pollock & Mitchell, of Ontario, for respondents.

BARNARD, J. This was an action originally brought by the plaintiffs as assignees of one W. C. Gilman to recover a balance of the purchase price of certain hogs, alleged to have been sold by Gilman to defendant. To the complaint the defendant filed an answer and counterclaim, based upon allegations that the hogs sold him by Gilman were infected with cholera. He also filed a cross-complaint against the plaintiffs and the said Gilman, based upon damages, alleged to have been suffered, by reason of the communication of cholera from the hogs so purchased to other hogs already owned by him.

When the case was called for trial on April 30, 1926, at 10 o'clock a. m., the defendant was not present. His attorney made a verbal statement to the court that the wife of said defendant was seriously ill at Chino, a distance of about 30 miles from the courtroom, and for that reason defendant and cross-complainant was unable to be present. Upon objection being made to a continuance, defendant's attorney offered both to pay "terms" if such continuance was granted, and to take the deposition in court of a witness then present, who had come some distance. The trial judge suggested that some proof be produced to show that it was impossible for defendant to be present, and took an adjournment until 2 o'clock of the same day.

At 2 o'clock, the motion for a continuance was renewed, and the only proof offered was the affidavit of defendant's attorney, to the effect that defendant was unable to be present for the reason that his wife was dangerously ill and that her condition necessitated defendant's remaining with his wife and children; that this condition had existed for several days before, and would exist for several days in the future; that affiant had been informed by the woman's physician that it would be some time before he could determine whether or not she was out of danger. The motion for a continuance was denied, and the attorney for defendant announced that he would not participate further in the proceedings and walked from the courtroom. The trial proceeded, and resulted in a judgment against the defendant for $491, interest, and costs, and a denial of any relief under his cross-complaint.

The defendant later moved to vacate the judgment and also moved for a new trial, both of these motions being based on the ground that the trial court abused its discretion in refusing to grant a continuance. In support of these motions, a number of affidavits were filed. The first was the affidavit of defendant's attorney, to the effect that the case was set for April 30, 1926, at 10 o'clock, and that on the morning of that day the defendant called affiant on the telephone and informed him of the dangerous illness of his wife, of his inability to get help, and that it was impossible for him to be present; that he had stated these facts to the court, and the judge had asked him to produce proof thereof; that affiant had furnished proof in the form of his own affidavit, but that the court had proceeded with the trial and affiant had withdrawn from the courtroom; and that defendant had a meritorious defense and cause of action on his cross-complaint. The next affidavit, that of defendant himself, set forth that he had a meritorious defense; that his attorney had sent him a letter on October 26, 1925, notifying him of the time and place of trial, but that he never received such notice; that about 8 o'clock on the morning of April 30, 1926, he received a telephone communication from his counsel, asking him whether or not he intended to come to the trial; that he informed his attorney that he had received no notice, and was unable to come because of the dangerous illness of his wife; that he was informed by his physician that the condition of his wife was serious; that he was unable to get assistance in that short period of time; and that he was not in a physical or mental condition to take part in the trial. There was also filed the affidavit of the attending physician, corroborating defendant's statement as to the condition of his wife, and in addition there were several affidavits made by other parties, setting forth certain facts going to the merits of the case.

This appeal is from the judgment and orders denying each of said motions. The only question involved is whether or not the trial court abused its discretion in refusing to grant a continuance.

[1, 2] The contention is first made that under section 594 of the Code of Civil Procedure, before any trial may be had in the absence of a party to the suit, proof must be made that such party has had five days' notice of the trial, and that no such proof was here made. But this provision does not apply to a case where both parties are represented by counsel, when the case is called for trial. Sheldon v. Landwehr, 159 Cal. 778, at page 782, 116 P. 44. Nor does it apply in cases where attorneys, having knowledge of the trial date, fail to give timely notice to their clients. Canty v. Pierce & Anderson, 173 Cal. 205, at page 208, 159 P. 582. It appears from the affidavit here that the attorney for defendant had knowledge of the date of trial more than six months in advance.

[3] It is further urged that the showing made to the court on the date of the trial was amply sufficient to entitle appellant to a continuance. It may be conceded that the facts given, as an explanation of appellant's absence from the trial, if properly presented to the trial court, and in the absence of any lack of diligence, were not only sufficient to entitle him to a continuance, but were sufficient to make the failure to grant the motion an abuse of discretion. It is unquestionably true, as claimed by appellant, that the disposition of the courts is to show great liberality in granting continuances in civil cases, when it is fairly apparent that to do otherwise will have the effect of denying to the applicant the right to his day in court.

Appellant relies upon the following cases: Betts Spring Co. v. Jardine M. Co., 23 Cal. App. 705, 139 P. 657; Jaffe v. Lillenthal, 101 Cal. 175, 35 P. 636; Morehouse v. Morehouse, 136 Cal. 332, 68 P. 976; Pacific Gas & Electric Co. v. Taylor, 52 Cal. App. 307, 198 P. 651; Estate of Stevens, 57 Cal. App. 160, 206 P. 668; Thompson v. Thornton, 41 Cal. 626. We have examined all of these cases, and, while they illustrate the rule of liberality above referred to, in each instance there was a full legal showing made, not only of the impracticability of attendance, but also of the necessity therefor. Nor was there present in any of these cases any lack of diligence.

[4-8] An application for a continuance should be supported by affidavits or other proof, showing good grounds for the exercise of the discretion of the court. Marcucci v. Vowinkel, 164 Cal. 693, 130 P. 430. There should be a showing that the presence of the party is necessary. Greenlee v. Los Angeles Trust, etc., Bank, 171 Cal. 371, 153 P. 383; Queirolo v. Queirolo, 129 Cal. 686, 62 P. 315. In this last case, which was one where the application was supported only by proof of illness, the court says: "There was then no answer to the petition, no denial of its verified averments, no affidavit of defendant, nor even an oral statement of her counsel that, if permitted to be present, defendant would testify to the untruthfulness of the facts stated in the petition, or to any facts whatever; and no showing that her presence was necessary as a witness, or as adviser to her counsel in conducting the hearing. Under such circumstances it was not error to refuse the motion."

Section 595 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that a motion to postpone a trial on the ground of absence of evidence can only be made upon affidavit showing the materiality of the evidence expected to be obtained, and that due diligence has been used to procure it. If the presence of the defendant was necessary, not to give evidence, but that he might advise and assist his attorney, it should have been shown that the attorney was not in possession of all of the facts, or names of the witnesses, or for some other reason was not as well prepared to try the case without him as with him. Wilkinson v. Parrott, 32 Cal. 102. Some showing should be made that the absent party may be expected to appear within a reasonable time, if the continuance be granted. Mead v. Broads, 21 Cal. App. 324, 131 P. 758. There should be a showing of diligence. Marcucci v. Vowinkel, supra.

[9] Applying these rules to the facts in the instant case, the showing here made for a continuance was far from satisfactory. It appears that the attorney for appellant attempted to notify him of the day of trial more than six months in advance, which notice appellant denies receiving, and although defendant was apparently available on the telephone, as well as otherwise, and lived within 30 miles, no other communication between attorney and client appears until the morning of the trial, at about 8 o'clock. When the case was called at 10 o'clock, no affidavit or proof of any kind was offered, and the verbal statement of counsel went only to the inability of appellant to be present for the reason given. The court asked for proof of the facts stated, and adjourned until 2 o'clock. At the afternoon session no proof was offered, except the affidavit of counsel, which was clearly hearsay. If it be assumed that the hearsay nature of such an affidavit may be excused, where counsel has no other recourse (see Pacific Gas, etc., Co. v. Taylor, supra), a different case is presented where first-hand proof was so readily procurable as here.

Even assuming that there was no lack of diligence on the part of counsel in going to the very day of the trial without ascertaining whether his clients had received a notice sent six months before, and further assuming that there was no time to get affidavits from a distance of 30 miles between 8 o'clock and 10 o'clock of that morning, still there would appear to have been time to get other than hearsay affidavits from that distance before 2 o'clock, especially when requested to make proof by the court and when an adjournment had been taken for that purpose. In any event, the affidavit filed went no further than stating the reason why appellant was absent, and covered none of the other essential matters above pointed out.

In connection with the motion for a new trial other affidavits were filed, as above mentioned, as to the reason for absence of appellant, and some going to the merits of the defense, but absolutely no showing was made, either originally or in connection with the motion for a new trial, as to the necessity for the presence of the party, or as to when he might be expected to appear, nor was any showing of diligence whatever made. Neither was any statement made of what was expected to be proved by the absent party. The only fact relied upon as warranting the continuance was the illness of the appellant's wife. This had apparently existed for a considerable time before the trial date, and, with reasonable diligence, there was ample opportunity to make the legal showing required. Where no legal showing is made in support of the application for a continuance, it is not an abuse of discretion to deny the same. Lovern's Estate, 137 Cal. 680, 70 P. 783; Beckman v. Waters, 161 Cal. 581, 119 P. 922.

[10, 11] In spite of the good reasons existing for liberality in granting continuances in civil cases in the interest of justice upon a proper showing, an orderly procedure demands that, in order to make a continuance practically a matter of right, a reasonable showing must be made. To permit otherwise would be an unnecessary burden on the courts and an unnecessary expense to litigants and the public. An application for continuance is addressed to the sound discretion of the court, and its ruling will not be disturbed unless this discretion has been clearly abused. We are of the opinion that no such abuse of discretion has been here shown.

The judgment and orders are affirmed.

BENT BROS., Inc., v. CAMPBELL, City Auditor. (Civ. 3940.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Oct. 25, 1929.

1. Constitutional law ☞154(1)—Waters and water courses ☞167(1)—Statute respecting supervision of dam construction held valid exercise of police power not violating constitutional provisions relative to impairment of contracts (St. 1929, p. 1505).

Act June 10, 1929 (St. 1929, p. 1505), respecting supervision of construction of dam by indirectly giving state engineer power to enforce recommendations by enabling him to begin actions to enjoin construction and maintenance of dam not constructed or repaired according to approved plans and specifications, held valid exercise of police powers which did not violate constitutional provisions relative to impairment of contracts.

2. Waters and water courses ☞167(1)—State engineer under statute respecting supervision of dam construction may maintain suits to prevent contracts from being so executed as to create menace to life and property (St. 1929, p. 1505).

Although state engineer cannot impair obligations of contracts under constitutional provisions, he may, under Act June 10, 1929 (St. 1929, p. 1505), relative to supervision of dam construction, maintain suits to prevent contracts from being so executed and performed as to create menace to life and property.

3. Municipal corporations ☞354—Where city let contract for dam construction on unit price basis, modification of plans at state engineer's demand did not require reletting of contract (Stockton City Charter, art. 23, § 1).

Where contract for construction of dam provided for unit price method of measuring costs, modification may be made in plans at demand of state engineer without reletting contract, notwithstanding Stockton City Charter, art. 23, § 1, providing that no contract shall be let where expenditure exceeds $1,500, except to lowest bidder after advertisement for sealed proposals.

4. Evidence ☞65—City and contractor for dam construction are assumed to act with knowledge of applicable law.

It must be assumed that city in adopting plans and specifications for dam and contractor in entering into contract did so with knowledge of law applicable and character of work to be performed just as indicated by Civ. Code, § 1656, and this included knowledge and consideration of possible exercise of police power of state.

Application by Bent Bros., Inc., for a writ of mandate prayed to be directed to J. P. Campbell, as City Auditor of the City of Stockton, requiring him to issue warrant to petitioner for work done under a contract for the construction of a flood control dam. Writ granted.

Hill, Morgan & Bledsoe, of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

J. Le Roy Johnson, of Stockton, for respondent.

PLUMMER, J. This is an original proceeding instituted by the petitioner herein praying that a writ of mandate be directed to the respondent as auditor of the city of Stockton, to draw a warrant in favor of the petitioner against the city of Stockton for the payment of $70,724.27 alleged to be due the petitioner by virtue of a contract entered into between the petitioner and the city of Stockton for the construction of a flood control dam at a point in the Calaveras river, in the county of Calaveras, east of the city of Stockton. After a few preliminary allegations which we need not mention, the petitioner sets forth that on the 17th day of June, 1924, the electors of the city of Stockton, by their affirmative votes, approved an issuance of bonds in the sum of $1,500,000 to construct a flood control dam in the Calaveras river, in the county of Calaveras, at a place on said river designated in the proposal submitted to the electors at the bond election just referred to. Thereafter, and on or about the 14th day of July, 1924, the city council of the city of Stockton, by ordinance duly adopted, provided for the issuance of bonds to construct the flood control dam, as authorized by the electors of said city; that thereafter the bonds authorized to be issued were issued and sold, and the city of Stockton now has the money with which to meet the demand of the petitioner first herein mentioned; that pursuant to direction of the city council, the city engineer of the city of Stockton prepared plans for the erection of a flood control dam in the Calaveras river, and thereafter submitted them to the state engineer and by him were approved; that after the approval of said plans and specifications by the state engineer, and on the 13th day of May, 1929, the plans and specifications for the erection of the proposed flood control dam in the Calaveras river were submitted to the city council of the city of Stockton, and approved and adopted by the city council as the plans and specifications for the erection of said dam and making the improvements mentioned in the plans and specifications; that after these proceedings had been taken and had, and on the 4th day of June, 1929, the city council of the city of Stockton adopted its resolution authorizing the city clerk of the city of Stockton to advertise for sealed proposals for the furnishing of materials and performing the work in the construction of the flood control dam herein mentioned, in accordance with the plans and specifications adopted therefor; that after being so authorized, the city clerk regularly advertised for bids, and at the time appointed therefor, to-wit, on the 10th day of June, 1929, the city council publicly opened and examined all the sealed proposals for the building of said flood control dam, and after examining said bids the city council of the city of Stockton, by resolution, approved the bid of the petitioner, and the petitioner was awarded the contract for the construction of the proposed dam and the performance of all work connected therewith provided for in the plans and specifications; that thereafter, and on the 25th day of June, 1929, the city of Stockton entered into a contract with the petitioner for the doing of said work, and the furnishing of materials, and the petitioner, within the time limit specified, proceeded to begin and carry on the work under its said contract with the city of Stockton, in pursuance of the plans and specifications adopted therefor; that thereafter, and after work to the value of several thousand dollars had been performed under the petitioner's contract, and on the 16th day of September, 1929, the state engineer of the state of California, acting under the provisions of an act of the Legislature approved June 10, 1929 (Stats. 1929, p. 1505), having inspected the work and the plans and specifications therefor as adopted by the city of Stockton for the building of said flood control dam, did demand of the city of Stockton that certain modifications be made in said plans for the construction of said dam, and that certain changes be made in the work already done; that the change in the plans and specifications adopted by the city of Stockton, as made by the state engineer, involved decreasing the radius of the arch section and varying the radii for the horizontal arch sections in length from the base to the crest of the dam. The height, capacity, general location, and general type of the dam were not changed. The location of the central portion of the arch was moved up stream about 50 feet, and the left abutment down stream approximately the same distance. No considerable lateral displacement was made in the central mass of the dam. The quantity of foundation excavation required was about the same as specified in the original plans. The quantity of concrete required to make the necessary changes was increased about 10 per cent. above that estimated under the original plans. No material modification of the gravity section abutments are involved in the proposed changes.

No change is made in spillway, outlet, or flood control works, nor in the specifications regarding construction. That in pursuance of the demand of the state engineer, the city of Stockton caused to be prepared certain modifications of the original plans for the work involved, and on the 16th day of September, 1929, the modifications of the plan for the doing of said work were duly and regularly presented to and adopted by the city council of the city of Stockton; that as modified and adopted by the city of Stockton the plans and specifications were thereafter approved by the state engineer; that since the modification of the plans made for the construction of said flood control dam as demanded by the state engineer, the petitioner has proceeded with the work of constructing said dam according to the modified plans, and has performed work entitling him to payment at the present time in the sum of $70,724.27, all of which appears by the certificate of the city engineer of the city of Stockton in his estimate and value of the work and the amount to which the petitioner is entitled, submitted to the city council of the city of Stockton; that the certificate of the city engineer was regularly approved by the city manager of the city of Stockton, and the claim of the petitioner is justly due and payable; that said claim of the petitioner was presented to the city auditor of the city of Stockton on or about the 1st day of October, 1929; that the city auditor, the respondent herein, refused to draw a warrant against the city treasury of the city of Stockton for the payment of the work performed by the plaintiff, as certified by the city engineer and approved by the city manager of the city of Stockton, on the ground that the plans for the construction of the flood control dam hereinbefore referred to had been changed to such an extent that it voided the contract under which the petitioner was seeking compensation.

[1, 2] This brings us to a consideration of the act of the Legislature approved June 10, 1929, relating to the supervision of dams. The first suggestion which we will consider is the unconstitutionality of the act, in that it is in violation of the constitutional provisions of this state and of the United States relative to the impairment of contracts; and, also, that it confers upon the state engineer arbitrary powers enabling him to adopt rules and regulations which, if violated, subjects the violator to a penalty of $2,000, or imprisonment in a county jail not exceeding six months, or both. While the act referred to does not, by its terms, define of what material any dam shall be constructed, whether of concrete, whether of rock-filled dam, or whether partly of concrete and earth filling, or of rock filling, it does provide for the inspection of any proposed dam and the making and proposing of amendments to any plans or specifications for the erection of a dam. As we read the act there is nothing which authorizes the state engineer to directly require the construction of a dam according to any particular plans or specifications, nor does the act authorize the state engineer to make any material alterations in any contract which has been entered into between an owner and contractor for the construction of a dam. But while the act does not, in terms, directly authorize the state engineer to do what we have mentioned, it does indirectly give him power to enforce his recommendations and suggestions by enabling him to begin actions to enjoin and restrain the construction or maintenance of any dam not constructed or repaired according to approved plans and specifications, and through the medium of the court affect the safety of persons and property living below the point or place of the construction of the dam, and the creating of a reservoir which might become a menace to the property and lives of persons in the course which the impounded waters would take in the event the proposed structure proved inadequate to withstand the pressure of the impounded waters. We do not need to pass upon the question as to the validity of section 17 of the act referred to for the simple reason that, if it should be considered void under the reasoning of the case of Schaezlein v. Cabaniss, 135 Cal. 466, 469, 67 P. 753, 56 L. R. A. 733, 87 Am. St. Rep. 122, no other portions of the act are thereby affected. Section 18 of the act authorizing the state engineer to institute actions by way of mandamus or injunction puts teeth enough therein to make all the reasonable mandates of the state engineer effective. While not so denominated, the act is purely a police regulation and must stand or fall as so considered.

A brief definition and statement will show the validity of the act as a police regulation and proper exercise of the sovereign power of the state. In 12 C. J. p. 904, we find the following applicable definitions: "The police power is the power inherent in a government to enact laws within constitutional limits to promote the order, safety, health, morals and general welfare of society. As applied to the powers of the states of the American Union the term is also used to denote those inherent governmental powers which under the federal system established by the Constitution of the United States are reserved to the several states." The police power of the state differs materially from the powers of eminent domain. In eminent domain one's property can be taken for public use only upon just compensation. Under the police powers it may not simply be taken, but destroyed without any compensation, depending upon the statutes of the state. Again: "The police power is an attribute of sovereignty, and exists without any reservation in the Constitution, being founded upon the duty of the state to protect its citizens and provide for the safety and good order of society. It corresponds to the right of self-preservation in the individual, and is an essential element in orderly government. * * * It has for its object the improvement of social and economic conditions affecting the community at large, and collectively, with the view of bringing about the greatest good to the greatest number. On it depends the security of society, order, the life and health of the citizen, the comfort of existence, the enjoyment of private life and beneficial use of property." That the police power of the state to supervise and regulate the construction and maintenance of dams impounding large bodies of water, remained unexercised until the disastrous consequences following the breaking of the St. Francis dam in the southern part of the state, is no argument against its existence, but the experiences attending the breaking of that dam emphasize the necessity for, and the constitutionality of, the police powers being extended to, and including such structures in order that the safety of persons and property may be conserved. With these statements as a premise, we think the conclusion clearly follows that the act of the Legislature approved June 10, 1929, is constitutional in all its essential provisions, as not only a proper, but as a necessary exercise of the police powers of the state. A limited number of authorities only need be cited. In Union Dry Goods Co. v. Georgia Public Service Corporation, 248 U. S. 372, 39 S. Ct. 117, 118, 63 L. Ed. 309, 9 A. L. R. 1420, we find the following in relation to the exercise of the police powers of the state, and also of private rights when they come in conflict. It is there said: "That private contract rights must yield to the public welfare, where the latter is appropriately declared and defined and the two conflict, has been often decided by this court"—citing Manigault v. Springs, 199 U. S. 473, 26 S. Ct. 127, 50 L. Ed. 274. And further: "It is the settled law of this court that the interdiction of statutes impairing the obligation of contracts does not prevent the state from properly exercising its police powers 'for the general good of the public, though contracts previously entered into between individuals may thereby be affected'"—citing a number of authorities. The opinion in the case from which we are quoting further sets forth the law that: "'Contracts must be understood as made in reference to the possible exercise of the rightful authority of the government, and no obligation of a contract can extend to the defeat of legitimate government authority'"—citing authorities. Again: "'There is no absolute freedom to do as one wills or to contract as one chooses. The guaranty of liberty does not withdraw from legislative supervision that wide department of activity which consists of the making of contracts, or deny to government the power to provide restrictive safeguards. Liberty implies the absence of arbitrary restraint, not immunity from reasonable regulations and prohibitions imposed in the interests of the community.' * * * 'It is settled that neither the "contract" clause nor the "due process" clause has the effect of overriding the power of the state to establish all regulations that are reasonably necessary to secure the health, safety, good order, comfort, or general welfare of the community; that this power can neither be abdicated nor bargained away, and is inalienable even by express grant; and that all contract and property rights are held subject to its fair exercise.'" In the notes appended to the case of Salt Lake City v. Utah Light & Traction Co., 52 Utah, 210, 173 P. 556, as reported in 3 A. L. R. 715, are quoted so many cases as to prevent any review of them in this opinion, setting forth the extent to which the police powers of the state may be applied, and the manner in which private rights must yield thereto, establishing abundant authority for the support of the act of the Legislature now being considered. Many of the cases referred to in the notes mentioned have to do with the regulation of rates and charges by public service corporations where contracts had been made giving certain consumers or patrons special rates. In practically all of the cases the contracts were held subject to the police powers of the state as exercised through public service corporations. While differing in the circumstances presented, the principle is the same. The conclusion, therefore, follows that, while the act under consideration does not authorize the state engineer to make a material alteration in the plans and specifications for the construction and maintenance or repair of any structure coming within the purview of the language used in section 2 of the act approved June 10, 1929, defining dams, it does authorize the state engineer to prevent, by injunction, suits, or other appropriate court procedure, the erection or maintenance of any structure impounding waters in such a manner as to create a menace to the safety of persons and property living and being along the course where such impounded waters would flow if suddenly discharged. In other words, while under the constitutional provisions we may admit that the state engineer cannot impair the obligations of contracts, he can maintain suits to prevent contracts from being so executed and performed as to create a menace to life and property.

[3] With these preliminary statements we will next consider certain provisions of the plans and specifications adopted by the city of Stockton for the building of the Calaveras flood control dam, and will consider them in the light of the problems presented, and the right of the state to exercise its police powers over the proposed structure. In the very beginning of this branch of the case it may be well to state that the plans and specifications, proposals, and contract called for bids upon, and provide for payment on, the basis of unit prices. For example, so many cubic yards of concrete at a certain price per cubic yard. We may also further state that the plans and specifications, proposals, and contract all contain language showing that the quantity of material to be used is only estimated, that is, it is estimated at so many cubic yards, whether in excavating or in building. This makes applicable subdivisions 29 and 30 of the plans and specifications. Subdivision 29, in part, reads as follows: "The City of Stockton, by and through its City Council, shall have the right to make such alterations, eliminations and additions as it may elect in the line, grade or dimension of the work herein contemplated or any part thereof, either before or after the commencement of construction. The details and working plans for such alterations, eliminations and additions shall be drawn by or prepared by the City Engineer of the City of Stockton subject to the direction of said City Council. * * * If such changes increase or decrease the amount of work, such increased or decreased quantity of work shall be paid for according to the quantities actually involved and at the unit prices established for such work under this contract." Subdivision 30, relative to extra work, reads: "Extra work or material shall be charged for at actual necessary cost, as determined by the engineer, plus ten per cent. for profit, superintendence and general expenses." Under the premises which we have laid down, we think it cannot be gainsaid that the city of Stockton was presented with an exigency or emergency necessitating the amendment or change of the plans and specifications theretofore adopted for the construction of the Calaveras dam so as to make it conform with the recommendations of the state engineer. The city council could either make the necessary changes and additions so as to safeguard the work and provide against all future contingencies in likewise safeguarding the lives and property below the proposed structure as recommended by the state engineer, or subject itself to an injunction suit to restrain its further proceeding with the proposed construction. Under these conditions the city council amended its plans to conform with the state engineer's suggestions providing additional safeguards. In so doing did the city council run counter to the provisions of section 1 of article 23 of the charter of the city of Stockton, in that said section specifies that no contract for work shall be let where the expenditure exceeds the sum of $1,500, except to the lowest bidder, after advertisement for sealed proposals? The answer to this question is found in the unit price method adopted for measuring the cost of the work prior to calling for sealed proposals or bids in the first instance. While the extent of the work is indicated by the plans and specifications, and the amount of material to be used in the construction of the proposed dam is set forth, and the excavations to be made described, they are all in the nature of estimates. In other words, the extent of the excavations to be made and the quantity of material to be used are approximated only. The kind of material to be used is particularly described. The plans and specifications were sufficient to notify all patrons of the kind and character of the work to be done with an appropriation of the amount and extent thereof, and bids were called for on a unit price basis so that each contractor had the same opportunity to bid, and the interest of the taxpayer, in having the work performed for the least possible expenditure of money, properly guarded. The estimated cost of the work in this instance was over $800,000. The quantity of material runs up into several hundred thousand barrels. The circumstances surrounding the work and the character of the work itself precluded the possibility of fixing an exact price for the completed project. Where the unit price is fixed for measuring the value of the work done, every safeguard of the taxpayer is provided, as contemplated by the electors of the city of Stockton when adopting a charter containing the provisions found in section 1 of article XXIII relative to the calling for bids. It is scarcely within the domain of reason to conclude that where a unit price basis is adopted for measuring the value of the work estimated to be done, that if the city council, in the carrying forward of the work costing over $800,000, should find it advisable to make an addition or amendment to, or change in some immaterial portion of the work in order to render it more secure and the cost of so doing would aggregate the sum of $1,501, that the work of letting a contract would all have to be done over again.

In 44 C. J., page 379, we find the following: "Frequently, a municipal improvement contract is so worded and construed as to provide for the payment, not of a lump sum, but rather of a sum to be determined by applying specified unit prices to actual measurement of the work done. Also, provision is sometimes made for an estimate certificate or determination by the City Engineer or other designated officer or Board, of the amount and quantity of work done or materials furnished, or for a determination by him of all questions involving the amount earned under the contract, and for the payment each month, or at other stated periods, of a certain percentage of the estimate, and under such a provision the decision, estimate or certificate of the engineer or other designated officer or board is ordinarily binding and conclusive, provided it is not made fraudulently or in bad faith."

* * * Where the certificate provided for

has been given, the contractor is entitled to payment according to its terms." This statement of the rule exactly fits the conditions of the cause now before us and applies to the contract under which the petitioner has been, and now is performing work. No supplemental contract has been entered into in this case. If the additional work recommended by the state engineer and agreed to by the city council had necessitated the entering into or execution of a supplemental contract between the petitioner and the city council, then section 1 of article 23 of the charter of the city of Stockton would have applied, unless covered by the provisions of the contract. Thus, in 44 C. J. page 101, the law as to the statutes or charter provisions is thus stated: "Such statutes apply equally to supplemental contracts covering items not provided for by the terms of the original contract, unless bids for the original contract were made on the basis of contemplated extensions of the work under supplemental contracts to be made with the successful bidder without further bidding, and such statutes also apply to amendments of a contract already executed in compliance with the law, where such amendments alter the original contract in some vital and essential particular, notwithstanding a clause in the original contract reserves to the city the right to modify any of its essential terms by subsequent supplemental contracts to be made by its officers without due advertisement and competitive bidding." In the same volume, on page 297, the rule as to change of plans is thus worded: "A slight change in the character of the improvement as determined upon by the petitioners or by the municipal authorities, can be made at any time during the proceedings and prior to the execution of the improvement plan, but a substantial alteration, such as one which materially increases the cost of the improvement, amounts to an abandonment of the contract and cannot be made without the institution of new proceedings." Again, on page 373, we find the following: "Generally speaking, a municipal improvement contract may be changed or modified by the municipality, with the consent of the other contracting party, and without consulting abutting owners, but cannot be rewritten by the court or by one party alone." The foregoing statements of the law, save and except where otherwise stated herein, refer to contracts where the compensation is fixed at a lump sum, and under such circumstances we find that immaterial changes or modifications, which do not substantially affect the character of the work or unreasonably increase the cost thereof, are permissible.

In the case of Frazer et al. v. City of Ardmore, 103 Okl. 31, 229 P. 143, we have a case on all fours with the one at bar. There, the contract was based upon a unit price of the work to be performed in determining the compensation that would be earned by the contractor. The estimated cost of the work, as set forth in the contract, was $19,915.92, but, measured by the unit price method adopted for determining the cost and the money to which the contractor was entitled, it was found, upon completion of the work, to amount to the sum of $23,730.14. The right of the contractor to receive such payment was contested. The Supreme Court of Oklahoma upheld the contract and sustained the judgment of the trial court in awarding to the contractor the value of the work as measured by the unit price. We may here add that the compensation to which the contractor is found to be entitled exceeded the estimate in the contract by more than 10 per cent., which goes beyond the value of the extra work recommended in this case by the state engineer. That a clause in the contract authorizing the city to direct the performance of extra work, does not invalidate the instrument, is held in the case of City Street Improvement Co. v. Kroh, 158 Cal. 308, 110 P. 933. In the Kroh Case the contract involved was for a lump sum and was not let upon a unit price basis, and, while providing for extra work, did not obviate the provisions of the law relative to advertising and letting of bids for work exceeding the limit of expenditures allowed without bids.

To review all the authorities bearing upon the questions here involved would extend this opinion to an undue length. Therefore, we will confine our citation of authorities to a limited number, which support the following statements of the law: That where unseen emergencies arise after the letting of a contract and the beginning of work, further publication and letting of bids are not required. Board of Commissioners v. Gibson, 158 Ind. 471, 63 N. E. 982; City of Chicago v. McKechney, 91 Ill. App. 442; City of Ida Grove v. Ida Grove Armory Co., 146 Iowa, 690, 125 N. W. 866; Meyers et al. v. Wood, 173 Mo. App. 564, 158 S. W. 909; Alsmeyer v. Adams, 62 Ind. App. 219, 105 N. E. 1033, 109 N. E. 58. Various illustrations are given in the cases just cited as to the changes in the plans necessitated by emergencies arising after the beginning of the work, and all of the cases hold that such changes do not invalidate the contract. A distinction, however, is made in all of the cases, between amendments or alterations in the plans and specifications which do not affect the material character of the work and those admitted changes or alterations which constitute substantial modifications or changes in the character and quality of the work to be performed. Where changes are only incidental, the contract is held unaffected; otherwise a different conclusion is reached. In the case at bar nothing has been called to our attention which would indicate any substantial change, either in the character of the work to be done, or, in view of the extent of the work to be done, any really substantial addition thereto. As we have shown, the added work does not reach the percentage degree approved in the case of Frazer et al. v. City of Ardmore, supra.

[4] Finally, it must be assumed that the city of Stockton, in adopting plans and specifications, and the contractor in entering into the contract, did so with the knowledge of the law applicable, and the character of the work to be performed, just as indicated by section 1656 of the Civil Code. This included a knowledge and consideration of the possible exercise of the police powers of the state in safeguarding the lives and property of all those persons living along the line that would be submerged by the sudden release of the impounded waters.

We think the prayer of the petitioner should be granted, and it is hereby ordered that a writ of mandate issue from this court directing J. P. Campbell, as the city auditor of the city of Stockton, to draw a warrant in favor of the petitioner for the sum of $70,724.27, payable out of the funds provided for the erection of the Calaveras flood control dam.

Demurrer overruled.

COFFIN v. BURNETT. (Civ. 6694.)★

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Oct. 31, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Nov. 19, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Dec. 30, 1929.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Daniel Beecher, Judge.

C. Franklin Baxter, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Delmar W. Doddridge, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This is an action by the mother of two illegitimate children to compel the defendant, as father of said children, to provide funds for their support. Defendant appeals from the judgment entered against him.

This appeal is presented solely upon the ground that the evidence is insufficient to sustain the finding of the court that appellant is the father of said children. Examination of the record shows that the evidence is quite sufficient to sustain the finding of the court.

The judgment is affirmed.

FORREST v. PICKWICK STAGES SYSTEM et al. (Civ. 7120.)★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Oct. 23, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Nov. 21, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Dec. 19, 1929.

1. Damages ⇨143—Plaintiff in action for injuries need not allege specifically each injury sustained or resulting from accident.

Plaintiff in action for injuries is not required to allege specifically each physical injury sustained, or which may have resulted, from accident, but it is sufficient if such injuries can be traced to the occurrence complained of, and are such as might naturally result.

2. Damages ⇨158(7)—Evidence of carbuncles, infection, and partial paralysis of plaintiff's shoulder and arm, resulting from accident, held admissible, under amendment of complaint alleging that plaintiff sustained permanent injuries, involving loss of use of shoulder and arm.

Under amendment of complaint, in action for injuries, alleging that plaintiff had been confined in hospital for period of 10 weeks, and would be confined in the future for indefinite period, and had been forced to undergo major operations, and had sustained permanent injuries involving loss of use of left shoulder, arm, and hand, evidence held admissible to show damages suffered by plaintiff by reason of carbuncles, infection of bones, and partial paralysis of left shoulder, arm, and hand, due to accident.

3. Continuance ⇨31—Where complaint was amended, prior to second trial, to allege permanent injuries involving loss of use of plaintiff's shoulder, arm, and hand, defendants were not entitled to continuance on account of plaintiff's evidence of carbuncles, infection, and partial paralysis.

Where, after first trial and eight months prior to beginning of second trial, plaintiff amended complaint in action for injuries, by claiming past and future treatment in hospital, major operations, and permanent injuries, causing loss of use of left shoulder, arm, and hand, defendants on second trial were not entitled to continuance on ground of surprise, on account of evidence not offered at the first trial of carbuncles, infection of bones, and partial paralysis of plaintiff's left shoulder, arm, and hand.

4. New trial ⇨151—Refusal of new trial for newly discovered evidence held not abuse of discretion, in view of counter affidavits and failure to show due diligence.

Refusal of motion for new trial in action for injuries sustained in automobile collision held not abuse of discretion, in view of counter affidavits and failure of affidavits to show diligence in obtaining newly discovered evidence.

5. New trial ⇨140(2)—Regard must be had to counter affidavits in determining motion for new trial.

Obtaining new trial is not merely matter of drawing up good affidavits, but regard must be had also to counter affidavits.

6. New trial ⇨56—Refusal of new trial for misconduct of jurors in speaking to courtroom clerk about progress of case held not abuse of discretion.

Refusal of trial court to grant new trial for indiscreet conduct of jurors in speaking to courtroom clerk about progress of case held not abuse of discretion, where substantial rights of parties were not prejudiced.

7. New trial ⇨56—Misconduct of jurors does not necessitate new trial, unless parties were prejudiced thereby.

Misconduct of jurors does not necessitate granting of new trial, unless it appears that prejudice to the substantial rights of the parties resulted.

8. Trial ⇨191(7)—Instruction that jury must presume plaintiff complied with law, "in absence of all evidence to show" his violation of ordinance, held not to assume absence of contributory negligence.

In action for injuries, instruction that, "in the absence of all evidence to show" whether plaintiff did or did not do anything required by law or ordinance at time of collision, jury must presume that plaintiff complied with regulations, held not erroneous, as assuming absence of contributory negligence.

9. Automobiles ⇨246(24)—In action for injuries in collision, in which defendants' stage was driven without headlights, instruction that plaintiff could presume other vehicles would be lawfully operated held not erroneous (Motor Vehicle Act, § 99).

In action for injuries resulting from automobile collision, instruction that plaintiff had right to presume that any other motor vehicle operating on highway would be lawfully propelled, in accordance with Motor Vehicle Act, § 99 (St. 1923, p. 546), held not erroneous, as ignoring issue of contributory negligence, where negligence relied on by plaintiff was operation of defendants' motor vehicle without headlights.

10. Negligence ⇨136(26)—Issue of contributory negligence is generally one of fact.

Issue of contributory negligence is one of fact, except where standard of conduct indicates certain definite things.

11. Automobiles ⇨208—One driver's failure to display headlights does not relieve another of duty of exercising ordinary care (Motor Vehicle Act, § 99).

Defendants' violation of Motor Vehicle Act, § 99 (St. 1923, p. 546), requiring headlights on motor vehicles, does not relieve another traveler on highway from duty of exercising ordinary care to avoid accident.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Edward I. Butler, Judge.

Action by Alex J. Forrest against the Pickwick Stages System and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

B. P. Gibbs, of Los Angeles, for appellants. Fredericks, Hanna & Morton, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

KOFORD, P. J. This is an action for damages for personal injuries sustained by plaintiff when an automobile milk truck in which he was driving was struck by a stage of the defendants in Los Angeles county, one-half mile east of the city of Girard. Plaintiff was proceeding westerly on Ventura boulevard, and was making a left-hand turn into Peralta avenue, when he was struck by the stage which was running east on Ventura boulevard without headlights. The collision occurred June 5, 1926, in the early morning, at least one-half hour before sunrise.

This is the second trial of the action. The first one, in June, 1927, resulted in a verdict for plaintiff for $2,000. The defendants moved for a new trial, and it was granted. A second trial was had in May, 1928, before a jury, and this time plaintiff obtained a verdict of $20,000. Defendants again moved for a new trial, but the motion was denied.

The first point on appeal is that the court erred in admitting testimony of the damages suffered by plaintiff by reason of carbuncles, infection of the bones, and partial paralysis, all of the left shoulder, arm, and hand, which according to plaintiff's evidence, were caused by the collision, when these things were not specially alleged in the complaint. The court ruled that the allegations of the complaint were sufficient, and allowed the testimony to be received, but at the close of plaintiff's case allowed a supplementary sentence to be added by amendment to the complaint, directly alleging the loss of use of the said left member. Defendants did not object to the filing of this amendment, but did claim the right to a continuance to meet the proof. The court, after consideration, denied defendants' motion for a continuance.

The allegation of the original complaint in respect to damages was as follows:

"That in said collision, caused alone by the said acts of the agent of the defendant, Pickwick Stages System, this plaintiff was hurt in his health, strength and activity, and received a profound shock to his nervous system, and received bruises upon the head, body and person, and made sick, sore and lame thereby, and particularly received serious and painful injuries in and around the head, and his back was wrenched, and he received bruises and abrasions on the left shoulder, back, both ankles and both knees; that from said injuries said plaintiff has suffered great physical pain and mental anguish."

In September, 1927, three months after the first trial and eight months before the second trial, a supplementary amendment to the complaint was made, adding to the above-quoted paragraph the following:

"That subsequent to the filing of the original complaint herein, plaintiff has been confined in the Los Angeles county hospital for the period of approximately ten (10) weeks, and is now so confined, and is informed and believes and on that ground alleges that he will be so confined for an indefinite period in the future; that during said confinement plaintiff has been forced to undergo two major operations, all as a result of said accident and the careless and negligent acts of defendants as hereinbefore alleged.

"Plaintiff is informed and believes and upon that ground alleges that the said personal injuries so sustained as aforesaid are permanent and that plaintiff will continue to suffer as hereinbefore set forth and will be permanently disabled as a result thereof.

"Upon the same ground plaintiff alleges that in addition to the moneys paid out for hospital, doctors, nurses and medical bills as hereinafter referred to, plaintiff will be required to expend additional undetermined sums in the future on account of such bills."

The amendment made at the end of plaintiff's case was as follows:

"That plaintiff as a result of the injuries as hereinbefore alleged has lost the use of his left shoulder, left arm and left hand, and the same has become permanently injured and disabled."

[1, 2] The allegations of the complaint as it was amended September, 1927, which was about 8 months prior to the beginning of this trial, were sufficient to inform defendants that they could expect something far more serious in the way of claimed injuries in the approaching trial than in the first trial. These amendments added the following significant items of injuries: Ten weeks in hospital with prospect of staying there an indefinite period in the future, two major operations, injuries permanent, permanently disabled, and more doctor bills coming. Certainly defendants could not have been taken by surprise, unless it be the law that a pleading must itemize each physical result of the injuries like a bill of particulars. The 1927 amendments to the complaint do not sound like the work of one who is attempting to conceal from his adversary the seriousness of the plaintiff's injuries. But that is the claim of appellants in claiming error in the court's refusal to grant a continuance to meet the proof.

It is true that the allegations to the effect that "said injuries are permanent and that plaintiff will be permanently disabled" are quite general, and that such alleged permanent disability might relate to any one or more of the broadly stated injuries previously alleged. For this reason the complaint was uncertain in respect to what it alleges, and was subject to a special demurrer; but that does not mean that it was insufficient to admit the proof received at the trial. "A plaintiff is not required to allege specifically each physical injury sustained or which may have resulted from the accident. It is sufficient if such injuries can be traced to the occurrence complained of and are such as might naturally result from the injury." Kuhns v. Marshall, 44 Cal. App. 588, 186 P. 632, 633, and cases cited. See, also, Martin v. Pacific Gas & Electric Co., 203 Cal. 291, 264 P. 246; Dullanty v. Smith, 203 Cal. 621, 265 P. 814; Lauder v. Currier, 3 Cal. App. 28, 84 P. 217.

In Kuhns v. Marshall, supra, evidence of bladder trouble resulting from the accident was admitted under the general allegation that plaintiff was by the accident rendered sick, sore, lame, and was physically impaired. In the Martin Case, under special circumstances, evidence of curvature of the spine, chorea, endocarditis, and likelihood of cancer was admitted, under a complaint which did not specifically allege these diseases. In the Lauder Case, evidence of pleurisy and pneumonia was admitted without being specifically pleaded. The objection to evidence of the specific diseases and permanent disabilities resulting from the plaintiff's injuries in this case was, therefore, properly overruled. The amendment to conform to proof was unnecessary. The court's denial of appellants' request for a continuance is sustained.

[3] The refusal of a continuance was made after due consideration of the circumstances and occurrences at the trial. Appellants' experts were not prevented from making a physical examination of the plaintiff either before or during the trial. In fact, this was done by appellants one week prior to the trial, and testimony given of the results of such examination. If appellants were in fact surprised by the respondent's evidence, it was because their counsel unjustifiably took it for granted that the evidence at this second trial would be about the same as at the first trial, despite the nature of the amendments made to the complaint in the interim, which sufficiently, if not strongly, indicated that the contrary was to be expected.

[4, 5] Appellants also urge that the motion for a new trial should have been granted upon the grounds of newly discovered evidence. The numerous affidavits filed in support of the motion show that, if a third trial were allowed, the defendants would have more witnesses than upon the second trial. The new evidence in our opinion would add almost nothing to the critical issue in the case with respect to liability, as we conceive it to be, which is, what time did the accident happen? Some witnesses stated it was dark, and others light, daylight, daybreak, and good daylight. Some were looking west, and some east. What appears light to one may seem dark to another. In this state the time, one-half hour before sunrise, gives a more definite idea of maximum visibility than the various opinions of witnesses. The law of this state has fixed that exact time as the earliest in the day that one may motor on the highway without lighted headlamps. The newly discovered evidence gave no promise of helping on this point. This is stated without regard to the counter affidavits. The counter affidavits leave no room for this court to decide that the trial court abused its discretion in denying the new trial asked for on this ground.

As to the newly discovered evidence in regard to the nature of the damages suffered by plaintiff, the affidavits show that defendants' diligence after the trial netted considerable cumulative expert testimony upon the question of whether plaintiff's permanent disabilities were attributable to the collision, and promised some declarations of the plaintiff against interest made October, 1926, concerning his then state of health. The affidavits, however, are deficient in failing to state facts showing diligence of defendants prior to the trial. The affidavits contain only conclusions on this important point. But obtaining a new trial is not merely a matter of drawing up good affidavits; regard must also be had to the counter affidavits. The decision of the trial court upon the motion for a new trial does not show an abuse of discretion in deciding either that the new evidence would not probably change the result upon a third trial, or that the defendants did not exercise reasonable diligence in endeavoring to discover the evidence before the second trial. For these reasons, the motion for a new trial upon the ground of newly discovered evidence was properly denied. Estate of Emerson, 170 Cal. 81, 82, 148 P. 523; Oberlander v. Fixen & Co., 129 Cal. 690, 62 P. 254; Spiegelman v. Eastman (Cal. App.) 272 P. 761; 10 Cal. Jur. 184.

[6, 7] The third ground urged for a new trial was the alleged misconduct of two jurors in speaking to a courtroom clerk about the progress of the case. The judge investigated the matter in chambers in the presence of counsel. The clerk and the two jurors were sworn and examined. Each juror denied that she had talked about the merits of the case. The trial court resolved this conflict of evidence, and we may not say improperly, on this appeal. Even taking the clerk's version of the matter, it was at most the unimportant chatter of an inexperienced juror. It was improper on the part of the juror, but not serious. The court was well warranted in finding that the indiscretion did not call for a mistrial. Misconduct does not necessitate the granting of a new trial, unless it appears that prejudice to the substantial rights of the parties resulted therefrom. McPherson v. West Coast Transit Co. (Cal. App.) 271 P. 509, and cases cited.

[8] The court gave the jury the following instruction: "You are instructed that, in the absence of all evidence to show whether the plaintiff did or did not do any thing or act required by any law or ordinance at the time of the collision in question, you must presume that the plaintiff did comply with all laws or regulations governing his conduct." Appellants claim this instruction assumed as a fact that there was an absence of all evidence upon the subjects mentioned. If so, it is very slight and indirect and is cured by other instructions upon contributory negligence. In such instruction, the expression "in the absence of all evidence to show" should be understood to mean "if the jury finds an absence of all evidence," and it is not an assumption of fact which is prohibited the trial judge. It is like defining negligence and contributory negligence. That does not assume negligence or contributory negligence to be an established fact in the case.

[9-11] The court also instructed that plaintiff had a right to presume that any other motor vehicle operating on the highway would be lawfully propelled in accordance with the Motor Vehicle Act. It is claimed that this instruction was reversible error, under the authority of McPherson v. Walling, 53 Cal. App. 563, 565, 209 P. 209. That case, following certain railroad crossing cases, holds that such an instruction ignores the issue of contributory negligence, because it tells the jury that a plaintiff may rely upon the assumption that the defendant will do his duty, even though he himself disregards his own duty. The same decision, however, points out cases in which such an instruction may be given without error. Of course they are not cases where there is no issue whatever of contributory negligence. There would be no object in telling the jury what the plaintiff might rely upon or assume, if there were no issue as to the reasonableness or carefulness of his conduct. The issue of contributory negligence is one of fact, except where the standard of conduct indicates certain definite things.

Whether the giving of the instruction constitutes reversible error depends upon whether it has the effect of leading the jury to ignore the issue of contributory negligence. In the instant case the giving of the instruction could mean substantially nothing more than that plaintiff had the right to expect vehicles bearing down on the crossing to have burning headlights, if the time was one-half hour before sunrise. That is the main requirement of the Motor Vehicle Act involved in this case. If there was negligence, it was the absence of headlights. If there was contributory negligence, it was plaintiff's failure to see the stage. No witness who observed the time of day at the time of the collision fixed the time later than the driver of the stage, who fixed it at 4:10 a. m. The sun rose at 4:42 a. m. on the day and place of the collision. The witnesses disagreed upon whether it appeared to them dark or light; but the law decrees that at one-half hour before sunrise it is dark enough to need headlights. Motor Vehicle Act, § 99 (St. 1923, p. 546).

Plaintiff could, therefore, charge defendants with actionable negligence for failure to display such headlights, but was not entitled to any instruction which would have the effect of removing from the case the issue of contributory negligence; for, even in the absence of headlights on the stage he still had the duty of seeing it, if in the exercise of ordinary care he should have done so. The court instructed the jury very fully upon the issue of contributory negligence. It gave an unusually large number of paragraphs upon this one subject, as if a new and complete paragraph had been prepared for each possible factor entering the law of contributory negligence. It does not seem possible that the jury could have understood that the plaintiff was not obliged to use every reasonable and ordinary precaution for his own safety, even though the stage displayed no headlights. We accordingly hold that the instruction does not justify a reversal of the case.

The judgment is affirmed.

RICHARDSON v. MORRISON, Justice of the Peace. (Civ. 14.)

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California. Oct. 22, 1929.

Justices of the peace  17—Under fee statute, justice of the peace held not required to pay county treasurer fees for solemnizing marriages (Pol. Code, §§ 4290, 4292).

Under Pol. Code, § 4292, providing all salaried officers of counties and townships should collect certain fees and pay them to county, Const. art. 6, § 15, providing that no judicial officer shall receive for his own use any fees of such office, and section 4290, providing salaries and fees provided should be full compensation for all services rendered by officers named, justice of the peace being one of those named, justice held not required to pay to county treasurer fees collected from solemnizing marriages.

Appeal from Superior Court, Orange County; James L. Allen, Judge.

Action by Geo. S. Richardson, as taxpayer, in behalf of himself and all other taxpayers of Orange County, against Kenneth E. Morrison as Justice of the Peace, Santa Ana Township, Orange County, seeking a writ of mandate. From a judgment sustaining a demurrer to the petition, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

W. M. Smith, of Santa Ana, for appellant.
R. Y. Williams and L. A. West, both of Santa Ana, for respondent.

BARNARD, J. The plaintiff brought this action as a taxpayer, in behalf of himself and all other taxpayers of Orange county, against the defendant as justice of the peace of Santa Ana township, Orange county, seeking a writ of mandamus directed to said defendant, commanding him to pay into the county treasury all money received by him as such justice of the peace from parties to any marriage solemnized by him, either as "fee, gift, reward, tip, compensation or otherwise," during his term of office. The petition alleges the election, qualification, and acting of defendant as such justice of the peace, that he has solemnized a certain number of marriages, for which he has accepted from the contracting parties and retained for himself large amounts of money, and that this retention is a direct injury to plaintiff and all other taxpayers of said county. The trial court entered an order and judgment sustaining a general demurrer to the petition, without leave to amend, and denying the writ of mandate prayed for by plaintiff. This appeal is from such judgment.

Appellant earnestly contends that the order and judgment appealed from is contrary to the Constitution and both the civil and criminal law of the state of California, and against public policy. Four points are relied on, with various citations of authorities. It is unnecessary to pass upon these points, for the reason that they all go to the alleged fact that it was illegal for respondent to accept the money involved. And, even if appellant's contention was upheld as to any or all of the points relied on, such holding that the acts complained of were illegal would not settle the question here involved. The only question presented by this appeal is whether defendant, as such justice of the peace in such an action as this, may be compelled to turn over money received in the manner indicated to the county treasury.

If it be assumed that the accepting of "fees, gifts, rewards, tips, compensation or otherwise" by a justice of the peace for marriages solemnized is illegal, still there is no law requiring such a person to pay over money so received to the county treasury. Prior to the 1913 session of the Legislature, the law provided for a fee of $3 to be charged and collected by a justice of the peace for celebrating a marriage and returning a certificate thereof to the county recorder. Stat. 1907, p. 552. This provision was omitted by the Legislature in 1913 (Stat. 1913, p. 1442), and since that time no such fee has been provided for by law.

Section 4292 of the Political Code provides: "All salaried officers of the several counties and townships of this state shall charge and collect for the use of their respective counties, and pay into the county treasury, on or before the fifth day of each month, the fees now or hereafter allowed by law in all cases, except where such fees, or a percentage thereof, is allowed such officers, and excepting also such fees as are a charge against the county."

In the case of City of Sacramento v. Simmons, 66 Cal. App. 18, 225 P. 36, 41, the defendant, who was a city commissioner of the city of Sacramento, also performed the duties of local registrar of vital statistics for the state in that city, for which he received certain compensation from the county. In this action by the city to collect from defendant the moneys so received, the court said: "That the defendant may not have been legally authorized * * * to collect money from the county of Sacramento for his services to the state does not give to the city of Sacramento any title to the money so collected."

The case of State ex rel. McNary v. Dunbar, 53 Or. 45, 98 P. 878, 880, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1015, decided by the Supreme Court of Oregon, was an action by a taxpayer on behalf of the state to compel the secretary of state to account to the state for certain fees which it was alleged he had illegally collected. In its opinion, the court, after assuming, but not deciding, that the collection of the fees was prohibited by the Constitution of that state, said:

"The right to exact such fees for the benefit of the state, or its title to the money so collected, must be established by legislative authority. If the fees cannot be exacted for the purpose prescribed in the statute, then they cannot be exacted at all, and if collected without authority, may be recovered by the person from whom exacted, if he is not otherwise barred."

"But the state's right to such fees depends upon some legislative provision exacting the same as compensation to the state. * * * but the unauthorized exaction of fees by an officer cannot operate to give the state or the county title to the money so received."

The case of Bell v. Martin, 64 Or. 519, 130 P. 1126, 1127, also decided by the Supreme Court of Oregon, is nearly identical with the case at bar. The plaintiff, a justice of the peace, secured an alternative writ of mandamus, directed to the county auditor, directing him to approve a claim for petitioner's salary, or show cause why he had not done so. By way of return, the auditor alleged that plaintiff had received a large sum as fees for solemnizing marriages, which he had failed to pay to the county treasurer. The lower court sustained a demurrer to this answer, and, upon a refusal to plead further, a peremptory writ was issued. It was stipulated that the appeal was to test the one question as to whether or not the justice of the peace had the right to keep fees collected for performing marriage ceremonies. The opinion states that originally such officers derived their compensation from fees collected from litigants, and from those to whom other services were rendered, including a fee of $5 for performing a marriage ceremony and making a return thereof; that this was later changed and at the time involved the law provided for a definite salary, "which said salary shall be in full compensation for all services or duties performed by said justices of the peace and no other fees, commissions or compensation whatever shall be allowed to or received by them"; that the law required them to perform the duties of their office, collect the fees allowed by law, and on the 1st day of each month turn the same over to the county treasurer; and that, as the law then stood, a justice of the peace had no authority to exact a fee for performing a marriage ceremony. The court then says: "It is solely by virtue of the statute that the county has any right to the fees collected by the justices, and, if the latter had no right to collect them, neither has the county any right to demand the same from him. * * * The title of the county to the money cannot be better than that of the officer who collected it."

Appellant relies on similar provisions in California, limiting a justice of the peace to his fixed salary. The Constitution of California, art. 6, § 15, provides: "No judicial officer, * * * shall receive to his own use any fees or perquisites of office. * * *" And section 4290 of the Political Code provides, in part: "The salaries and fees provided in this title shall be in full compensation for all services of every kind and description rendered by the officers named in this title." One of the officers named in this title is justice of the peace.

In support of his contention that an officer collecting fees not authorized by law may be compelled to turn over the same to the public treasury, appellant cites only two cases, to wit, People v. Van Ness, 79 Cal. 84, 21 P. 554, 12 Am. St. Rep. 134, and County of Kern v. Fay, 131 Cal. 547, 63 P. 857. We think these cases are not controlling here. In People v. Van Ness the money involved was collected by the defendant in his official capacity and under color of office, under his own misconstruction of a Code section, and was paid into the state treasury. Later, in a suit upon his bond for other moneys, defendant claimed the right to offset this money previously so collected by mistake and paid over to the state. The court merely held that the money, in any view, did not belong to defendant; that it belonged to the parties from whom collected, but the state, under the circumstances, was the proper custodian of the money. In County of Kern v. Fay, the court held that certain attorney fees paid to the district attorney of Kern county were authorized by law, were paid to defendant in his official capacity, and that, as his salary was in full compensation for official duties, he could not retain the fees.

We are of the opinion that the law, as now existing, requires a justice of the peace to pay into the county treasury only the fees now provided for by law, and in that these do not include such money as is described in appellant's petition. Whatever be the status of the payments or gratuities involved in this action, they are not such fees as are required to be paid to the county by any existing statute. If the justice of the peace has no right to collect them, neither can the county demand them from him. Irrespective of whatever other action might be taken in regard to any such money, if the acceptance of the same be in violation of law, the county has no right nor title thereto, and appellant was therefore not entitled to the writ prayed for.

The judgment is affirmed.

LOBB v. BROWN et al. (S. F. 12399.)★

Supreme Court of California. Oct. 31, 1929.

As Modified, on Denial of Rehearing, Nov. 25, 1929.1. Trial ⇨395(7)—Trial court's conclusion of law must be supported by findings of fact.

Trial court's conclusion of law must find support in findings of fact, and unless so supported must fall.

2. Trial ⇨398—Specific findings control in case of inconsistency between them and general finding.

Specific findings of fact of trial court must control in case of inconsistency between specific findings and general finding.

3. Wills ⇨651—Provision for forfeiture of legacy in event of contest by legatee is valid.

Provision in will for forfeiture of legacy in event of contest of the will by legatee is valid and binding on legatee.

4. Wills ⇨658—Provision forfeiting legacy in case of contest by legatee must be strictly construed.

Provision in will for forfeiture of legacy in event of contest of will by legatee must be strictly construed.

5. Wills ⇨665—Failure of two legatees, made defendants in will contest, to deny charge of contestants that third legatee exercised undue influence, held not to make first two legatees contestants, within forfeiture provision.

In will contest, brought against three legatees under will to set aside will, in so far as third legatee was given interest in residue of estate, failure of the other two legatees to deny by their answer charge made by contestants that third legatee had obtained his legacy by undue influence held not to bar the first two legatees from participation under will as contestants, within provision of will for forfeiture of share of contesting legatee.

6. Wills ⇨665—Statements in court of attorney for two legatees, made defendants in will contest, that his clients would like to see contestants succeed, and had financial interest in their success, held not "contest" by legatees, within forfeiture provision.

Statements in open court by attorney for two of legatees, made defendants in will contest attacking that part of will which gave share of estate to third legatee, that they would like to see contestants succeed, and that their clients had a financial interest if they did, held not to constitute "contest" of will by legatees, within provision for forfeiture of share of contesting legatee.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First, Second, and Third Series, Contest.]

7. Wills ⇨665—Legatee testifying for contestants held not contest, within forfeiture provision of will, where testimony was given under subpoena.

Participation by legatee as witness on behalf of contestants, in will contest attacking will in so far as it made provision for another legatee, held not to constitute contest of will by the first legatee, within provision forfeiting share of contesting legatee, where legatee did not seek out contestants or their attorney for purpose of becoming a witness, and testified under subpoena.

8. Wills ⇨665—Legatee, who produced in court papers used as evidence by contestants, without being subpoenaed to do so, did not become "contestant," within forfeiture provision.

In will contest, production in court by legatee of certain papers used as evidence on behalf of contestants, without subpoena having been issued for their production, did not render legatee a "contestant," under provision for forfeiture of share of legatee contesting will, where trial court found that legatee did not attempt in any way to establish interest of contestants.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First, Second, and Third Series, Contestant.]

9. Wills ⇨665—Legatee's conduct in arranging meeting between contestants' attorney and proposed witness held not to render him contestant, within forfeiture provision.

Conduct of legatee in referring proposed witness for contestants to contestants' attorney, and in later arranging for meeting between him and attorney, did not render legatee a contestant, within provision of will for forfeiture of share of contesting legatee, where it did not appear that legatee was acting from any particular desire or intention of assisting contestants in their will contest.

10. Wills ⇨667—Findings as to legatee's connection with will contest instituted by others held not to require conclusion that legatee was contestant, within forfeiture provision.

Findings as to legatee's participation in will contest proceedings as witness for contestants, as to legatee's failure to deny charge that another legatee exercised undue influence, as to legatee's statements in court, and conduct in bringing about meeting between contestants' attorney and witness, held not to require conclusion that legatee aided or assisted in contest in any substantial degree, so as to bring him within clause of will forfeiting share of contesting legatee.

11. Wills ⇨665—Contribution by nephew of testatrix to expenses of will contest, after institution thereof by others, held not to render nephew contestant, within clause forfeiting share of contesting legatee.

Where will contest was instituted by persons other than legatees and without their knowledge, to set aside will as regards share of third legatee, who was made executor, and where such third legatee was unrelated to testatrix and had no claim on her bounty, whereas the first two legatees were nephews living with testatrix as part of her family, contribution made by one of nephews to the contest, after institution thereof and after trial had begun, did not work a forfeiture of his legacy, under provision for forfeiture of share of legatee contesting will.

12. Wills $\S$ 658—Provision for forfeiture of share of contesting legatee should be most strictly construed, where will included legacy to mere acquaintance of aged testatrix.

Where will of aged testatrix included as legatee, together with her nephews, person who had no claim on her bounty, provision in such will for forfeiture of share of contesting legatee should be most strictly construed.

13. Wills $\S$ 665—Dismissal of will contest not instituted by legatees, on ground of want of standing of contestants, pretermitted question of forfeiture of shares of legatees.

Where trial court dismissed proceedings to contest will on ground that contestants were without legal right to institute contest, and such dismissal was in response to answer to legatees denying interest of contestants in estate, legatees could not be held contestants in such proceeding, within clause of will providing for forfeiture of shares of contesting legatees.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; J. D. Murphey, Judge.

Action by Harry W. Lobb against Frank Arthur Brown and another. Judgment was entered for defendants. From an order denying plaintiff's motion to set aside the judgment and enter a judgment in his favor on the findings, plaintiff appeals. Judgment and order affirmed.

Superseding opinions in 276 P. 583, and 277 P. 371.

Hadsell, Sweet & Ingalls, of San Francisco, and Earl Warren and Ralph E. Hoyt, both of Oakland, for appellant.

Byrne & Lamson and Knight, Boland & Christin, all of San Francisco, for respondents.

CURTIS, J. This action was instituted for the purpose of having it declared that the defendants hold in trust for the plaintiff certain real and personal property received by them under decrees of partial distribution in the estate of Mary Ellen Moore, deceased.

Mary Ellen Moore at the time of her death was about 82 years of age. Her home had been in Alameda, in the county of Alameda, where she had resided many years immediately preceding her death. The defendants are brothers, and were nephews of the deceased. They had been reared by her, and had spent most of their lives with her. The decedent had made a prior will to that which was filed and probated as her last will and testament. In this prior will the defendants were made residuary legatees, and, after certain bequests to friends and acquaintances of the decedent, the residue of her estate, approximately in value $200,000, had been devised and bequeathed to defendants.

Shortly before her death, she executed a second will. In this will the plaintiff was named as the executor thereof, and he and the defendants were named as residuary legatees. This second will contained the following provision, therein designated as paragraph 18, which was not found in her former will:

"If any person named herein, or unnamed herein, shall institute proceedings in anywise contesting this my last will and testament, then I give, devise and bequeath to such person or persons the sum of one dollar ($1.00), and no more. In the event of any person named herein contesting this will, then the share of said person mentioned in this will shall go to the residuary legatees or legatee not contesting."

Mary Ellen Moore died at her home on August 14, 1920. On September 2, 1920, the will hereinbefore referred to as her second will was duly admitted to probate as her last will and testament, and the plaintiff, Harry W. Lobb, was appointed executor thereof. On September 8, 1920, the law firm of Byrne & Lamson, representing both of the defendants, Frank A. Brown and Herbert E. Brown, filed in the office of the county clerk of Alameda county their notice of appearance and demand for notices as such attorneys, as provided by section 1380 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Thereafter two petitions for partial distribution of certain portions of said estate were filed by the defendants, Frank A. Brown and Herbert E. Brown, and the court in response to said petitions made two decrees, one dated January 17, 1921, and the other October 10, 1921, by which it distributed to Frank A. Brown and Herbert E. Brown certain real and personal property of said estate, of the approximate value of $120,000.

Between the dates of said two decrees of partial distribution, and on June 9, 1921, George J. Moore and certain named stepchildren of the decedent, Mary Ellen Moore, hereinafter referred to as the Moore heirs, filed a contest directed solely to that portion of the last will and testament of Mary Ellen Moore, by which there was bequeathed to the plaintiff herein, Harry W. Lobb, one-third of the residue of said estate. One of the grounds upon which this contest was based was alleged to be undue influence of this plaintiff, Harry W. Lobb, in securing the execution of said will by the decedent. In this contest proceeding the plaintiff and the defendants were made parties defendant therein. Frank A. Brown and Herbert E. Brown appeared therein by their attorneys, Messrs. Byrne & Lamson, and filed an answer to said contest. In their answer they denied that the contestants had any interest in the estate of the decedent which would entitle them to contest her will. They did not deny, however, the charge made by contestants that the residuary clause of her will, in so far as it provided that the said Harry W. Lobb should be entitled to one-third of the residue of said estate, was invalid by reason of the undue influence practiced on decedent by the said Harry W. Lobb. The contest was tried by the court sitting with a jury, and resulted in an order of court discharging the jury and dismissing the proceeding. This order was dated September 14, 1922.

In the present action, it is charged by the plaintiff in his complaint that the defendants, Frank A. Brown and Herbert E. Brown, "and each of them, did contest said last will and testament of Mary Ellen Moore, deceased, in violation of the eighteenth paragraph thereof and did seek to destroy and render of no effect the residuary clause in said will, in so far as it bequeathed to Harry W. Lobb one-third of the residue of said estate." The complaint then set forth certain acts of the defendants, and of their attorneys, Messrs. Byrne & Lamson, which were alleged to have been done during the pendency of the said contest proceeding and during the trial of said proceeding in the superior court of Alameda county, and which, it was alleged, were done for the purpose of, and which actually did, aid and assist the contestants in their attempt to have declared invalid that portion of the last will and testament whereby Harry W. Lobb was bequeathed one-third of the residue of said estate. The defendants filed separate answers, in which they made substantial denial of all of the allegations of the complaint embodying the charge that they had contested or had assisted in the contest of the last will of the decedent. The action was tried, and the court made and filed its findings of fact and conclusions of law, upon which judgment was rendered in favor of the defendants. From this judgment plaintiff has appealed.

The court found that it was "not true that defendant Frank A. Brown did contest said last will as mentioned in said complaint, or at all." In addition to this finding, the trial court found certain specific acts to have been committed by the said Frank A. Brown and the said Herbert E. Brown in connection with the proceeding brought and prosecuted to contest the will of said decedent. The court made no definite finding as to whether or not Herbert E. Brown contested said will.

[1, 2] The appellant contends that the finding of the court that Frank A. Brown did not contest the will of decedent is merely a conclusion of law, and that the special findings of the court as to the specific acts of these defendants show conclusively that each of them did contest the will of said decedent, and thereby forfeited his right to the real and personal property bequeathed and devised to him in said will. Whether the finding of the court that Frank A. Brown did not contest the will of said decedent is a finding of fact or a conclusion of law, it would be controlled by the specific findings of the court as to the acts of Frank A. Brown committed by him in connection with said contest proceeding, if there is any conflict between the general finding and the specific findings.

Treating it as a conclusion of law, it must find support in the other findings of the court, which are in fact findings of fact, and, unless it is so supported, it must fall. Treating it as a general finding, and the findings of the court as to the particular acts of Frank A. Brown as specific findings, the latter must control in case of any inconsistency between said general finding and said specific findings. Turner v. Turner, 187 Cal. 632, 203 P. 109; Estate of Ross, 187 Cal. 454, 202 P. 641. It follows, therefore, that the validity of the judgment must be determined by a consideration of the specific findings relative to the acts of the defendants, in connection with the institution and prosecution of said contest. There are other questions raised, such as the capacity of the plaintiff to maintain this action, and the misjoinder of defendants and of causes of action; but, in the view we take of this action, it will not be necessary to pass upon these questions.

The specific findings of the court as to the particular acts committed by the respondents in the matter of the contest of the decedent's will instituted by George J. Moore and others, and which acts of the respondents the appellant claims constituted a contest of said will by respondents, and, therefore, worked a forfeiture of the bequests and devises to which the respondents would otherwise be entitled to receive and hold under said will, may be for convenience divided into three classes: (1) Those which relate to both of the respondents; (2) those which relate to Frank A. Brown; and (3) those which relate to Herbert E. Brown. These we will discuss in the order named.

First. The court found that neither of said defendants knew that any contest of said will had been instituted until after the same had been brought by the contestants; that defendants filed their answer in said contest proceeding, but in said answer they did not deny those allegations in the petition alleging acts of undue influence; that they were represented in said contest proceeding by the firm of Byrne & Lamson; that J. S. Lamson, of said firm, attended the trial of said contest during three or four days of said trial, which lasted for nine days; that on one occasion during the trial of said contest, but at a time when the jury was not present, the said J. S. Lamson, in answer to a question propounded to him by one of the attorneys for the proponents in said contest, stated, "I have no hesitancy in saying that we would like to see the contestants succeed in the case," and further, in answering a question as to whether "you have a financial interest in it, if they do," replied, "There is no doubt about that."

Second. The court found that the attorney for the contestants, Mr. McWilliams, called upon Mr. Lamson and asked to have an interview with Frank A. Brown regarding the contest that he had instituted to have certain portions of the will of the decedent declared invalid. At first Mr. Lamson refused Mr. McWilliams' request, but later arranged a meeting between Mr. McWilliams and Frank A. Brown. Thereafter Frank A. Brown was subpoenaed as a witness at the trial of said contest, and testified to certain facts within his knowledge regarding said decedent and her business affairs. He also produced certain papers which he had secured from the home of the decedent after her death and prior to the appointment of an executor of her will. These papers, or at least a portion, were offered in evidence by the attorney for the contestants, and by order of court were admitted in evidence.

During the trial of said contest, a man by the name of A. W. Porter met Frank A. Brown on a ferryboat running between San Francisco and Oakland, and volunteered to be a witness in the contest proceeding. Frank A. Brown informed him that Mr. McWilliams was handling the case for the contestants, and the next day informed Mr. McWilliams of the conversation with Porter. Mr. McWilliams stated that he would like to meet Porter, and Frank A. Brown replied: "The next time I see him, if I see him in the next day or two, I will tell him that you want to see him." Frank A. Brown thereafter saw Porter on the ferryboat and told him that McWilliams wanted to see him, and arranged to meet him at McWilliams' office a few days later. The meeting at McWilliams' office was held as planned, with the result that Porter later testified as a witness in favor of the contestants. The court further found that Frank A. Brown did not "attempt in any way to establish the interest of contestants in said estate, or that he had any purpose, except that of attending as a witness in obedience to a subpoena, and answering truthfully such questions as were put to him." The court also found that Frank A. Brown did not pay "to the contestants, or to their attorney, or to any of them, any sum or sums of money whatever, for any purpose, or at any time."

Third. Herbert E. Brown did not attend the trial of the contest of decedent's will. The court found, however, that through his attorney, J. S. Lamson, he paid to Robert L. McWilliams, attorney for contestants, the following sums of money: $100 on September 4, $100 on September 13, $506.40 on September 25, and $100 on September 28, 1922. The trial was begun on August 30, 1922, and, as before stated, lasted nine days. The court found that the money paid to McWilliams was used by him for the payment of the expenses or attorney's fees of the trial of said contest, except the sum of $100, which was paid for the purpose of prosecuting an appeal from the judgment rendered, and "that, at the time said Herbert E. Brown delivered said money to said J. S. Lamson, he knew that said money was to be so used, and thereafter knew that the same was so used."

While the foregoing does not comprise all the findings of fact made by the court, it does set forth the more salient and important facts embodied in said findings. The findings themselves are voluminous and cover 18 pages of the typewritten record. The foregoing facts, as set forth above, we think, will sufficiently present the cause of the respective parties and permit the application of the principles of law governing their rights in this controversy.

[3] That a provision in a will providing for a forfeiture of a legacy in the event of a contest of the will by the legatee is valid and binding upon said legatee has been held frequently by this court. Estate of Hite, 155 Cal. 436, 101 P. 443, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 953, 17 Ann. Cas. 993; Estate of Miller, 156 Cal. 119, 103 P. 842, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 868; Estate of Shirley, 180 Cal. 400, 181 P. 777; Estate of Bergland, 180 Cal. 629, 182 P. 277, 5 A. L. R. 1363; In re Kitchen, 192 Cal. 384, 220 P. 301, 30 A. L. R. 1008. In some of these cases it is expressly held that such a provision in a will is not against public policy, but meets with its approval. Estate of Hite, supra. But in Estate of Bergland, supra, where this court was considering the effect of such a clause in a will upon a legatee therein named who in good faith had attempted to probate a later spurious will, we find the following language:

"It is the policy of the law to encourage the presentation for probate of wills of decedents in order to make the more certain that those really entitled to their bounty shall enjoy it. To place upon one under the moral, if not the legal, obligation of probating the decedent's will the burden of gambling on his ability to do so successfully, no matter how sincere he may be, would be directly opposed to such policy."

In that case this court held "that an attempt in good faith to probate a later purported will, spurious in fact, but believed to be genuine by the party seeking its probate, does not fall within the forfeiture clause under consideration here." The forfeiture clause in the will in the Estate of Bergland, supra, read as follows: "Fourthly, it is my positive instruction that should any one or more of the beneficiaries named in this will object to the distribution as made, or attempt to defeat the provisions of this will that said person or persons shall receive the sum of five dollars ($5.00) each and no more."

[4] It is universally held, we think, that such a clause in a will, like all other forfeiture provisions, is to be strictly construed. In the Estate of Hite, supra, Estate of Bergland, supra, and In re Kitchen, supra, this court has expressly held that such a provision in a will should be strictly construed. In Estate of Bergland, this court said (180 Cal. 633, 182 P. 279): "While it is the rule in this state that forfeiture clauses of the nature of that involved here are valid and are to be given effect according to the intent of the testator, yet it is also the rule, and a salutary one, that such a provision—being by way of forfeiture and condition subsequent—is to be strictly construed and not extended beyond what was plainly the testator's intent." Again in the same case, on page 635 of the opinion (182 P. 280), we find the following statement: "As we have already said, the forfeiture clause is to be strictly construed: that is, while it is valid and is to be enforced according to the ascertained intent of the testator, yet in ascertaining his intent no wider scope is to be given to his language than is plainly required."

[5] With the law as stated above we will pass to the consideration of the acts of the respondents as found by the court, for the purpose of determining whether they show such a breach of the forfeiture clause of the decedent's will as will subject them to the loss of the property given them by the terms of said will. As to respondent Frank A. Brown we have no hesitancy in declaring that his acts as found by the court are wholly insufficient to justify any conclusion that he had violated the terms of said forfeiture clause. In the first place, the court found as to him, and also as to Herbert E. Brown, that neither of them knew of the institution of said contest until after the same had been brought by the contestants. Not only is there an absence of any finding that the respondents instituted said contest, but in the foregoing findings the court expressly found that they did not even know of the contest until after it had been filed. The court found, however, that neither of these respondents, in their answer to said contest, denied the charge of undue influence alleged in the petition for said contest, and some significance is attached to this failure on their part to deny said charge, as tending to show that the respondents were aiding in said contest. The facts regarding this feature of the case are that the respondents, being beneficiaries under the will, were made parties defendant along with the appellant, the executor of said will.

The respondents filed their answer in said proceeding, which contained no denial of the charge of undue influence made against the appellant by the contestants. The respondents did allege in their answer that the contestants had no interest in the estate of Mary Ellen Moore, deceased, which would entitle them to institute or maintain said contest, and it was this point upon which the case was decided in favor of the proponents of said will. Estate of Moore, 65 Cal. App. 29, 223 P. 73. The respondents were under no obligation, legal or otherwise, to deny in their said answer the charge of undue influence made against appellant. In fact, they may have been unable, as they understood and believed the facts of that case to be, to truthfully deny said charge. Their failure to include such a denial in their answer under these circumstances could not under any possible hypothesis be construed as a breach of any provision of said will.

[6] The court further found that J. S. Lamson, the attorney for said respondents in said contest proceedings, made in open court, but without the hearing of the jury, admissions that they would like to see the contestants succeed and that the respondents herein had "a financial interest in it if they do." In the first of these admissions the attorney simply expressed the attitude of the respondents regarding the contest, and that they desired that the contestants prevail in the contest proceeding. The mere expression of a desire that the contestants succeed was not sufficient to bring the respondents under the ban of the forfeiture clause. In re Lague's Estate, 198 Mo. App. 261, 200 S. W. 83; Haradon v. Clark, 190 Iowa, 798, 180 N. W. 868. Neither was the admission that the respondents had a financial interest in the success of the contest a matter of any probative significance under the peculiar facts of this case.

We have already referred to the fact that the decedent had made a prior will to that which was admitted to probate as her last will and testament. Under this will the respondents were made her sole residuary legatees; under her second or last will and testament the appellant and said respondents were named as residuary legatees. It was the contention of the respondents that, had said contest been successful, they would, under the prior will, be entitled to the whole of the residue of said estate. Whether they were right in that contention it is not necessary for us to decide. They held to that contention then, and still maintain the correctness of their position. With this belief on their part, the admission of their attorney that respondents had a financial interest in the outcome of the contest was simply a statement in accordance with the facts as he understood them. It did not in any way prejudice any right of the respondents under said will.

[7] The further findings of the court regarding Frank A. Brown's participation in the contest of said will refer in particular to his appearance as a witness on behalf of the contestants, to his furnishing the contestants certain papers of the deceased in his possession, and to his activities in procuring A. W. Porter as a witness for the contestants. The findings show that Frank A. Brown attended the trial of the contest of the will of the decedent under a subpoena regularly issued and served upon him, that he testified to certain facts within his personal knowledge, and that he produced certain papers belonging to said decedent which were then in his possession. He did not seek the contestants or their attorney for the purpose of becoming a witness in the contest proceeding. On the other hand, it was contestants' attorney who sought out Frank A. Brown and interviewed him regarding his knowledge of matters involved in the contest. It is true that Frank A. Brown submitted himself to said interview, and in all probability revealed to said attorney whatever facts were within his knowledge relative to the issues involved in said contest. But it is not shown that he gave to the attorney for the contestants any information that he could not have been compelled to give in court upon being subpoenaed as a witness in said proceeding. It has been held that a legatee who testified as a witness without a subpoena at the request of the contestants and in their behalf, and admitted on cross-examination that he was in sympathy with the contestants, did not thereby contest the will within the meaning of a forfeiture clause similar to that in the will of Mary Ellen Moore, deceased. Haradon v. Clark, supra. If the ban of the forfeiture clause cannot be invoked against a legatee appearing in behalf of the contestants without subpoena, surely one who has been compelled by process of court to appear in court and testify in behalf of contestants should not be subjected to the punitive terms of such a testamentary provision.

[8] Certain papers were produced in court by Frank A. Brown, some of which were admitted in evidence on behalf of contestants. The fact that these were produced without subpoena is admitted by the respondents. We see no reason why a different rule should apply to documentary evidence than that which was applied to oral evidence in the case of Haradon v. Clark, supra. Reference to these papers were made in the findings, and a brief description of them is made therein. Just what their materiality was in the contest proceeding does not appear, from the brief reference thereto made in the findings. They were no doubt before the trial court, and with full knowledge of their contents, and of their probative effect, said court found that Frank A. Brown did not attempt in any way to establish the interests of the contestants. With this finding in the record we would not be justified in assigning to the introduction of these papers in evidence any real importance.

[9] Frank A. Brown's part in procuring A. W. Porter as a witness for the contestants was occasioned more by a casual meeting of said Porter than by any studied effort on his part to assist the cause of the contestants. Although the trial was in progress at the time Porter first suggested that he be a witness on behalf of the contestants, Frank A. Brown displayed little interest and less activity in bringing about his attendance as such witness at the hearing of the contest. If Frank A. Brown had been actively interested in the contest of decedent's will, he would have arranged for a meeting between Porter and McWilliams immediately upon Porter's first suggesting the subject to him. As it was, he merely referred Porter to McWilliams, and on the next day, when McWilliams stated to Frank A. Brown that he would like to see Porter, the latter replied that, if he should see him in the next day or two, he would tell him that McWilliams wanted to see him. While on his second meeting with Porter he arranged for a meeting between him and McWilliams, which led to Porter becoming a witness for the contestants, it does not appear that what he did in this regard was done with any particular desire or purpose of assisting the contestants, or that the contestants were to any extent whatever benefited by his efforts.

[10] After a careful review of the findings relating to the acts and conduct of Frank A. Brown in connection with the contest of the will of said decedent, we are not convinced that the facts so found are sufficient to show that he, either directly or indirectly, in any substantial degree aided or assisted in the said contest. In reaching this conclusion we are leaving out of consideration the general finding already referred to that Frank A. Brown did not contest said will. Whether this finding is one of fact or a conclusion of law, we are satisfied that it is a correct determination relative to the acts and conduct of Frank A. Brown in connection with the contest of the will of said decedent.

[11, 12] We will now give consideration to the findings of the court which involve the acts and conduct of Herbert E. Brown in connection with the contest of the last will of Mary Ellen Moore, deceased. It will not be necessary for us to consider those findings of the court which apply to both Frank A. Brown and Herbert E. Brown alike, and to which we have already given such consideration as we deem necessary. The findings which relate to the particular acts of the respondent Herbert E. Brown are that, after the institution of the contest of decedent's will by the Moore heirs, he contributed various sums of money through his attorney to the contestants therein toward defraying the expense of said contest. Was this act of Herbert E. Brown a violation of the provisions of said will, so as to work a forfeiture of the bequests and devises to which said Herbert E. Brown would, except for said act, be entitled to receive under said will?

By an examination of the terms of said forfeiture clause it will be observed that it consists of two sentences. The first sentence contains a statement that the testatrix gives the sum of "one dollar and no more" to any person named in said will who shall "institute proceedings in anywise contesting this my last will and testament." The findings are to the effect that the contest of the will of decedent was instituted by persons other than these respondents, and that these respondents did not know of the institution thereof until after said contest had been brought. It was instituted June 9, 1921, and the trial thereof was commenced August 30, 1922, and concluded September 14, 1922. The first money contributed by Herbert E. Brown was the sum of $100 on September 4, 1922, over a year after the institution of said contest, and not until after the trial of said contest had been begun. It is clear, therefore, that Herbert E. Brown cannot be successfully charged with the institution of any proceeding contesting said will.

The second sentence of said forfeiture clause is broader in its scope than the first, and includes any person contesting said will, and provides that the share of such person under the will shall go to other persons named therein. In other words, any person contesting said will shall forfeit the share of said estate to which he would otherwise be entitled thereunder. It is not contended that Herbert E. Brown was a party to any contest of said will, or that he directly contested said will, but only that, by furnishing money to meet the expense of said contest, he thereby aided said contest, and indirectly became a party to said contest, and in so doing actually contested said will. Such a construction would be to extend the language of the will beyond the express terms thereof. Generally speaking, what one does by another he does himself, and one who aids and abets another in the commission of any act is equally responsible with the person committing the act for the results of said act. But can we apply this rule when we are construing the terms of a forfeiture which we are enjoined to strictly construe for the purpose of avoiding a forfeiture if possible?

In addition to the authorities already cited herein, to the effect that forfeitures are not favored by the law and should be strictly construed, we find a statement by the Supreme Court of Kansas, which we think aptly expresses the present trend of the courts regarding the subject. This statement is as follows: "It would be clearly against the policy of the law to extend the terms of a forfeiture of this character (forfeiture clause in a will similar to that in Mrs. Moore's will) beyond the express terms of the condition itself. To do so would be to encourage forfeitures by construction. Conditions of this character, as we have seen, are not regarded with favor by the courts, and will not be enforced when they can be reasonably relieved against. For the purpose of defeating a forfeiture, the condition will be construed most strictly. Public policy should be as much concerned in upholding the right of a citizen to have his claim determined by law as it is to prevent contests of wills." Wright v. Cummings, 108 Kan. 667, 196 P. 246, 14 A. L. R. 604. While in Estate of Hite, supra, it was stated that a forfeiture clause in a will is not against public policy, in the later case of Estate of Bergland, supra, it was held that this rule was subject to exception and that it would not apply to the facts of that later case. We think this clause in the will of Mrs. Moore should be construed in the light of the facts of this case.

These facts show that Mrs. Moore had practically raised Frank A. Brown and Herbert E. Brown, and that they had lived with her as part of her family since they were about 5 years old, and until they were grown and had made homes for themselves. She had no children of her own, and evidently regarded the respondents the same as her own children. She had made a will in which, besides a few special bequests, she had given her property to these two nephews. When practically 80 years of age she had dealings with the appellant in connection with the preparation of her income tax returns. He was not related to her in any way, and had no claim upon her bounty. A short time thereafter, and when she was past 80 years of age she made another will, that involved in the present action, in which a large amount of her property, which in her former will she had given to these respondents was given to the appellant, and the forfeiture clause above set out, which was not in the former will, was inserted and made a part of the later will.

A will made under such circumstances—that is, by one of advanced years, in which she takes valuable property which she had given in a former will to her own blood relations, and those who were the natural objects of her affection and bounty, and gives it to another unrelated to her by ties of blood, and without claim upon her bounty is always, as it may well be, subject to suspicion and question as to its validity and legal execution. But, if it is the valid testament of the deceased, it should receive the sanction of the courts and its provisions enforced, notwithstanding the unnatural and unusual character of its terms. On the other hand, public policy demands that full and complete opportunity should be given to all interested parties to test the validity of such a testamentary document, not only to protect that which may be rightfully and legally theirs, but also to preserve the wishes and desires of the testatrix against designing persons, seeking to take advantage of her age and infirmities which are the usual result of advanced years. Any provision in the will which would tend to thwart or defeat such a purpose should be scanned by the courts with the minutest and closest scrutiny and, if found valid, applied with rigorous exactness and precision.

While we are not prepared to hold the forfeiture clause in the will of Mrs. Moore absolutely void as against public policy, we are of the opinion that public policy and the cause of right and justice require that its provisions should receive the strictest construction and interpretation by this court, and that, unless the acts of the respondents come strictly within the express terms of the punitive clause of the will, we will not declare any breach thereof. Herbert E. Brown did not institute any contest of the will of decedent. The most that can be said of his relation to said contest is that he contributed toward the expense of said contest, after it had been instituted and after the trial of said contest had begun. He may have assisted others in a contest, but to hold that such acts of assistance are within the forfeiture clause of the will would be to extend the terms of this clause beyond the express provisions, and thus not only to encourage, but actually to permit, forfeitures by construction. This the courts have refused to do. We are therefore of the opinion that the acts of Herbert E. Brown were not sufficient to bring him within the terms of the forfeiture clause of said will.

As against this holding the appellant has cited the following authorities from jurisdictions outside of this state: Donegan v. Wade, 70 Ala. 501; In re Stewart's Will (Sur.) 5 N. Y. S. 32, and Kayhart v. Whitehead, 77 N. J. Eq. 12, 76 A. 241. The facts in these cases differ materially from those presented in the present action. They are what might be termed extreme cases, and we think are not applicable to the present litigation.

[13] Besides, it may be seriously questioned whether there was any legal contest ever filed against said will. While we have referred to the proceedings instituted by the Moore heirs as a contest of said will, the trial court held that they had no legal standing that would entitle them to institute a contest of said will, and dismissed the proceedings instituted by them. The District Court of Appeal affirmed the order of dismissal, upon the ground that the contestants were without any legal right to institute a contest of the will of said decedent. There was, therefore, in fact no legal contest ever filed against said will, and the respondents could not be held to have been parties even indirectly to a proceeding which in fact had no legal existence. Moreover, the action of the trial court, dismissing the proceeding instituted by the Moore heirs, was in response to the answer to these respondents, which answer alleged the Moore heirs had no interest in said estate, and therefore could not legally institute a contest of the will of said deceased.

The views herein expressed make it unnecessary for us to decide a number of other questions raised by the appellant in his brief and oral argument. After the rendition of the judgment herein, the appellant moved the court under sections 663 and 663a of the Code of Civil Procedure for an order setting aside said judgment and for the entry of a judgment in favor of the plaintiff upon the findings. This motion was denied, and appellant has appealed from said order.

The order denying said motion is affirmed, and the judgment herein is also affirmed.

COZAD v. RAISCH IMPROVEMENT CO.
(S. F. 13499.)

Supreme Court of California. Nov. 4, 1929.

Judgment $\S$ 576(1) — Judgment held conclusive as to all matters presentable on motion to quash execution, regardless of error.

Where there was no showing of mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect at hearing of motion to set aside order quashing execution on those grounds, and at hearing of motion to quash question of plaintiff's right to an execution was clearly before court on its merits, conceding that court may have committed error in considering certain grounds of objection to original order of execution which would have called for reversal on appeal, it had jurisdiction to act, and judgment having become final without appeal or other direct attack, it is conclusive, whether matter was rightly or wrongly decided as to all matters presented or which could have been presented at hearing.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sonoma County; Thomas C. Denny, Judge.

Action by D. W. Cozad against the Raisch Improvement Company. Judgment for plaintiff was affirmed by the Superior Court. The judgment was assigned to Guy Le Roy Stevick. Execution was issued, but was subsequently recalled and quashed. A motion of the assignee to set aside the order quashing the execution was granted, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

For opinion of the District Court of Appeal, see 276 P. 1069.

A. B. Weller and Herbert Choyinski, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

Edwin H. Williams, of San Leandro, and Alfred C. Skaife, of San Francisco, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. A hearing was granted in this court after decision by the District Court of Appeal in and for the Third Appellate

District, for the purpose of giving further consideration to the respondent's contention that such hearing was necessary in order to secure uniformity of decision, and that the case of Creditors' Adjustment Co. v. Newman, 185 Cal. 509, 197 P. 334, upon the authority of which the appellate tribunal relied, is distinguishable from the case at bar. Upon further consideration, we are unable to perceive such distinction, and for that reason hereby approve and adopt the reasoning and conclusion of the appellate tribunal in its decision herein, which reads as follows:

It may be gathered from the evidence in this case that the Fidelity & Deposit Company of Maryland "executed a policy of employer's liability insurance on behalf of" the defendant, such liability not to exceed $5,000 for injury to "any one person on any one accident." The plaintiff recovered judgment against the defendant for damages in the sum of $5,898.95 resulting from such an injury. The defendant appealed from the judgment, and the Fidelity & Deposit Company of Maryland executed an undertaking to stay execution. The judgment was affirmed on appeal, and in due time judgment was entered against the surety for the amount of the judgment against the defendant. The surety paid the judgment against it and caused the judgment against the defendant, to the extent of $588.95, to be assigned to Guy Le Roy Stevick, one of the respondents herein. Execution on the judgment against the defendant was thereupon issued in the sum of $898.95. On notice duly given the defendant moved the court "to satisfy said judgment of record and to recall and quash said execution." The Fidelity & Deposit Company of Maryland contested said motion and introduced evidence in opposition thereto. Thereafter the court made and entered the following order:

"This cause having been heretofore submitted on motion to recall and quash execution comes now the court and orders, that said motion be, and the same is hereby granted."

Thereafter Stevick, on due notice, moved the court for an order setting aside the order quashing the execution on the ground, among others, "that said order was made through mistake, inadvertence, surprise and excusable neglect." The other grounds of the motion went to the merits of the original motion to quash the execution. The court granted the motion to set aside the order quashing the execution, and the defendant has appealed therefrom. At the hearing of the motion there was no showing of mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect; but evidence was introduced tending to show that the court committed error in quashing the execution. No evidence was presented which was not or might not have been introduced at the hearing of the motion to quash. At that hearing, "the question of plaintiff's right to an execution was clearly before the court on its merits, and, conceding that the court may have committed error * * * in considering certain grounds of objection to the original order, which would have called for reversal on appeal, it had jurisdiction to act in the premises, and the judgment having become final, without appeal or other direct attack, it is conclusive, whether the matter was rightly or wrongly decided, as to all matters presented or which should have been presented on the hearing." Creditors' Adjustment Co. v. Newman, 185 Cal. 509, 513, 197 P. 334, 338. The case cited is conclusive against respondents, and it is deemed unnecessary to pursue the subject further.

The order is reversed.

BRYDONJACK v. STATE BAR OF CALIFORNIA. (L. A. 11431.)

Supreme Court of California. Oct. 25, 1929.

1. Constitutional law ☞67—Courts have inherent and implied powers necessary to function as separate department of state government.

Courts have inherent and implied powers necessary to properly and effectively function as separate department in state government, as courts are set up by Constitution without special limitation.

2. Constitutional law ☞70(1)—Judicial department must in most matters yield to power of statutory enactments.

Although courts have inherent and implied powers necessary to function as separate department of state government, judicial department must in most matters yield to power of statutory enactments.

3. Constitutional law ☞55—Criminal and civil proceedings and appeals may be regulated by Legislature.

Legislature has power to regulate criminal and civil proceedings and appeals.

4. Attorney and client ☞3—Admission to practice as attorney is exercise of inherent powers of court.

Admission to practice as attorney means exercise of judicial function and exercise of one of inherent powers of court.

5. Attorney and client ☞1—Reasonable restriction on practice of law may be imposed by Legislature.

Legislature has power to impose reasonable restrictions on practice of law.

6. Constitutional law ☞52—Reasonable restrictions on constitutional functions of court may be imposed by Legislature, provided such restrictions do not defeat or impair exercise thereof.

Legislature may put reasonable restrictions on constitutional functions of courts, provided such restrictions do not defeat or materially impair exercise thereof.

7. Attorney and client ☞3—Supreme Court may admit petitioner to practice as attorney without favorable action by committee of bar examiners (State Bar Act, § 24).

Under State Bar Act, § 24 (St. 1927, p. 41), Supreme Court has power to admit petitioner to practice as attorney without favorable action of committee of bar examiners, since such body exercises no judicial powers, but has only power to investigate and make recommendations.

8. Attorney and client ☞1—Application for admission to practice as attorney, filed before effective date of amendment to statute, is not controlled by such amendment (St. 1929, p. 1965, amending State Bar Act, § 24).

Where petitioner filed application with Supreme Court for admission to practice as attorney prior to effective date of St. 1929, p. 1965, amending State Bar Act, § 24 (St. 1929, p. 41), such amendment did not control such application.

9. Attorney and client ☞5—Motion to Supreme Court for order of admission to practice as attorney is sufficient if person has met prescribed test and has submitted himself to board of examiners prior to such motion (Code Civ. Proc. § 279; Supreme Court Rule 1).

Motion, oral or written, for admission to practice as attorney, is sufficient to bring before Supreme Court for consideration application of any person who claims to have complied with Code Civ. Proc. § 279, and Supreme Court Rule 1, and who has submitted himself to board of bar examiners for investigation and recommendation prior to such application.

In Bank.

Application by A. C. Brydonjack for admission to practice as an attorney and counselor at law after recommendation for admission had been denied by the Committee of Bar Examiners of the State Bar. Application granted.

Sebald L. Cheroske, of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

Andrew J. Copp, Jr., of Los Angeles, for respondent.

PRESTON, J. Petitioner herein moves this court for admission to practice as an attorney and counselor at law in the courts of California. On March 26, 1928, he lodged his application for admission with the committee of bar examiners appointed by the board of governors of the State Bar pursuant to section 24 of the Act of March 31, 1927 (St. 1927, c. 34, p. 38). He later, on April 5, 1928, filed with this court a petition, styled one for a writ of review, which we are treating as a written motion for an order of admission. On the hearing, counsel for petitioner orally moved the court as well for such an order.

Petitioner, claiming to have been admitted to practice in the highest courts of the Dominion of Canada, rests his claim upon an asserted compliance with section 279 of the Code of Civil Procedure and rule I of this court, which admittedly contain all the requirements to be met by him at the time of his application. His application, however, was not accompanied by a recommendation of the committee of bar examiners appointed by said board, and the present application is submitted to this court upon a certified copy of the proceedings had and taken before said committee, from which it is learned that, without any specific findings of fact of any kind, this committee on September 25, 1928, voted to deny the petition for admission. This action we have interpreted as a refusal to recommend petitioner to this court for admission.

Petitioner asserts that the committee was without justification for this action, and that the record presented will so show. It may as well be stated here as later that after careful consideration of the record we agree with this contention of the petitioner. Therefore at this point we may pass to a consideration of the legal questions involved. We are met with the sole contention that the court is without power to admit petitioner unless and until the favorable action of said committee is obtained. The contention is based upon the provisions of the above-mentioned State Bar Act itself. Section 24 thereof (St. 1927, p. 41) is directly involved and reads as follows:

"Sec. 24. With the approval of the supreme court, and subject to the provisions of this act, the board shall have power to fix and determine the qualifications for admission to practice law in this state, and to constitute and appoint a committee of not more than seven members with power to examine applicants and recommend to the supreme court for admission to practice law those who fulfill the requirements. With the approval of the supreme court the board shall have power to fix and collect fees to be paid by applicants for admission to practice, which fees shall be paid into the treasury of the state bar; provided, however, that until otherwise fixed and determined, the requirements for admission to practice under this act shall be the same as those now prescribed by the supreme court for admission to practice in this state and shall be enforced as the same now are enforced through the state board of bar examiners."

Petitioner contends that a favorable recommendation is not, under this section, prerequisite, and to give it any other construction would be to allow an intrusion upon the constitutional and inherent powers of the court. At this point the temptation is present to traverse to some extent the field of judicial expression upon the subject of the inherent power of the court, when compared with the all-pervading police power of the Legislature; also to survey the history and growth of the practice of the law and the relation of attorneys to the courts. But we do not feel that the requirements of the proceeding in hand warrant any such effort. To our mind it may be disposed of upon a mere question of statutory construction, aided by a reference to some of the now undebatable rules of law that are applicable.

[1-3] Our courts are set up by the Constitution without any special limitations; hence the courts have and should maintain vigorously all the inherent and implied powers necessary to properly and effectively function as a separate department in the scheme of our state government. In re Garner, 179 Cal. 413, 177 P. 162; Nicholl v. Koster, 157 Cal. 416, 108 P. 302. But this does not mean that the three departments of our government are not in many respects mutually dependent. Of necessity the judicial department as well as the executive must in most matters yield to the power of statutory enactments. McCauley v. Brooks, 16 Cal. 11; Smith v. Judge of the Twelfth District, 17 Cal. 547. The power of the Legislature to regulate criminal and civil proceedings and appeals is undisputed.

[4] Admission to practice is almost without exception conceded everywhere to be the exercise of a judicial function, and this opinion need not be burdened with citations on this point. Admissions to practice have also been held to be the exercise of one of the inherent powers of the court. In re Bruen, 102 Wash. 472, 172 P. 1152; In re Chapelle, 71 Cal. App. 129, 234 P. 906.

[5] But the power of the Legislature to impose reasonable restrictions upon the practice of the law has been recognized in this state almost from the inception of statehood. In Cohen v. Wright, 22 Cal. 293, 319, the court considered an act of the Legislature requiring an applicant for admission to take and file what was known as the oath of allegiance. This enactment was declared valid as against the contention that it usurped judicial functions. It was in that case declared: "The right to practice law is not an absolute right, derived from the law of nature. It is the mere creature of the statute, and when the license is issued and the official oath taken, which authorizes the attorney to exercise the right, it confers but a statutory privilege, subject to the control of the Legislature."

This doctrine was confirmed in Ex parte Yale, 24 Cal. 241, 244, 85 Am. Dec. 62, where it is said: "The manner, terms, and conditions of their admission to practice, and of their continuing in practice, as well as their powers, duties and privileges, are proper subjects of legislative control to the same extent and subject to the same limitations as in the case of any other profession or business that is created or regulated by statute." Again, in Re Mock, 146 Cal. 378, 80 P. 64, the court recognized the power of the Legislature to centralize all admissions to the bar in the District Courts of Appeal. Again recently the power of the Legislature to transfer this function to this court has been declared. In re Weymann (Cal. App.) 268 P. 971. In Re Galusha, 184 Cal. 697, 195 P. 406, it was noted that the profession of the law required a more detailed supervision by the Legislature than the ordinary profession.

In Re Collins, 188 Cal. 701, 704, 206 P. 990, 991, 32 A. L. R. 1062, the power of the Legislature over the practice of the law was under consideration in the light of the due process of law clause of the Federal Constitution. Collins had been convicted of a felony, and pursuant to sections 287-289 of the Code of Civil Procedure had been ordered disbarred by this court without notice to him of any kind. He moved for an order vacating this action for want of notice. The court there said: "It may be admitted that the right or privilege of exercising the vocation of attorney and counselor at law is a valuable right or privilege, but it must also be conceded that it is a right or privilege which the Legislature had the power to bestow, or to empower the judicial department of the state government to bestow, upon such terms as would be consistent with the nature and purpose of the right or privilege to be exercised; and that, this being so, the Legislature had the undoubted right to prescribe the possession of a good moral character in the applicant, for the grant of the right or privilege of entering and of exercising the legal profession, and also, of necessity, to prescribe the continued possession of such good moral character in the individual receiving such grant."

In Re Chapelle, supra, the power of the Legislature to require an applicant for admission to first apply to the board of bar examiners, as provided by section 276 of the Code of Civil Procedure, was recognized and declared.

[6] The sum total of this matter is that the Legislature may put reasonable restrictions upon constitutional functions of the courts provided they do not defeat or materially impair the exercise of those functions. This power has been described as follows: " * * * The mere procedure by which jurisdiction is to be exercised may be prescribed by the Legislature, unless, indeed, such regulations should be found to substantially impair the constitutional powers of the Courts or practically defeat their exercise." Ex parte Harker, 49 Cal. 465, 467. See, also, In re Garner, supra. And this power, to this extent, we must concede to the Legislature in the regulation of admissions to the bar. Happily, however, as above noted, we are not in this proceeding required to set the stakes along the common boundary between these zones of power. For, as above noted, the statute in question goes no further in the matter of regulation than previous statutes, the provisions of which have met the approval of this court.

We are now prepared to approach more closely the provisions of said section 24. At the outset, the conclusion we shall reach has been foreshadowed by our consideration of section 26 of this act (St. 1927, p. 41) relating to the powers of this board respecting discipline and disbarment, when, speaking through Mr. Justice Richards in the case of In re Shattuck (Cal. Sup.) 279 P. 998, 1000, we said: "If the foregoing is to be held, as we clearly think it is, to express the full measure of the legislative intent in the formulation of said section, it follows necessarily that the Board of Bar Governors created under the provisions of the act have not thereby been invested with any powers which can be said to possess the finality and effect of judicial orders, and that in that respect, at least, the Legislature in the passing of the act cannot be held to have in any degree violated the inhibition of section 1 of article 3 of the state Constitution relative to the distribution of governmental powers." See, also, In re Peterson (Cal. Sup.) 280 P. 124.

[7] If, then, the board exercises no judicial powers in the consideration of matters of disbarment or discipline, how much less reason there is for finding such powers to exist respecting admissions to practice. In all fairness to the legislative intent, said section under consideration does not in the least purport to give finality to any act of the board of bar examiners respecting admissions. The qualifications to be met are not fixed except with the consent of this court, which is but an indirect way of saying that in effect the qualifications for admission are fixed by the authority having power to make orders of admission. The making of orders of admission is, as already observed, clearly a judicial act of this court. Again, the function of the committee is but to investigate and to recommend for admission those found by it to be of the prescribed standards. The question as to whether or not a given applicant has met the test, in fact, the statute does not purport to allow the bar examiners to settle. A body possessing only the power to investigate and make recommendations cannot for a moment be conceded the power of final control, which would enable it to do indirectly what it is forbidden to accomplish directly.

Our conclusion, then, is that the Legislature in its wisdom has placed at the disposal of this court a competent and effective body to aid it in the important function of admissions to the bar. The applicants are to first submit themselves to this bureau for investigation, and after this is done the power in this court is plenary to admit those who have in our opinion met the prescribed test, whether the investigators do or do not agree with this conclusion.

The enactment of this statute was the opening of a new field for action, and the refusal of the bar examiners in this case to recommend the petitioner and to fail to make findings on the issues involved must not be taken as a reflection to any extent upon their judgment or efficiency, for they undoubtedly acted in the utmost good faith in the matter. Indeed, we have observed with satisfaction the efficiency displayed in the handling of the large and ever-increasing number of applications for admission, and but for the effective assistance of this body the work could scarcely be accomplished at all. In further fairness to said committee, it should be said that they doubtless are anxious to have the limit of their authority set so that they may know how to govern their action as to future applications. This is manifest from the fact that the insufficiency of the evidence offered by petitioner is not argued nor is any specific contention made that the evidence is in any respect sufficient. The matter is by them rested solely upon the question of the power of this court to admit applicants to the practice of the law in the absence of their recommendation.

It suffices to say that the applicant here comes highly recommended, not only as to ability and legal attainment, but as to moral character as well. He has declared his intention to become a citizen of the United States and has tendered evidence all-sufficient of his admission to practice by the highest court of his native country and of his present good standing at the bar, together with all other qualifications prescribed by the Code and the rules of this court.

[8] Our attention has been called to the fact that said section 24 was amended in 1929 (St. 1929, p. 1965), but the construction of this later enactment is not here involved, as petitioner's application was lodged with the court prior to the effective date of said amendment. In re Cate (Cal. Sup.) 279 P. 131.

[9] The question tendered as to the effectiveness of the writ of review sought here need not be considered, as it is our view, as above indicated, that a motion, oral or written, if entertained, would be sufficient to bring before us for consideration the application of any person who claims to have met all the prescribed tests for admission and who has submitted himself to the board of bar examiners for investigation and recommendation prior to such application. Such a motion constitutes the proceeding a cause pending in this court. In re Stevens, 197 Cal. 408, 241 P. 88.

It is therefore, the order of this court that petitioner be and he is hereby admitted to practice as an attorney and counselor at law, authorized to practice in all the courts of this state, and the clerk will deliver him a certificate of such authority upon his taking the prescribed oath and signing the roll of attorneys.

MUSTO v. GROSJEAN et al. (S. F. 12623.)*

Supreme Court of California. Oct. 30, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Nov. 25, 1929.

1. Bills and notes ⇨166—Note which recited it was secured by mortgage and subject to provisions thereof held nonnegotiable.

Where note recited "this note is secured by mortgage and is subject to provisions of such mortgage," such note held nonnegotiable instrument subject in hands of assignee of mortgagee to any set-off or other defense existing in favor of mortgagor.

2. Mortgages ⇨105—Contract, note, and mortgage held parts of same transaction, where mortgage and note referred to each other and to contract.

Where note recited that note was secured by mortgage and subject to provisions of mortgage, and that note and mortgage in hands of assignee of mortgagee should be subject to set-off which maker might have by virtue of provisions respecting certain improvements by mortgagee contained in certain contract, contract, note, and mortgage held parts of same transaction.

3. Mortgages ⇨105—Whether parties intended that performance of certain work should be condition precedent to recovery on mortgage must be gathered from entire contract.

Where contract provided that mortgagee was to grade and pave certain streets, and that, in case mortgagee failed to do so, mortgagor might complete work and apply cost thereof as payment on indebtedness, whether parties intended performance of work to be condition precedent to recovery on mortgage is to be gathered from entire contract, limited by rule that courts cannot make new or different contract for parties, but must be guided by what parties actually contracted to do.

4. Mortgages ⇨299—Where mortgage provided that, if mortgagee failed to complete work, mortgagor might apply cost thereof on indebtedness, mortgagee held to have lien, although he failed to make improvements.

Where mortgage provided that mortgagee was to grade and pave certain streets, and that, if he failed to do so, mortgagor had right to perform work and apply cost thereof on indebtedness, parties held to have intended that mortgagee should have his lien, even though he failed to make improvements.

5. Mortgages ⇨299—Mortgagor held entitled under contract to credit on indebtedness for cost of uncompleted work, although mortgagor had not completed work.

Where mortgage provided that, in case mortgagee should fail to grade and pave certain streets, mortgagor might perform work and apply cost thereof on indebtedness, and mortgagee failed to complete work, mortgagor held entitled to have credit on principal sum for cost of uncompleted work, although mortgagor had not completed such work.

6. Mortgages ⇨122—Interest on principal note held payable when mortgagor recovered judgment for uncompleted work, although mortgagee had agreed that interest should be postponed until work was completed.

Where mortgagee was to grade and pave certain streets, and, if mortgagee failed to do so, mortgagor had right to perform work and apply cost thereof on indebtedness, and mortgagee thereafter agreed to postpone payment of interest until work was completed, interest on principal note held payable at time judgment was awarded in favor of mortgagor for amount of uncompleted work, although mortgagee never completed the work.

7. Mortgages ⇨122—Mortgagee held not entitled to interest on amount allowed mortgagor for uncompleted work which mortgagee had agreed to perform (Civ. Code, § 3287).

Where mortgagor had right to grade and pave streets and apply cost thereof on indebtedness, if mortgagee failed to do such work in action to foreclose mortgage, where mortgagee had failed to complete such work, interest held not payable on amount allowed mortgagor for uncompleted work, although it was contended that damages were not capable of being ascertained within meaning of Civ. Code, § 3287, as to allow deduction at date of judgment would be to allow mortgagee double interest on amount he should have expended in improvements.

8. Executors and administrators ⇨224—Where no claim for attorneys' fees for suit pending at time of decease was filed against estate of deceased, such fees held barred by statute (Code Civ. Proc. § 1500).

Where defendant died after commencement of action, and plaintiff subsequently filed supplemental complaint against administratrix, but did not file claim against estate of defendant for attorneys' fees, such fees held barred by provision of Code Civ. Proc. § 1500.

Appeals from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Louis H. Ward, Judge.

Foreclosure action by Marie A. Musto against C. E. Grosjean and others. From a judgment of foreclosure and from the order of the trial court denying defendants' motion to vacate judgment and to grant new trial, defendants Grosjean appeal. Plaintiff and certain defendants cross-appeal from the judgment. Judgment affirmed, as modified; appeal from order dismissed.

Superseding opinion in 273 P. 1070.

George Clark Sargent, of San Francisco (Aaron M. Sargent, of San Francisco, of counsel), for appellants Grosjean.

Alexander McCulloch and C. J. Goodell, both of San Francisco, for respondent and appellant Musto.

Robert H. Borland, of San Francisco, for appellants and respondents Newell.

PER CURIAM. Plaintiff brought this action to foreclose a purchase-money mortgage.

On March 8, 1919, E. W. Newell entered into a written contract for the sale to the defendant C. E. Grosjean, of a tract of unimproved land in the Islais creek district in San Francisco for a total purchase price of $135,000, payable $15,000 in cash and the balance by promissory notes (including the note in suit for $60,000), due in five years and two months from the date of the contract, with interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum, payable monthly, secured by first and second mortgages on the tract so contracted to be sold. The contract of sale provided that the vendor, Newell, should prior to May 10, 1919, perform or cause to be performed certain conditions precedent which consisted of procuring the city and county of San Francisco to alter and extend Tulare street and abandon another street, as specified in the contract; and that the vendor would grant to the state of California a strip of land for the purpose of enabling the state to enlarge the wharfage facilities for said tract. The conditions precedent mentioned were performed, the cash payment of $15,000 was made, title delivered, and the notes and mortgages executed in accordance with the terms of the contract. Payment of the note in suit was secured by the second mortgage mentioned in the contract of sale.

By paragraph 6 thereof the contract of sale further provided that the vendor should grade and pave certain streets surrounding said tract; grade and fill said tract with earth and rock to one foot above city base; and obtain a permit for and construct a railway spur track on said property, all at his own cost and expense. The contract contained the following provision: "The work above mentioned shall all be commenced not later than June 15, 1919, and shall be fully completed not later than December 15, 1919. In case the first party fails to fulfill the provisions of this paragraph 6, the second party shall have and he is hereby granted the right to do or to cause said work to be done and to credit and apply the cost thereof as a payment on account of the amount of the indebtedness on the promissory note secured to be paid by the mortgage hereinabove referred to as the second mortgage, or to otherwise recover the cost of said work from the first party. * * *" Paragraph 5 of said contract provided in part: "Reference shall be made in said second mortgage to the promises and agreements of the first party set forth in the sixth paragraph hereof respecting the grading, paving, and railway spur track construction work described in said paragraph, and to the provisions of said paragraph respecting the right of the second party to do or cause said work to be done in case of the failure of the first party to fulfill said promises, and to credit and apply the cost thereof * * * as payments on account of the amount of the indebtedness on the promissory note secured to be paid by said second mortgage, in order that any owner or holder of said note and mortgage may be charged with knowledge of the provisions of said paragraph."

All of the above agreements and provisions of the contract of sale were recited in said second mortgage, and said mortgage contained the agreement of the mortgagee "for and on behalf of himself, his heirs, legal representatives, assigns, and all persons who may have or claim any interest through him or them in this mortgage, or any renewal or extension thereof, that in case the mortgagee fails to fulfill the said promises and agreements, and the mortgagors, or either of them, or the heirs, legal representatives or assigns of the mortgagors, or either of them, do or cause said work to be done, they may credit and apply the cost thereof as a payment on account of the amount of the indebtedness secured to be paid by this mortgage or any renewal or extension thereof, or they may, at their election, otherwise recover the cost of said work from the mortgagee, his heirs, legal representatives or assigns. * * *"

The vendor and mortgagee, E. W. Newell, assigned said note and second mortgage to S. W. Newell, who in turn assigned said note and mortgage to the plaintiff, Marie A. Musto, who brought this action. The defendant Ellen S. M. Grosjean joined in said mortgage, and was joined in this action, as the wife of the defendant C. E. Grosjean.

The action was resisted by the defendants Grosjean on the ground that the covenants and conditions of said mortgage had not been fully kept and performed. The defendants sought to recover by way of cross-action damages, including the cost of completing the work provided for by the contract and the mortgage. The trial court found that the principal sum of $60,000, with interest from January 31, 1921, together with $600 attorney fees, was due to the plaintiff; that the note and mortgage sued on and the contract of March 8, 1919, were parts of the same transaction, and that the conditions and covenants of paragraph 6 of the contract of sale were a part of the consideration moving to C. E. Grosjean; that none of the work agreed to be done was done on the 15th day of December, 1919, but that a portion thereof was performed thereafter; that the only damage suffered by the defendants Grosjean was the reasonable cost of completing said work which the court found to be the sum of $21,573.63, and which was allowed as a deduction from the sum found to be due to plaintiff. Foreclosure was decreed accordingly.

Cross-appeals were taken from the judgment—by the plaintiff and her predecessors in interest, who were made defendants in the action, from that portion of the judgment which awarded damages to the defendants Grosjean, and by the defendants Grosjean from the whole judgment and from the order of the trial court denying defendants' motion to vacate the judgment and grant a new trial.

It is claimed by the appellants Grosjean that the plaintiff's predecessors in interest, not having performed the stipulated conditions precedent, are in default, and cannot therefore prove performance as a condition of recovery in the action. The appellant Musto contends that the obligation to do the work was independent of the obligation to pay the note, and therefore was not a condition precedent to the right to foreclose the mortgage; and, furthermore, that the defendants Grosjean are not entitled to a deduction from the principal sum, for the reason that the contract provides that such deduction may be made only in the event that Grosjean himself perform the work or cause it to be done, neither of which events ever transpired.

[1, 2] The note sued on in the present action contains the following: "This note is secured by a mortgage of even date herewith, and is subject to the provisions of said mortgage, respecting the credits or allowances to be made on this note in the cases provided for in said mortgage, as fully as if said provisions were set forth in this note." It is not questioned, therefore, that the note is not a negotiable instrument, but rather is subject in the hands of an assignee to any set-off or other defense existing in favor of the defendants Grosjean. See Meyer v. Weber, 133 Cal. 681, 685, 65 P. 1110; Briggs v. Crawford, 162 Cal. 124, 129, 121 P. 381; National Hardware v. Sherwood, 165 Cal. 1, 7, 130 P. 881; Taylor v. Jones, 165 Cal. 108, 131 P. 114. Irrespective of any fundamental rule, it is plain that the parties specifically provided that the note and mortgage in the hands of an assignee thereof should be subject to any set-off or deduction which the maker might properly claim by virtue of the provisions respecting the making of the improvements by the mortgagee contained in the contract and in the mortgage. The trial court therefore correctly concluded that the contract and the note and mortgage sued on were parts of the same transaction.

It must be determined then, first, whether nonperformance of the conditions and promises contained in paragraph 6 of the contract which are recited in the mortgage precludes the right to recover on the note and mortgage; and, if the answer is in the negative, second, whether the defendants Grosjean may in this action claim a deduction for the cost of the work not performed by the plaintiff's assignor.

[3] Did the parties to the contract and the mortgage intend that performance of the work specified should be a condition precedent to a recovery on the note and mortgage? The parties to this controversy and amici curiæ have cited numerous authorities, and have referred us to much legal lore on the subject of conditions precedent and covenants dependent and independent. While ordinarily the order of time in which covenants are to be performed prevails and is controlling as to the mutual rights and obligations of the parties (see 13 C. J. p. 568), and failure to fulfill a condition or promise made or given as part of the consideration for the mortgage may preclude the right of the mortgagee to a recovery (see 41 C. J. p. 876), nevertheless the courts in modern times, rather than attempting to arrive at finely drawn distinctions based on the particular forms of expression used by the parties, have applied the test of intent as gathered from the common sense of the entire contract, limited necessarily by the rule that courts cannot make a new or different contract for the parties, but must be guided by what the parties actually contracted to do. See Roach v. Dickinson, 9 Grat. (50 Va.) 154, 156; Allemon v. Augusta Nat. Bank, 103 Va. 243, 48 S. E. 897; McCormick v. Badham, 191 Ala. 339, 343, 67 So. 609; Griggs v. Moors, 168 Mass. 354, 47 N. E. 128, 129; Mill Dam Foundry v. Hovey, 21 Pick. (38 Mass.) 417, pp. 438, 439; Pacific Mill Co. v. Inman, Poulsen & Co., 46 Or. 352, 80 P. 424, 427; Loud v. Pomona Land, etc. Co., 153 U. S. 564, 576, 14 S. Ct. 928, 38 L. Ed. 822; Union Pac. Ry. Co. v. Travelers' Ins. Co. (C. C. A.) 83 F. 676. It has been well stated in Roach v. Dickinson, supra (page 156 of 9 Grat.): "There is perhaps no branch of the law in which is to be found a larger number of decisions or a greater apparent conflict of authorities than that in which the effort has been made to define the dependence and independence of covenants, and to designate the class to which any given case in dispute is to be referred. The great effort, however, in the more recent decisions, has been to discard, as far as possible, all rules of construction founded on nice and artificial reasoning, and to make the meaning and intention of the parties, collected from all the parts of the instrument rather than from a few technical expressions, the guide in determining the character and force of their respective undertakings."

[4, 5] In the present case the parties contracted that the mortgagee should have his lien for whatever balance of the principal sum there might be after deducting the cost to the mortgagors of making the improvements to the tract should the mortgagee fail to perform and the mortgagors themselves cause and pay for the doing of the work. Undoubtedly the parties estimated that the cost of the work at the most would not exceed the principal sum of the second mortgage, and it was therefore only that mortgage in which were incorporated the provisions of paragraph 6 of the contract of sale. Plainly, the improvements to be made by the mortgagee, or the deduction from the principal sum of the cost thereof to the mortgagors, were a part of the consideration for the note and mortgage. By providing for such an alternative, however, it would seem that the parties contemplated that the mortgagee should have his lien, even though the mortgagor defaulted, and that in that event there should be credited on the principal sum the cost to the mortgagors of completing the work. Of course, there is no promise of the mortgagors to make the improvements in the event the mortgagee fails to perform. They have that privilege, which they may exercise or not. The fact that they do not do so, however, does not permit the mortgagee to have his recovery without complying with the clear intention that the mortgagors should receive a credit for the cost of completing the work should the mortgagee default. In other words, the breach by the mortgagee does not preclude the right of the mortgagors to receive from the mortgagee the promised consideration or its equivalent before the mortgagee may pursue his recovery for the default of the mortgagors. The parties have, by their contract, themselves suggested an equivalent, or, in other words, a measure of damages for the partial failure of consideration, viz., the cost of completing the stipulated improvements. That provision in their contract makes it apparent that the parties did not intend performance by the mortgagee to be a condition precedent to any recovery by him, but that the intent was that the mortgagors could adequately be compensated for the mortgagee's breach by a credit for the cost of completing the work. We conclude, therefore, that the parties intended that the mortgagee should have his lien, even though he failed to perform the promise to make the improvements, but that at all events the mortgagors were to have credit on the principal sum for the cost of the uncompleted work. The trial court's judgment and decree in accordance with the foregoing was therefore proper.

[6] A further question is presented as to whether the trial court properly concluded that interest at 6 per cent. on the principal sum of the note and mortgage from January 31, 1921, was due to the plaintiff. The last payment of interest under the mortgage was made by the defendants Grosjean on January 31, 1921. On March 31, 1921, the mortgagee, who was then in default as to the improvements to be made, wrote a letter to C. E. Grosjean wherein he agreed "that the payment of the interest now unpaid and the interest accruing on your promissory note * * * for * * * $60,000, pending the completion of the work, shall be postponed and not be payable by you until this work is completed by me; that the nonpayment of said interest by you pending the completion of the work shall not constitute a default on your part in respect to the interest provided in said note to be paid. * * * Nothing herein can be construed to deprive you of your right under the agreement dated March 8, 1919, to do or cause said work to be done at any time, and to exercise all other rights in regard thereto given to you in said agreement." It is contended by the appellants Grosjean that, the improvements not having been made or completed by the mortgagee, interest was not payable at all. It must be noted from the writing last hereinabove quoted that payment of the interest was not excused, but was merely postponed until the improvements should be completed. The statement by Newell that Grosjean still had the right to complete the work himself, etc., indicates clearly that it was within the contemplation of the parties only that payment of interest should be postponed until either the work was completed by the mortgagee or the equivalent of that portion of the consideration was received by the mortgagors. The postponed interest therefore became payable at the time judgment was awarded in favor of the mortgagors.

[7] We are of the opinion, however, that the trial court erred in awarding interest to the plaintiff on the entire principal sum of the mortgage without first deducting the sum which it awarded to the defendants Grosjean. It is claimed that to make the deduction before computing the interest is in effect to award interest to the defendants Grosjean on damages which were unliquidated and not capable of being made certain by calculation within the meaning of section 3287 of the Civil Code. Whether or not the sum awarded as a deduction and which represents the cost to the mortgagors of completing the stipulated improvements be liquidated or unliquidated damages, we are of the opinion that to make the deduction at the date of the judgment is to allow the mortgagee double interest on the sum which he should have expended for the mortgagors' benefit at a much earlier date, while to make the deduction from the principal sum before computing the interest has the effect only of awarding to the defendants what is their due under the terms of the contract. The mortgagors were entitled to receive that sum from the mortgagee at the earlier date either in the form of improvements to the land or as a credit on the principal sum of the note and mortgage, as a part of the consideration therefor. In such a situation it is not necessary to determine whether the "damages" are liquidated or unliquidated. It is inconceivable that the mortgagee should be permitted to default at a profit to himself. The situation is the same as though a mortgagee had failed to advance a part of the principal sum contracted for by the terms of the mortgage and then claimed interest on the entire principal sum. In such a case he would not be entitled to recover interest on the portion of the consideration which he retained in his own hands. We think, however, that the acceptance by Grosjean of the agreement to postpone payment of interest constituted a waiver on the part of the mortgagors of the default of the mortgage to the date thereof, and that interest should be computed on the basis of the full sum of the principal to March 31, 1921, and thereafter on the basis of the principal sum of the note and mortgage, less the amount awarded to the defendants Grosjean as the cost of making the improvements.

[8] It is also claimed that the plaintiff was not entitled to judgment for attorneys' fees. The defendant C. E. Grosjean died after the commencement of the action, and subsequently the plaintiff filed a supplemental complaint alleging that fact and the appointment of the defendant Ellen S. M. Grosjean, as administratrix with the will annexed of the estate of C. E. Grosjean, and waiving recourse against any property of the estate, with the exception of the property in suit. The plaintiff did not, however, file a claim against the estate of C. E. Grosjean for attorneys' fees in this action. The claim for attorneys' fees is therefore barred by the provisions of section 1500 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

No other points require discussion.

The judgment is modified by omitting therefrom the allowance of $600 counsel fees and by making the deduction therefrom of said sum of $21,753.63 as of March 31, 1921, instead of as of the date of the judgment. As so modified the judgment is affirmed.

The appeal of the defendants Grosjean from the order denying their motion to vacate the judgment and for a new trial is dismissed, the same being an appeal from a nonappealable order.

HUTCHINS v. SECURITY TRUST & SAVINGS BANK. (L. A. 9139.)

Supreme Court of California. Oct. 31, 1929.

1. Executors and administrators §438(10)—In suit by administrator of one settler involving validity of trust instrument, trustee cannot represent all parties concerned.

In suit by administrator of one settler involving validity of trust instrument, trustee could not represent all parties concerned, since statute giving trustee right to sue in execution of powers conferred without joining beneficiaries applies only as against strangers to instrument.

2. Executors and administrators §438(10)—In suit by administrator of one settler involving validity of trust instrument, representative of the other deceased settler and cestui que trustent should have been made parties.

In suit by administrator of one settler against trustee involving validity of trust instrument, personal representative of the other deceased settler and cestui que trustent should have been made parties, and no lack of interpleading, omission, or negligence of trustee would excuse omission.

3. Perpetuities §9(6)—Statute providing express trust may be created to lease property to satisfy charge thereon creates exception to rule prohibiting accumulation of income (Civ. Code, §§ 723, 724, 857, subd. 2).

Under Civ. Code, § 857, subd. 2, to effect that express trust may be created to lease real property for purpose of satisfying any charge thereon, creates exception to rule prohibiting accumulation of incomes declared by sections 723 and 724.

4. Perpetuities §9(6)—Trust provision directing application of trust income to pay mortgages on trust property before paying income to beneficiaries held not void as unlawful accumulation (Civ. Code, §§ 723, 724, 857, subd. 2).

Where trust instrument executed by husband and wife authorized trustee to lease property and provided for payments of part of net income to wife, and provided that balance of net income at end of each quarter should be applied by trustee in discharge of incumbrances affecting trust estate and after discharge of incumbrances and until demise of wife each quarterly balance of net income and after discharge of incumbrances and demise of wife then whole quarterly income should be distributed to beneficiaries named, direction to pay income on mortgage indebtedness was not void under Civ. Code, §§ 723, 724, as directing unlawful accumulation, in view of section 857, subd. 2, providing that express trust may be created to lease real property for purpose of satisfying any charge thereon.

5. Husband and wife §73—Wife accepting fruits of trust created by herself and husband, but claiming it was induced by fraud, ratified terms.

Where husband and wife executed trust instrument relating to their real property, but wife claimed her signature was induced by fraud and undue influence of her husband, wife, by accepting fruits of trust for several years after husband's death, ratified its terms.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles S. Crail, Judge.

Action to quiet title by Burtis L. Hutchins, as administrator with the will annexed of the estate of Caroline L. Hutchins, against the Security Trust & Savings Bank. From the judgment, both parties appeal. Reversed. Superseding opinion, 270 P. 219.

W. W. Middlecoff and Milton K. Young, both of Los Angeles, for plaintiff.

Lucius K. Chase, of Los Angeles (Alan Nichols and Lucius F. Chase, both of Los Angeles, of counsel), for defendant.

PRESTON, J. This cause is a by-product of a controversy said to have existed between a man and his wife, who lived together as such for a period of 64 years. The scene opened with an ordinary simple action to quiet title to an undivided half interest in certain Los Angeles property known as the Spokane Hotel. The defendant replied with a general denial of all claims made, and rested its possession and right to possession of the property in suit upon a conveyance thereof to it in trust executed by the plaintiff's testate, Caroline L. Hutchins and her husband, John S. Hutchins, on December 24, 1913. The answer was verified, and plaintiff failed to deny the genuineness and due execution of this instrument.

The action was begun on December 11, 1923. On these pleadings the cause went to trial on November 9, 1925, and it soon developed that the sole issue was the claim of the right to rescind said instrument and annul it in so far as it applied to the decedent, Caroline L. Hutchins upon the ground that her signature thereto was induced by the fraud and undue influence of her husband the cograntor therein. Plaintiff demanded and received, over the vigorous objections of defendant, the right of a jury trial. Some nineteen alleged material issues of fact were submitted to said jury and answered by it favorably to plaintiff. A general verdict was also rendered for plaintiff. At this juncture plaintiff advanced the position that said conveyance was void in toto on its face, and asked for a decree awarding him possession of the whole property. The court, however, adopted the verdicts of the jury, both general and special, and embodied them as part of its judgment, but it did not give plaintiff the right of possession of the whole property. From the judgment in this respect, plaintiff has himself appealed. Defendant bank, however, has appealed from the whole of said judgment.

As we have found defendant's appeal to be meritorious and to require a reversal of the judgment in toto, plaintiff's appeal necessarily aborts. All the legal phrases of the controversy have their root in the conveyance above mentioned, and we here epitomize the material provisions thereof, as follows:

The first parties, said John S. and Caroline L. Hutchins, reserve to themselves during their joint lives the possession, use, occupation, rents, issues, and profits of the premises but provided that "said premises are hereby conveyed in trust nevertheless, subject to the reservation aforesaid for the following uses, purposes and trusts." Then follows subdivision 1, to the effect that, on the termination of the life estate and until the end of the term of the trust, the second party, defendant Security Trust & Savings Bank, shall have full possession, control, custody, and management of the property conveyed and shall lease and re-lease it for such times, to such persons and upon such terms and conditions as to it may seem best; shall collect all rents, issues, profits, and income accruing from said property, and, after the payment of all costs, charges, assessments, taxes, and every other cost, charge, or expense including the expense of care, management, repair and protection of said property, shall distribute the net income therefrom as follows:

"Second: The entire net income derived or received from said trust property shall be applied and disposed of as follows: (a) There shall be paid to said Caroline L. Hutchins, if still living, quarterly on the first days of January, April, July and October of each year to and until the end or termination of this trust, or until her death, whichever event shall happen first, the sum of nine hundred dollars (\$900), or such lesser sum as she may by writing delivered to the said trustee elect to accept. (b) The balance of net income on hand at the end of each such quarter shall be by said trustee applied and paid as rapidly as allowable in discharging and satisfying, in whole or in part, any and all mortgages or like incumbrances then affecting said trust estate. (c) After the discharge of all such incumbrances and until the demise of said Caroline L. Hutchins, each such quarterly balance of net income, and after the discharge of such incumbrances and the demise of said Caroline L. Hutchins then the whole quarterly amount of such income, shall be by said trustee distributed and paid, on said quarterly dates, to our sons Day S. Hutchins, Ray Hutchins and Burtis L. Hutchins and our great-grandson Reason D. Hardesty, in the following parts or shares: Day S. Hutchins, five-twentieths ($\frac{5}{20}$); Ray Hutchins, eight-twentieths ($\frac{8}{20}$); Burtis L. Hutchins, six-twentieths ($\frac{6}{20}$); Reason D. Hardesty, one-twentieth ($\frac{1}{20}$)." Further contingencies were provided in the event of the death of the above-named beneficiaries, which said conditions are not material here.

[1] At the threshold, we observe that the settlers of this trust were John S. Hutchins and Caroline L. Hutchins, his wife; that the immediate beneficiaries upon the death of the settlers were their three children and a great grandson, and upon certain contingencies other lineal descendants were to participate. Neither the personal representative of the deceased settler, John S. Hutchins, nor any of the cestui que trustent were made parties to this action. The validity of the trust is assailed, and the trustee is made the sole reputed representative of all the parties concerned. In other words, while alleging there is no trust, the trustee is admitted to be such to the extent of having power to represent the beneficiaries as well as the heirs at law or legatees of one of the settlers. Plaintiff several times called the attention of the court to this absence of parties. It is manifest that, in a controversy by one settler with the other settler and/or beneficiaries, the trustee is in no sense the representative of either faction. A trustee is given by statute the right to sue in execution of the powers conferred without joining beneficiaries as plaintiffs, but this applies only as against strangers to the instrument, and has no application to suits by or against makers and beneficiaries thereunder involving the validity of the trust instrument.

[2] This principle was carefully explained and section 369 of the Code of Civil Procedure interpreted in the case of Mitau v. Roddan, 149 Cal. 1, 84 P. 145, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 275. In fact, the identical point here involved was before us in the recent case of Lake v. Dowd (Cal. Sup.) 270 P. 212¹, and the cause was reversed for failure of the court to order of its own motion, certain of the settlers, who were also beneficiaries, made parties to the action. This doctrine was again confirmed in Title Guar. & Tr. Co. v. Henry et al. (Cal. Sup.) 280 P. 959. No lack of interpleading, omission, or negligence of the trustee will excuse this omission. O'Connor v. Irvine, 74 Cal. 444, 16 P. 236; Lake v. Dowd, supra. The theory of this principle doubtless is that no decree should be entered affecting the rights of a party without giving him an opportunity to be heard, and the negligence or failure of another will not justify his absence from the case.

But it is contended that this trust is structurally defective, in that it contains certain provisions which are void, which void provisions are so interwoven with the other provisions that the whole instrument must fail as a matter of law, and for that reason no legal harm can result to the absent parties; hence a court of equity may be excused for failure to order in otherwise material parties. Much thought and research has been given by counsel to the legal structure of this trust conveyance and amici curiæ have aided us in our labors.

Plaintiff points to the provisions respecting the amortization of incumbrances on property from a portion of the net income therefrom received from time to time by the trustee and then points confidently to the provisions of sections 723 and 724 of the Civil Code, which are to the effect, that all directions for the accumulation of the income of property, except such as are allowed by that title, are void. The trusts allowed generally by the title are found in section 724, which provides that accumulations of income of property, for the benefit of one or more persons, may be directed by any will or transfer in writing sufficient to pass the property out of which the fund is to arise, provided that, if such accumulations are directed to commence on the creation of the interest out of which the income is to arise, they must be made for the benefit of one or more minors then in being, and terminate at the expiration of their minority; or, if such accumulations are directed to commence at any time subsequent to the creation of the interest out of which the income is to arise, they must commence within the time permitted by the title for the vesting of future interests, and during the minority of the beneficiaries, and terminate at the expiration of such minority. The beneficiaries so far as named in this instrument are adults, except perhaps the great grandson.

Defendant replies by pointing to subdivision 2 of section 857 of said Code, under the title "Uses and Trusts," which section at all times here involved in this connection read: "Express trusts may be created for any of the following purposes: * * * 2. To mortgage or lease real property for the benefit of annuitants, or devisees or legatees, or other beneficiaries, or for the purpose of satisfying any charge thereon."

Plaintiff rejoins by citing the fact that these three sections were taken almost in toto from sections 37, 38, and 55, of the Revised Statutes of the state of New York (Rev. St. [1st Ed.] pp. 726, 728), and points to the case of Hascall v. King, 162 N. Y. 134, 56 N. E. 515, 76 Am. St. Rep. 302, decided in the year 1900, where these sections are considered and interpreted so as to compel the conclusion that the instrument before us is void. Defendant, practically admitting the action of the New York court, rallies and replies that, when our Code sections on the subject were adopted, the case of Parks v. Parks, 9 Paige, 111, later affirmed by the Court of Errors, gave the authoritative and contrary interpretation of these sections of the New York statutes, and that, under the ruling laid down in Estate of Potter, 188 Cal. 68, 204 P. 826, to the effect that, where a statute is borrowed from another state, it should be given the construction placed upon it by the highest court of that state, we must presume that our Legislature intended to adopt the then and not the later interpretation of them. Lastly, defendant insists that our own court in Re Dolan, 79 Cal. 65, 21 P. 545, settled the question in accord with its contention.

[3] If the language of subdivision 2 of said section 857, Civil Code, to the effect that an express trust "may be created * * * to * * * lease real property * * * of the purpose of satisfying any charge thereon," is given its ordinary meaning, it follows that an exception is thereby created to the rule prohibiting the accumulation of incomes declared by said sections 723 and 724. It will be noted that this proviso restricts the trust to one to satisfy liens on the property itself, and does not purport to grant power to create a trust to mortgage or lease one piece of property to provide income for the purpose of satisfying liens upon another specific property as was the case in part at least in Hascall v. King, supra. In other words, the apparent intent of section 857, subd. 2, was to create an exception in favor of a conveyance in trust when made for the sole purpose of satisfying liens upon property, the subject thereof.

That this was the legislative intent appears persuasively from a reference to the English enactment in 1800 of the Statute of 39 and 40, George III, c. 98, commonly called the Thelusson Act, wherein provisions may be found similar to our sections 723, 724, 725, and 857, Civil Code, but wherein it is noted that a trust to convey, mortgage, or lease property may be made for the accumulation of income to discharge the "debts of the grantor, settler, testator or other person or persons." This proviso was omitted from sections 37, 38, and 55 of the Revised Statutes of New York and a provision substantially the same as the one here under consideration was substituted therefor; California having followed New York in this respect. This is some evidence at least of the legislative intent to so narrow the English provision as to confine it to a trust for the satisfaction of liens alone upon the property itself. We realize that in the later case of Hascall v. King, supra, an attempt was made to give the word "lease" in this connection a different significance than that word ordinarily has. But the reasoning employed is difficult to follow and to our minds is unsatisfactory. It is explained there by a quotation from Cowen v. Rinaldo, 82 Hun, 479-485, 31 N. Y. S. 554, 557, as follows: "The evident intention of the statute was the creation of a trust to sell land and receive the proceeds thereof for the benefit of creditors, or for the benefit of legatees, or for the purpose of satisfying any charge thereon; to mortgage land and receive the proceeds thereof for the benefit of legatees, or for the purpose of satisfying any charge thereon; and to lease lands for a given sum, which the trustee is to receive for the benefit of legatees, or for the purpose of satisfying any charge on said land, the fee of the land descending."

How leasing the property for a given term at a fixed definite lump amount and using the fund to discharge a lien on the property is any less a violation than a lease upon periodical payments and the application of the payments as made to a pro tanto discharge of the lien is hard to discern, as the transactions are in legal effect the same. We are more content with the reasoning of Parks v. Parks, supra, on this subject and, as counsel points out, this was the latest expression of the New York court on the subject at the time of the adoption of our Code. In that cause it is said: "The revised statutes also have authorized the creation of an express trust to lease lands for the purpose of satisfying a charge thereon. The authority of the trustee, therefore, to pay the interest of the incumbrances out of the rents and profits of these lots in the first place, and to apply so much of those rents and profits as might be spared from the support of the cestuis que trust, to reduce the principal of the incumbrance of their respective lots, was therefore valid; * * *"

This interpretation was followed in Re Dolan, supra, where, at page 67 of 79 Cal., 21 P. 545, it is said: "As we read the will, it gave the property to Michael Dolan in trust to collect and receive the rents and profits thereof, and to use them,—1. To pay the mortgage on the property; 2. To pay the legacies to Celia Jordan and Margaret Platt; 3. To pay the legacy to Sister Frances McEnnis; and 4. To pay all the residue thereof to James Dolan during his natural life. This was an express trust, and was authorized by law."

[4] We are satisfied that the court in the Dolan Case had the question here considered squarely before it. It is true that it did not receive extended discussion, but nevertheless it was there involved. Said case was decided in 1889 and for a period of forty years that doctrine has been a fixed rule of property in this state. We are therefore satisfied with the pronouncement of that case, and from it and the other considerations we conclude that the trust before us was not void upon the ground urged and here considered.

Moreover, even the case of Hascall v. King, 162 N. Y. 134, 56 N. E. 515, 521, 76 Am. St. Rep. 315, supra, recognizes that in an action of this character the entire trust should not be held void because of this provision, were its invalidity conceded, for, in referring to the facts of that case, the following language is there used: "That rule is applicable to this situation, and should govern it. The primary object of this testator, by the creation of this trust, was to provide an income for his wife, the accumulation for the purpose of paying the mortgages being secondary. Indeed, nothing was to be applied in payment of the mortgages until after the sum named by the testator should in each year be paid in full to his wife, the disposition of the balance being a mere ulterior contingent direction, entirely distinct from the primary trust. That being so, the former is separable from the primary trust, and will not be allowed to invalidate it; and, after the purposes of the primary trust have been satisfied, the surplus income must be distributed among those entitled to the next eventual estate." The above doctrine has uniformly met with approval in this state. Estate of Yates, 170 Cal. 254, 149 P. 555; Estate of Duffill, 180 Cal. 748, 183 P. 337, and perhaps other cases.

The primary purpose of the trust before us is to make a testamentary disposition of the property while reserving to the settlers a life enjoyment of the net income. If the provision respecting accumulation of income were to be held void, the provisions of section 733 of the Civil Code would attach and the income would go to the "persons pre-sumptively entitled to the next eventual interest." It should be noted, although without effect here, that the Legislature of 1929 (St. 1929, p. 276) has amended section 724 of the Civil Code to extend rather than curtail the doctrine of accumulation of income.

We also deem it our duty to express our conclusion upon the challenge of defendant to the sufficiency of the evidence as it now stands to support the general and special verdicts and the decree thereon rescinding said instrument as to Caroline L. Hutchins at the instance of her personal representative. The showing of undue influence and coercion is exceptionally weak, and, even if its sufficiency as an original proposition be assumed, the evidence of ratification of the instrument after the effect of the undue influence and coercion had abated by the death of her husband is overwhelming and uncontradicted.

These spouses were of equal age, both being born in 1833. They were at all times herein advanced in years, feeble in step, but vigorous in mind. The property in question was acquired in 1905 and was community property. The parties at about the time in question were possessed of several other pieces of property. They had three adult sons surviving and a great grandson and perhaps other lineal descendants. They made a series of five trusts similar in character to the one above described, disposing of all their property upon the plan of retaining life estates in themselves, with remainders over to others, principally their children. During a period of about four years next prior to the execution of the instrument in question, this so-called testamentary trust method of disposition of their property was the subject of repeated discussion between them. The husband espoused the plan of executing the said trust; the wife opposed it. The husband admittedly had no object in deceiving his wife in any way. Attorneys were consulted. The opposition of the wife persisted and was openly and freely expressed. When the instrument in question was drafted, she admittedly understood its contents, but was opposed to its execution. She nevertheless did execute it upon the day it bears date. But her state of mind was disclosed to the attorney, and the document was not delivered to the trustee until March 19, 1914, nor until she had upon that date joined with her husband in executing a separate instrument requesting the attorney, Mr. E. E. Millikin, to deliver said trust document to the defendant "so that the same shall immediately upon said delivery being made become fully operative according to its terms." Mr. Millikin consulted with her privately, and we see no reason why he may not have appropriately advised both her husband and herself.

She had, however, theretofore, and on February 24, 1914, addressed a letter to the trustee and secretly delivered it to one of her sons, in which she recited that she had signed said trust deed "under force and duress and severe threats," and which ended with the following words: "I shall, if I outlive John S. Hutchins, fight this deed to my utmost." In her oral testimony she freely admitted concealing her true state of mind from her husband, and described in detail the special precautions she took to keep him in ignorance of the fact that she had not in reality changed her views on the subject.

The only threat employed by the husband was that he would separate the community property, giving her her one-half and disposing separately of his one-half. How this can be called a threat, we do not see, as it would not have been an act against her interest. Indeed, the execution of the deed in question was not in derogation of any present interest in the property, as she had none, but, on the contrary, by the terms of the instrument, she acquired an interest in the property. The most that could be said of the situation is that she was induced to make a testamentary disposition of one-half of the community property in a way and manner she might not have later approved of. Whether this creates a cause of action in her personal representative, we need not pause to learn. She, according to her own testimony, after 1914 continued to act so as to seem at least to ratify this conveyance.

For example, on January 14, 1916, she executed a writing addressed "To whom it may concern," reciting in part the following: "I have freely, voluntarily and willingly joined with my said husband in the execution of various trust indentures, wherein we conveyed various parcels of our property in trust for the use and benefit of our children, retaining to ourselves a life estate in the property so conveyed, for the purpose of avoiding the delay, expense and annoyance of probating upon our estate." Then, after further reciting that she fully understood the contents and legal effect of all such trust indentures and deeds, the instrument ended with these words: "I join therein freely, voluntarily, and for the purpose of accomplishing the ends set forth in each trust deed which I have signed. I thoroughly approve of the course my husband and I have taken, and requested that it be accomplished in the manner in which it was done."

Upon being questioned about this writing, she said she was sick and signed it, although she knew it contained a "big lie." Before her husband's death in 1919, she signed another writing with him addressed to the trustee, directing that during the remainder of her husband's life it pay the whole of the income of said trust to her. She had also theretofore joined in establishing a joint account with him at defendant bank. She knew fully the contents of the conveyance. She admitted having a copy of it and having read and studied it often. While it undoubtedly is a fact that the true state of her mind is a debatable proposition, at the same time the evidence of coercion or undue influence is unsatisfactory. Besides she allowed her husband to die in the belief that he had made a testamentary disposition of their property satisfactory in every way to her. Had he known her state of mind was in fact as she later testified it to have been, he doubtless would have altered his last will accordingly. She left a will preferring two of her sons and excluding the other beneficiaries under the trust. We thus have some of the beneficiaries put to a disadvantage by reason of a state of mind on her part concealed by her from her husband. There is no evidence in the record of a substantial character that shows that she was in any wise afraid at any time to speak her mind upon this subject, and she freely did so. We see nothing that really reflects upon the honesty of purpose or upon the soundness of the judgment of John S. Hutchins.

[5] But we need not dwell further upon this branch of the case nor base our conclusion on it, for said Caroline L. Hutchins lived until June 27, 1923, and, during the excess of her span of life over that of her husband, a period of four years, she received and accepted the fruits of this trust, accepting thereunder the sum of $10,895.68, and she must be held to have ratified its terms. She signed vouchers for the payments thereunder and gave directions to the trustee with respect to the monthly sums desired by her from said funds. For example, on August 1, 1919, which was some three months after the death of her husband, she addressed a letter to the trustee referring to the trust conveyance and to the fact that it provided for a quarterly payment to her of $900, or such lesser sum as she might in writing elect to accept, and advised the trustee that she elected to accept $150 per month to be paid monthly and to continue until she notified it in writing of her election to accept some other sum or to accept the full amount provided for under the terms of the trust. On June 8, 1921, she wrote a similar letter requesting $250 per month, and by a letter dated November 25, 1922, she directed the payment to her of $300 per month. During all this period of time she was under no possible duress or compulsion. Indeed, on April 5, 1923, she for the first time gave notice of rescission and filed a suit in the superior court of Los Angeles county against said trustee, seeking to quiet title to the whole of the property, the subject of this trust, and to rescind said agreement. A nonsuit was granted in this case on November 26, 1923. No reason appears why the suit might not at least have been started soon after the death of John S. Hutchins, which occurred on May 7, 1919. These acts, with full knowledge of the terms and conditions of the trust, are unmistakable evidences of ratification and the record presents no showing whatsoever to counteract their force. Bancroft v. Woodward, 183 Cal. 99, 190 P. 445; Matteson v. Wagoner, 147 Cal. 739, 82 P. 436; Montgomery v. Laury, 143 Cal. 83, 76 P. 964; Harrington v. Paterson, 124 Cal. 542, 57 P. 476; Ruhl v. Mott, 120 Cal. 668, 53 P. 304.

For these several reasons the appeal of defendant trustee must be sustained, and the judgment reversed, and it is so ordered.

GULICK v. JUSTICE COURT OF INDIO TP.,
RIVERSIDE COUNTY et al.★
(Civ. 13.)

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California. Oct. 31, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Nov. 27, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Dec. 30, 1929.

1. Justices of the peace ☞72—Check on which payment was stopped held not "special contract," requiring action to be brought in township where check was payable (Code Civ. Proc. § 832, subd. 7).

Where defendant incurred indebtedness in one township, and gave check payable in another, and then stopped payment on check, such check was not "special contract," which of itself would require action to be brought at place where it was payable within Code Civ. Proc. § 832, subd. 7, since "special contract" is one in which there is definite promise to pay at certain place named therein, such as is found in some forms of promissory notes.

2. Justices of the peace ☞84(1)—Justice court gained jurisdiction over person of defendant whose demurrer presented law question vital to defense besides question of jurisdiction of person (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 848, 1014).

Where defendant's demurrer in justice court did not confine itself to question of jurisdiction of his person, but went further and presented question of law vital to his defense, he must be held to have appeared generally, and court gained jurisdiction over his person under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 848, 1014.

Appeal from Superior Court, Riverside County; G. R. Freeman, Judge.

Application for writ of prohibition by D. C. Gulick against the Justice Court of the Township of Indio, Riverside County, and Hon. Thomas E. Allen, Justice of the Peace of such Township, to prevent proceedings in a certain action. From judgment denying the application, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Howell W. Richardson and Thomas E. Parke, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

MARKS, J. On April 8, 1927, one Thomas J. Casey filed an action in the respondent court praying judgment against D. C. Gulick, defendant there, and appellant here, in the sum of $150.

It appears that appellant incurred an indebtedness in the township of Indio in Riverside county to Casey, and on March 30, 1927, in the same township and county, gave him his check in the sum of $150, made payable to Thos. J. Casey, dated at Los Angeles, Cal., and drawn on the Pacific National Bank, Los Angeles, Cal. The check was sent through the usual channels for collection, and, when it reached the Pacific National Bank, payment had been stopped by appellant. While the return on the summons is not in the record, it appears elsewhere that the summons was served on appellant in Los Angeles. Defendant appeared by demurrer in words and figures as follows: "In the Justice's Court of Indio Township, County of Riverside, State of California. Thos. J. Casey, plaintiff, vs. D. C. Gulick, defendant. No. Demurrer. Now comes the defendant and demurs to the complaint in this action and for cause of demurrer alleges: That the Court has no jurisdiction of the person of the defendant because the defendant is a non-resident of the County of Riverside, and resides in the City of Los Angeles, County of Los Angeles, and there is a special contract in writing, to-wit, the alleged check sued on herein, drawn on the Pacific National Bank of Los Angeles, and payable there, and was not payable or to be performed in said Township of Indio. Dated this 21st day of April 1927. Howell W. Richardson. Thomas E. Parke." The demurrer came on regularly to be heard, and was overruled, and appellant given ten days in which to file his answer.

Appellant filed his petition in the superior court of the county of Riverside, seeking a writ of prohibition against respondent, alleging his residence in Los Angeles and the service of summons upon him there. Attached to the petition were copies of the complaint, summons, without the return, and the demurrer. An alternative writ of prohibition was issued, and thereafter, after a hearing, the writ of prohibition was denied by the trial court. The respondent has made no appearance in this court, and the action is submitted on the transcript on appeal and the brief of appellant.

Section 832 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides in part as follows:

"Actions, Where Must Be Commenced. Actions in justices' courts must be commenced, and, subject to the right to change the place of trial, as in this chapter provided, must be tried:

"5. When the defendant is a non-resident of the county—in any township or city wherein he may be found;

"7. When a person has contracted to perform an obligation at a particular place, and resides in another county, township, or city—in the township or city in which such obligation is to be performed, or in which he resides; and the township or city in which the obligation is incurred is deemed to be the township or city in which it is to be performed, unless there is a special contract in writing to the contrary;

"8. When the parties voluntarily appear and plead without summons—in any township or city in the state;

"9. In all other cases—in the township or city in which the defendant resides."

Section 848 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides in part as follows:

"Service of Summons Out of County. The summons cannot be served out of the county wherein the action is brought except in the following cases:

"2. When the action is brought against a party who has contracted in writing to perform an obligation * * * at a particular place, and resides in a different county, in which case the summons may be served in the county wherein he may be found."

[1] At the hearing of the demurrer in the respondent court apparently the only files before the court were the complaint and demurrer. As far as the record here goes, the summons had not been returned. There was nothing offered by appellant in support of his demurrer to show that the defendant was a resident of Los Angeles county, or that summons was served on him there. As far as the record showed at that time, summons might have been served on defendant in the township of Indio. The complaint stated a cause of action, and there was nothing upon which the respondent court could base an order sustaining the demurrer, unless the check set forth in the complaint was a special contract which brought the case under the provisions of the last sentence of subdivision 7 of section 832, Code of Civil Procedure. In using the words "Special Contract" in this sentence, the Legislature must have had in mind some contract other than one ordinarily and usually used in every-day transactions of business life, otherwise the word "Special" could have no significance, and need not have been inserted in the section. We believe that in the use of this word the Legislature had in mind those contracts in which there is a direct and definite promise to pay at a certain place named therein such as is found in some forms of promissory notes.

The case before us presents no feature of a special or unusual contract. In fact, the transaction is very usual and ordinary. Appellant apparently contracted a debt to Casey in Indio, and gave him his check on a Los Angeles bank in payment of the same. We do not believe that this check was a "special contract" that of itself would require the suit to be brought in Los Angeles. To hold otherwise would require merchants accepting checks from customers living in distant parts of the state, in payment for goods sold, to follow these debtors to their homes or the homes of their banks, in case the checks be not paid. We do not believe the Legislature contemplated any such procedure in adopting section 832, Code of Civil Procedure, in its present form. We therefore believe that the ruling of the respondent justice of the peace was correct on the record before him.

[2] The record in the superior court presented two facts in addition to those before the justice's court, namely: That the appellant was a resident of the city of Los Angeles, and that the summons was served on him there. Upon the record presented, the trial court held that the respondent court had jurisdiction of the person of appellant.

Jurisdiction of the person is obtained by the legal service of a valid process issued out of a court of competent jurisdiction in a case or proceeding properly pending, or by a party voluntarily appearing, or by his seeking, taking, or agreeing to some act or step in the proceeding or action to his benefit, or to the detriment of the other party, other than by one contesting the jurisdiction over his person only. Section 1014, Code Civ. Proc.; Chaplin v. Superior Court, 81 Cal. App. 367, 253 P. 954; Grinbaum v. Superior Court, 192 Cal. 528, 221 P. 635.

In the case before the court appellant demurred to Casey's complaint on the ground of lack of jurisdiction of his person because of his residence in Los Angeles, to which he added the further ground that the check given constituted a special contract in writing payable, and to be performed in Los Angeles, and not in the township of Indio. The first specification was in effect an attack upon the service of summons in Los Angeles under the provision of subdivision 2, § 848, Code of Civil Procedure. The second specification went to the right of court to entertain the action under the provisions of subdivision 7, § 832, Code of Civil Procedure, and presented to the respondent court the question of the construction of the statute and the determination of the question of whether or not the check was a "Special Contract" within the meaning of the section last cited. It presented a question of law independent of and beyond the one involving the bringing the person of the appellant into court by the service of process upon him. It went to the point of the right of the court to entertain the action. In other words, if appellant's contention was correct, not only the person of the appellant had not been brought into court properly, but the action itself had been instituted in the wrong court.

In the case of Olcese v. Justice's Court, 156 Cal. 82, 103 P. 317, 318, Mr. Justice Henshaw has clearly stated the law as follows: "Pleas based upon lack of jurisdiction of the person are in their nature pleas in abatement, and find no especial favor in the law. They amount to no more than the declaration of the defendant that he has had actual notice, is actually in court in a proper action, but, for informality in the service of process, is not legally before the court. It is purely a dilatory plea; and, when a defendant seeks to avail himself of it, he must, for very obvious reasons, stand upon his naked legal right, and seek nothing further from the court than the enforcement of that right. He will not be heard to ask of the court anything further than an adjudication upon his plea, and if he does ask anything further, then, by logic of the fact, he must necessarily have waived the irregularity of his summons before the court. Here is one reason for the well-settled rule that, if a defendant wishes to insist upon the objection that he is not in court for want of jurisdiction over his person, he must specially appear for that purpose only, and must keep out for all purposes except to make that objection. Another reason, equally valid, is that if such defendant shall ask for any relief other than that addressed to his plea, he is seeking to gain an unconscionable advantage over his adversary, whereby, if the determination of the court be in his favor, he may avail himself of it, while if it be against him, he may fall back upon his plea of lack of jurisdiction of the person. So it is well settled that, if a defendant, under such circumstances, raises any other question, or asks for any relief which can only be granted upon the hypothesis that the court has jurisdiction of his person, his appearance is general, though termed special, and he thereby submits to the jurisdiction of the court as completely as if he had been regularly served with summons."

The demurrer of appellant did not confine itself to the question of jurisdiction of his person alone, but went further, and presented another question of law vital to his defense. As he did this, he must be held to have appeared generally in the action, and that therefore the respondent court gained jurisdiction over his person. Vance v. Superior Court, 48 Cal. App. 327, 191 P. 945.

RAPP v. HORGAN et al. (Civ. 7102.)★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Oct. 30, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Nov. 26, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Dec. 26, 1929.

1. Pleading $\S$ 245(3)—Court could permit plaintiff to amend complaint at trial, where there was no surprise or motion for continuance, and defendants were not prejudiced.

Court did not err in permitting amendment of complaint at trial over defendants' objection, where there was no surprise and no motion for continuance, and record did not disclose that defendants were prejudiced.

2. Mechanics' liens $\S$ 290(2)—Where facts found showed that plaintiff was original contractor, it was not necessary to make finding expressly stating that fact.

Failure of trial court to make finding in so many words that plaintiff, in action to foreclose mechanic's lien, was original contractor, was not fatal, where facts found by the trial court showed that such was the case.

3. Mechanics' liens $\S$ 86—Plaintiff's status was not changed to materialman in mechanic's foreclosure suit by fact that sum paid corresponded with amount due for labor.

Fact that sum of money had been paid which corresponded with amount due for labor did not establish status as materialman of plaintiff suing for foreclosure of mechanic's lien, where contract showed otherwise.

4. Mechanics' liens $\S$ 290(2)—In mechanic's lien foreclosure suit, finding that no notice of completion of plaintiff's contract was recorded was unnecessary, where plaintiff filed lien within 60 days (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 1187).

In mechanic's lien foreclosure suit, finding that no notice of completion of plaintiff's contract was recorded was unnecessary, where plaintiff filed lien within 60 days after completing contract within Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 1187.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; J. Walter Hanby, Judge.

Action by W. F. Rapp, doing business under the fictitious firm name and style of the West Hollywood Plumbing Company, against D. F. Horgan and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

John Schlegel, of Los Angeles, for appellant Josephine Horgan.

O. H. Myrick, of Los Angeles, for appellants A. McNally and Susana Land Co.

John F. Poole and William Dellamore, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

STURTEVANT, J. The plaintiff commenced an action against the defendants to foreclose a mechanic's lien. The owners appeared and answered. A trial was had before the court sitting without a jury. The trial court made findings of fact in favor of the plaintiff and from a judgment entered thereon the defendants have appealed under section 953a of the Code of Civil Procedure.

[1] Before any evidence was introduced the defendants objected to the taking of evidence on the ground that the complaint did not state a cause of action. The trial court allowed the plaintiff to amend and thereupon overruled the objection. The defendants complain that they were taken by surprise. In making this contention they are not supported by the record. After their objection had been overruled the defendants did not move for a continuance and the record does not disclose any fact showing that the defendants were prejudiced.

[2] Prior to the 14th of March, 1924, Harry Brannan was lessee of the real estate and the improvements thereon which are involved in this litigation. The improvements consisted of a building known as Ladora Hotel. Brannan employed the plaintiff to make certain alterations, repairs, and additions to the property. Later Brannan assigned his lease to the defendant Neal Woods. After he became lessee, Neal Woods continued the same arrangement. In response to the allegations contained in the pleadings, the trial court found that the defendants owned the property against which a lien was sought; that Neal Woods ordered the labor and material; that Neal Woods was the lessee of the property; that the plaintiff was the contractor for furnishing all of the rough and finished plumbing materials and for performing labor in installing of said rough and finished plumbing materials used in the construction, alteration, and repair of the upper floor of the Ladora Hotel; that on the 14th day of March, 1924, Neal Woods and the plaintiff entered into the contract; that the materials and labor were of the agreed price, $5,541.82, and that said sum was also the reasonable value; that between the 1st day of March, 1924, and the 5th day of June, 1924, the plaintiff furnished the materials and performed the labor which were actually used and employed in the construction of the alterations and repairs; that the total amount of plaintiff's claim was $5,541.82, of which $2,500 has been paid, and that $3,041.82 has not been paid; that on the 23d day of July, 1924, the plaintiff verified his claim of lien, and the same was recorded on the 25th day of July, 1924, and paid therefor $1.70; the plaintiff completed his contract June 5, 1924; that no notice of completion of plaintiff's contract was recorded; and that, within ten days after the defendant owners had notice and knowledge that the alterations and repairs were being made, and that plaintiff was furnishing the labor and materials, they did not file or record a notice of nonresponsibility. These defendants complain that the trial court did not make a finding that the plaintiff was an original contractor. Although it did not make a finding in those identical words, the facts found by the trial court were to the effect that the plaintiff was an original contractor. La Grill v. Mallard, 90 Cal. 373, 27 P. 294; Pugh v. Moxley, 164 Cal. 374, 379, 128 P. 1037; Perazzi v. Doe Estate Co., 40 Cal. App. 617, 622, 181 P. 398.

[3] The defendants also attack the findings to the effect that the plaintiff furnished materials and labor. This attack is based on the fact that, as the plaintiff's work proceeded, the then lessee paid the laborers their hire. Stressing that fact, the defendants contend that the plaintiff was only a materialman. However, the proper test depends on the terms of his contract. If for any particular period the labor had not been paid, the defendants would not even assert the point. The facts show the plaintiff was a contractor for furnishing materials and doing labor, but that a sum of money has been paid, and said sum happens to correspond with the amount of the labor. That fact does not change the status of the plaintiff from that of a contractor to a materialman.

[4] It is claimed that the finding that no notice of completion of plaintiff's contract was recorded was a finding on a fact not within the issues made by the pleadings. Conceding the contention to be well founded, nevertheless the finding was on an immaterial matter. The plaintiff as an original contractor had the option of filing his lien within 60 days after completing his contract. Code Civ. Proc., § 1187. The court found that he completed his contract on or about June 5, 1924, and that he filed his lien July 25, 1924. It was filed in time.

By reason of the views hereinabove expressed, it would only be repetition to discuss other points presented by the defendants.

We find no error in the record. The judgment is affirmed.

SOURISSEAU et ux. v. MOORE. (Civ. 5594.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Oct. 28, 1929.

Costs $\S$ 260(4)—Penalty for frivolous appeal must be imposed, where appellants' brief showed testimony in striking conflict, and portion relied on to be adverse.

Where, as stated in closing brief of appellants, testimony was in striking conflict, there was no ground for appeal, where cross-examination of respondent, relied on as justification therefor, showed that respondent, who recovered on note given for land, did not know value of land, and so stated to appellants, suing to cancel note, so that penalty for frivolous appeal must be imposed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; J. A. Smith, Judge.

Action by George Sourisseau and wife against A. P. Moore, in which defendant filed a cross-complaint. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Ewell D. Moore, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Gerald Willis Myers, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

IRA F. THOMPSON, J. The plaintiff and defendant entered into an agreement of exchange whereby the plaintiff agreed to convey to the defendant a contract of purchase of a lot at Clearwater, Cal., and deliver to defendant a promissory note, executed by himself and his wife, Mae Sourisseau, in the sum of $600, and in return to receive title to 12 lots in El Centro, Imperial county, Cal. Soon after the exchange was perfected, the plaintiff attempted to rescind the contract on the ground of misrepresentations claimed by him to have been made by respondent, consisting of statements that the El Centro lots were worth from $150 to $200 each. He filed his action, based upon similar allegations of fraudulent representations, to cancel the note and recover back the Clearwater lot. Defendant answered, and filed a cross-complaint upon the promissory note. The trial court denied plaintiff any relief, but awarded the defendant and cross-complainant judgment for the face of the note, interest, costs, and attorney's fees. This appeal is from the judgment so entered.

The court found that the respondent "made no false or fraudulent representation of any kind or character whatsoever to the plaintiff respecting either the value of or location of said property in the city of El Centro. * * *" The substance of appellants' argument is that the evidence is insufficient to support this finding. There were only two witnesses who testified concerning the representations. The plaintiff and appellant George Sourisseau testified that the representations were made and the respondent swore that they were not. In fact, we find a very significant sentence in appellants' closing brief relating to this matter, as follows: "The testimony of appellant and respondent is in striking conflict." With this confession of the groundless nature of the appeal before us, necessarily indicated by the language just quoted, the only manner in which we could avoid assessing a penalty for a frivolous appeal would be to find, as counsel seeks to do, some justification for it in the cross-examination of the respondent. But here, also, we can find no comfort for appellants. The entire effect of the cross-examination may be summed up in this wise: That respondent had never seen the El Centro lots; that he did not know their value, and so informed the plaintiff-appellant. Under such circumstances, we have no alternative.

Judgment affirmed, and appellants are fined the sum of $75 for the prosecution of a frivolous appeal.

PRAY et al. v. TROWER LUMBER CO. ★
(Civ. 6877.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Oct. 26, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Nov. 25, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Dec. 23, 1929.

1. Sales $\S$ 61—Contract for sale of lumber held "agreement of sale" because of letters "f. o. b." in connection with destination, provision for sample car, and sellers' lack of ownership and possession; "sale."

Agreement for sale and delivery of lumber held intended as agreement of sale rather than present sale because of letters "f. o. b." in connection with place of destination, provision for sample car, and lack of ownership and possession of lumber by sellers; fundamental difference between "sale" and "agreement of sale" being that in case of sale title passes.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First, Second, and Third Series, Sale.]

2. Sales $\S$ 384(1)—As respects measure of damages for buyer's fault, delivery to person specified in agreement held delivery to buyer (Civ. Code, $\S\S$ 1141, 2130d, 3310).

In determining whether title was transferred under agreement of sale within Civ. Code, $\S$ 1141, so that measure of damages recoverable by sellers would be contract price within section 3310, delivery to person specified in agreement was delivery to defendant buyer, and consignment to person named in agreement and delivery of bills of lading naming such person to defendant indicated intent to transfer title to defendant, within section 2130d.

3. Sales $\S$ 271—Persons agreeing to sell lumber by sample warranted quality would equal that of sample (Civ. Code, $\S$ 1766).

Where sellers of lumber agreed to sell by sample, they warranted that quality of lumber in last four cars would equal that of sample car, under Civ. Code, $\S$ 1766.

4. Sales $\S$ 176(4)—Buyer's failure to inspect lumber warranted finding that it waived right of inspection (Civ. Code, $\S$ 1785).

Where defendant buyer failed to inspect lumber, as authorized under Civ. Code, $\S$ 1785, jury was warranted in finding that it had waived right of inspection notwithstanding that inspection was made by person buying from defendant and by company buying from such person.

5. Sales $\S$ 201(7)—Title to lumber equaling sample in quality would pass to buyer, even though buyer rejected it.

Where sale of lumber was by sample with right of inspection, title to lumber equaling sample car in quality would pass even though buyer rejected it.

6. Sales $\S$ 445(4)—Conformity of lumber to quality of sample car held for jury under conflicting evidence.

Where evidence as to conformity of last cars of lumber shipped to buyer to quality of sample car was conflicting, it presented question for jury's determination.

7. Sales $\S$ 441(3)—Evidence supported finding that quality of last four cars of lumber delivered equaled that of sample, in seller's action for price (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 1963, par. 32).

In seller's action for price of lumber, evidence that witness found quality of all cars the same, and that another witness on inspection after rejection found quality of rejected cars equal to sample, held sufficient to support finding that quality of last four cars of lumber equaled that of sample, under Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 1963, par. 32.

8. Customs and usages $\S$ 18—General customs need not be pleaded, but customs or usages relating to particular locality or trade must be pleaded.

In seller's action for price of lumber, it is not necessary to plead customs or usages of which court will take judicial notice, so that general customs need not be pleaded, but particular customs or usages relating to particular locality or trade must be pleaded.

9. Appeal and error $\S$ 1040(10)—Error in overruling demurrer to complaint for uncertainty in pleading custom of particular business held harmless, where defendant was not misled.

In seller's action for price of lumber, error in overruling demurrer to complaint for uncertainty as to custom relating to particular business held not reversible, where correspondence and depositions showed defendant was informed as to such custom and was not misled, since overruling of demurrer for uncertainty or ambiguity is not reversible, unless ruling affects substantial rights of demurrant.

10. Appeal and error $\S$ 1047(3)—Refusal to strike plaintiff's testimony as to custom of business on ground he was unfamiliar with custom at place of performance held cured by testimony of defendant's witness that custom existed there (Civ. Code, $\S$ 1646).

In seller's action for price of lumber, any error in refusal to strike testimony of plaintiff as to custom of lumber business on ground that he testified he was unfamiliar with custom at place of performance and that contract should be interpreted according to usage at such place, under Civ. Code, $\S$ 1646, held cured by testimony of defendant's witness that such custom existed at place of performance.

11. Sales $\S$ 82(1)—Clause "usual terms" in contract for sale of lumber held to deal with question of credit, not manner of inspection.

In contract for sale and delivery of lumber, clause "usual terms" held to deal with question of credit and time of payment, and to have nothing to do with manner of inspection on delivery.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, Third Series, Usual Terms.]

12. Customs and usages $\Rightarrow$ 15(1), 16—Persons carrying on trade are deemed to have contracted with reference to known usage, and usage is admissible to supply deficiency or aid in interpretation unless it varies terms of contract (Civ. Code, § 1655).

It is general rule that, when there is known usage of trade, persons carrying on such trade are deemed to have contracted in reference to such usage unless contrary appears, and usage is admissible to supply deficiency or as means of interpretation where it does not alter or vary terms of contract, under Civ. Code, § 1655.

13. Appeal and error $\Rightarrow$ 1170(10)—Failure to advise jury to correct uncertain verdict held not reversible error, where modification of judgment in accord with jury's obvious intent would prevent injury to substantial rights (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 475, 619, 626; Const. art. 6, § 4½).

In seller's action for price of lumber, in which defendant objected to uncertainty of verdict under Code Civ. Proc. § 626, failure of court to advise jury to correct verdict under section 619 held not reversible error under section 475 and Const. art. 6, § 4½, since modification of judgment in accord with obvious intent of jury would prevent injury to defendant's substantial rights.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; T. I. Fitzpatrick, Judge.

Action on contract for sale and delivery of lumber brought by Reuel Ford Pray and another, copartners doing business as the Lumbermen's Exchange, against the Trower Lumber Company. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals. Modified and affirmed.

H. W. Hutton, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Albert A. Rosenshine and Jacob H. Hoffman, both of San Francisco, for respondents.

GRAY, Justice pro tem. From a judgment based upon a verdict awarding plaintiffs (the sellers) the price of five carloads of lumber, defendant (the buyer) appeals, claiming (1) that, as title to the lumber did not pass, the verdict erroneously awarded the contract price in accordance with section 3310 of the Civil Code instead of the excess of the contract price over either the net proceeds of resale or the value to the seller, as specified in section 3311 of the same Code; and (2) that the verdict lacks the certainty or definiteness required by section 626 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The complaint, in the first count, alleges that the parties entered into a written agreement for the sale of "six carloads of lumber of 6/4 No. 2 pine box rough lumber at the price of $25 per M feet, f. o. b., car

Los Angeles, terms usual"; that, "in accordance with the custom of the lumber business" and the terms of the agreement, plaintiffs delivered to defendant six carloads of lumber of the quality and quantity and at the times and place specified in the agreement; that plaintiffs have fully performed said agreement, and defendant has paid for one carload and refuses to pay for the other five, to plaintiffs' damage in the sum of $2,500.59. In the second count, it is alleged that plaintiffs sold and delivered to defendant lumber at an agreed price of $3,002.59, of which defendant has paid $501.80, leaving due and unpaid $2,500.39. The amended answer first denies the agreement in the form pleaded, the delivery of the last five cars, the performance by plaintiffs, and the sale at any price in excess of $939.15, of which it has paid $670.15, and offers to pay the balance, and then affirmatively pleads an agreement of sale by sample upon other terms, stated in the complaint, the delivery and acceptance of the first carload as a sample, the delivery and acceptance of the second carload, although not equal to sample, and the rejection of the last four carloads because not equal to sample. The answer pleads the nonconformity of last four cars to sample only as a complete defense and not by way of counterclaim or rescission. The answer also tendered an issue as to location of the mill from which the lumber was to be shipped, but under the testimony this issue became immaterial.

An examination of the evidence discloses no material conflict except as to the quality of the lumber delivered. Defendant's written order literally, and plaintiff's written acceptance substantially, which together created the agreement between the parties (Tuso v. Green, 194 Cal. 574, 229 P. 327; Martyn v. Western Pac. Ry. Co., 21 Cal. App. 589, 132 P. 602), contained the following pertinent terms: "Ship to J. O. Means, Los Angeles, price $25.00 per M. f. o. b. car Los Angeles. Usual terms five cars 6/4 No. 2 Pine Box Rough. Only one minimum carload to be shipped as sample. If first car is not satisfactory balance of order to be canceled." The quantity subsequently was increased to six carloads. The figures "6/4" designated the thickness of the individual board (i. e., one and one-half inches thick) and "No. 2" its grade. Six days subsequent to date of order J. O. Means received from a box company an order for six to eight cars of 6/4 box lumber rough, subject to acceptance of sample car and on the same day gave an order in the same language, except that it was for five to eight cars, to the defendant. Neither of these last two orders specified "No. 2" grade, as did defendant's order to plaintiffs, which omission probably was a cause for the subsequent dispute. To fill defendant's order, plaintiffs ordered from the mills, without mention as to sample, one car and subsequently five cars of 6/4 No. 2 pine box rough. The mills shipped all cars to J. O. Means under bills of lading, naming him as consignee. These bills were mailed by plaintiffs to defendant and forwarded by the latter to J. O. Means, who reconsigned to the box company. The bills were never returned to plaintiffs, but at the trial were in Means' possession.

The first or sample car was accepted by the box company and paid for by the defendant. In its answer defendant offered to pay for the second car, which was finally accepted by the box company after its rejection. The remaining four cars were rejected by the box company on the ground of nonconformity to sample and returned to the carrier, who sold two of them in partial satisfaction of its lien for freight.

The acts and conduct of the parties, with reference to the dispute as to the quality of the last four carloads, is more accurately and completely pictured by their correspondence than it is by their verbal testimony as to conversations, because the correspondence, by its terms, was intended to confirm, summarize, and reduce to permanent form those conversations. About one month after the date of its order, defendant wrote plaintiffs, complaining that the grade of lumber in the second and later cars was not nearly up to that of the first car, suggesting that this complaint be taken up with the mill, and expressing a willingness to amicably adjust the difficulty. The next day plaintiffs replied that they had sold No. 2 grade lumber, that they had advised mill as to the complaint and requested that the latter inspect the lumber, and that the most satisfactory way would be to have the "rejects" laid aside and held for official inspection. Defendant, upon the day following, answered, stating that the sale was by sample, requesting that a representative of the mill call on Means, advising that demurrage was accruing, and that it had asked Means to urge the box company to unload the cars, accept the lumber, which was up to grade, and lay aside the balance for inspection. A week later, plaintiffs wrote that the mill advised that the lumber was of the grade ordered and that it was "up to you to have your customer or yourselves unload this stock and, if dissatisfied, will gladly have same officially inspected by a representative of the California White & Sugar Pine Manufacturers' Association." After three days, defendant responded that plaintiffs should examine and compare the first two cars, that it had a just complaint and "we are not responsible for any expense in connection with the refusal of these five carloads and we hope you and your mill folks will not delay any longer the making of an effort to adjust this difficulty."

[1, 2] Although the express language of the agreement does not show their intent as whether it was a present sale or an agreement of sale, yet as a matter of law (Todd v. Lyon, 55 Cal. App. 67, 202 P. 899; Turner, Kuhn & Fraser, Inc., v. Jones, 61 Cal. App. 732, 215 P. 1033), we are satisfied that the parties intended an agreement of sale because the letters "F. O. B." in connection with the place of destination (24 R. C. L. 45), the provision for a sample car (Wanee v. Thomas, 75 Cal. App. 231, 242 P. 509; Gardiner v. McDonogh, 147 Cal. 313, 81 P. 964), and the then lack of ownership and possession of the lumber by plaintiffs (Rosenberg Bros. & Co. v. Beales, 56 Cal. App. 212, 205 P. 18; Nye & Nissen v. Weed Lumber Co. [Cal. App.] 268 P. 659), all indicate an intention to pass title subsequent to the execution of the agreement. "The fundamental difference between a sale, properly so called, and an agreement to sell is, that in the former case title passes, while in the latter case it does not." Blackwood v. Cutting Packing Co., 76 Cal. 212, 215, 18 P. 248, 9 Am. St. Rep. 199; Rosenberg Bros. & Co. v. Beales, supra, at page 214, of 56 Cal. App. 205 P. 18. If title to the last four carloads vested in the defendant, the measure of damages recoverable by plaintiffs is the contract price. Civ. Code, § 3310. "Title is transferred by an executory agreement for the sale * * * of personal property only * * * when the seller has completed it, prepared it for delivery, and offered it to the buyer, with intent to transfer the title thereto, in the manner prescribed by the chapter upon offer of performance." Civ. Code, § 1141. Delivery to Means, as specified in the agreement, was delivery to the defendant. Francis v. Merkley, 59 Cal. App. 196, 210 P. 437. The consignment to Means in the bills of lading and their delivery to the defendant indicate an intent to transfer title to the defendant. Civ. Code, § 2130d.

[3-7] By its objections as to the sufficiency of the evidence to support the verdict and as to instructions given and refused, defendant has clearly presented for decision the question whether a buyer's rejection of goods delivered under an agreement of sale by sample prevents the passage of title, even if the goods so delivered equal the sample as to quality. The plaintiffs having agreed to sell by sample, they warranted that the quality of the lumber in the last four cars would equal that of the sample car. Civ. Code, § 1766. The defendant had a right to inspect the last four cars before accepting them. Civ. Code, § 1785. The defendant never exercised this right of inspection, but, in its rejection, relied wholly upon the inspection of Means, its buyer, and of the box company, the latter's buyer. There is nothing in the agreement which would expressly or impliedly confer a right of inspection upon the two last-named persons, or which provides that delivery was subject to their inspection. Defendant does not contend that they acted in his behalf. In fact, the evidence clearly shows that they were acting on their own behalf, which, because of the difference in the orders as to grade and the adverse relations of buyer and seller, was antagonistic. Because of defendant's utter failure to inspect, the jury was warranted in finding, as its verdict clearly implies that it did, that defendant had waived its right of inspection. Assuming that defendant did inspect the lumber, yet, if in fact the quality of the lumber in the last four cars equaled that of the sample car, title would pass, although defendant rejected them. Brigham v. Hibbard, 28 Or. 386, 43 P. 383; Weil v. Stone, 33 Ind. App. 112, 69 N. E. 698, 104 Am. St. Rep. 243; 24 R. C. L. 20; 35 Cyc. 256. The evidence as to the conformity of the last cars to the quality of the sample car is conflicting and therefore presented a question for the jury's determination. 24 R. C. L. 218; 35 Cyc. 234. Its determination that the quality of the last four cars equaled that of the sample is amply supported by the testimony of two witnesses for the plaintiff, the first of whom testified that, upon inspection at the loading at the mill, he found the quality of all the cars the same (Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, par. 32; Western Forest Products Co. v. Woodhead Lumber Co. [Cal. App.] 267 P. 901), and the second of whom testified, that upon inspection after rejection he found that the quality of the rejected cars equaled the sample.

[8-12] Defendant further complains of the overruling of its special demurrer for uncertainty as to what the custom was or is which is referred to in the allegation that delivery was "in accordance with the custom of the lumber business." Over its objection that such testimony was not within the issues pleaded, plaintiffs were permitted to introduce testimony that it was the custom of the lumber trade, when dispute arose between buyer and seller as to quality of lumber delivered, to decide it by an inspection according to the grading rules of the association, mentioned in the correspondence. "It is not necessary to plead customs or usages of which the court will take judicial notice. Hence the rule that general customs need not be pleaded (citing Goldsmith v. Sawyer, 46 Cal. 209; Colman v. Clements, 23 Cal. 245; Waters v. Moss, 12 Cal. 535, 73 Am. Dec. 561). Particular customs or usages relating to a particular locality or trade must, however, according to the general rule be pleaded (citing Swift v. Occidental Min., etc., Co., 141 Cal. 161, 74 P. 700; Goldsmith v. Sawyer, supra; Dutch Flat Water Co. v. Mooney, 12 Cal. 534)." 17 C. J. 516. To the same effect, 27 R. C. L. 195; Bancroft's Code Pleading, vol. 1, pp. 124 and 455. "The overruling of a demurrer to a complaint on the ground of uncertainty or ambiguity affords no ground for reversal when it is apparent from the record that the defendant was not thereby misled or embarrassed in making his defense. To warrant a reversal, it must appear that the ruling of the court affects the substantial rights of the demurrant." 2 Cal. Jur. 1014. While the court erred in overruling the demurrer, because the custom related to a particular business, yet a reversal is not warranted because an inspection of the above correspondence and of the first deposition offered by defendant, in which it interrogated its own witness as to such custom and of several other depositions offered by it, in which plaintiffs cross-examined as to such custom, shows that defendant was informed as to such custom and was not misled thereby. Defendant also moved to strike all of the testimony of one plaintiff as to this custom on the ground that he testified he was unfamiliar with the custom at the place of performance. This witness, however, also testified that this custom was general in the business. Of course, the contract was to be interpreted according to the usage of the place of performance. Civ. Code, § 1646. The error, if any, was cured by the testimony of Butterick, defendant's witness, who, on direct examination, stated this custom existed at Los Angeles. Lastly, it objected to evidence as to this custom on the ground that it attempted to vary the clause "usual terms" in the agreement. This clause clearly dealt with the question of credit (that is, the time of payment), and had nothing to do with the manner of inspection upon delivery. "Stipulations which are necessary to make a contract * * * conformable to usage, are implied, in respect to matters concerning which the contract manifests no contrary intention." Civ. Code, § 1655. "It is the general rule that when there is a known usage of the trade, persons carrying on that trade are deemed to have contracted in reference to the usage unless the contrary appears; that the usage * * * is always admissible to supply a deficiency or as a means of interpretation where it does not alter or vary the terms of the contract (citing cases)." Hind v. Oriental Products Co., Inc., 195 Cal. 655, 667, 235 P. 438, 443. Under somewhat analogous facts, testimony as to a trade custom of inspection was held admissible in Turlock M. & G., Inc., v. Smith, 80 Cal. App. 263, 251 P. 683. See, also, Merehin v. Ball, 68 Cal. 205, 8 P. 886.

[13] Defendant seeks a reversal of the judgment, literally following the language of the verdict, which awarded plaintiffs the sum of $2,500.59, "out of which plaintiff is to pay actual railroad transportation charges as shown by R. R. expense bills but not any demurrage or other charges," on the ground that the italicized provision renders the verdict too uncertain and indefinite to comply with section 626 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Defendant having objected to the uncertainty after poll of jury, the court properly should have advised the jury to correct it. Code Civ. Proc. § 619. But we are satisfied from an examination of the entire record that this error of procedure did not cause a miscarriage of justice (Const. art. 6, § 4½; Code Civ. Proc. § 475), and that a modification of the judgment in accord with the obvious intent of the jury, will prevent injury to defendant's substantial rights (2 Cal. Jur. 989). No issue was made by either party at the trial as to defendant's right to deduct freight from the price, but the issue tried was as to its liability for the price at all. The verdict therefore was decisive of the only issue presented for the jury's determination. Hutchinson v. Inyo County, 61 Cal. 119; Redmond v. Weissman, 77 Cal. 423, 20 P. 544; Meyer v. Parsons, 129 Cal. 653, 62 P. 216. Obviously, not to deduct the freight would make the defendant pay more than it was obligated to pay under the agreement and would nullify as surplusage the italicized portion of the verdict. The only testimony as to the amount of the freight is given by a witness for defendant on direct examination as $160 per car. The accuracy of this figure is vouched for by defendant's failure to prove the freight bills under its control and unknown to plaintiffs and also by the fact that the difference between the gross price, as shown by the bill of particulars and defendant's offer to pay, contained in its amended answer, shows the freight on the second car amounted to $168.71. The judgment is therefore modified by deducting from the sum of $2,500.95 the sum of $800, being freight on five cars at $160 per car, leaving a balance due under the judgment of $1,700.95.

As modified, the judgment is affirmed, each party to pay own costs.

CALIFORNIA RESTAURANT EQUIPMENT
CO. v. WEBER (CRESSE et al., Intervener). (Civ. 3898.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Nov. 1, 1929.

1. Sales ☞111—Seller taking possession of restaurant equipment when purchaser's executrix abandoned business after default in payment of installments terminated contract.

Seller taking possession of restaurant equipment, pursuant to provisions of executory contract for sale thereof, when executrix of estate closed restaurant and abandoned purchaser's business after default in payment of deferred installments of price, terminated contract.

2. Sales ☞110(2)—Evidence held to support finding that seller repossessed property before executing new contract for sale thereof to purchaser's widow.

In replevin by seller for restaurant equipment purchased by defendant, evidence held sufficient to support implied finding that plaintiff repossessed property, pursuant to provisions of prior contract for sale thereof to defendant's husband, since deceased, thereby terminating such contract, before executing new contract with defendant.

3. Sales ☞196—Default in payment of installments on price of property resold to purchaser's widow after seller took possession, held not waived by subsequent acceptance of deferred payments.

Widow's default in payment of installments on price of restaurant equipment, sold to her after seller took possession thereof pursuant to provisions of prior contract with her husband, held not waived by subsequent acceptance of deferred payments, even if execution of new contract waived delay in payment of installments then due, especially in view of express contrary provision of contract.

4. Sales ☞111—Seller held entitled to apply payments after resale of restaurant equipment to purchaser's widow on indebtedness for remodeling building, instead of original price (Civ. Code, § 1479).

Seller executing new contract to sell restaurant equipment to original purchaser's widow for unpaid balance of price and additional sum for remodeling restaurant at her request had right, under Civ. Code, § 1479, to apply all subsequent payments by her on latter account, instead of original purchase price.

5. Sales ☞111—Contract to resell property to purchaser's widow held valid and binding, so as to entitle seller to possession on her breach thereof.

Contract for sale of restaurant equipment being terminated by default in payment of deferred installments of price and seller's repossession of property on abandonment of business by purchaser's widow as executrix, subsequent executory contract for resale thereof to widow as an individual was valid and binding, and seller was entitled to possession on her breach thereof.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; William C. Doran, Judge.

Action by the California Restaurant Equipment Company against Grace E. Weber, in which defendant, as executrix of the estate of Frederick H. Weber, deceased, and Arthur Cresse intervened. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant, individually and as executrix, appeals. Affirmed.

Lyle Pendegast, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

McClure, Griffin & Yokum, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

Davis & Thorne, of Los Angeles, for intervener respondent.

THOMPSON, J. This is an appeal from a judgment for plaintiff in an action in replevin. July 10, 1924, the plaintiff and Frederick H. Weber entered into an executory contract by the terms of which certain equipment was purchased for a restaurant in Los Angeles for the sum of $2,136.82, which was partially paid on delivery of the personal property. The balance of the purchase price was to be paid, together with interest thereon, in specified installments. It was provided that the title to the property should remain in the vendor until the purchase price was fully paid, and that, upon default in the payment of any installment when due, the entire unpaid balance should thereupon automatically become due without notice, and the vendor was then authorized to repossess the property without process of law, in which event the money which had been paid upon the purchase price was deemed to have been applied in compensation for the use and depreciation of the property. It was further stipulated that "time is expressly made the essence of this contract, but the acceptance by the vendor of any payment past due shall not be considered a waiver of this clause." The principal purchase price had been reduced to about $700. The vendee was in default of payments of several installments.

[1, 2] Subsequently, on December 9, 1924, the vendee died. Upon proceedings duly had, his wife, Grace E. Weber, was appointed and qualified as executrix of his estate, and as such took charge of the restaurant with the equipment which is involved in this action. Although the executrix made payments on the purchase price of said property aggregating the sum of $285, the estate was still in default. The restaurant business did not prosper. The executrix was unable to pay the deferred installments on the contract or the rent for the building. She closed the restaurant and abandoned the business. The plaintiff then took possession of the property involved in this action, pursuant to the provisions of the contract. The contract was thereby terminated. Northern A. Co. of London v. Stout, 16 Cal. App. 548, 117 P. 617. A controversy exists as to whether the plaintiff then actually repossessed the property. While there is a conflict of testimony in that regard, we are of the opinion there is substantial evidence to support the implied finding that it did so.

The executrix testified:

"Q. Did you discontinue the operation of the restaurant? A. Yes, I did. Q. How many days before the plaintiff— A. Just a few. Q. Then the plaintiff came and took possession of the restaurant and equipment? A. Yes, that is correct."

With respect to taking possession of the property for a default in payments, Mr. Alkire, the credit manager of the plaintiff, testified: "The Court: Q. You say you repossessed this property? A. Yes, sir. * * * Q. Then she had closed it (the restaurant) up? A. Yes. Q. How many days before? A. Probably between three days and a week. * * * The landlord having called us two or three times to say the place was some five or six hundred (dollars) behind in rent, he wanted possession of it and I went to his place and got permission to leave the equipment in there until I could make some satisfactory arrangement to rearrange it and sell to Mrs. Weber or someone else. * * * She gave me the key to the place. * * * (She said) If I would rearrange the place economically * * * (she would) rebuy the place if I could stretch the payments over a long period of time and make the payments small. * * * She gave me the keys to the place and I went and got a cabinetmaker and * * * told her of the terms that we would rearrange the place and resell it to her, namely $110 down and $50 a month. * * * Three or four days later she phoned me * * * she had arranged to get the money. * * * Then I took the cabinetmaker out there and on completion of the work turned the keys over to her, and the possession of the place. I had possession all the time these changes were being made, by permission of the landlord, and she took the old name off the window and put on the new (name), Weber's Coffee Shop."

The foregoing demonstrates an exercise of ownership over the property on the part of plaintiff with an evident purpose of forfeiting the contract with the estate of the deceased and reorganizing the business on a more economical basis in order to resell the same property "to the widow or someone else," giving her the benefit of all previous payments in the hope that she might succeed in operating the restaurant. Subsequent to this repossession of the property, on May 29, 1925, a new executory sale contract was made between the plaintiff and Grace E. Weber, individually, for the same property, in the exact form in which the original document was drawn, except that the amount of the installments was reduced. By the terms of this second contract Mrs. Weber was credited with the payments which had been previously made by her husband, and she assumed similar obligations to those of her deceased husband under the former agreement, together with an additional indebtedness of $360 for the improvements in the store fixtures which were added by the plaintiff at the request of Mrs. Weber, as above stated.

Upon repossessing the property, the original contract was canceled. Mr. Alkire testified in this regard: "As far as our books were concerned there was (then) no old contract." A new account was opened May 28, 1925, against Grace E. Weber, in the name of Weber's Coffee Shop, which she adopted as the designation for her restaurant business. For a period of time she operated the restaurant in her individual capacity, making payments under the second contract, which were credited to her account, in the aggregate sum of $336. Misfortune continued to follow her enterprise. The business was not a success. Again she defaulted in the payment of her installments. She testified:

"Was a balance due on the contract? A. Yes, I think there was. Q. And it had not been paid? A. That is correct." Mr. Alkire also testified in that regard: "The last payment was made toward that contract on October 6th. Q. How much? A. $20. Q. How much should have been paid? A. $50."

In December, 1925, the plaintiff instituted this action and again repossessed the restaurant equipment by means of a writ of replevin. The defendant, Grace E. Weber, answered and filed a complaint in intervention in her individual capacity and also as a representative of her husband's estate, affirmatively charging the plaintiff with a breach of the contract and praying for reimbursement for the money paid on account of the purchase price of the property. Arthur Cresse also intervened as a creditor of the estate. Upon trial, the court found that the plaintiff was the owner and entitled to the possession of the property in question, and accordingly rendered a judgment in its favor without assessing any damages.

[3] The defendant, Grace E. Weber, has appealed as an individual and also in her representative capacity. She challenges the sufficiency of the evidence to support the findings of plaintiff's ownership and right of possession of the property chiefly on the ground that the default in the payment of installments on the purchase price was waived by subsequent acceptance of deferred payments.

There is no merit in this contention. Even though it be conceded, that the execution of the new contract constituted a waiver of the delay in the payments of the installments then due, default in the payment of subsequent installments occurred. Assuming that the plaintiff lawfully repossessed the property before the execution of the new contract of sale, Grace E. Weber, individually, as the succeeding vendee of the property, was in default. If the property was not so repossessed and the estate of the deceased vendee still retained its equitable interest in the property, Grace E. Weber, in her representative capacity, was in default of payments of subsequent stipulated installments. The interest of the estate in the property was thereby forfeited.

The contract provided that "time is expressly made the essence of this contract, but the acceptance by the vendor of any payments past due shall not be considered a waiver of this clause." Under this express provision of the contract the acceptance of installments after they had become due did not constitute a waiver of the right to repossess the property for default in subsequent payments. Pacific Finance & Investment Co. v. Pierce, 48 Cal. App. 600, 191 P. 1115; McConnell v. Redd, 86 Cal. App. 785, 790, 261 P. 506.

[4, 5] The appellant now claims that the plaintiff never actually repossessed the property before assuming to transfer it to her individually, and that the estate therefore retained an interest therein which it could not be thus deprived of; that, if all the money which she paid plaintiff subsequent to the execution of the second contract were applied on the first contract, it would fully pay the entire original purchase price, and the estate would then be entitled to the property. Upon the execution of the second contract, however, a new obligation for $360 additional was incurred by Grace E. Weber. She claimed to have made the payments on this last contract from her own earnings. Section 1479 of the Civil Code provides in part:

"Where a debtor, under several obligations to another, does an act, by way of performance, in whole or in part, which is equally applicable to two or more of such obligations, such performance must be applied as follows:

* * * * *

"Two. If no such application be then made, the creditor, within a reasonable time after such performance, may apply it toward the extinction of any obligation, performance of which was due to him from the debtor at the time of such performance; except that if similar obligations were due to him both individually and as a trustee, he must, unless otherwise directed by the debtor, apply the performance to the extinction of all such obligations in equal proportion; and an application once made by the creditor cannot be rescinded without the consent of [the] debtor."

After the incurring of the new obligation to pay $360 for remodeling the restaurant at the request of Grace E. Weber individually, she was personally charged in an entirely different account with this sum together with the unpaid balance of the purchase price of the equipment. The plaintiff elected to credit all her payments which were made subsequent to the execution of the new contract to this last account, which he had a right to do pursuant to section 1479, supra. She made no request to apply these payments upon the old contract. Upon the contrary, the entire transaction which resulted in the cancellation of the old contract and the execution of the new one was with her consent and at her request. In view of the fact that the first contract was terminated by the breach thereof and that the property was repossessed by the vendor, it was empowered to make a subsequent valid contract to resell the equipment to any purchaser obtainable and upon any terms which were acceptable. The subsequent executory sale contract with Grace E. Weber as an individual was valid and binding. For the breach of this latter contract, her interest in the property was forfeited, and the plaintiff was entitled to the possession thereof. A sufficient prima facie showing of plaintiff's ownership of the property was shown.

The judgment is affirmed.

4. Appeal and error ⇨1071(5)—If material findings are supported by evidence, finding on immaterial issue will not cause reversal.

Finding on an immaterial issue will not cause a reversal, if material findings are supported by evidence.

5. Mortgages ⇨315(3)—Where property was covered by first and second deed of trust, reconveyance to grantor of property covered by first trust deed, not covered by second, did not deprive beneficiary of second trust deed of any right.

Where, on completion of certain work to satisfaction of beneficiary of first deed of trust, grantor became entitled to reconveyance of part of property, reconveyance of such property did not deprive beneficiary of second deed of trust, which covered other property covered by first deed of trust, of any right.

6. Appeal and error ⇨989—Appellate court's inquiry is limited to question whether there is substantial evidence to support finding.

Where finding is attacked for insufficiency of evidence, power of appellate court begins and ends in inquiry whether there is substantial evidence which will support findings of court.

7. Appeal and error ⇨931(1)—Appellate court must assume that conflicting evidence was resolved in favor of prevailing party.

If evidence conflicts on material points, appellate court must assume that trial court resolved such conflict in favor of prevailing party.

8. Appeal and error ⇨758(3)—Assignments of error in brief without reasons for claim could not be considered on appeal.

Where appellant's brief failed to point out reasons for claim of error, and stated no authority to support claim, such assignments could not be considered, as appellate court will not search record to find error.

9. Evidence ⇨432—Showing circumstances surrounding written agreement to release part of property covered by trust deed to prove lack of consideration held proper.

Where beneficiary of first trust deed gave letter agreeing to release certain part of property covered on payment of $6,000, it was proper, in action to compel reconveyance as agreed, for such beneficiary to show circumstances surrounding giving of letter to prove lack of consideration.

10. Estoppel ⇨54—Beneficiary of first trust deed held not estopped, as against beneficiary of second deed, from claiming agreement to release part of property was without consideration.

Where beneficiary of first trust deed was ignorant of fact that grantor was negotiating second loan, and beneficiary of second deed did not see letter given by beneficiary of first deed, wherein beneficiary agreed to release part of property on payment of $6,000, first beneficiary held not estopped from claiming letter was without consideration.

11. Specific performance ⇨49(1)—Reconveyance of property covered by trust deed could not be compelled, where agreement to reconvey was without consideration (Civ. Code, § 3391, subd. 1).

Where no adequate consideration moved to beneficiary of first trust deed in support of agreement to reconvey part of property covered by such deed, in view of Civ. Code, § 3391, subd. 1, such beneficiary could not be compelled to reconvey property.

12. Equity ⇨66—Beneficiary of second trust deed offering inadequate sum to beneficiary of first deed for reconveyance held not entitled to compel conveyance.

Where beneficiary of second trust deed asked that beneficiary of first trust deed be compelled to reconvey for sum of $6,000, and it appeared from plaintiff's own affidavit that $6,000 was an inadequate price, plaintiff held not entitled to compel a reconveyance, since he would not be doing equity.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Leon E. Gray, Judge.

Action by Chandler W. Burgess against the California Mutual Building & Loan Association and another. From a judgment for the defendants, plaintiff appeals. Motion to dismiss appeal denied, and judgment affirmed.

Treat & Ogden, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Jones, Boalt, Patterson & Douglas, of San Jose, for respondents.

DEASY, Justice pro tem. On the 9th day of October, 1924, one Daniel McKillop and Josephine McKillop, his wife, executed a deed of trust, in which the respondent California Mutual Building and Loan Association was the beneficiary, to secure a promissory note in the sum of $20,000, and also future advances which said respondent should make to said McKillop, and further advances were made and other notes given. The deed of trust conveyed a tract of land, which, for convenience, will be referred to as the McKillop Heights property, and another tract which will be referred to as the Wayne street property. The descriptions of the various tracts referred to in this opinion are very lengthy, and no useful purpose will be served by setting them out in full. McKillop at that time was engaged in developing the McKillop Heights property as a subdivision, selling lots, and building homes thereon. From time to time, although there was no provision in the deed of trust to that effect, individual lots were released from the lien and reconveyed upon payments being made to said respondent. On December 2, 1925, under circumstances which will be more fully detailed hereafter, said Daniel McKillop obtained a letter from said respondent relative to the release of a portion of the McKillop Heights property, which portion, for convenience, will be referred to as the Burgess property, which letter reads as follows:

"California Mutual Building and Loan Association

"248 South First St., San Jose, Calif. December 2, 1925.

"Mr. Daniel R. McKillop, 354 Russ Bldg., San Francisco, Calif. Dear Mr. McKillop: Confirming our conversation of today, this is to advise that this Association will release the following described property from under the terms of our Deed of Trust covering property described as McKillop Heights, Oakland, for the sum of $6,000.00. [Here follows description of Burgess property.]

"Yours very truly, California Mutual Building & Loan Association, W. B. Rice, Secretary. WBR:LM"

At the time he obtained said letter, McKillop, without the knowledge of the respondents, was negotiating a loan from appellant in the sum of $12,000, to be secured by a second deed of trust on said Burgess property, and represented to appellant that the property could be released from the first deed of trust on the payment of $6,000. The letter, when obtained, was deposited with the California Pacific Title Insurance Company, and, upon the closing of the transaction between appellant and McKillop, was delivered to appellant. The deeds of trust from McKillop to Burgess were executed on the 18th of December, 1925. Some time in 1926 McKillop's financial condition became very bad. He ceased his development work on the McKillop Heights property, defaulted in his payments to respondents, and finally was adjudged a bankrupt. In October, 1926, McKillop being in default in his payments, the respondent La Motte, who had been substituted as trustee in the original deed of trust of October, 1924, gave notice of default and of an intention to sell so much of the McKillop Heights property as remained subject to the lien of the deed of trust, in accordance with law, to satisfy the claim of the respondent California Mutual Building & Loan Association. In January, 1927, appellant called at the office of the loan association, and tendered to it the sum of $6,000, and demanded of it a reconveyance of said Burgess property. The tender was not accepted, and the reconveyance was refused, and thereafter appellant commenced this action to enjoin the sale of said Burgess property and to obtain a reconveyance of the same. The case was tried before the court, which gave judgment for the defendants, and plaintiff appealed.

No stay bond having been filed, the trustee proceeded, pending the appeal, to sell said Burgess property under the terms of the deed of trust, and at the sale appellant became the purchaser, paying therefor the sum of $10,000. Subsequently respondents made a motion to dismiss the appeal upon the ground that appellant, having received from the trustee a conveyance of the property, has now all that he asked in his complaint, and that the question is now moot. The motion to dismiss and the appeal on its merits were argued and submitted together.

[1] So far as the motion to dismiss the appeal is concerned, it is hardly an accurate statement of the facts to say, as respondents do, that appellant has obtained all that he was seeking by his complaint. It is true that he has now the title to the property, free and clear of the lien of the respondents' deed of trust, but, instead of a reconveyance for $6,000, he obtained a conveyance from the trustee for $10,000. It cannot well be said that he voluntarily became a purchaser, because the proceedings for the trustee's sale were inaugurated by the respondents, and appellant was by such act of the respondents placed in a position where he had to do something to protect his rights. He might have chosen some other means, perhaps, but he has not.

waived his right to prosecute his appeal by doing what he did. The situation is analogous to a case where, pending an appeal, the appellant, in order to prevent an execution sale, pays the amount of the judgment. In such case, unless there is some agreement of compromise, or an understanding that the appeal will not be prosecuted, the mere payment does not operate to deprive the appellant of his rights. Warner Bros. Co. v. Freud, 131 Cal. 639, 63 P. 1017, 82 Am. St. Rep. 400; Knight v. Marks, 183 Cal. 354, 191 P. 531.

In the case of Sunset Lumber Co. v. Bachelder, 167 Cal. 512, 140 P. 35, 36, Ann. Cas. 1916B, 664, a mechanic's lien had been held to be prior to that of a mortgagee. Pending an appeal by the mortgagee, the mechanic's lien was foreclosed, and the mortgagee bid in the property and paid the amount of the judgment to the lien claimant. On the appeal it was contended that by so acting he had waived his right to appeal, but the Supreme Court held otherwise, saying:

"In order to protect his own interests, in the absence of a stay of proceedings, Rankin (the mortgagee) was compelled to appear at the foreclosure sale and make such bid as might be necessary to make the property bring its reasonable value. The case is governed by the same principles as where a defendant against whom a judgment is rendered has appealed after execution has been taken out and enforced against him. In such cases the rule is said to be that 'a forced payment by execution sale against a nonconsenting judgment debtor cannot be held to abridge any of his rights upon or under appeal.' Vermont Marble Co. v. Black, 123 Cal. 23, 55 P. 599; Kenney v. Parks, 120 Cal. 24, 52 P. 40; Warner Bros. Co. v. Freud, 131 Cal. 639, 63 P. 1017, 82 Am. St. Rep. 400. The same principle applies here. The defendant Rankin was compelled to submit to the sale and protect his interest by bidding thereat, and he is not thereby estopped from availing himself of an appeal from the part of the judgment which is to his prejudice, and upon the reversal of which the remaining parts of the judgment will stand unaffected."

Counsel for respondents, in support of the motion to dismiss the appeal, rely to a large extent upon the case of Preluzsky v. Pacific Co-operative C. Co., 195 Cal. 290, 232 P. 970, 971. That case lays down the rule quoted by respondents as follows: "It is the general rule that a voluntary satisfaction of a judgment by a party estops him to prosecute an appeal therefrom." But the court continues in the same sentence: "But where such satisfaction is involuntary and enforced by process, the mere circumstance that the judgment has been so satisfied does not of itself alone deprive a party aggrieved of his right to appeal therefrom."

Respondents' contention that the act of appellant in the case at bar was a voluntary one is, we think, completely answered by the ruling in Sunset Lumber Co. v. Bachelder, supra.

[2] Respondents also advance the theory that, as appellant bid $10,000 for the property instead of $6,000, the amount he sought to pay for the reconveyance, and as respondents permitted appellant to purchase for $10,000 instead of requiring him to pay the sum of $19,984.33, the balance found to be due to them, the situation must be regarded as in the nature of a compromise. It is a sufficient answer to this contention to say that, outside of the mere facts so mentioned, there is no showing in the record on the motion to dismiss of any compromise in the matter, and we are not at liberty to make a contract of compromise or satisfaction for the parties when they themselves have not done so.

The motion to dismiss the appeal should be denied.

Coming to the appeal on its merits, there are many assignments of error which do not require separate attention, as they may be grouped under a few general topics and so considered.

[3-5] Appellant contends that all of the findings relative to the Wayne street property are not supported by competent evidence. As to many of the findings thus attacked this contention is undoubtedly correct. But as to the finding that the Wayne street property was included in the deed of trust merely as additional security for the performance of certain street work on the McKillop Heights property, and was to be reconveyed when that work was completed, and that the street work was actually completed prior to October 9, 1925, the evidence is more than sufficient to support it. This being so, all questions as to whether the security of the Wayne street property was worthless to respondents, or whether there were prior deeds of trust or other liens upon it, or whether it was sold on foreclosure of a prior lien, become immaterial to a decision of the case, and the findings as to those matters may be disregarded. It is well settled that failure to find upon an immaterial issue is not a ground for reversal, and similarly a finding on an immaterial issue becomes mere surplusage, and will not cause a reversal, if the material findings are supported by the evidence. It was established as a fact in the case by competent evidence that, upon the completion of the street work to the satisfaction of respondents, McKillop became entitled to a reconveyance of the Wayne street property, and therefore its reconveyance did not operate to deprive appellant of any right, or give rise to any cause of action in his favor.

For the same reason many of the assignments of error as to the admission of evidence are immaterial and require no further discussion.

Aside from the findings just referred to, an examination of the record discloses that the evidence is ample to support all of the other findings of the trial court.

[6, 7] Where findings are attacked for insufficiency of evidence to support them, the power of the appellate court begins and ends with the inquiry whether there is substantial evidence, contradicted or uncontradicted, which will in and of itself support the findings of the trial court, and if on any material point the testimony is in conflict, the appellate court must assume that the trial court resolved the conflict in favor of the prevailing party. Mercantile Investment Co. v. How (Cal. App.) 278 P. 243; Treadwell v. Nickell, 194 Cal. 243, 228 P. 25; Gjurich v. Fieg, 164 Cal. 429, 129 P. 464, Ann. Cas. 1916B, 111.

[8] Many of the assignments of error as to the evidence are merely stated in appellant's brief, and no attempt is made to point out the reasons for the claim of error. Error will not be presumed, and must be shown; therefore all such assignments must be disregarded. It is the duty of counsel to point out the error and to cite the authorities in support of their position, and, where they fail to do it, we will not search the record to find the error. People v. Chutnacut, 141 Cal. 682, 75 P. 340; People v. Schlosser (Cal. App.) 278 P. 898.

[9] Many of the specified errors in the admission of evidence are claimed by appellant to be violations of the parol evidence rule, as tending to vary the terms of the letter by which respondents agreed to reconvey the Burgess property to McKillop. Respondents urge in regard to this letter that it was based upon no consideration. Appellant claims that, being an instrument in writing, the letter imports a consideration. None being recited in the instrument, it was competent for respondents to show the true state of facts.

With certain exceptions, not material here, it is the rule that parol evidence may be given to show just what the consideration was, even though the transaction be evidenced by a writing. This being so, it was certainly proper in the case at bar for the respondents, in endeavoring to prove lack of consideration, to show the circumstances surrounding the giving of the letter to McKillop. They showed by ample evidence that before McKillop was entitled to demand a reconveyance of the Burgess property his loan must be in good standing, the building operations and the development of the tract must be proceeding, and the security of respondents must, generally speaking, be unaffected by any act of the borrower. All of this was reasonable and not at all improbable. It clearly appeared from the evidence that respondent loan association, as the promisor in the letter, received no benefit by giving it to McKillop, and that he suffered no detriment by reason of its receipt. After he defaulted, McKillop could not have demanded the reconveyance, and appellant's position is no better than that of the original borrower. The trial court found on ample evidence that this was the true state of the matter, and correctly concluded that there was no consideration for the letter.

[10] Appellant urges, however, that respondents are estopped from claiming that there was no consideration for the letter, because by their negligence in giving it to McKillop they made it possible for him to deceive appellant. There is no merit in this contention. The record shows clearly that the respondents were entirely ignorant of the fact that McKillop was negotiating, or intended to negotiate, a second loan on the property, and that the only purpose they had in mind in dealing with him was to aid in the improvement of the property so that their security would be enhanced. In view of the pleadings and the evidence, there is no justification in this case for the application of the doctrine of estoppel. Under the rule of caveat emptor, appellant, knowing that he was lending money on a second mortgage, was bound to find out all of the conditions surrounding the matter of the reconveyance. The record shows that he did not even see the letter in question until some time after he had paid over his money to the title insurance company. Appellant, under these circumstances, is not shown to have relied upon any statements contained in the letter, but upon the promise of McKillop to obtain the letter. He was not deceived or misled by anything contained in the letter, and therefore cannot claim any estoppel by reason of anything that respondents did in the matter.

[11] In its final analysis this case is in the nature of an action in specific performance. There being no adequate consideration moving to respondents, they cannot be compelled to reconvey the Burgess property. Section 3391, subd. 1, Civ. Code; Stein v. Archibald, 151 Cal. 220, at page 226, 90 P. 536.

[12] In this connection a very significant matter that should be noticed is the following: Appellant has come into a court of equity asking that respondents be compelled to reconvey certain property to him for the sum of $6,000. In his affidavit filed in opposition to the motion to dismiss the appeal, appellant swears as follows:

"That there was no other person than this plaintiff present willing to bid on said real property, save and excepting the said defendant California Mutual Building and Loan Association, which said California Mutual Building and Loan Association did offer to purchase said real property for the inadequate price of $6,000.00 and no more, and that this plaintiff was threatened by the said intended sale with the loss of the property to which he did then and does now claim an interest in, for a price entirely inadequate to its real value."

In view of the foregoing statement, it can hardly be said that he is doing equity in offering what he so solemnly declares to be an inadequate sum to obtain the reconveyance, and therefore he cannot be heard to ask equity.

There are no other matters requiring notice in connection with the appeal, and for the reasons stated the judgment should be affirmed.

It is therefore ordered that the motion to dismiss the appeal be denied, and that the judgment be affirmed.

KIRCHER v. HUNTER. (Civ. 5610.)★

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Oct. 29, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Nov. 27, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Dec. 26, 1929.

1. Appeal and error ⇨110—Order denying new trial is not appealable.

Appeal does not lie from an order denying new trial.

2. Contracts ⇨188—Subcontractor held not liable to owner for defective work, where owner's contract was solely with general contractor.

Where owner's contract with contractor provided that contractor would be held to provide all labor and material for entire completion of work, and entire consideration was paid to contractor, and contractor employed subcontractor, held subcontractor was not liable to owner for reconstruction work caused by subcontractor's defective work, as there was no privity of contract between owner and subcontractor.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; F. C. Valentine, Judge.

Action by Anna Kircher against V. O. Hunter. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed.

Hilton & Critchley, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Haas & Dunnigan and C. H. Veale, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CRAIG, J. [1] The respondent contracted in writing with one James H. Aye, as general contractor, to construct a dwelling house. The latter obtained appellant's services to construct certain tile work in two bathrooms, which later proved defective, whereupon respondent demanded that appellant perform necessary reconstruction work, which he declined to do. It was done by another, whom respondent paid, and thereafter instituted this action against the appellant for the cost of such extra work. Judgment was rendered in favor of the plaintiff, a motion for a new trial was prosecuted, which was denied, and this is an appeal from the judgment and from the ruling upon said motion. Since no appeal lies from an order denying a new trial, the proceeding last mentioned must be dismissed.

The parties agree upon the facts, and mutually submit for determination the question of law whether respondent, the owner, should recover from appellant or the general contractor. The contract first mentioned provided, in part, as follows: "(1) The said builder agrees to build for the said owner, * * * a two-story frame and stucco dwelling, also a frame and stucco garage, all in accordance with plan and specifications * * * The owner agrees to pay the said builder the sum of $14,875. no/100 to include the full cost of construction, labor and materials. The payment of said sum is to be as follows: Once each week there shall be an accounting between the said builder and the said owner, at which time receipted vouchers for labor and petty items will be tendered to the owner by the builder in return for the owner's check to cover such total amounts. All bills for material shall be paid to the dealers direct by the owner. Any and all sums remaining within the total amount of the cost price, namely $14,875. no/100 plus all sums for extras, if any, at the completion of the building shall be paid to said builder, provided that a period of thirty-five (35) days shall elapse and it is found that no liens have been filed."

The plans and specifications required that:

"The floors in the bathrooms are to be one inch hexagonal Eastern tile, with clover leaf in blue border, well laid in cement, making an absolutely water-tight job.

"The side wall of the bathrooms and shower on the second floor to be tiled with 3" x 6" glazed Eastern tile to a height of 5' 6" with blue border and panel border.

"The above tile work to have 6" base on bottom and 1" cap mould at the top; both to be of design selected by the owner."

It appears that the general contractor negotiated with and employed appellant to perform the work of which complaint was made, and that he also made out a bill therefor, upon a billhead of the appellant, directly to the owner, received respondent's check payable to appellant, and delivered the same. Appellant testified that he had no conversation with respondent or his wife regarding the employment, and did not consult the plans and specifications, but acted entirely under the directions of the general contractor. Aye also testified that he personally selected Hunter for the work, that he instructed him as to what was wanted, and did not submit to him the specifications agreed upon by the owner. Respondent testified that Mrs. Hunter paid all bills, and she testified the general contractor gave her the bill; that she "checked up the bill with Mr. Aye, and then he gave me the bill, and I checked it up with him, and I give him the check, and he in turn gave it to Mr. Hunter"; that Aye acted as her agent "in this building." Respondent stresses the fact that the owners made suggestions to the subcontractor, but it is observed that this was expressly agreed upon between them and the contractor. The original specifications also provided that all materials and workmanship should be of the best, and that "the contractor will be held to provide all labor and material necessary for the entire completion of the work."

[2] It has been held that there is no privity of contract between an owner and a subcontractor. Bowen v. Aubrey, 22 Cal. 566; Walsh v. McMenomy, 74 Cal. 356, 16 P. 17. Respondent attempts to reply upon the general rule that privity of contract may be implied between a promisor and one to whom the consideration flows, and that a beneficiary who furnishes consideration may enforce a contract which has been obtained for him by a third person. However, the authorities cited in his briefs differ as to facts but not in principle with those above mentioned. For instance, Rossman v. Townsend, 17 Wis. 95, 84 Am. Dec. 733, was an action for the price of flour, and it was there expressly held that, since there was no privity of contract between the plaintiff and the defendant, the former must look to the agent with whom he dealt. So, in the instant case, the whole amount of the contract price was made payable to Aye, who employed the appellant herein, and by the terms of the specifications the contractor was expressly responsible for "all labor and material necessary for the entire completion of the work." The courts cannot contract for parties, nor is there room for construction of this contract and specifications otherwise than as the parties plainly expressed their intentions.

The appeal from the order denying a new trial is dismissed, and the judgment is reversed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; William C. Doran, Judge.

On petition for rehearing. Petition denied. For original opinion, see 280 P. 701.

Thomas A. Wood and O. B. DeCamp, both of Los Angeles (F. Britton McConnell, of Los Angeles, of counsel), for appellant.

Lawler & Degnan, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. Respondent bases its petition for a rehearing very largely upon the asserted fact that the complaint fails to state a cause of action in so far as it alleges that the bond furnished by itself covered two licensed real estate brokers, and fails to allege that any wrongful act has been performed by one of them and upon the claim that we have ignored "the absolute defense disclosed by the uncontradicted affidavits of appellee on file (in support of its motion to set aside its default), viz.: That appellee never became surety upon the bond of G. C. Harbolt, the only broker against whom an attempt is made to state a cause of action."

[1-3] These matters were not before us on this appeal from an order vacating a default. The only issue presented for our determination or which we had jurisdiction to decide was whether or not the court below had abused its discretion in making the order setting aside the default upon the ground of excusable neglect in failing to appear in response to the summons served on it. This point we have determined after a careful examination of the affidavits upon which the petitioner respondent based its motion in the court below and upon the theory that all the facts stated therein were true (Corgiat v. Realty Mortgage Corp., 86 Cal. App. 37, 260 P. 573), but that they failed to disclose any excuse or justification for the failure of respondent to obey the summons. The question of the sufficiency of the complaint to state a cause of action was not germane to the matter presented to the court below on application for relief under section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Respondent might have raised it either by demurrer or answer had it not, by its own inexcusable negligence, permitted its default to be taken; it may still raise it by an appeal from the judgment which, from the record before us, we do not understand has been entered, but which will probably follow upon the going down of the remittitur herein, since an objection that the complaint fails to state a cause of action may be raised at any stage of the proceedings and even for the first time on appeal (Code Civ. Proc. § 434; Spreckels v. Gorrill, 152 Cal. 383, 92 P. 1011; Bell v. Thompson, 147 Cal. 689, 82 P. 327), and this is true, although the judgment was by default. Ryan v. Holliday, 110 Cal. 335, 42 P. 891.

The petition for rehearing is denied.

(Civ. 6870.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Oct. 28, 1929.

1. Process ☞166—Where nonresident's acknowledgment of service evidences intention to waive further service, it confers jurisdiction over defendant's person, provided court has jurisdiction over subject-matter.

Where acknowledgment of service made upon nonresident defendant in foreign state is so worded as to evidence an intention to waive further service, it partakes of nature of waiver and is legally sufficient to confer jurisdiction over person of defendant, provided court has jurisdiction over subject-matter.

2. Process ☞166—Nonresident's acceptance of service reading, "Service of * * * summons is hereby accepted," conferred jurisdiction over person, though order for publication of service was not obtained as required.

Defendant's written acceptance in state of service in suit commenced in Oregon, reading as follows: "Service of within and foregoing summons is hereby accepted this 3rd day of October, 1922," held to imply an approval of form and sufficiency of service and an intention to submit to jurisdiction of court and to thus confer jurisdiction over person so that judgment in such suit was not void, though order for publication of service was not obtained as required.

3. Judgment ☞818(1)—Foreign judgment is entitled to same presumptions of regularity in jurisdiction as domestic judgment.

Foreign judgment is entitled to same presumptions of regularity in jurisdiction as domestic judgment, and, unless it be shown by clear and convincing evidence that there has been want of jurisdiction, presumption that judgment is valid must prevail.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Edmund P. Mogan, Judge.

Action for damages for conversion of logging equipment by Francis E. Smith against Moore Mill & Lumber Company. From a judgment of nonsuit, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

C. K. Bonestell, Walter S. Brann, and Edgar H. Rowe, all of San Francisco, for appellant.

K. C. Partridge, of San Francisco, for respondent.

KNIGHT, J. Appellant brought this action upon an assigned claim of the Fyfe-Wilson Lumber Company to recover damages for the alleged conversion of certain logging equipment located in the state of Oregon. Judgment of nonsuit was entered, and the appeal is taken therefrom.

The respondent Moore Mill & Lumber Company is an Oregon corporation, and the Fyfe-Wilson Lumber Company is incorporated under the laws of California. Some time prior to September, 1922, the latter company delivered to respondent in Coos county, Or., the logging equipment in question for the purpose of enabling respondent to get out logs. At the time of such delivery the Fyfe-Wilson Lumber Company owed respondent $50,000, which was evidenced in part by promissory notes, one being for the sum of $3,000. On September 22, 1922, respondent commenced suit on the note last mentioned in the circuit court of Coos county, Or., and caused a writ of attachment to be issued and levied upon the property in question. Thereafter, and on January 8, 1924, judgment by default was entered and the property was sold under execution and bid in by respondent. More than two years thereafter the present action was commenced in the superior court in and for the city and county of San Francisco, upon the theory that the judgment rendered in the Oregon court and the execution sale based thereon were void, appellant claiming that there was an attempted personal service of summons on the Fyfe-Wilson Lumber Company outside the state of Oregon without first having obtained an order for the publication of the summons as required by the laws of that state, and that therefore the Oregon court did not acquire jurisdiction of the person of said company as the defendant in the action.

The laws of Oregon relating to the service of summons upon nonresidents of that state are admittedly similar to those of California in providing that in certain classes of cases, where service is to be made upon a defendant without the state, it is essential to a valid service that an order of court be first obtained, based on affidavit, for the publication of the summons, and that after such order is obtained personal service out of the state is equivalent to publication, etc. Here, admittedly, no such affidavit was made nor any such order obtained. But the record shows that the judgment was entered upon the strength of a written acceptance of service of summons signed by the Fyfe-Wilson Lumber Company, the terms of which represented that such service was made in Coos county, Or. It read as follows: "State of Oregon, County of Coos.—ss. Service of the within and foregoing summons is hereby accepted this 3rd day of October, 1922, by delivery to me of a duly certified copy of the complaint herein together with a true copy of the foregoing summons. [signed] Fyfe-Wilson Lumber Co., By Joseph Fyfe, Jr., V. P." Appellant omitted to insert in the bill of exceptions herein a copy of the complaint filed in the Oregon action, and consequently there is nothing in the record before us to show that prior to the entry of judgment the Oregon court was apprised of the fact that the Fyfe-Wilson Lumber Company was a California corporation, or, if so, that its principal place of business was not in Oregon; and moreover, the recitals in the judgment are to the effect that service of the summons was duly made within the court's jurisdiction. However, in the present action, appellant introduced evidence to prove, in contradiction of the terms of the written acceptance of service, that such service was in fact not made in Oregon but in California. Therefore, the determinative question presented by the appeal relates to the legal effect of such written acceptance of service.

[1] In this connection it may be stated generally that, although an acknowledgment of service when made upon a nonresident defendant has the effect merely of personal service without the state, such acknowledgment by its terms may amount to something more than a mere acknowledgment of service and constitute a waiver of want of jurisdiction of the person of the defendant. 32 Cyc., p. 450. Such was declared to be the law as early as 1834, for in the case of Dunn v. Dunn, 4 Paige (N. Y.) 425, it was said: "In all cases, however, when the court has jurisdiction over the subject matter of the suit, if the defendant who is beyond the limits of the state thinks proper to waive that objection by a voluntary appearance, or by consenting to accept as regular the service of process upon him at the place where he resides or is found, he cannot afterwards object to the regularity of the proceedings against him, founded on such service." And although the weight of authority seems to hold that a bare acknowledgment of the fact of service beyond the territorial jurisdiction of the court does not amount to a waiver (see Allured v. Voller, 107 Mich. 476, 65 N. W. 285), it is well established that, if the acknowledgment is so worded as to evidence an intention to waive further service, it partakes of the nature of a waiver and is legally sufficient to confer jurisdiction over the person of the defendant, provided, of course, the court has jurisdiction over the subject-matter. Jones v. Merrill, 113 Mich. 433, 71 N. W. 838, 67 Am. St. Rep. 475. The written admission of service considered in the case last cited bears a strong analogy to the written acceptance involved in the present case. It reads as follows: "I hereby admit due personal service upon me of the within subpoena this eleventh day of September, 1894. (signed) Melissa C. Livermore." and the same was held to be a waiver and therefore legally sufficient to confer jurisdiction over the person of the party signing it. As already shown, the written acceptance of service in the present case reads: "* * * Service of the within and foregoing summons is hereby accepted this 3rd day of October, 1922. * * *"

[2] It will thus be observed that, as in the case of Jones v. Merrill, supra, the language used goes beyond the mere admission of the fact of service and the bare acknowledgment of the receipt of copies of the complaint and summons, and expressly states that service of summons "is hereby accepted," clearly implying an approval of the form and sufficiency of the service and an intention to submit to the jurisdiction of the court. Furthermore, the fact that the Fyfe-Wilson Lumber Company made it appear by the caption of the written acceptance that summons was served within the state of Oregon, when in fact it was served in California, tends strongly to fortify the conclusion that thereby the company intended to waive any defect of service, because evidently, if the truth had been set forth therein, to wit, that the service was made in California, the Oregon court doubtless would have refused to enter judgment in the state of the record before it, that is, in the absence of an affidavit and order for publication of the summons. And the further fact that more than two years were allowed to elapse before any steps were taken to assail the validity of the judgment is also persuasive of the belief that, irrespective of the condition of the record in the case, said company was willing that judgment should be entered against it without further proceedings being had.

[3] It is doubtless the law, as appellant contends, that a judgment of a court of record of another state differs in its conclusive effect from such a domestic judgment in one material respect, namely, that it may always be shown by evidence outside the record and even in opposition to the recitals that the court was without jurisdiction either of the subject matter, or of the parties, and that consequently it may be shown by extrinsic evidence that summons was not in fact served. Greenzweig v. Strelinger, 103 Cal. 278, 37 P. 398; 15 Cal. Jur. 245. Nevertheless, such a judgment is entitled to the same presumptions of regularity in jurisdiction as a domestic judgment, and, unless it be shown by clear and convincing evidence that there has been a want of jurisdiction, the presumption that its judgment is valid must prevail. 15 Cal. Jur. 246; Estate of Wiechers, 199 Cal. 523, 250 P. 397; Estate of Pusey, 177 Cal. 367, 170 P. 846.

For the reasons stated the judgment is affirmed.

BURLINGAME v. TRAEGER et al.
(Civ. 6240.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Oct. 21, 1929.

1. False imprisonment $\S$ 20(1)—Demurrer to complaint for illegal arrest held properly sustained for failure to give facts showing insufficiency of affidavit or order of arrest and failure to show irregularity on face of order or lack of jurisdiction.

In action for illegal arrest, demurrer to complaint held properly sustained because of failure to allege any facts indicating order of arrest or affidavit on which it was based were insufficient, and because of failure to show any irregularity on face of order of arrest or any lack of jurisdiction of court to issue it; allegations that order was "illegal," "unauthorized," and "void," and that affidavit was insufficient, being conclusions of law.

2. Pleadings $\S$ 216(1)—On general demurrer court considers merely facts pleaded in complaint.

Court in passing on sufficiency of complaint alleging illegal arrest, attacked by general demurrer, was required to consider merely the facts pleaded therein.

3. Pleadings $\S$ 8(6)—Allegation that instrument is "illegal," "unauthorized," or "void," is but conclusion of law.

Allegation, in complaint for illegal arrest, that instrument was "illegal," "unauthorized," or "void," is but a conclusion of law, and such words, when used in connection with issuable facts, are to be regarded as surplusage, not obviating necessity of alleging facts showing the illegality, lack of authorization, or invalidity.

4. False imprisonment $\S$ 7(3)—Officer is not required to look behind order of arrest, regular on face, delivered to him after issuance by court of competent jurisdiction (Pol. Code, $\S$ 4168).

Officer to whom order of arrest has been delivered for execution is not required at his peril to look behind order, if it appears to be regular on face and issued by court of competent jurisdiction, under Pol. Code, $\S$ 4168).

5. Arrest $\S$ 9—Women held subject to civil arrest in superior court action (Code Civ. Proc. $\S\S$ 4, 17, 478, 480-504, 861; Pol. Code, $\S\S$ 4468, 4480).

Women held subject to civil arrest in superior court action under Code Civ. Proc. $\S\S$ 4, 17, 478, 480-504, and Pol. Code, $\S$ 4468, in view of common-law rule which distinguished between married and unmarried women, since Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 861, exempting females from civil arrest, applies only to actions in justices' courts under Pol. Code, $\S$ 4480.

6. Common law $\S$ 12—Codes establish law of state respecting the subjects to which they relate (Pol. Code, $\S$ 4468).

Codes were intended to establish the law of the state respecting the subjects to which they relate, so that it is only when Code and other statutes are silent that common law governs under Pol. Code, $\S$ 4468.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; William Hazlett, Judge.

Action by Dolores K. Burlingame against William I. Traeger and another for damages of illegal arrest. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

C. A. Stice, of Los Angeles, for appellant. Everett W. Mattoon, Co. Counsel, and McIntyre Faries, Deputy Co. Counsel, both of Los Angeles, for respondents.

BURNELL, Justice pro tem. This appeal is taken from a judgment entered in favor of the defendants upon the failure of the plaintiff to amend her complaint after demurrers sustained, and therefore the only question before us is as to the sufficiency of the facts stated to constitute a cause of action against the defendant sheriff and his deputy.

An understandable presentation of the points involved in the discussion of this question requires us to set forth those portions of the pleading which attempt to allege the gravamen of the plaintiff's cause of action. After alleging that at the time of the acts complained of defendant Traeger was the sheriff of Los Angeles county and that his codefendant was a deputy sheriff, the complaint proceeds as follows:

"II. That on or about the 2nd day of July, 1926, the defendants were in possession of, and had a certain illegal and unauthorized order of arrest issued in the action of L. W. Burlingame v. Dolores K. Burlingame, in the Superior Court, in and for the county of Los Angeles, No. 199981.

"III. That the above referred to order of arrest had been issued in a civil action and was civil process and the same was void, illegal and unauthorized for the reason that the affidavit of arrest upon which the same was issued was insufficient for the reason that it did not state facts to cause an order of arrest to issue, and for the further reason, that the person named therein, Dolores K.

Burlingame, who was the defendant in the above referred to action, and is the plaintiff in this action, was, and is a female.

"IV. That the above mentioned order of arrest was on the 13th day of July, 1926, vacated by order of the court in the above mentioned action of L. W. Burlingame v. Dolores K. Burlingame, for the reason that the same was illegal and unauthorized.

"V. That the defendants unlawfully served the same illegal order of arrest above referred to on the defendant in Los Angeles county, and that pretending to act under the above referred to illegal order of arrest that they, the defendants herein, did on the 2nd day of July, 1926, in the county of Los Angeles, arrest the defendant and imprison her in the county jail of Los Angeles county."

We have italicized certain portions of the pleading quoted for reasons which will presently appear.

Appellant contends: First, that the complaint sets up facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action for damages for an illegal arrest because of the allegation therein that the affidavit upon which the order of arrest was based was insufficient in that facts warranting such an order were not stated therein; and, secondly, that apart from all considerations as to the sufficiency of the pleading with respect to its allegations as to the illegality of the affidavit and the order based thereon, it sufficiently stated a cause of action, in that it alleged that the plaintiff was a woman, the point being urged that under the law of California a woman is not subject to arrest in a civil action in any court.

[1] We are unable to agree with either of these contentions. The complaint fails to allege a single fact from which the court could draw the conclusion that either the order of arrest or the affidavit upon which it was based was insufficient. The portions thereof which we have italicized are mere conclusions of law as to the sufficiency of statements which are not set forth in the complaint. They are but the views of the pleader as to matters which it was for the court to determine upon an inspection of the affidavit referred to, or a recital of the facts alleged therein. As said in Callahan v. Broderick, 124 Cal. 80, 56 P. 782, 783: "The necessity for a statement of the facts essential to a right claimed is not obviated by averments of legal conclusions (Aurrecoechea v. Sinclair, 60 Cal. 532); for allegations of conclusions of law will be disregarded in considering objections raised by demurrer. (Ohm v. San Francisco, 92 Cal. 437, 28 P. 580.) A conclusion of law tenders no issue, and a complaint which depends upon such allegations is insufficient and demurrable. Branham v. Mayor, 24 Cal. 585. The code provision requires a concise statement of the facts constituting the cause of action, not such statements of the law governing it. (Code Civ. Proc. § 426.)"

[2,3] The court below was required, in passing upon the sufficiency of the complaint when attacked by a general demurrer, to consider merely the facts plead therein. Its duty lay within the principle so clearly stated by the late learned Chief Justice Beatty in Ohm v. San Francisco, supra: "In considering the objections to this complaint, we remark at the outset that its allegations are accepted as true so far only as they relate to matters of fact as distinguished from matters of law. As to the latter, they will be treated as if they were not made, because, so far as they are correct, they are useless, and when erroneous, worse than useless." 92 Cal. 437, 28 P. 580, 583. The rules are elementary that an allegation that an instrument is "illegal," "unauthorized," or "void" is but a conclusion of law, and that such words, when used in connection with issuable facts, are to be regarded as mere surplusage and never obviate the necessity of alleging the facts showing wherein the illegality, lack of authorization or invalidity lies. Callahan v. Broderick, supra; Moffatt v. Bulson, 96 Cal. 106, 30 P. 1022, 31 Am. St. Rep. 192; Shamlan v. Wells, 197 Cal. 716, 242 P. 483; Miles v. McDermott, 31 Cal. 270, and Hedges v. Dam, 72 Cal. 520, 14 P. 133.

Stripped then of its conclusions of law and of the pleader and reduced to the recital of such facts as are pleaded, the complaint shows that the defendant sheriff and his deputy had an order of arrest which was a civil process, issued in an action pending in the superior court, and that, pretending to act under this order, they arrested and imprisoned the plaintiff on the day the order was issued and that the order was vacated eleven days later. There is not one word in the complaint to indicate that the order was not regular on its face.

[4] We are of the opinion that the trial court very properly sustained the demurrer, not only because of the failure of the complaint to allege any facts from which the court might determine the question of the sufficiency of the affidavit on which the order was based, but also because of its failure to show any lack of regularity on the face of the order of arrest or any lack of jurisdiction of the court to issue it. An officer to whom an order or a warrant of arrest has been delivered for execution is not required at his peril to look behind the order if it appears to be regular on its face and issued by a court of competent jurisdiction. The statutory law of this state provides that, "A sheriff or other ministerial officer is justified in the execution of, and must execute, all process and orders regular on their face and issued by competent authority, whatever may be the defect in the proceedings upon which they were issued." Pol. Code, § 4168. As said in Magnaud v. Traeger, 66 Cal. App. 526, 226 P. 990, 992: "Without doubt, if a writ or an order commanding a sheriff to do or to refrain from doing an act be legal upon its face and show an apparent jurisdiction, and if the court issuing the writ or making the order has jurisdiction of the subject matter, the officer will be protected when in good faith he acts in obedience to the writ or to the order." See, also, 3 Cal. Jur. 157 and 24 R. C. L. 993. In closing this phase of our opinion we may well adopt the language used in Pankewicz v. Jess, 27 Cal. App. 340, 149 P. 997, 998, wherein it was said: "The complaint shows that the imprisonment was made under a warrant. It is the duty of the plaintiff to set out in his complaint the fact that such warrant was irregular on its face. Barker v. Anderson, 81 Mich. 508, 45 N. W. 1108; 19 Cyc. 357; Barfield v. Turner, 101 N. C. 357, 8 S. E. 115. Every allegation in the complaint in the present case may be true, and yet it may be equally true that the arrest of the plaintiff was upon a warrant regular upon its face."

[5, 6] We have so far discussed the matter before us without reference to appellant's contention that a woman is not subject to civil arrest in this state. This was undoubtedly the rule at common law so far at least as married women were concerned. It had its basis in a social and legal system under which a wife was little better than a chattel, presumably under the complete domination of her lord and master and denied all contractual power and independence of legal or political action, a system from which the womanhood of this nation has long since emerged victorious in a noble fight for equality of human beings regardless of sex. But even at the common law the exemption of women from arrest on civil process applied only to wives. A résumé of the law on this subject may be found in 5 Corpus Juris, pp. 463 and 464, as follows:

"Females. At common law a wife could not be legally arrested on mesne process, and, if arrested, she may be discharged on common bail, except in cases where she has practiced a fraud in holding herself out as a married woman. In New York, notwithstanding the statute authorizing the arrest of a female for willful injury to person, character or property, the exemption from arrest of a married woman remains as at common law.

"Unmarried females, on the other hand, seem to have enjoyed no privilege from arrest at common law, at least for torts committed by them. Statutes in different jurisdictions variously exempt females from arrest in all civil actions, with a saving, however, in some states as to certain specified kinds of civil actions."

The complaint in this action contains no allegation that the plaintiff was a married woman at the time of her arrest.

The rule as to the applicability of the common law is thus stated in our Political Code: "The common law of England, so far as it is not repugnant to or inconsistent with the Constitution of the United States, or the Constitution or laws of this state, is the rule of decision in all the courts of this state." Pol. Code, § 4468. This rule, however, is to be taken in conjunction with that stated in section 4 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which reads as follows: "The rule of the common law, that statutes in derogation thereof are to be strictly construed, has no application to this code. The code establishes the law of this state respecting the subjects to which it relates, and its provisions and all proceedings under it are to be liberally construed, with a view to effect its objects and to promote justice." It must also be borne in mind that "our codes, of course, were intended as complete revisions of the existing laws upon the subjects embraced therein" (Estate of Carraghar, 181 Cal. 15, 183 P. 161, 163), and that their provisions establish the law of this state respecting the subjects to which they relate (In re Apple, 66 Cal. 432, 6 P. 7; McLean v. Blue Point Mining Co., 51 Cal. 225). It is only when the Code and other statutes are silent that the common law governs.

The law relating to civil arrest in California is purely statutory and is to be found in certain sections of the Code of Civil Procedure, which also contains the rule to be applied to the construction of its various provisions, "Words used in the masculine gender include the feminine and neuter." Section 17. Section 478 of that Code provides: "No person can be arrested in a civil action, except as prescribed in this code." The following section sets forth the classes of action in which such an arrest may be ordered, while sections 480 to and including 504 prescribe the procedure to obtain an order of arrest, deal with the matter of bail, provide a method of vacating the order of arrest, etc. In short, it may be said that chapter 1 of title 7 of the Code of Civil Procedure, in which these sections are found, prescribes a full and complete scheme of procedure, as well as establishes the rules of law governing the subject of civil arrest in actions in the superior courts of this state, while article 1 of chapter 4 of title 11 of the same Code ("Proceedings in Justices' Courts") deals with the same subject as applied to actions before justices of the peace.

It is significant that, while the sections dealing with the subject as applied to superior court actions contain nothing as to exemptions from their provisions because of sex, those relating to justices' court proceedings do specifically provide that "no female can be arrested in any action" (Section 861, Code Civ. Proc.). All of these sections were enacted as portions of the original code adopted in 1872 and while a few of them have been subsequently amended none of these amendments are relevant to the subject under discussion here. It is a familiar rule that the Codes are to be construed as a single statute. Pol. Code, § 4480; People v. Central Pacific Ry. Co., 83 Cal. 393, 23 P. 303; McKay v. McKay, 125 Cal. 65, 57 P. 677. And it is also the rule that "the expression of one excludes the other"—expressio unius est exclusio alterius. Pasadena University v. Los Angeles County, 190 Cal. 786, 214 P. 868; Ex parte Nowak, 184 Cal. 701, 195 P. 402; People v. Tinder, 19 Cal. 539, 81 Am. Dec. 77.

Applying these rules of construction, it is evident that the exemption from civil arrest accorded "females" by section 861 of the Code of Civil Procedure applies only to actions in justices' courts, to which class of actions alone the article, chapter and "title" in which it is found relates.

The judgment is affirmed.

CHASE v. SUNSET MUTUAL LIFE ASS'N.
(Civ. 18.)

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California. Oct. 31, 1929.

1. Insurance $\S$ 646(3)—Life insurer had burden of proving insured knew serious condition of his health before policy was issued.

In action on life insurance policy, insurer had burden of proving insured knowingly misrepresented his condition in application for insurance, or that he was aware before the policy was issued that he was afflicted with a serious disease, but did not inform insurance company.

2. Insurance $\S$ 665(3)—Evidence supported findings insured considered himself in good health when applying for insurance, and was not aware before policy was issued that he was afflicted with serious disease.

In action on life insurance policy, evidence held to support findings that insured, when making application for life insurance, considered himself in good health, and that he was not aware before policy was issued six days after the application that he was afflicted with serious disease.

3. Insurance $\S$ 291(3)—Where insured's representations regarding health were honestly made, and justified by his knowledge at time of application, fact that representations proved unfounded by subsequent events did not avoid policy.

Where insured's representations regarding his health in application for life insurance were honestly made, and were justified by his then knowledge of his physical condition, mere fact that representations of insured were proved to be unfounded by subsequent events, in absence of fraud or deceit, did not avoid policy.

4. Insurance $\S$ 634(1)—In action on mutual benefit life policy, complaint alleging insured had paid dues sufficiently alleged he was in good standing.

In action on mutual benefit life insurance policy, complaint showing that conditions of contract had been met by insured by payment of all dues provided for in policy up until time of death held to sufficiently allege that insured was in good standing in association at time of his death, though there was no express allegation to that effect.

5. Trial $\S$ 68(1)—Denying insurer's application after close of trial to reopen case for testimony of insured's physician held not error under circumstances.

Denial of insurer's application, made several days after conclusion of trial, to reopen case to take testimony of insured's physician, held not error, where physician was present in court during trial on behalf of plaintiff, but was not called to witness stand by either plaintiff or defendant, and affidavit indicated that physician would have testified, if called to stand, in support of plaintiff's case.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Bernardino County; Chas. L. Allison, Judge.

Action by Edith Chase against the Sunset Mutual Life Association on a mutual benefit life insurance policy. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Le Roy B. Lorenz, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

James V. Brewer and Paul M. Wikoff, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SLOANE, P. J. This is an appeal by the defendant Sunset Mutual Life Association from a judgment for $1,400, with interest and costs on a mutual benefit life insurance policy. The insurance was taken out by one Henry Niel Chase, upon an application in writing made by him on the 5th day of April, 1927. The policy bears date of April 11, 1927. The insured had an attack of illness on April 7th, and, on account of a recurring attack on April 11, was taken to a hospital on the 14th of that month, and underwent an operation on April 16th, and died on April 22, 1927.

In the application for insurance of April 5th, upon which the defendant company issued the policy sued on, the applicant certified that he was in good health, and, as far as he knew, he had no disease or other condition that would prevent him from obtaining life insurance, and that he understood that the falsity of any statement as to his physical condition would bar the right to recovery on his policy. His wife, the plaintiff in this action, was named as beneficiary in the policy issued.

The issue on which the case was tried, is raised by the allegation in defendant's answer that the policy was executed in reliance on decedent's representations as to the state of his health contained in his application for insurance, and that he therein "fraudulently stated that he was in good health, knowing at the time that this statement was false, with the intent to deceive and defraud the defendant; that the said Henry Niel Chase was not at the time in good health, but was suffering, and had suffered prior to his statement made on the 5th day of April, 1927, for a considerable length of time; that said suffering was caused by a diseased gall bladder, from which he died on the 22nd day of April, 1927; that the deceased fraudulently stated in said application that he had not consulted a doctor during the last 3 years prior to the signing of said application for membership, and that said statement was false, and that said Henry Niel Chase intended to deceive, and did deceive the defendant by said statement."

Before the conclusion of the trial, the defendant by leave of court filed an amendment to its answer, in which it is alleged that "after the making of the application by the insured, to-wit, after April 5, 1927, and before the execution of said policy, i. e., before April 11, 1927, the insured became seriously ill, that he was sick; that he had an attack; that he was not in good health, that he was thereafter physically able to communicate the fact of such ill health to the defendant insurer before the date of the execution of said policy of life insurance; that the said insured knew that the insurer would not have issued the said policy herein sued upon, if the facts were brought to the attention of said insurer; that the insured fraudulently concealed the said facts from the defendant insurer for the purpose of defrauding this defendant; that if such facts as to the insured's illness during the said period were made known to this defendant that this defendant would not have issued said policy of life insurance."

The case was tried on the issue so presented, and the trial court found for the plaintiff and against the defendant as to any fraud or intentional deceit or misrepresentation on the part of the insured.

While the insured understood, and it is recited in the policy that "false statement of any material fact covered in the signed application for membership shall void this policy and limit the amount payable thereunder to the total amount paid by said member on this membership," there is nothing in the policy giving him notice that he was required to inform the insurance company of any attack of illness he might have in the interim between the submitting of his application and the issuance of the policy; and there is nothing in the pleadings to indicate that his attention was at any time called to the necessity of any such action on his part to validate his insurance. He had signed the statements of his application, paid into the company the amount of the premium called for, and performed all of the conditions prerequisite to the issuance to him of his policy of insurance, and doubtless assumed, as people usually do, that from that date on his life was insured.

[1, 2] It may be conceded, however, under the authorities cited, that, if he was aware, subsequent to the date of his application and representations as to his physical condition, and before the issuance of the policy, that he was afflicted with a serious disease, it was his duty to so inform the insurance company. Indeed, it may be conceded that if, prior to the date of the issuance of this policy, Mr. Chase was aware, or seriously apprehended, that he was suffering from any disease that was likely to seriously impair his health, his beneficiary would not be entitled to recover in this action. The material and controlling findings of the trial court in this case are those in which it is found that the insured was not in possession of knowledge as to his condition such as would lead him to apprehend that his life or his health was seriously endangered. The evidence in the record is such as to justify the conclusion that up to and including the time he made application for life insurance he considered himself a hale, hearty man. His occupation was the strenuous one of a cement worker, and his wife testified that up to the attack of illness which occurred April 7, 1927, in the several years she had been married to him, he had never been sick or had a doctor, or complained of any pain or illness. The court was justified in finding that on the 5th day of April he considered himself a well man. The only thing that occurred between that date and the 11th of April, the date of the issuance of the policy, to warn him of a different condition, was a sudden attack of illness on the night of the 7th, from which he appears to have speedily recovered, as a day or two later he visited his wife, who was temporarily in another town with relatives. At that time, his only reference to this attack seems to have been called out by some conversation relating to the taking out of insurance by some acquaintance. His wife testifies that he jokingly referred to the fact that he had taken out an insurance policy, and that he was pretty sick a night or two afterwards, and he did not know but that she would have occasion to enjoy his insurance money earlier than he had anticipated. There was nothing in the conversation to indicate that he had taken the matter seriously, or that he was still suffering from the effects of the attack. It was not until after the 11th of April that there was a recurrence of his trouble, and he received information that it would probably be necessary for him to go to the hospital for an operation. His actual condition was determined through the operation itself on the 16th of April, when it developed that he was suffering from a gall stone impacted in the passage from the kidneys to the bladder. How long this trouble had been progressing, does not appear. The medical evidence is to the effect that he might not have been conscious of any severe pain from this source until the gall stone passed from the kidney to the passage. The death certificate recites that the cause of death was "myocarditis post operative paralytic ileum impacted stone in ureter." As nearly as we can make out, this means in layman's English that he had a gall stone impacted in the passage from the kidneys to the bladder, accompanied by a condition of the heart which indicated a weakening or breaking down of the muscle cells, and that these conditions, including the operation for removal of the gall stone, caused the death of the insured.

It appears that the heart affection might have existed for some period without the patient being aware of any serious condition. It seems unlikely from the testimony of the doctors that there could have been any movement of the gall stone between the kidneys and the bladder without severe pain. The patient did have severe pain on the 7th of April, but there is no evidence that he had ever had it before, or that he knew what caused it. For all the evidence discloses, it may have been attributed to an attack of colic or indigestion. There is doubtless some point of time when these gall stones begin their painful passage from the kidney to the bladder, and it does not appear how far this stone had progressed before it became impacted.

So far as the indication of heart trouble is here involved, it appears from the testimony of Dr. Savage, the surgeon who performed the operation, that he himself did not suspect its existence until three or four days after the operation. He says:

"I began to suspect it from the very poor way his heart was acting.

"Q. Then you would not hardly believe that this man had known that himself would you? A. My honest opinion is that he probably knew nothing of it. That is only an opinion; I don't know; I never saw him before I operated on him."

This doctor also testified that, excepting the process of movement of gall stones, the disturbance might be very indefinite, probably indicating a digestive disturbance. With the exception of the single attack of April 7th, it does not appear that the patient was subject to any degree of suffering that would indicate a serious condition, until he was taken to the hospital, after which the record discloses that he was in a very serious condition, and suffered almost continuous attacks of renal colic.

While the unlikelihood of a patient in the condition the insured was in at the time of the operation having reached that stage of the disease without becoming aware of some serious ailment, is apparent, it is purely a matter of inference, as there is no direct evidence to support appellant's contention that the insured knowingly misrepresented his condition, or that the insurance company was misled by any conscious or intentional concealment on his part. On the other hand, the circumstances presented to the court are such as make it entirely possible, if not probable, that the deceased, up to the time he went to the hospital, was unaware of his condition. The burden of proof in this particular was upon the plaintiff, and, on the strength of conflicting evidence and inferences, the court found in favor of the insured. We think there was reasonable basis for such finding, and, without going further into the details of the evidence, are of the opinion that the findings in this essential particular are supported by the evidence. This is the only important point in the case.

[3] Appellant specifies finding No. X as unsupported by the evidence. The court there finds that it is not true that the defendant would never have entered into the insurance contract with the said decedent, except for the statements made by the said decedent; that it is not true that defendant relied on the statements of said decedent. We doubt if this finding is supported by the evidence, but it is not material to the decision of the case. Assuming, as is doubtless the fact, that the defendant company did rely upon the representations of the insured in his application, and would not have entered into the contract of insurance if such representations had not been made, yet if, as the court has found, such representations were honestly made, and were justified by the decedent's then knowledge of his physical condition, the mere fact that the representations of the insured were proved to be unfounded by subsequent events, in the absence of fraud or deceit, would not void the policy.

[4] As a further ground of error, appellant relies on his demurrer to the complaint, for want of facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, for the reason that the complaint fails to expressly allege that the insured was in good standing in the association at the time of his death. The third paragraph of the policy provides that the right of the beneficiary to collect the insurance is predicated on the condition that the member is in good standing at the time of death. We think this specification of error is not deserving of much consideration. The facts of the case as set out in the complaint show that the conditions of the contract had been met by the insured by the payment of all dues provided for in the policy, up until the time of death, and no other liability is shown under the policy which could have changed his status within the few days that elapsed from the application for insurance and the death of the insured. If anything of that kind occurred, we think it would have been incumbent upon the appellant to have pleaded it by way of defense.

[5] Appellant's counsel also took exception to the denial of his application to reopen the case to take the testimony of one Dr. Wiley, who was the physician attendant upon the insured just prior to his being taken to the hospital. This application was made on affidavit and notice of motion, several days after the conclusion of the trial. Dr. Wiley was present in court during the trial, on behalf of the plaintiff, but was not called to the witness stand. Counsel for appellant alleges that his failure to use Dr. Wiley as a witness was because he relied upon some statement of plaintiff's counsel that he intended to call him, and counsel for appellant expected to be able to cross-examine him. However, there seems no good reason why at or before the submission of the case, when it became apparent that plaintiff was not going to use the witness, he should not have been brought into court on behalf of defendant. Furthermore, appellant, in his affidavit, fails to state what facts, if any, in his behalf, he expected to prove by this witness, or whether his testimony would be material to appellant's case. On the contrary, the affidavit indicates that the doctor would have testified, if called to the stand, in support of plaintiff's case.

For the reasons hereinbefore stated, the judgment is affirmed.

101 Cal. App. 479

PASQUAL v. DE VRIES. (Civ. 16.)

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California. Oct. 25, 1929.

1. Statutes $\Rightarrow$ 206—Statute should be construed so as to sustain it in its entirety if language will reasonably permit (Civ. Code, § 3541).

Under Civ. Code, § 3541, statute should be so construed that all its parts are harmonized and given effect, and so that statute may stand in its entirety, if this can reasonably be done under language and purpose of the act.

2. Sales $\Rightarrow$ 461—Conditional sales contract covering cows sold for dairy purposes held not void for failure to give marks and brands, as required in case of cattle sold for slaughter (Hide and Brand Law, § 3, subd. 6).

Conditional sales contract covering sale of cows to dairyman for dairy purposes, and not for slaughter, held not void for failure to give marks and brands of cows sold, as required by Hide and Brand Law (St. 1921, p. 1248), § 3, subd. 6, since statute is primarily for regulating cattle slaughterers and sellers of meat.

3. Trover and conversion $\Rightarrow$ 40(6)—Finding of trial court as to value of cows taken held sustained in action for conversion thereof.

In action for conversion of dairy cattle, evidence held sufficient to sustain trial court's finding as to value of cows taken.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Bernardino County; F. A. Leonard, Judge.

Action by Joe Pasqual against George De Vries. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

A. S. Maloney, of San Bernardino, for appellant.

Hert & Mussell, of San Bernardino, for respondent.

MARKS, J. Appellant brought suit against respondent alleging conversion of seven cows of the value of $266 and damage in the sum of $500 from the conversion. Respondent denied the conversion and damage and filed a cross-complaint alleging conversion by appellant of seven of respondent's cows to his damage in the sum of $700. A trial was had before the court without a jury, and judgment was rendered against appellant on his complaint, and in favor of respondent on his cross-complaint in the sum of $400. The trial court found that appellant had converted to his own use five cows, the property of respondent, of the value of $400.

Appellant attacks the judgment of the trial court upon two grounds: First, that a certain conditional sales contract whereby one John Reeves, respondent's vendee, and appellant's vendor, acquired possession, and the right to purchase, the cows in question, was void under the provisions of subdivision 6, section 3, of the "Hide and Brand Law" (St. 1921, c. 725, p. 1248); and, second, that the findings of the trial court as to the ownership of the five cows and their value were not supported by the evidence.

The transfer of the cows from appellant to Reeves was a tripartite transaction. Respondent desired to use the Reeves contract as security in his purchase of 40 other cows from Biedebach Bros. For convenience of the parties the Reeves contract was signed by Biedebach Bros., who were to receive the payments under it, and was not signed by respondent. Title to the cows did not pass from him. Under the contract Reeves received the possession of the animals with an equitable right of purchase which, with his right of possession, was dependent upon his making specified payments. He defaulted in these payments, and his right of possession and equity of purchase were thereby terminated. In signing the Reeves contract, Biedebach Bros. acted as agents for respondent.

In this case the sale of the cows in question was between dairymen, for dairy purposes, and not for slaughter. The contract in question did not give the "marks and brands" of the cows sold as required by the "Hide and Brand Law." The act is primarily for the "Licensing and regulating of cattle slaughterers and sellers of meat," as appears from its title, as well as from the body of the act. Its provisions are regulatory and penal. Its title contains nothing to indicate that any of its provisions were intended to regulate any such sale of cows as we have here between dairymen in the ordinary course of their business.

[1, 2] The courts will, where the language will reasonably permit, so construe a statute as to sustain it, and all of it, and make it valid and operative in its entirety. Section 3541, Civ. Code; Glassell Development Co. v. Citizens' National Bank of Los Angeles, 191 Cal. 375, 216 P. 1012, 28 A. L. R. 1427. A statute should be so construed that all of its parts be harmonized and given effect, if this can be done, under the language and purpose of the act, so that it may stand in its entirety. Spreckels v. Graham, 194 Cal. 516, 228 P. 1040. To give the construction to the act urged by appellant might lead to the holding of some of its provisions unconstitutional. This is not necessary in this case, as appellant's construction of the act is not supported by its language, spirit, or purpose.

[3] Appellant's second contention that the findings of the trial court are not supported by the evidence is without merit. That appellant took the cows from the dairy of John Reeves is not disputed. There were only 31 cows at this dairy, 21 belonging to respondent and 10 belonging to Biedebach Bros., who removed theirs before appellant took the animals in question, leaving only respondent's cows on the place for appellant to take. In his testimony appellant fixed the value of the cows taken by him at $75 each, and other witnesses placed these values as high as $125 each. The trial court in its judgment fixed a value of $80 each. There is not only ample evidence to support the findings, but a contrary finding would have been without the support of any material evidence.

Judgment affirmed.

VALE v. MARYLAND CASUALTY CO.*
(Civ. 6733.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Oct. 30, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Nov. 29, 1929.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Dec. 26, 1929.

1. Judgment $\S$ 363, 375—Judgment obtained by fraud or mistake may be set aside on application within reasonable time and proof of fraud or mistake (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 473).

A judgment or order obtained by fraud or mistake may be set aside, under Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 473, on application made within reasonable time and proof of fraud or mistake.

2. Judgment $\S$ 67(2)—Superior Court had jurisdiction of timely motion, regularly submitted after proper notice, to vacate judgments by confession (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 473).

Where motion to vacate judgments by confession was made on proper notice under Code

Civ. Proc. $\S$ 473, within three months after judgments were obtained, and submitted to superior court on affidavit of attorney for moving party and points and authorities of opposing side, court had full jurisdiction to hear and determine motion.

3. Judgment $\S$ 67(2)—Orders made after denial of regularly submitted motion to vacate judgments by confession were invalid (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 473).

Trial court having denied motion under Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 473, to vacate judgments by confession, after regular submission thereof for decision, its power was exhausted, and all orders subsequently made by it were invalid as functus officio.

4. Judgment $\S$ 68(8)—Order setting aside order denying motion to vacate judgments by confession, without notice to movant or showing that first order was improvidently made or fraudulently obtained, was void (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 473).

Ex parte order setting aside order denying motion to vacate judgments by confession without notice to movant or showing that first order, which was not appealed from, was improvidently made or fraudulently obtained, was void; court's subsequent action not being a proceeding under Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 473, to set aside original order.

5. Appeal and error $\S$ 865—Whether order denying motion to vacate judgments by confession or final order vacating them was right or wrong cannot be considered on appeal from latter order (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 473).

Question on appeal from order vacating judgments by confession and ex parte orders setting aside orders denying motion, under Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 473, to vacate such judgments, is not whether first order denying motion or final order vacating judgments was right or wrong, but whether first order was valid and final, in which case all subsequent orders were void.

*Rehearing denied. Hearing denied by Supreme Court.

briefly these: On February 20, 1926, Alexander G. Mattson, a contractor and builder, entered into a written contract with one G. P. Anderson, wherein and whereby Alexander G. Mattson agreed to construct a building for said G. P. Anderson on the southwest corner of Mission and Santa Marina streets, in the city and county of San Francisco, for the sum of $17,200; said sum to be paid in installments as the work progressed.

The usual contractor's statutory bond, in the sum of $8,600, was furnished by respondent, Maryland Casualty Company, and the contract and bond were filed of record and the work begun. Thereafter, the building was completed and accepted by the owner, but the contractor failed to pay for all the labor performed and materials furnished in the erection of said building as provided in said contract.

Several claims of liens were filed in due time, and eleven separate actions were commenced against the contractor, the owner, and the respondent Maryland Casualty Company, to foreclose said liens. The contractor permitted default to be taken against him in all of the cases. The owner and the respondent Maryland Casualty Company filed separate answers in all the cases.

On December 13, 1927, the owner and the Maryland Casualty Company filed judgments by confession in open court. Thereafter, and on December 22, 1927, the court granted a stay of execution for 30 days on said judgments.

On February 15, 1928, the attorney for the Maryland Casualty Company served and filed a notice of motion under section 473, Code of Civil Procedure, to vacate said judgments on the grounds: First, that the judgments were entered in violation of the stipulation between the attorneys in said cause; second, "Surprise." This motion was accompanied by the affidavit of the attorney for the bonding company, and came on regularly to be heard in open court on February 29, 1928, at 10 o'clock a. m. The attorney for the assignee of plaintiffs filed points and authorities in opposition to said motion and also appeared at the hearing and opposed the granting of said motion. The attorney for the bonding company, the moving party, did not appear at the hearing, and the court made and entered the following order, to-wit, "Motion to vacate judgment denied." After the entry of this order, and in the afternoon of the same day, the trial judge, in chambers, ex parte, and without notice to the attorney for the opposing side, and without any additional affidavits or other evidence, made an order setting aside the order made in the morning, and set the original motion for argument on March 8, 1928, at 2 o'clock p. m.

Thereafter, on March 1, 1928, the attorney for respondent served written notice upon the attorney for the assignee of plaintiffs that the court had vacated the previous order made in the morning of the same day, denying the Maryland Casualty Company's motion to vacate said judgments, and that the original motion would be heard again on March 8, 1928, at two o'clock p. m.

On March 8, 1928, the second hearing on the motion to vacate said judgments by confession was argued by counsel on both sides, and an amended affidavit was filed by the attorney for respondent, and an affidavit in opposition thereto was filed by the attorney for the assignee of plaintiffs, and the motion was again submitted to the court for decision.

Thereafter, and on April 10, 1928, the court again (the second time) denied said motion of Maryland Casualty Company to have the judgments vacated. On the next day, April 11, 1928, the trial judge, in chambers, ex parte, and without notice to the adverse party or his attorney, made another order setting aside and vacating the order made on April 10, 1928, and again gave respondent five days' additional time to reply. On April 16, 1928, the attorney for respondent filed another affidavit in support of the motion to set aside said judgments. Thereafter, and on April 18, 1928, after hearing the matter again, the trial court made an order overruling his two previous orders, and granted the original motion of respondent, Maryland Casualty Company, and entered an order setting aside and vacating the judgments taken by confession.

From this last order vacating said judgments by confession, the assignee of plaintiffs, appeals. He also appeals from the order of April 11, 1928, setting aside the order of April 10, 1928. He also appeals from the order made on the afternoon of February 29, 1928.

[1] The law is well established that a judgment or order obtained by fraud or mistake may be set aside under section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure, when the application is made within a reasonable time and the fraud or mistake proved.

[2] In the case at bar, the motion to vacate the judgments was made under section 473, Code of Civil Procedure, and was made within three months after the judgments by confession had been obtained, and was made on proper notice and submitted to the court upon the affidavit of the attorney for the moving party, and upon the points and authorities submitted by the opposing side. Therefore, the court had full jurisdiction to hear and determine the motion, and the court did, as above stated, on the morning of February 29, 1928, at 10 o'clock a. m., hear said motion and did make an order denying the said motion of Maryland Casualty Company to vacate said judgments.

[3] We think that all orders made subsequent to this first order are invalid. The trial court having denied the motion after it had been regularly submitted for decision, its power is exhausted; its subsequent orders are functus officio. Lang v. Superior Court, 71 Cal. 491, 12 P. 306, 416; Carpenter v. Su- perior Court, 75 Cal. 596, 19 P. 174; Holtum v. Greif, 144 Cal. 521, 78 P. 11; United Railroads v. Superior Court, 170 Cal. 755, 151 P. 129, Ann. Cas. 1916E, 199; Gill v. Peppin, 41 Cal. App. 487, 182 P. 815; Dolon v. Superior Court, 47 Cal. App. 237, 240, 190 P. 469; Stanton v. Superior Court, 202 Cal. 478, 489, 261 P. 1001; Estate of Grivel (Cal. Sup.) 280 P. 122.

In Dolon v. Superior Court, supra, the court, in considering a similar situation as we have in the case at bar, said: "Assuming the validity of the first order, it was subject only to be set aside on appeal or under proper proceedings under section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure. After a court has acted judicially it may not seek to correct its own errors by changing its judgments and orders without notice to the parties affected. Such action would very shortly deprive all judgments of their character of finality (citing many cases). If the order was improvidently made, upon a proper showing and on notice, it may be set aside, but the court cannot without notice and upon no showing justify a review of its own judicial act by a mere recital that it made the first order inadvertently. In this case there does not appear to have been either notice given the petitioner of the contemplated action of the court, or any showing of inadvertence other than that the trial court determined on second thought that it was in error when it first acted. If the first order was a valid exercise of the power of the court, * * * the second order was beyond the jurisdiction of the court."

[4] No appeal was taken from the first order of February 29, 1928, and no proceeding to set it aside under section 473, Code of Civil Procedure, was instituted. The court's action in the afternoon of February 29, 1928, cannot be considered a proceeding under section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure, because that section provides, in effect, that the relief therein specified may not be given until after notice to the adverse party. (Gill v. Peppin, supra.) No notice was given. Said order made on the afternoon of February 29, 1928, purporting to set aside the order made in the morning, was made by the trial judge, ex parte, and without any showing that the first order was improvidently made or fraudulently obtained, and without notice to the adverse party. It was, therefore, clearly void. The three other orders made subsequent to February 29, 1928, were equally unauthorized by law.

[5] It is argued by respondent that as it charged the attorney for the assignee of plaintiffs with fraud in procuring the confession of judgments, and that the court finally, upon conflicting evidence, upheld its contention, therefore, the last and final order made by the court, vacating the judgments by confession, should be affirmed. This argument is entirely beside the question; the question here is not whether the first or last order made by the trial court was right or wrong, but the question is, Was the first order made on February 29, 1928, a valid and final order? If it was, that ends this case. See Lamb v. Wahlenmaier, 144 Cal. 95, 77 P. 765, 103 Am. St. Rep. 66; Gill v. Peppin, supra.

We are of the opinion that the first order of February 29, 1928, was a valid and final order, and that all subsequent orders were void.

In view of the conclusions we have reached, it becomes unnecessary to discuss the other questions presented in the briefs.

Therefore, the three orders appealed from should be reversed, and it is so ordered.

We concur: KOFORD, P. J.; NOURSE, J.

BANK OF ITALY v. WELBILT AUTO BODY COMPANY et al. (Civ. 5669.) *

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Oct. 28, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Nov. 15, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Dec. 26, 1929.

Bills and notes §359—Where payee transferred trade acceptance as payment on outlawed debt, transferee, not giving immediate credit, held not holder in due course (Civ. Code, § 3133).

Where payee of trade acceptance indorsed it to bank before maturity, in attempted part payment of debt from which he had been relieved in bankruptcy and against which limitations had run, and bank, which had charged off such debt as loss, gave no immediate credit, intending to collect on trade acceptance, if possible, and then apply proceeds as credit on debt, bank held not holder in due course as against drawer, having given no value within Civ. Code, § 3133, so that defense, good as between original parties, was good as against bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Walter Guerin, Judge.

Action on a trade acceptance, brought by the Bank of Italy against the Welbilt Auto Body Company and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant named appeals. Reversed.

Page, Nolan, Rohe & Freston and Ralph E. Lewis, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

A. S. Goldflam, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

HOUSER, J. The facts upon which this appeal is predicated are that the defendant bought some lumber from a man by the name of Bergman, in payment of which the defendant gave its trade acceptance to Bergman, payable about 67 days from date thereof. Some years preceding such transaction Bergman, who theretofore had become indebted to the plaintiff bank, was adjudicated a bankrupt. The debt owing by Bergman to the bank, although listed by Bergman in his schedule of liabilities in the bankruptcy proceeding, was not paid either in whole or in part, but on his discharge in bankruptcy Bergman was legally relieved from the necessity of paying such debt. In addition thereto, at the time the transaction here involved, occurred, the statute of limitations had run against the debt. After Bergman had received the trade acceptance, but before its maturity, he indorsed it to the bank in attempted part payment of the said debt theretofore contracted by him in favor of the bank, and the trade acceptance was received by the bank without notice of any defense by the drawer (defendant) thereto. As testified by an officer of the bank, no immediate credit was given Bergman's former account by reason of the receipt by the bank of the trade acceptance—its intention being to collect on the trade acceptance, if possible, and then to apply the proceeds thus collected to a credit on Bergman's debt, which, however, theretofore had been "charged off" its books as a loss. As between the original parties to the trade acceptance, it appears that the drawer (defendant herein) had a good defense. On the trial of the action, judgment was rendered in favor of the plaintiff, and the defendant has appealed therefrom.

Appellant's statement of the question involved is, first, whether an indorsee of a trade acceptance, who has no actual notice of the drawee's defenses thereto, is a holder in due course and for value, where he takes that instrument with the intention of collecting the same, and, if successful, to apply the proceeds in satisfaction, or partial satisfaction, of a prior debt, in the meantime giving the indorser no credit at all; and, second, even if specifically applied in partial satisfaction of a prior debt, which had been discharged in bankruptcy and against which the statute of limitations had run, where there was no promise to pay or acknowledgment of the debt ever made in writing, is such an indorsee a holder in due course and for value?

Section 3133 of the Civil Code is as follows:

"A holder in due course is a holder who has taken the instrument under the following conditions:

"(1) That it is complete and regular upon its face;

"(2) That he became the holder of it before it was overdue, and without notice that it had been previously dishonored, if such was the fact;

"(3) That he took it in good faith and for value;

"(4) That at the time it was negotiated to him he had no notice of any infirmity in the instrument or defect in the title of the person negotiating it."

Appellant concedes that, with the exception of the question of whether "value" was given, all the elements necessary to constitute the bank a holder of the trade acceptance in "due course" were present in the transaction. The only legal question, therefore, with which this court is concerned, is whether in the circumstances presented herein it may be declared that the Bank of Italy gave value for the trade acceptance in question.

In the case of Lambert v. Schmalz, 118 Cal. 33, 35, 50 P. 13, it is said: "When a debt has been discharged by proceedings in insolvency, or has become barred by the statute of limitations, the remedy to enforce the payment of the debt is gone, but the moral obligation to pay it still remains and is a good consideration for a new promise to make such payment" (citing cases).

In Hoover v. Wasson, 11 Cal. App. 589, 595, 105 P. 945, where several authorities are cited, the principle is laid down that, although a debt be barred by the statute of limitations, it will constitute a good and valuable consideration for a promissory note. See, also, Feeny v. Daly, 8 Cal. 84; McCormick v. Brown, 36 Cal. 180, 95 Am. Dec. 170; Chabot v. Tucker, 39 Cal. 434, 437; Mull v. Van Trees, 50 Cal. 547; Booth v. Hoskins, 75 Cal. 271, 17 P. 225; Baxter v. Brandenburg, 137 Minn. 25, 163 N. W. 516; Merchants' Protective Ass'n v. Popper, 59 Utah, 470, 204 P. 107; Mutual Reserve F. L. Assn. v. Beatty (C. C. A. Cal.) 93 F. 747; Winbourn v. Crump, 77 Colo. 574, 238 P. 58.

It would therefore appear that ordinarily, as between the debtor and the creditor, a new obligation will be sufficiently supported by an antecedent debt, even though at the time the new obligation be created the statute of limitations has run against the original debt, or, by an order in bankruptcy proceedings, the debtor has been discharged from liability. However, at least when the rights of third persons are injected into the controversy, a different situation is presented. In the latter contingency it must appear that the new obligation was unconditionally accepted in lieu and in payment, in whole or in part, of the old one, so that whatever befall the new obligation the creditor may not, at his pleasure, disregard it and thereafter reinstate the old debt. The principle is positively asserted and illustrated in the case of Pacific Acceptance Corporation v. Goodman, 72 Cal. App. 143, 236 P. 964; and, to the same effect, see Merchants' National Bank v. Bentel, 166 Cal. 473, 137 P. 25, and authorities there cited.

In the instant case the evidence is to the effect that at the time the trade acceptance passed to the plaintiff bank Bergman received nothing; his former account with the bank was not credited in any amount; nor was it ever to be credited until the trade acceptance matured and was paid. So far as the bank was concerned it gave no new consideration for the trade acceptance; its position remained unchanged; the effect on the bank was that, if the trade acceptance were paid, the bank would be the gainer, in that an outlawed claim held by it would be liquidated; but if the trade acceptance were not paid, no present loss would result to the bank by reason of the transaction. As an officer of the bank testified: "We didn't even credit his (Bergman's) account. * * * We took it (the trade acceptance) and at its maturity we were to give Bergman credit. * * * I took it to cover the loss that had already been charged off to our profit and loss account, and we are still holding it with the hope that we will be able to liquidate part of the $472.60 with the proceeds when we get a judgment. * * *"

As is said in the case of Pacific Acceptance Corporation v. Goodman, 72 Cal. App. 143, 147, 236 P. 964, 965: "The consideration for the transfer of the check by the payee to plaintiff was purely conditional. It amounted to nothing more than an agreement at a future date to credit the account of the payee with the payment of $3,000; said date being concurrent with and dependent upon the collection of the Goodman check."

In the instant case it results that, as far as the defendant was concerned, the plaintiff gave no value for the trade acceptance, and, consequently, that it was not a holder in "due course."

The judgment is reversed.

HARBOR CONST. CO. v. WALTERS.
(Civ. 12.)

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California. Oct. 25, 1929.

1. Corporations $\S$ 406(1)—Agent's authority to make contract binding corporation does not carry authority to modify or abrogate contract.

Generally, authority of agent to enter into contract binding on corporation does not imply nor carry with it authority to modify or abrogate a contract once duly executed.

2. Corporations $\S$ 432(12)—Holding that corporation was estopped to dispute agent's authority to modify written contract by oral agreement held not warranted by evidence.

Defendant's testimony as to having talked over agent's oral agreement with manager of corporation suing for price of services rendered under written contract alleged to have been modified by such agreement held not to warrant holding that corporation was estopped to dispute agent's authority to modify contract, where record did not show what manager said.

3. Evidence $\S$ 445(7)—Evidence of agent's oral agreement that party to written contract for building plans would owe nothing unless agent procured building loan held inadmissible (Civ. Code, $\S$ 1698).

Evidence of oral agreement by corporation's agent after executing written contract for preparation of building plans that other party would owe corporation nothing, unless agent procured building loan or plans were used, held inadmissible as attempt to vary terms of written contract by unexecuted oral agreement in contravention of Civ. Code, $\S$ 1698.

4. Contracts $\S$ 238(1)—Novation. $\S$ 1—Agent's oral agreement that party contracting for building plans need not pay therefor unless agent procured loan held unenforceable, whether mere modification of written contract or novation (Civ. Code, $\S$ 1531, 1532, 1541).

Alleged oral agreement by agent executing written contract for preparation of building plans by corporation that other party need not pay therefor, unless agent secured building loan, held unenforceable under Civ. Code, $\S$ 1531, 1532, 1541, whether considered as mere modification of written contract or as novation.

5. Evidence $\S$ 445(7)—Agent's oral agreement that building plans need not be paid for unless agent procured loan held not executed agreement admissible to alter written contract for plans.

Oral agreement by agent executing written contract for preparation of building plans by corporation that other party need not pay therefor unless agent procured building loan or plans were used, neither of which conditions were fulfilled, held not executed agreement, admissible to alter written contract, where such contract was completely fulfilled to point of entitling corporation to half of stipulated price for services.

6. Contracts $\S$ 237(1)—Corporation agent's offer to negotiate building loan and suspend liability to pay for plans until procured held unenforceable as without consideration.

Offer of corporation agent executing written contract for preparation of building plans to negotiate building loan and suspend other party's liability to pay for plans until money was procured held unenforceable as without consideration, where plans were completed in compliance with contract and not accepted solely because of other party's inability to finance building; she having neither undertaken to do anything not within terms of written contract, nor subjected herself to any new burden or liability.

7. Contracts $\S$ 316(5)—Long delay in demanding payment for building plans held not to defeat recovery, in view of explanatory testimony.

Failure to demand payment of amount claimed for preparation of building plans under written contract during long period from date of agent's alleged oral agreement suspending liability until commencement of action for price held not to defeat recovery thereof, in view of corporation manager's testimony as to why matter was allowed to rest.

Appeal from Superior Court, Orange County; James L. Allen, Judge.

Action by the Harbor Construction Company, a corporation, against Mrs. A. G. Walters. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

John A. Jorgenson, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Scarborough, Forgy & Reinhaus, of Santa Ana, for respondent.

SLOANE, P. J. This appeal was taken by the plaintiff from a judgment of the superior court of Orange county denying plaintiff's demand for recovery of $625 with interest, the contract price for services rendered in preparing building plans and specifications.

The contract was in writing, dated June 18, 1924, and in words and figures as follows:

"Agreement.

"This Agreement, made and entered into this 18 day of June, 1924, by and between the Harbor Construction Company, hereinafter referred to as the Designers, and Mrs. A. G. Walters, hereinafter referred to as the owner

"Witnesseth: That the said Harbor Construction Company, for and in consideration of the payments to be made to them by the Owner, as hereinafter provided, do hereby covenant and agree to furnish preliminary sketches, working plans and specifications, details and any other drawings that may be necessary in connection with the building operations for the erection of the building referred to.

"The building herein referred to is to be erected upon property of the Owner, located on Dana Point Calif. and is to consist of a 2 story Reinforced Concrete Hotel and store Bldg.

"The stipulated cost or estimate is to be about $25,000.00 due allowance being made for the difficulty of estimating cost before the completion of the plans and specifications, and for a greater or lower cost caused by the requirements, either as to size or number of rooms, materials used or other items of specifications or detail provided by the Designers, in their endeavor to meet the wishes or follow the instruction of the Owner.

"The Owner shall give the Designers a reasonable opportunity to redraw the sketches, plans or revise the specifications, at any or all times, and it shall not constitute a breach of this agreement if the building designed shall exceed the stipulated cost or estimate, unless the Architects unreasonably refuse to alter the plans and specifications for the purpose of reducing the cost.

"The Owner, for and in consideration of said Harbor Construction Company performing the said covenants and agreements above specified, hereby agrees to pay the said Harbor Construction Company, a total aggregating 2½% of the estimated cost of the building, 50% of said sum when preliminary sketches are approved and the balance upon the completion of the plans and specifications.

"Should the Harbor Construction Company be awarded the contract for the erection and completion of said building, it is understood that this payment of 2½%, covering cost of plans and specifications, is to be deducted from the first payment of the total contract price.

"[Signed] Mrs. A. G. Walters, Owner.

"Witness: _____"

It is not disputed that the plaintiff prepared and submitted to defendant in due time preliminary plans and specifications, in full compliance with the written contract, or that these were afterwards completed in all details.

Defendant, however, pleaded as a defense to plaintiff's recovery, a subsequent oral agreement, entered into between herself and one William J. McCormack, acting for and in the name of the plaintiff company, in which it was agreed, on account of defendant's inability to finance the proposed building, that the plaintiff company would undertake to procure for defendant the necessary funds for the enterprise, and that, in the event of failure to procure the necessary amount, the defendant would owe the plaintiff nothing, unless she actually used said plans and specifications. It appears from the evidence that the money was not procured and the building not constructed or the plans used. No demand was made upon the defendant for payment therefor, until made by instituting this suit in December, 1926.

The trial court, over plaintiff's objections, admitted evidence of the oral agreement for modification of the written contract, after its execution, and found that it constituted a valid postponement of defendant's liability to pay for the plans, until such time as the building was financed, or until the defendant otherwise made use of the plans and specifications, neither of which events has ever happened.

Plaintiff's appeal rests on the contention that it was reversible error for the trial court to admit in evidence testimony of the subsequent oral agreement modifying and changing the terms of the written contract, or to hold such agreement binding on the plaintiff; and that the evidence of McCormack's relations to the plaintiff corporation was insufficient, in any event, to support the finding that he was an authorized agent of the corporation to enter into such an agreement.

The only testimony shown by the record, as to the agency of McCormack, is that of one Stephen Cope, who described himself as having been, at the time of these transactions, manager of the Harbor Construction Company. He testified that McCormack was an employee and head draftsman of the plaintiff corporation, and that the written contract was signed for the company by McCormack because of this position, and because he had prepared the contract, and that McCormack had authority to sign on behalf of the company, and had authority to make contracts in its behalf.

[1] Counsel contends that authority to enter into a contract binding on the corporation does not imply, nor carry with it authority to modify a contract or abrogate it, when once duly executed.

This general proposition is sustained by the authorities cited.

In Thomas v. Anthony, 30 Cal. App. 217, 222, 157 P. 823, 824, it is said (quoting from 31 Cyc. 1387): "Presumptively an agent is employed to make contracts, not to rescind or modify them; to acquire interests, not to give them up, and no power to cancel or vary an agreement is to be inferred from a general power to make it, nor has the agent any implied power to waive or give up rights or interests for his principal * * * unless the principal knew or approved of such modifications by the agent."

In Jones v. Title Guaranty & Trust Co., 178 Cal. 376, 379, 173 P. 586, 588, where the agent who executed a contract in the name of his principal, undertook to change or modify it, the court quotes the rule as laid down in 31 Cyc., and adds: "When Jones authorized Wood to make a certain contract for him, and deposited his check and notes to be turned over in accordance with such contract, he did not thereby authorize Wood or the defendant to dispose of the check and notes under a different and less favorable contract. Certainly it would not be contended that Wood had ostensible authority to so change the terms of the deposit as to substitute for the lease originally contemplated a lease of other property upon other terms. No more can it be said that Wood had ostensible authority to alter the material provision regarding the obtaining of subleases."

In Morton v. Albers Bros. Milling Co., 66 Cal. App. pages 391, 398, 226 P. 809, 812, where one Prenot, assistant manager of the corporation, one of the parties to the contract, undertook by oral agreement to modify the terms of a written contract, the court says: "Prenot was not a general officer. He was only an assistant manager for appellant at one of its branch offices. It possibly may be inferred from the evidence that he was authorized to do certain things which were necessarily incident to the performance of the written contract, such, for example, as seeing to it that proper tests were made to determine whether the milo measured up to the requirements of the contract. But authority in an agent to carry out or to perform a contract already made by his principal does not include authority to change the contract or to waive any of its provisions, especially where, as here, the provision is one which was intended for the benefit of the principal. Presumptively, an agent is employed to acquire interests, not to give them up."

[2] There is some contention on the part of respondent that the oral agreement in this case was called to the attention of Mr. Cope, the manager of plaintiff corporation, and that he subsequently had a conversation with the defendant with regard thereto, and it is contended that he did not repudiate McCormack's authority to enter into such modifying agreement. It is true that the defendant did testify to having talked over the agreement of McCormack with Mr. Cope, but respondent is mistaken in assuming that anything was said calculated to estop the corporation from disputing McCormack's authority. In fact it does not appear from the record what was said by Mr. Cope in response to Mrs. Walters' statement of the oral agreement.

[3] Even if McCormack had authority to enter into a valid agreement modifying the written contract by creating new conditions under which defendant is liable to pay for the services rendered, we have then an attempt to vary the terms of a written contract by an unexecuted oral agreement, and in contravention of section 1698 of the Civil Code. That the agreement with McCormack was not in writing is not disputed. The testimony of Mrs. Walters, the defendant, and her niece, Margaret Walters, the only evidence given on this point, was to the effect that after the contract was signed, and at the time of the presentation of the preliminary drawings by Mr. McCormack, Mrs. Walters stated that she had seen her bankers "and they absolutely refused to loan any money at Dana Point at that time, so that there was no use in going ahead with the plans and specifications, and that McCormack then said he was sure that he could secure such a loan, and that if he failed there was to be no charge to me until such time as I used his plans and specifications, and was able to get a loan to put up the building."

And she further stated that there was no one present at the time of such conversation but McCormack, herself, and her niece, Margaret.

This verbal agreement was not only unexecuted, so as to bind the corporation; it was not even made in the name of the corporation, so far as the undertaking to negotiate a loan for Mrs. Walters was concerned, but was a personal undertaking on the part of McCormack. Furthermore, the modification of the terms and time of payment was without consideration. Nothing of value was to pass to the plaintiff by undertaking to finance the deal, and waive right to payment for these plans and specifications, and Mrs. Walters on her part assumed no obligation, and relinquished no right or advantage to which she was entitled under the written contract.

[4] Whether this alleged oral agreement is considered as a mere modification of the written contract, or is a novation, it lacks the requirements of the statute to make it enforceable.

Section 1531 of the Civil Code defines novation as follows: "Novation is made (1). By a substitution of a new obligation between the same parties, with intent to extinguish the old obligation."

Section 1532, Civil Code: "Novation is made by contract, and is subject to all rules concerning contracts in general."

Section 1541, Civil Code: "An obligation is extinguished by a release therefrom given to the debtor by the creditor, upon a new consideration, or in writing, with or without new consideration."

[5] The contention of respondent's counsel that the oral agreement here relied on had become an executed agreement is not supported by their own authorities. They cite 6 California Jurisprudence, 376. The text of this citation recites: "Obviously the executed oral agreement which may be proved for the purpose of altering a previous written contract, must consist in the doing or suffering of something not required to be done by the terms of the writing."

This rule is quoted from Mackenzie v. Hodgkin, 126 Cal. 591, 59 P. 36, 38, 77 Am. St. Rep. 209, which is also cited by respondent. In that case the written contract involved the sale of an entire crop of raisins at a stipulated price. Evidence was offered to show a subsequent oral agreement to pay for a certain portion of the crop called Valencia raisins, at a different price. Defendant claimed that he had made and delivered the Valencia raisins on the oral promise to pay for them at 3½ cents per pound. The court in the opinion says:

"His counsel argue that this is 'an executed parol agreement,' and therefore that evidence thereof is admissible to alter the previous writing. Civ. Code, § 1698. We do not think so. We find no evidence that Williams, Brown & Co. ever paid anything as on a purchase by them of the Valencias; and, as concerns Hodgkin, so far as appears, he did nothing under the alleged oral agreement which he was not bound to do in the proper fulfillment of the written contract. * * * Obviously, the executed oral agreement, which may be proved for the purpose of altering a previous written contract, must consist in the doing or the suffering of something not required to be done or suffered by the terms of the writing. * * *

"True, the defendant here testified that he sold the Valencia Raisins, but the alleged sale rests in mere spoken words, which in themselves could not be allowed to alter the writing. His acts towards the execution of any contract were only such, so far as proved, as the original agreement required him to perform."

The facts accompanying respondent's further authorities cited on the question of executed oral contracts are quite distinguishable from the circumstances of this case.

In the instant case the evidence shows a complete fulfillment of plaintiff's contract, to the point of entitling it to one half of the stipulated price for its services, a representation by defendant to McCormack that she could not finance her building, and that further preparation of the plans might as well stop, a gratuitous offer by McCormack to procure her a loan, and to release her from obligation to pay for the plans unless he procure her the necessary financial aid, or she in some other way use the plans as prepared by plaintiff.

[6] McCormack's offer to negotiate a loan and suspend defendant's liability to pay for the plans, even if within the scope of his agency, was entirely without consideration. Defendant on her part, neither undertook to do anything not within the terms of her written contract, nor subjected herself to any new burden or liability.

She was, it is true, only liable at that time, for 50 per cent. of the commission called for by the writing, and, if there was anything in the relations of the parties to entitle her to order a suspension of the completion of the plans and specifications, she might, by notice to that effect, have escaped liability for the uncompleted part of plaintiff's work, but there is nothing in the record to show the extent to which the plans had been completed or the value of the work still to be done in perfecting them. The plans were completed, and were, so far as appears, in strict compliance with the contract, and the only reason given why they were not accepted and used by the defendant was her inability to finance her building, a situation for which, under the terms of the written contract, the plaintiff was in no wise responsible.

[7] Respondents place some stress upon the fact that, during the long period which elapsed from the date of the alleged oral agreement to the time of the commencement of this action, no demand was made upon defendant for payment of any amount claimed for services rendered in preparing the plans and specifications. While this was a circumstance that might properly have been considered by the court, it is in no wise conclusive of the legal rights of the parties. The witness Cope testified that the matter was allowed to rest during this period until it became apparent to plaintiff that there was no prospect of the building being constructed, and until after it was understood by plaintiff that the defendant had transferred her activities to another locality.

The judgment is reversed.

REEVES v. TAYLOR. (Civ. 17.)

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District,
California. Oct. 29, 1929.

Brokers' Commission—Evidence held insufficient to show prospective purchaser became interested or that binding contract was secured through brokers' efforts precluding recovery for commission.

In broker's action to recover commission for sale of orange grove, evidence held insufficient to show that purchaser became interested in defendant's property or that parties were brought together or binding contract secured through broker's efforts precluding recovery for commission.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Bernardino County; F. A. Leonard, Judge.

Action by Cecil H. Reeves against D. L. Taylor. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Nichols, Cooper & Hickson, of Pomona, for appellant.

Isaac Jones, of Ontario, for respondent.

BARNARD, J. This is an action by a broker for the recovery of a commission for the sale of an orange grove, claimed to have been made by plaintiff and one L. L. Hammersley, a salesman in his employ. On March 6, 1926, the defendant executed and delivered to plaintiff a written listing agreement. On April 19, the said Hammersley, acting for plaintiff, secured from defendant what was apparently a written option, in connection with a deal he then had on with a man named Thompson, permitting him to sell the place listed to Thompson for $16,000. On the morning of April 20th or 21st, plaintiff met one Edward Kranz and his father at an orange grove owned by Kranz and situated across two 10-acre tracts from defendant's grove, the sale of which is in controversy. This meeting was for the purpose of considering the sale of another orange grove owned by plaintiff, and which he was trying to sell to the said Kranz. Kranz obtained his first information concerning defendant's grove through this conversation, the extent of this information being in dispute. At this same conversation, Kranz stated to plaintiff that he had certain equities in certain properties in Altadena, which he would like to trade in on some orange grove. Shortly before the conversation ended, the said Hammersley appeared on the scene, which will be later referred to. Later that morning, Kranz and his father drove by defendant's grove, and the father advised the son to purchase the same if he could get it.

In the afternoon of the same day, plaintiff and Hammersley went to Altadena, examined the properties proposed to be used in trade by Kranz, and then called on Kranz, where another conversation occurred. It further appears that about May 18, Kranz ascertained from a neighboring packing house the name of defendant, which had not been given him by plaintiff, and called at defendant's home. Defendant was not there, but his wife stated that she thought the property was not for sale, and Kranz left word to write him in the event they desired to sell. The following day, having received a postal card, he again called. The next succeeding day, which was May 20, a purported agreement of purchase and sale between defendant and Ida E. Kranz, mother of Edward Kranz, was executed and put in escrow in a bank. Shortly thereafter the said Hammersley called at defendant's home, in connection with the Thompson deal above mentioned, which he states he still hoped to put through. While there, he stated to defendant's wife that he had another deal in mind, with some trade in it. Mrs. Taylor told him he was too late, that they had already sold, giving him the name of the purchaser, and he replied: "That lets us out; I am sorry we couldn't make the deal, this other deal * * * but I am glad you sold the grove." The other deal just referred to was apparently the Thompson deal on which he had called.

Two or three days later, both agents came out and claimed to have been instrumental in making the sale. Defendant, having been told by Kranz in the first instance that no agent was connected with the sale, then notified Kranz that he would not sell, unless Kranz paid the commission. Later, by consent of both parties, the bank returned the deposit, and the deal was dropped. It appears that defendant had purchased the property involved on contract, the preceding December, from a man named Stewart, paying only about $300 down, although Stewart received part of the proceeds of the crop picked that spring. After abandoning the Kranz deal, defendant threw up his contract with Stewart, receiving nothing for his equity in the place. He did not convey any equity to Stewart or to any one, and did not suggest that Kranz deal directly with Stewart. However, some time in September, or later, Stewart conveyed the property involved to Kranz. The listing agreement above referred to, contained the following provisions:

"* * * I hereby empower and appoint you my agents for a period of 60 days from this date, and thereafter until further notice from me in writing."

"* * * Should a deal be made through your efforts or assistance, or by me to any person or persons who become interested in said property through your efforts, I agree to pay you for your services a commission as per schedule below. Any change in price or terms which I may accept shall not affect your agency or rate of commission.

Should this property not be sold, but is shown or described to a prospective purchaser by said agents prior to the termination of this listing and I subsequently sell or convey said property to such prospective purchaser within ninety days from the termination of this listing, then I agree to pay said agents the full commission for such sale. I agree to furnish a good and sufficient deed and a satisfactory certificate of title."

No notice in writing terminating the agency was ever given.

Plaintiff filed suit for a commission, and this appeal is from a judgment in favor of defendant. Appellant contends that a finding by the trial court, to the effect that no sale, or contract of sale, was made through the efforts of the plaintiff, or his salesman, is not supported by the evidence. He insists that the place was sold through his efforts, and to one to whom he had described it. While it might appear that such sale as was made, was made through plaintiff's efforts, if we accepted his evidence in its entirety, there is a sharp conflict in the evidence in its most important phases, namely, as to what was said in the two conversations above mentioned, the only times the agents talked to the alleged purchaser. In the first conversation, in the morning, plaintiff says he told Kranz he thought he had another piece of property which would suit him, and that he gave him the location, described the property, and offered to take him to see it; but that Kranz preferred to drive his own car and agreed to investigate the place. He also states that at this time Kranz suggested turning in the equities on the Altadena properties on the purchase price of defendant's place, and that on the same afternoon at Altadena, after investigating the properties offered, he told Kranz that these would not be acceptable to defendant, but that this must be a cash deal, and that, after again telling him all about defendant's grove, Kranz agreed to go and investigate it the following Monday. Hammersley testified that during this talk at Altadena he told Kranz he thought he could deliver defendant's place to him for $16,000.

On the other hand, Kranz testified that at this first conversation in the morning the talk was entirely on the grove belonging to plaintiff, which he desired to sell to Kranz; that during the conversation plaintiff mentioned that he thought he had another piece of property that would suit Kranz, which he stated he could not deliver; that he told him where the grove was, but not the name of the owner. Kranz denies that anything was said to him that afternoon at Altadena, by either of the agents, about the defendant's property, and says the only mention of the Altadena equities which he desired to trade was the fact that he would like to trade them on some orange grove. The evidence of Kranz is somewhat confirmed by the evidence of Hammersley, that he accidentally dropped in at the first conversation referred to, because he was out there to see if the above-named Thompson was in the vicinity, looking at defendant's grove. He further states that he fully expected to close the deal with Thompson that very day. It will be recalled that only a day or two before he had secured a written option for this purpose. The fact that the suggestion of trading in certain equities was made while plaintiff was attempting to sell his own land, and that plaintiff immediately went to Altadena to investigate the same, under the circumstances just narrated, confirms the statement of Kranz that these equities were not mentioned in connection with defendant's place. A further suspicious circumstance is that Hammersley states that during the talk at Altadena he told Kranz he thought he could deliver defendant's place to him for $16,000, and yet Kranz, with no effort to look into this, went ahead to deal direct with the owner, and agreed to pay $17,000. The usual motive for going around an agent and dealing with the owner is to get the land at a lower price.

It will be noted that the purported agreement between defendant and Kranz was made on May 20, 1926, about a month after plaintiff alleges he interested Kranz in the deal. It is undisputed that neither plaintiff nor his salesman said anything to Kranz after the first day; that nothing was said to defendant until after the purported sale to Kranz; and that no effort was made to ascertain why Kranz did not come out to investigate the place, as they claim he agreed to do. The court was justified in believing the portion of the evidence which indicates that both of these conversations between the agents and Kranz were had in connection with the plaintiff's effort to sell his own land, and that no effort was made to interest Kranz in the property of defendant. It is a reasonable inference that at that time the agents believed defendant's place to have been practically sold to Thompson; that they therefore told Kranz in effect that the place was not on the market, and made no effort to describe it to him, or to interest him in it; that Kranz did not become interested in defendant's property through any effort of the agents; and that the parties were not brought together or a binding contract secured through their efforts. The rights of the parties were fixed by the special conditions of this listing agreement. Nothing more is here presented than a conflict in the evidence, which the trial court has resolved in favor of the defendant.

A further consideration is that plaintiff relies on the purported agreement of May 20, between defendant and Ida Kranz, as being a binding and enforceable agreement, and therefore giving him a right to a commission, under the well-known rules of law. So far as it appears from the evidence, under its own terms, this contract could not have been enforced, and was therefore not sufficient to entitle plaintiff to a commission. The contract contained this clause: "This escrow is contingent upon successful completion of escrow between A. B. Stewart and seller herein."

The evidence is uncontradicted that defendant owed Stewart more than he was getting out of this escrow, and that Stewart objected to accepting a new owner. There is no evidence that Stewart ever gave his consent, or that the contingent escrow mentioned was ever completed.

For the reasons given, the judgment is affirmed.

PESCHONG et al. v. MADDEN et al.
(Civ. 5569.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Nov. 1, 1929.

1. Vendor and purchaser ⇨341(3)—In action to recover purchase money paid, finding vendors had agreed to complete building by certain date held not supported by evidence.

In action to recover money paid on account of purchase price of real property, finding that vendors had agreed to build and complete bungalow on or before certain date held not supported by paragraph in escrow instructions providing for period of 60 days within which to close escrow, and testimony of plaintiff regarding conversation with defendant, in which defendant said that term "on demand," in escrow instructions, meant that money would be required to be paid at end of escrow period, on completion of building.

2. Evidence ⇨400(2)—There being no allegation of fraud in connection with drawing contract as regards building completion, purchasers could not modify contract by oral testimony had prior to execution.

There being no allegation of fraud in connection with drawing of contract between vendors and purchasers, so far as time of completion of building was concerned, purchasers, seeking to recover money paid on account of purchase price, could not add to or modify contract, or its legal effect, by oral testimony had prior to execution of contract.

3. Evidence ⇨413—There being no allegation charging fraud regarding insertion of clause regarding payment in building contract, oral testimony was inadmissible to modify clause.

Where escrow instructions provided for payment of $1,100 by purchasers on demand, and there was no allegation in complaint, in action to recover money paid on account of purchase price, charging fraud with regard to insertion of clause in contract, oral testimony tending to modify such provision was incompetent.

4. Vendor and purchaser ⇨341(3)—Finding that purchasers were not required to deposit sum in escrow until building was completed held not supported by evidence.

In action to recover money paid on account of purchase price of real property, finding that under terms of escrow agreement purchasers were not obliged to deposit in escrow balance of cash payment until building was completed held not supported by evidence.

5. Vendor and purchaser ⇨116—Purchasers, not making payment required, could not rescind, because there was trust deed on property, instead of mortgage as agreed.

Where vendors agreed that property should be conveyed with first mortgage for $3,400 as a first lien on it, and condition precedent to conveyance was payment into escrow by purchasers of $1,100 on demand of vendors, purchasers were not in position to rescind contract on ground that there was trust deed on property, instead of mortgage, where they had not paid sum of $1,100 on demand, since time never arrived under terms of contract when vendors were legally obligated to tender conveyance.

Action to recover money paid on account of the purchase price of real property by John H. Peschong and another against Alice M. Madden and another. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendants appeal. Reversed.

George Acret, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Max Brown and Brown & Mahon, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

HAHN, Justice pro tem. The action which gives rise to this appeal is one wherein plaintiffs, as buyers of certain real property, sought to recover from the defendants, one of whom was the owner of the property and the other the agent of the owner, a judgment for the sum of $300 paid on account of the purchase price. From a judgment in favor of plaintiffs for the sum of $300, as prayed for, the defendants appeal.

On the lot in question, at the time the negotiations for its sale and purchase were consummated, a house was in the course of construction under the direction of defendant Gordon W. Madden, who was the agent and son of defendant Alice M. Madden, owner of the property. The negotiations for the purchase were concluded on or about March 27, 1924, and escrow instructions were signed and filed with the escrow agent, the Venice City Bank, on or about March 31st.

These escrow instructions, among other things, provided that the purchase price of the property was to be $7,250, which sum was to be paid as follows: The sellers were to place a first mortgage lien on the property for the sum of $3,400, which the buyers were to assume and pay. In addition, the buyers were to execute their promissory note for $2,350, payable to Alice M. Madden, the owner, and also a trust deed securing the same, which would be placed on the property as a second lien. The balance of the purchase price, to wit, $1,500, was to be paid in cash. Four hundred dollars of that sum was paid at the time of, or prior to, the signing of the escrow instructions, and the remaining $1,100, according to the escrow instructions, was to be paid "on demand." There was no provision in the escrow instructions as to when the building in course of construction was to be completed, but the escrow instructions did contain a clause which reads as follows: "Possession to be given upon completion of buildings." The instructions further contained a clause providing for the closing of the escrow within 60 days from the date thereof; but it was therein provided that, in the event the escrow was not completed within that time, the same might be continued until either party gave notice to terminate it.

Plaintiffs in due course executed the $2,350 note and trust deed and delivered the same in escrow; but they never did pay into escrow, or to the sellers, the $1,100 in cash, or any part thereof, which the escrow instructions provided was to be paid "upon demand."

On July 11, 1924, plaintiffs served upon defendants a written notice of rescission, containing the following declaration: "This action is taken at this time because of a material misrepresentation made by you all during the time of our negotiations, that fact being statements made by both of you that the first lien on said property, subject to which we would take title, was, and would be, a first mortgage, when, as a matter of fact, we have just discovered that, instead of a first mortgage, there is, and has been at all times subsequent to the 7th day of February, 1924, a trust deed against said property; this trust deed having been recorded April 19th of this year. Another fact which prompts this action is your failure to complete said house on or about the 31st day of May, 1924, pursuant to your agreement."

Having determined that the judgment must be reversed, we will limit our discussion to the points forming the basis for our conclusion.

[1, 2] It is first contended by appellants that the finding of the trial court that the defendants had agreed to build and complete the bungalow on the property on or before May 31, 1924, and the additional finding that "the said defendants did not complete nor finish said bungalow when and as agreed," are not supported by the evidence. Appellants' contention in this respect must be sustained. The trial court held, and we think correctly, that the escrow instructions constituted the entire contract between the parties, and measured their rights and obligations, except in so far as the issue of fraud was concerned.

The allegations of the complaint charging fraud related solely to the alleged representation that the first lien which the buyers were to take the property subject to was to be a mortgage, and later the buyers discovered that the first lien on the property was a trust deed. Nowhere in the escrow instructions is there found any provision that requires the defendants to complete the bungalow on or before May 31st; nor is there any competent evidence in the record to support that finding.

The plaintiff Fannie R. Peschong was permitted by the court to testify to a conversation she had with the defendant Alice M. Madden at the time the escrow instructions were signed and delivered to the bank, in which conversation she stated that the defendant Alice M. Madden said the term "on demand," as contained in the escrow instructions, meant that the money would be required to be paid at the end of the escrow period, upon completion of the building. Respondents argue that the finding complained of finds support in the paragraph contained in the escrow instructions that provides for a period of 60 days within which to close the escrow, and the testimony of respondent Fannie R. Peschong, wherein she relates her conversation with defendant Alice M. Madden concerning the meaning of the word "demand."

We cannot agree with the respondents' contention in this respect. The language of the escrow instructions does not justify the inference drawn by respondents. These instructions constituted the contract between the parties, and there being no allegation of fraud in connection with the drawing of the contract, so far as the time of completion of the building was concerned, respondents could not add to or modify the contract, or its legal effect, by any oral testimony had prior to the execution of the contract. This proposition needs the citation of no authorities. Clearly, under the contract, the sellers had a reasonable time within which to complete the bungalow, and there is nothing in the evidence that will support the conclusion that a reasonable time had elapsed at the time the notice of rescission was given.

[3, 4] Appellants next attack the findings of the court to the effect that under the terms of the escrow agreement respondents were not obligated to deposit in escrow the $1,100, which was the balance of the cash payment, until the building was completed. As we have already pointed out, the escrow instructions provided that the $1,100 was to be paid by the buyers "on demand." The evidence clearly showed, and in fact it is not disputed, that demand was made upon the buyers to put up the $1,100 in escrow on or about April 5, 1924. There is further evidence, undisputed, that the day before the notice of rescission was given the buyers called upon the sellers and requested an extension of time within which to pay the $1,100. The language of the contract that provided for payment of the $1,100 "on demand" is clear and unambiguous. There is no allegation in the complaint charging fraud with regard to the insertion of this language in the contract; hence any oral testimony which would tend to modify the provision for the payment of the $1,100 "on demand" would be incompetent. We feel that appellants' contention that the evidence does not support the finding under discussion is well taken.

[5] The next and only other point we deem it necessary to consider is the question as to whether or not plaintiffs were entitled to rescind because at the time of giving the notice of rescission, the first lien on the property in question was a trust deed instead of a first mortgage. The escrow instructions clearly provide, and in fact the testimony of respondents relating to the conversations leading up to the contract show, that the sellers agreed that, when the property was conveyed, it was to be conveyed with a first mortgage for $3,400 as a first lien upon it. It was clearly immaterial as to what sort of a lien was upon the property prior to the time that the sellers were obligated to convey the property. There is nothing in the record, nor would there be any presumption in law, to support a conclusion that the sellers could not, at any time prior to the time that they were called upon to deliver a deed, have the first lien of the trust deed removed and a first mortgage placed upon the property. The fact that the trust deed was executed on February 7th, and recorded against the property on April 19th, had no bearing upon the material issues in this case. The obligation assumed by the sellers with regard to a first mortgage was that the property would be conveyed to the buyers subject to a first mortgage for $3,400. The evidence clearly shows that the time never arrived under the terms of the contract when the sellers were legally obligated to make a conveyance or tender a conveyance to the buyers. The condition precedent to the conveyance was the payment into escrow by the buyers of the sum of $1,100 on demand of the sellers. This condition was never fulfilled, although demand was made. Hence the inevitable conclusion that the buyers were not in a position to rescind the contract on July 11, 1924.

While not necessary to support our conclusion in this matter, weight is added to it by the fact that the record discloses that no demand of any kind was ever made by the buyers upon the sellers to place a first mortgage on the property, instead of the trust deed. It appears without conflict that both parties were continuing a friendly relation, and no word of criticism or complaint was lodged by the buyers against the sellers, either by reason of the delay in completion, as claimed by the buyers, or in respect to any other matter
